According to MERKER, (1) el jangen obir; (2) el baringo duallen; (3) el gerimbot, and this last is said to be the youngest: "der jungste Jahrgang". But MERKER states also that a fourth one is added, called el eirogua, which is formed by those who are initiated immediately before the performance of Engibata, i. e. before the proper period for individual initiation, or circumcision, is closed.

According to HOLLIS, the following is the order of names:

(1) 'L-changen-epir = the big ostrich feathers; (2) 'L-tareto = the helpers; (3) 'L-paringetwalang = our fleet runners.

It is not very clear what function these minimal divisions perform in the internal structure of the age-units. It is clear, however, that, being they formed in a succession of time, they define the status of seniority among the age-unit members and foster that [554]

[55] Note how economic ("a time of plenty") influence the holding of an initiation festival.

[56] This means that the names of class minimal divisions are always the same for every class.

[57] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 28.

[58] MERKER, l. c., pp. 70 s.

[59] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 242.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 [554] feeling of corporate responsibility and membership, which is a typical feature of the age-class system.

It seems certain that the left-hand unit does not group as many members as the right-hand unit. According to FOERSOCKE, the left-hand unit is formed only by the three last-named minimal divisions; FOX states that it may not occur at all.

The following tables illustrate the situation.

561 634 The first table is reproduced from FOERSOCKE (1939).* It refers to the number of age-unit members in four different places of the Kisongo section:

PLACES		Kihaya	Samatwa	Engutoto	Longido	TOTAL
Right-Hand Unit	Kisale	69	193	50	200	480
Left-Hand Unit	Moriako	41	36	11	34	122

The total percentage of members of the left-hand unit as compared with the right-hand unit is therefore 26%.

The second table is taken from FOX (1930). It refers to the names of the age-units:

SECTIONS	Purko	Loita and Siria	Dumat
Right-Hand Unit	II Merisurei	II Kishangop	II Merisurei
Left-Hand Unit	II Kiloip	none	II Kiloip

SECTIONS	Kaputiei Loiokitoi Matapato	Loitokitok	Kisongo
Right-Hand Unit	II Alimiti	II Kelusi	?
Left-Hand Unit	none	none	II Kerimbet

561 Though the value of these tables is far from being absolute, they show that the right-hand unit is far more relevant than the left-hand unit. Indeed we find that candidates are far more anxious to join the right-hand unit than the left-hand unit. This may be explai-

* FOERSOCKE, l. c., p. 33; SIMARUS, Some Problems of Anthropological Research in Kenya Colony, in I. A. I., Memorandum XXIII, 1948, p. 4. The date is taken from SIMARUS, p. 4. SIMARUS refers to the paper of FOERSOCKE as a manuscript. This was published in 1948.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Masai FL.12

zed by the status of seniority which is higher for the right-hand unit than for the left-hand unit. 561

To study how the seniority status of the age-units affects the structure of the age-class may be useful to our analysis.

The right-hand unit, being the first of the two-units forming a class, is senior to the left-hand unit. A class, however, is not an absolute institutionalized set of persons, but it is related to other classes below or above itself. Therefore, the two age-units of a single class must also be considered in relation to other classes.

The right-hand unit at the time of its institution has no actual relation to the left-hand unit for the latter does not exist yet, but it has relation to the class next above itself and particularly to the left-hand unit of this.* Such a relationship makes the right-hand unit junior to the left-hand unit of that class next above. At a later stage, when the new left-hand unit is instituted, the right-hand unit in question becomes a senior unit. The senior right-hand unit and the junior left-hand unit will finally merge into a class. Therefore, if a class is regarded as an absolute body, the right-hand unit is the senior and the left-hand unit the junior. But if the class is viewed as a related body, both the right-hand and the left-hand unit pass through a first stage of juniority, and a successive stage of seniority.

It is important to stress that in the structure of a single age-class the right-hand unit is always the senior unit and the left-hand unit is always the junior unit. 561 554

The status of seniority, as contrasted to that of juniority, is not a mere abstraction. It gives rise to some special privileges which are recorded by FOSBROOKE as follows: (1) "the marking on the shield known as sarat enyuki;"* (2) the spear handle of black wood called enjata narok; (3) the right to hold a dance without seeking permission

* One should note that a class is finally instituted, i. e., the two age-units merge into a new single age-set, when the first unit of the next following class has been instituted. See below on the discussion on the overlapping rhythm.

* According to MERKER, p. 78, there may be six marks in the coats-of-arms of Masai warriors which they paint on their shields: 1. the warrior red mark (se sual'enjugi, to which FOSBROOKE refers; 2. the black mark (se sual'erok); 3. the ornamental band; 4. the coat-of-arm of the clan; 5. the mark of leadership (Korperabzeichen); 6. the mark of bravery or distinction (Of all these marks the most important is the warriors' red mark (No. 1. The mark of the clan was rare in MERKER's time. The mark of bravery is reserved for the warriors who distinguish themselves in military action. The shield of the junior initiates (il kewanti) is poor in colour and pattern. They are allowed only the black mark; the red one is reserved for the senior initiates. [531]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 554 from the senior moran". To these, according to MERKER, p. 82, should be added the formation of the initiates' segregated village (manyatta).[88]

The behaviour set up by seniority relationship is one of open 561 578 rivalry between the two adjacent units. Members of the senior unit look down with contempt on those of the junior unit and the latter retaliate as best as they can. The conflicts and clashes which ensue seem to be accepted as a normal social institution and in fact they are looked upon with favour.

FOSBROOKE,[89] notes that initiates make no formal demand for the above mentioned privileges of seniority. "The juniors", he writes, "will assume one of the privileges, and when met by a band of seniors will promptly be beaten up and retract. This process continues till wounds become frequent in these affrays. When the seniors feel that they are on the point of losing their ascendancy, they graciously hand over these privileges to the juniors, who may then proceed to the Unoto ceremony". A detailed description of the same process is given by MERKER.[90]

561 The claim for the privileges of seniority and the Unoto ceremony mark the final stage of the official period for performing individual initiations and therefore for instituting the age-unit. There is a certain regular interval between these ceremonies, which our authorities try to estimate in terms of years. It seems, however, that the deciding factors are, the adjustment between the senior and junior initiates, the former handing over the privileges of seniority to the latter, and the agreement of the piron-elders that the proper time has come for closing the age-unit period.

VI – THE FINAL INSTITUTION OF THE AGE-UNIT[91]

88A 561 The final institution of the age-unit is brought about by the performance of the Unoto ceremony. This is described by FOSBROOKE,[92] as "the ceremony of promotion from junior to senior

[88] FOSBROOKE in his chart, p. 34, puts this immediately following the period of the individual initiation (circumcision) of each unit.

[89] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 29.

[90] MERKER, l. c., pp. 80 ss.

[91] MERKER, l. c., pp. 71 s.; BAGGE, l. c., p. 187; HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 280 ss.; SANDFORD, An Administrative and Political History of the Masai Reserve, London 1919, pp. 68 ss.; MS 48, p. 3; NAD, 1928, p. 21; LEAKEY, l. c., pp. 194 ss.; FOX, l. c., pp. 451 s.; WEITHOUSE, l. c., pp. 180 ss.; NAD, 1930, pp. 23 s.; FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 29 s.

[92] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 29.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

warriorhood ". He also states that Uneto " is probably the best known and most misconstrued ceremony in the Masai age-grade system ". 884 561

Uneto is not performed at a single place for whole Masailand, but in every territorial section or group of sections. [634] It consists of three main stage: (a) a testing of the candidates by the elders; (b) the election of the ceremonial leader of the unit; (c) a sacrifice of a bull.

a) The first stage takes place in a special hut called singira. [346] Not all the candidates, i. e., junior initiates, are allowed into the singira, but only those who have kept the sexual regulations which bind junior initiates. [834] In order that no one may enter the singira under false pretences the entrance is bewitched by the elders. [754] According to LEAKEY, [illegible] another test is performed inside the hut aiming at detecting those who have entered surreptitiously.

In the annual report of the NAD, [illegible] we read that every candidate is expected to give " an account " of his past life. " The importance of the E-Uneto " states the same report, " lies in the fact that it imposes an obligation upon a warrior who has disgraced himself in any way to clear himself of the stigma before he can marry and settle down as a respected Elder of the tribe ". [783] " The O-Singira " says FOX, [illegible] " gives the warriors permission to have sexual relations with initiated women ".

b) The nomination of the ceremonial leader (ol aunoni, pl. il aunok, or ol oiuno) takes place inside the singira hut. The elders 561 634

[illegible] LEAKEY's statement, p. 194, that at the Uneto " all the members of a given group (i. e., age-unit) from the whole of the Masai country, north, south, east and west are required to be present " is emphatically denied by FOX, p. 481, and FOSBROOKE, p. 39. According to FOX the following sections perform it: (a) Purko; (b) Lotta and Siria; (c) Damat; (d) Kaputiei, Loiokilani and Matapato; (e) Laitokitok; (f) Kisongo. And FOSBROOKE says that the Uneto is celebrated " by sections or groups of sections " and is attended by as many warriors as possible, " but by no means all ". SANDFORD, on HEWOOD's authority, recorded that the Uneto was held by the Purko, Kakonyuke, Dalalekutuk and Damat on the Kisongop. The Sigirari, Matapato, Kaputiei and other divisions where it suited them best. [114] [184] [634]

[illegible] There are contradictory descriptions of the singira. MERKER states that it is a 'very big hut'; HOLLIS " not so big "; HOLLIS " small ". Leakey and Fox state respectively " an enormous ", and a " very large " hut. Probably it all depends on the actual number of the initiates involved.

[illegible] LEAKEY, l. c., p. 194.

[illegible] NAD, p. 21.

[illegible] FOX, l. c., p. 482.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 624 and the candidates have previously agreed on the person to be appointed, and the matter is also discussed with the prophet (laibon). As in previous cases, these transactions are kept secret because the office is not popular, and the selected man and his family would avoid the election. Only a popular man and a " pure Masai " distinguished for his physical strength, may be appointed aunoni. Generally the aigwenan is not elected, but in some cases he may be. "

561 624 888 According to MERKER, p. 72, on the day of his official appointment, the selected man is seized and forced to sit on a stool in the centre of the singira. He is then clothed wit elders' garments and decorations. FOSBROOKE, " states that soon after his appointment he will be given a wife and cattle by his age-mates.

The unpopularity of the office seems to derive from the fact that the elected man must settle down and behave as an old man as to the peculiar nature of the office. This is described by FOSBROOKE, " and his description sums up the descriptions and statements of all other authorities. " " The duties of the position (of the aunoni) are obscure, but as far as is known the launon appears to be a sort of scapegoat for the age (unit). If he flourishes and begets many children, and if his cattle prosper and increase, it is a bad omen for the rest of the age (unit). But his adversity will indicate the age (unit)'s prosperity. He must do everything in advance of his age-mates, marry, settle down, make the final payment that binds the marriage. It is as though the moran standing on the brink of elderhood, send forth the launon as an explorer into the unknown country, so that any bad luck which may be awaiting them shall be focussed on one individual and not on the whole age (unit). But the launon is held in great respect by his age-mates, and any demands that he makes must be fulfilled. It is stated that he is the only official whose order must be obeyed. In discussing this with an elder, I pointed out that this should give the office

561 624

" MS. 48, p. 4.

" FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 38.

" FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 39 s.

" While on p. 29 FOSBROOKE states: Uasio " is performed by sections or groups of sections. The Kisongo traditionally perform the ceremony at Magulat near Mass, i. e., on the eastern slopes of Mondul Mountain, actually in the Arusha district. As many as possible of the age attend, but by no means all ". On p. 36 he writes that " all sections and areas meet together for the uasio ceremony ". Evidently this statement must be qualified by what he says above.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

great political importance, in reply to which the elder indicated that such did not necessarily follow as 'we can always tell the launon what order to give". 561 624

c) The sacrifice of a bull is then performed with great ceremonial. HOLLIS,[99] describes the contest in which the candidates compete in getting hold of a horn which was previously thrown into a fire. [082]

With reference to this sacrifice a special officer is appointed. He is called aboruengene; he has a ceremonial status and must prepare the hide-rings from the skin of the bull. He is also described by the author of MS. 48 as " the official charmmaker of the moran ". His function, however, seems to be limited to Unoto.

Great emphasis is laid by WHITEHOUSE,[100] on what he calls " the fire-drilling ceremony ", which as Fosbrooke also says, " must in fact be the unoto ". The ceremony is described by Whitehouse in connection with the first erection of the segregated village of the initiates or manyatta.[101] [621]

The fire is ceremonially lighted by the elders, and it must be carried into the new awellings of the village. The next morning after this ceremony, the candidates who have become senior initiates are blessed, and prayers to the black God are offered for them.[102]

At the unoto, the aunon first, and then the other initiates, shave their hair. Pig-tails, however, are again fitted after the ceremony. 884 721

Some (four or five) months after the ceremony, when the senior 561

[99] HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 300 ss.

[100] WHITEHOUSE, l. c., p. 153.

[101] This circumstance supports MERKER's statement that one of the privileges demanded by the junior initiates is the building of their own segregated village, l. c., pp. 35 ss.

[102] It is of some interest to reproduce here from WHITEHOUSE, the prayer recited by the elders on this occasion. It shows clearly how the senior initiates are about to enter the most important stage of their life as members of Masai society. This is the prayer: " Be trustworthy, Oh, return safely, O God. — Become ye ours and of God. — May the illness pass you by. — Wish those who hate us that they may find dry rives on their journeys. — Lenana and Sufeit and Mbatian wish the safe return. — Grow up. Become possessed of wise heads. Become as great as the Kilimanjaro. — Be the fathers of my children, and bring them up well. Have many wives. — May God love you. May the red bull of the night guard thee. May our age be the bravest ". The expression of the first verse " return safely " probably refers to the raid which fullows unoto. Lenana, Sufeit, Mbatian were prophets. [782]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

884 721 561 initiates have returned from a meat festival in the bush a raid is organised. According to HOLLIS this is called, "the (fulfilment) of the vow" or "the (selection) of the chief" (En-oo-'n-dorosi araki En-e-'unoto).[103]

The main reason for this raid, is the strong desire of the new senior initiates to show their ability and enjoy the satisfaction of the military efficiency they have reached.

At the unoto the age-unit assumes a new name.[104]

884 561 Unoto if seen with relation to the social status of the initiates is undoubtedly a promotion ceremony. Junior become senior initiates. But if we consider the ceremony in connection with the institution of the age-unit, we find that Unoto brings together all those who have been individually initiated during previous years. In other words it merges into one body the three minimal divisions, it gives them a corporate status and institutes the age-unit. The performance of individual initiation is not ended with Unoto. It still takes place, but irregularly, and all those initiated at this time form the fourth minimal division, el oirogua, as reported by MERKER.[105] The ceremony closing the age-unit's legal period for individual initiation is Endungore, which, as we have seen, is performed by the piron-elders of the next age-unit.

561 Thus the institution of the age-unit is brought about by three different ceremonies, namely, Engibata as the opening ceremony, Unoto as the instituting ceremony, and Endungore as the closing ceremony.

The closing value of Endungore is due to the negative aspect of this ceremony as we noted.

The point raised by the interval between all these various ceremonies is most confusing. The reason for this is that the interval is defined by all our authorities in terms which are foreign to Masai age-system. Therefore, we must accept the number of years which they suggest as more or less broad approximations.

[103] "The (fulfilment) of the vow" is not a special term for the raid which follows unoto, but is applied to any raid undertaken after a long peace. Cf. HOLLIS, l. c., p. 301, n. 3.

[104] FOX, l. c., p. 449, writes that "the present (1939) age (unit) of Purko warriors was called il-tiegi prior to the E-Unoto when they took the name of Il-Salaash.

[105] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 27, speaks of a "hiatus" between the age-units, and we think that such hiatus is that period which runs between the Unoto and the Endungore-Engibata.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

MERKER,[106] states that each year for three successive years, candidates are individually initiated and formed into separate minimal age-divisions. A fourth one follows immediately before the closing ceremony is celebrated. He does not state the length of the interval between two successive clossing ceremonies. 561

HOLLIS,[107] is very definite on this point. He writes that individual initiation is performed for four years in succession, and all those initiated during these years belong to the right-hand unit. "An interval of about three and half years then intervenes before another festival is held". All those initiated during the netx four years belong to the left-hand unit. Therefore, according to HOLLIS, the period for the institution of each age-unit would be about seven and half years.

LEAKEY,[108] states that Unoto is celebrated after "nine years of junior warriorhood". But FOX,[109] disputes this and says that "nowadays it takes place from three to five years after initiation".

WHITEHOUSE,[110] writes that "the (initiation) ceremonies which commence about every 7 years extend over a period of about 5 years".

FOSBROOKE,[111] says that the right-hand unit performs Unoto 7 years after their initiation period has been opened; and the left-hand unit 5 years after it.

All these statements show clearly that there is no hard and fast definition of the period for the institution of the age-units, and they are evidence that our system of measuring time does not apply to the Masai. The major factor for fixing that period are the presence of candidates, the authority of the elders stating that the right time for performing the various ceremonies has come, and also the regular occurrence of good rainy seasons.

We may, however, say that the period of seven-eight years is a good approximation of what obtains in actual fact. If we take

[106] MERKER, l. c., p. 70.

[107] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 262. His actual words be misleading. He states that "one feast (circumcision feast) is held in each subdistrict every year for four years in succession". But it is certain that circumcision is not performed at one single ceremony in each sub-district, but in any village where there are candidates. [114]

[108] LEAKY, l. c., p. 194.

[109] FOX, l. c., p. 451.

[110] WHITEHOUSE, l. c., p. 146.

[111] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 25.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 Engibata as the first ceremony for the institution of an age-unit, we may put Unoto at an interval of about three or four years; and then Endungore some two or three years, or more, after that.[112]

VII – THE INTERNAL STRUCTURE OF THE AGE-UNIT

The generic reference made by our authorities either to "the elders" or "the candidates", and so on, may cause the false impression that those engaged in the initiation ceremonies always act as a whole and corporate group. In point of fact, general meetings are rare occasions, and they are also restricted to territorial sections or groups of sections.

561 624 Only a few representatives of the age-units take the most important decisions in connection with the institution of the units.

We have mentioned the ingopior or ingobir, sg. engobiro. These are the best of the age-units initiates. It is they who first approach the elders and assist their own leaders, who usually are selected from among their number. These are, generally, the most senior. According to the information of FOSBROOKE,[113] they form "an [623] inner council for appointing or degrading the laigwanan, and for the conduct of important public business". However, "there is no definite office of engobiro"; they emerge according to their talents, skill and personality. Thus "they are not necessarily confined to the first batch of initiates", but any one else, even of the last batch, whose qualities excel may be considered an engobiro.

The elders here referred to are, as said, the piron elders. Their office of sponsors is thus summarized by FOSBROOKE,[114]: "the il piron-elders, i. e., the guardians of the youths, have to coach the senior boys in citizenship, taking them to the laibon, making them sit at their meetings, etc.".

Of the age-unit leaders (aigwenani) FOSBROOKE,[115] distinguishes three kinds, 1. ol aigwenani loongishu pokin, lit., the aigwenani of [112] One of the few facts we possess concerning the Samburu is that "the circumcision rite takes place at intervals of seven years". See WEBSTER, l. c., p. 8. For the other tribes in Masai District there are no indications in the various reports of the NAD confirming the above period. Cf. the references in NAD, 1926 and 1927 with 1932 and 1937 which, however, are very vague to be of any real value.

[113] FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 34 s.

[114] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 54.

[115] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 34.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

all the cattle: the chief leader of the ageunit; 2. ol aigwenani lol kuma orok; a duly appointed aigwenani to whom a black club is presented; 3. e murt ol aigwenani, lit. the 'neck of the aigwenani', who is the righthand man of the aigwenani proper (No. 2), in whose absence no important decisions are taken. 561 624

The election of the aigwenan loongishu pokin is described by FOSBROOKE,[116] in connection with the Unoto. We have noted, however, that his statement in this passage is contradictory.[117] Unfortunately, there is no other authority on the matter, but one gets the impression that the aigwenan loongishu pokin is never elected as such: he emerges from among his fellow aigwenok as the best man for the office.

The aigwenan lol kuma orok is the ordinary leader elected at the Engibata by the elders and the ingobir. He is elected from a list of prospective candidates. Second to him is his deputy and assistant, namely, " the neck of the aigwenani " (emurt ol aigwenani).

The aigwenani is the leader of the age-unit in his section.

FOSBROOKE mentions the case of some subalterns being elected when the number of the age-unit members in one area is too big and the ingopir feel that another leader is needed.

The function of the aigwenan is political, military and to some extent judicial, his authority extends to his age-mates of whom he may be said to be " primus inter pares ".[118]

Every aigwenani, even the aigwenani loongishu pokin, is primarily responsible for his territorial section or group of sections or area for which he has been appointed. He has la foster good relations among members of his age-unit, between his unit and other units either in his or in other sections. He is responsible for seeing the elders and the prophet in order to obtain their approval for Unoto and any other ceremony or matter connected with his age unit. [628]

In military activity the aigwenani was more important in former times than at present. When large actions were organised and different sections threw their lot together, the various aigwenok united according to their seniority. This might have been the occasion

[116] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 36.

[117] In no description of Unoto is there mention of an aigwenani being elected. The only officers connected with unoto are the aunoni or otuno, and the oberusengone.

[118] Cf. MERKER, l. c., p. 86.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 when the aigwenani loongishu pokin was recognised as a general
624 leader. [119]

Judicial activity is not a real part of the aigwenani's office. It
[692] all depends on his personality and on how much he is favoured by his age-mates, who may ask him to arbitrate and settle their disputes. [120]

The election and the status of the aunoni-otuno as the ceremonial leader of the age-unit has already been described. A peculiar duty of the aunoni's office is the responsibility " for the smart turn-out of the moran (initiates) ". [121] MERKER, [122] and HOLLIS, [123] state that the aunoni was responsible to the prophet (laibon) for the organisation of raids. The anonymous author of MS. 48, p. 4, describes [977] him as the mascot of the unit when this was at war: " as long as he is alive they (the unit-members) cannot be beaten by the enemy... For this reason they take him on their raids ".

The relationship between the aigwenani and the aunoni is not clear. It seems certain that the latter has a more ceremonial and ritual character than the former.

The term of office for all these officers is limited to the existence of the age-unit as such; but they will always be distinguished and sought for their opinion.

561 The analysis of the unit's leaders does not offer a complete pic-621 ture of the internal structure of the age-unit. This structure rests
701 on two other institutions, namely the manyatta, which is the proper

[119] The aigwenani was not epected to take part in the actual fighting; he had to be in the rear to govern the action or, as FOSBROOKE, p. 38, puts it, " probably because the laigwanan wore the charm which had been obtained from the laibon, and its loss could not be risked ". At present, adds FOSBROOKE, p. 39, " the relations between senior laigwanak and their juniors are very lax. It is probable that this is due to the prohibition of raiding and consequent reduction of the occasions on which large-scale common efforts are required. In the old days when large groups of moran (initiates) came together for raids the senior laigwanak (sic.) must of necessity have asserted his position, and the others must have obeyed him, to ensure the success of the venture ".

[120] " It appears ", writes FOSBROOKE, p. 38, " to be the privilege of the aggrieved party to select his judges... If a local laigwanan han a reputation for fairness and justice, he will be called even from a distance, but proceedings are not invalidated if no laigwanan is present ".

[302] [121] FOSBROOKE, p. 40. So, no initiate was supposed to cut off his pig-tail coiffure without the permission of the aunoni.

[122] MERKER, l. c., p. 122.

[123] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 299 n. 1.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

residential place of the initiates, and the sirit which is a manifold grouping of comradeship. 56 62 70

The manyatta is the village where the initiates live in segregation from other people. Externally it does not differ from any ordinary village. Some authorities state that there is only one manyatta for each territorial section.[124] But FOX,[125] qualifying LEAKEY, states that this is only true for some special occasions as when all the initiates of one section come together to perform some special ceremonies, as, e. g., Unoto. 62

In the manyatta the initiates are assisted by their mothers who do the housework, and by some unitiated girls (na sandja or ditto)[126] who are there mostly for their sexual pleasure.[127] Uninitiated boys may also live in the manyatta for the menial works and for tending cattle.[128]

The groupings named sirit, pl. isirit, are formed, according to WHITEHOUSE,[129] at a meeting called by the ingobir when it is decided to build the manyatta. Membership of the sirit is a matter of free choise. An initiate is free to join any sirit, and he is free to change it for another soon after his first election. But if he does so when the manyatta has been formed, he "incurs the bitter resentment" of his sirit-mates, and he may even be fined for that. 70

As far as numbers go, WHITEHOUSE states that "groups of 5 (initiates) will go together to join the same company" (sirit).[130] MERKER, however, says that the inhabitants of a single manyatta 70 62

[124] MERKER, l. c., p. 82; LEAKEY, l. c., p. 192; HINDE, l. c., p. 91 writes that "every section has usually some three favourite districts, in each of which is a village, called 'mangatta'".

[125] FOX, l. c., p. 451.

[126] MERKER, l. c., p. 83.

[127] Although the sexual life of the initiates with these girls is promiscous and free, full sexual intercourse is strongly condemned. [831] [833]

[128] According to MERKER, l. c., p. 110, the initiates who belong to the smith trade usually do not share the village with the other initiates, but have their own villages and the girls who live with them are from families of the same trade. The smith initiates organise their own raids, but because they are few their booty is always small and they are easily deprived of it by other warriors. [564]

[129] WHITEHOUSE, l. c., p. 150.

[130] WHITEHOUSE described the sirit as based on the clan. The MS, 46, p. 8, states that "amanyata is inhabitated by the moran of one particular clan". It seems, however, that this is not a fixed principale, and certainly does not obtain with the Kisongo. Cf. FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 28. [114]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

701 may be from 50 to 100; and the anonymous MS. 46, p. 8, records
621 that in a manyatta there may be from 20 to 30 huts. The extension of the term is not clear. It may be applied alternatively to the whole group forming a manyatta, and to a subdivision of this. Thus, we find in MS. 48 that each sirit is said to have its own 'portion' of the manyatta. Similarly, Fox says that each sirit is commanded by a
[624] captain (il aigwenan loo sirit), and that the manyatta is ruled by a special leader (il aigwenan 'l ol poror = the leader of the age-unis), who is at the same time the captain of his own sirit. [123]

The fact that the members of the sirit " as a rule quarrel pretty regularly with other sirit of their mannyata " is emphasised by MS. 48, p. 3. There is no indication that the internal organisation of the manyata is based on the seniority of its members. We may, however, assume quite safely that that is the main principle which regulates the relationship of the manyatta's of the two age-units existing at the same period. No special information is available on this point, but it is obvious that members of the two age-units have their own manyatta's and we also know that they unite in time of war, the juniors being trained by the seniors.

Seemingly the sirit division has a military function and serves to readily organise warriors for raids. MERKER, [125] however, applies the term to a special partnership which two age-mates contract
[572] on their way to the battle-field. They pledge themselves to assist each other while fighting. They refer to each other as 'my companion' (os sirit ai), and if one of them falls, the other has to rescue his arms. [126] Ten or twelve such companions form a company.

527 The term sirit is further applied to the grouping of initiates
561 who come together for a meat festival (es sirit ol bul). This group consists according to MERKER, [124] of five or six age-mates who go to a segregated place where they revel on ox-meat.

The meat festivals (ol bul, pl. e buli) are held once or twice a month;

[123] Very probably this leader of the manyatta is no other than the aigwenan lol huma erok, as indicated. The two different expressions may be taken as describing two different functions exercised by the same person. Aigwenan lol huma erok means lit. " the speaker with the black club ", and 'l aigwenani 'il ol poror, " the speaker of the age-unit ".

[125] MERKER, l. c., p. 73.

[126] MERKER, l. c., p. 93: " Die Aufgabe der Gefahrten ist es, dem andern im Kampfe beizustehen und, wenn er fällt, seine Waffen in Sicherheit zu bringen ". The spirit as a military company is also mentioned by MS 48.

[124] MERKER, l. c., p. 84.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

they last for three or four days and generally take place before a raid.[135]

At this point it is relevant to discuss the relationship of military organisation and the age units. MERKER,[136] gives a description of Masai military organization. He assumes the existence of a standing army (das stehende Heer), in which he distinguishes the recruits, the warriors and the reserve.

The recruits are " the shaved ones " (el barnot).[137] These, together with " the warriors " (el moran = initiates)[138] constitute the peace-time force (Friedensstärke), under conscription.[139]

The junior elders come into action in time of war but they may be reckoned as members of the standing army (" ... kann man als Reserve ansehen und mit zum stehenden Heer rechnen... "). The senior elders take arms only in defence of their own territorial areas and sections (Distrikt).

The above description appears to be very formal.[140] It shows, however, that military activity is not confined to the initiates but extends to the classes of elders. And this is a relevant point. We can say, therefore, that the initiates become warriors not to the exclusion of the other classes above them. A further point brought out by MERKER's description is the distinction between an offensive army constituted by the so called recruits, the warriors and the reserve, and a defensive army in which the senior elders are also incorporated.

It would be of great interest to know how the organisation of a raid or any other military action is formed, and whether there is any relationship between such an organisation and the manyatta

[135] MERKER, l. c., p. 84. See also HOLLIS, l. c., p. 317. At p. 292, n. 1, he states that " il pull are special places erected in the woods, to which the warriors retire when they slaughter cattle ".

[136] MERKER, l. c., p. 73.

[137] " The shaved ones ", (ol barnoti, pl. el barnot), is the term applied to those who have just come out of their individual initiation and have been given the warriors' arms. They are the junior initiates.

[138] We may assume that the general term " warriors " as used by MERKER at this place (see also p. 56) refers to the senior initiates.

[139] MERKER, l. c., p. 73, regards circumcision as a kind of compulsory conscription (... seiner — der allgemeinen — Wehrpflicht ins Heer...).

[140] One may note here that it is MERKER's tendency to describe Masai customs in a way which fits his own scheme. As known, his thesis on the semitic origin of the Masai has so influenced his way as to make his informations in many a case unreliable.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

721
701

system. Unfortunately, no such information is available. MERKER,[141] describes the actual action in detail but from a purely tactical or strategical point of view.

701
554

Special distinctions may be attained by the initiates either in military actions or in social life. Thus, if a warrior is outstanding in war for his courage and he " kills many savages " (HOLLIS (a) he is called " the bull ", ol oingok; if he is liberal and through the assistance of his father " frequently slaughters bullocks " for his comrades, he is called " the benefactor ", N-gamini. These distinctions as described by MERKER,[142] would suggest the existence of special offices with structural significance. He states that " the bulls " play a leading role (eine führende Rolle), and are the leaders in the fight (" Sie sind die Anführer im Kampf "); " the benefactors " retain a special position (eine besondere stellung). It seems, however, that there are no such institutionalised office as " the Bulls " and " the Benefactors "; they represent two different distinctions which may be attained by any of the initiates. This seems to be the opinion also of HOLLIS,[143] when he states that " the warriors are fond of the titles 'L-oingok (the bulls) and 'N-gamini (the generous people), for they may then wear bells or a bracelet called il-torongen ".

561

The internal structure of the age-unit, we may now conclude, is based on various principles, which give shape to different groupings.

The essential principle is the contemporaneity of initiation either during the same season in which the minimal age divisions are instituted, or during the same initiation period in which all the minimal divisions merge into a single age-unit.

[621]

A second principle is the residential principle, on which the manyatta and the sirit are organised. The sirit ol bul, or the grouping for the meat festival in special segregated huts also seems to be due to this principle.

[701]
[572]

The military principle seems to give a special military aspect to the sirit proper, as found in the manyatta, and, apparently, the same principle extends to the temporary capillary formation of special partnership between two fighting warriors.

[624]

Corresponding to these various groupings there are leaders, as mentioned above, who organise their age mates in the performance of the various ceremonies and functions of the age-unit. It is very

[141] MERKER, l. c., pp. 93 ss.
[142] MERKER, l. c., p. 86.
[143] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 298.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

important to note their temporary and personal function. In this connection one should also noth that, however complex the organisation of the age-unit may appear, its character and nature is entirely democratic. The importance of the ingobir as a council to the aigwenan has never been stressed sufficiently. Although their office is not very well defined, it is a fact that they may exercise a real control over the leaders of the age-unit whom they have power to degrade. [144]

The following diagram illustrates the internal structure of the age-unit.

VIII – THE FUNCTION OF THE AGE-UNIT

The most apparent function of the age-unit is military. This is also the aspect stressed by all our authorities, so much so that it is commonly stated that the function of the age system is military. [145] The evidence we have just analysed suggests a somewhat different description.

We have already noted that the initiates do not become war-

[144] The relationship of the prophet, laibon, to the structure of the age-unit and age-class is illustrated below in connection with the latter.

[145] Cf. for all others Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 32: "The basic function of the age-grade system is doubtless military".

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 701 riors to the exclusion of other classes above them. Their status is that of trainees in the case of junior initiates, and of full warriors in the case of senior initiates. Although it is not incorrect to state that they are in a condition of conscripts it is wrong to say that military activity is solely their privilege.

[621] Residential segregation is generally connected with the military activity of the initiates. MERKER states that the manyat were ordinarily situated in the strategic positions of the country.[146]

561 But there are other points to show that this segregation was not intended only for military purposes. Thus the initiates are not allowed to form their own family until they are elders. They are [962] also forbidden to eat meat "seen by women", and because their mothers and girls reside with them in their village, the initiates hold their meat festivals on their own in a secluded place. Similarly, they are not allowed to have milk unless they are in groups of two or three at least.[147]

It is difficult to see any relationship between these restrictions and the initiates' military activity. It seems evident that members of the age-units are still considered not sufficiently qualified to deal with cattle, and matters connected with them such as meat and milk, with complete freedom. Apparently, they do not have the [421] full possession of any cattle; the share of their mother's cattle to which they have right remains the property of their fathers' until [721] they get married. And to the father goes the best part of the booty which they take from a raid.[148] Since cattle are the primary source [593] of wealth and food, we must conclude that the initiates are still in a state of dependence on their fathers socially and economically.

This conclusion is corroborated by the fact that an analogous dependence holds true of their political activity. On this they depend entirely on their piron-elders.[149]

[146] The statement is confirmed by HINDE's description l. c., p. 91. He [361] says that the manyat were always built free from any kind of cover, "if possible on a plateau overlooking a good water supply", and "commanding many miles of plain".

[147] The initates have a right to ask everybody for milk which cannot be refused. Generally they address themselves to their piron-elders.

[148] MERKER, l. c., p. 30: "Das Verdienst der zu Kriegern herangewachsenen Söhne besteht in erbeuteten Vieh und fliesst in der Hauptsache zur Herde des Vaters".

[149] Other restrictions such as the prohibition against snuffing and drin- [554] king beer, both privileges of the elders, confirm the general status of inferiority of the initiates with relation to the elders.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

Thereupon we infer that the function of the age-unit is primarily social. Its scope is to organise the initiates into a corporate body, separate and distinct from other similar bodies, and to lead them, both as individuals and as a corporate whole, towards a full social and economic independence and towards taking a full share in political life.[150] 561 182

IX – THE CEREMONIES FOR THE INSTITUTION OF THE AGE CLASS

The institution of the age class is brought about by the performance of some special ceremonies, of which the most important is the ngeherr proper. Before this takes place, other ceremonies, such as "the slaughtering of the ox with jousting" (ol geten 1 ol baa), "the ngeherr of milk" and "the ngeherr of meat", must be performed by every initiate. Through these performances the initiate obtains the status of an elder. The aunoni is the forerunner of all his age-mates. As was seen, at Unoto, he is given the status of an elder, and soon after that he settles down as a married man. 561 [884]

LEAKEY,[151] states that a warrior (i. e. an initiate) who marries cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife.[152] FOX,[153] qualifies LEAKEY's statement and says that such a case "is hypothetical, and does not occur in practice", because usually the senior initiates marry after the ngeherr of milk.

MERKER,[154] is our only authority for "the slaughtering of the ox with jousting". The ceremony consists in a meat festival offered by the candidate to the elders of the neighbourhood of his father's village. Other initiates share the meat, but eat apart being still under the restrictions of junior initiates. A mock fight follows in which the initiates and women take part. Finally before the sun sets, "a married man with his chief wife comes near to their host and addresses him with the following words": [539]

[150] Each unit seems to be distinguished from the other by its peculiar songs. FOX, l. c., p. 454, states that almost all of these songs are in a "rather cryptic language". [533]

[151] LEAKEY, l. c., p. 200.

[152] LEAKEY was somehow misled in his information; he also states l. c., p. 196, that "the actual transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elder's stage takes place without any ceremonial", which is not correct. [114]

[153] FOX, l. c., p. 455.

[154] MERKER, l. c., pp. 102 ss.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 "I say, thou art no longer ol moran (a circumcized, a warrier), [539] but ol morou (an elder). Take care of thy cattle, goats and sheep, and have regard for them. Give up the occupations of the warriors thou art now an elder".

"After this feast", remarks MEEKER, "it all depends on the warrior whether he chooses to take a greater or lesser part in raids. Usually he gets married at once and lives with his wife either in [591] his father's kraal or in the warriors' kraal (manyatta) until all his age-mates have married. Only then he is recognised as el moruo;
561 each one builds his own kraal and lays aside the clothes, decora-
554 tions and the pigtail of the warriors".

[587] It is evident that the effect of the ceremony is rather limited. It allows an initiate to take a wife, but, even after that, the initiate is not yet "recognised" as an elder. It is as if he were given the elder's status in anticipation of the time when all his age-mates are married. At which time only the status of elder becomes for all purposes official.

561 A very detailed description of "the ngeherr of milk" is given by J. V. DAWSON, but the ceremony is mentioned also by other authorities. FOX,[156] states that "this ceremony is performed by each warrior individually",[156] and DAWSON tells us that it occurs at the village of the initiate's father and that four piron-elders take a special part in it.

[535] The ceremony is preceded by a dance. The candidate is clothed
[292] in women's clothes and the first two of the elders place women ear-
[301] rings (surutya) on him.[157]

A test follows, in which the candidate is expected to confess
[783] how many times he has "stolen milk", i. e. taken milk by himself
[685] or with people other than his age mates. Two heads of cattle are usually paid as a fine by a guilty candidate. He is then solemnly instructed by one of the elders, apparently the most senior, about "what he must and must not do after he has drunk and become an elder". He now drinks the milk, "very little however" at this

[156] FOX, l. c., p. 453.

[156] He says also that "the ceremony usually takes place nowadays a year or two after the E-unoto owing to the Government policy of reducing the period of warriorhood as much as possible".

[157] These ear-rings, surutya, are also worn by elders. For this reason some of our authorities describe the earrings put on by candidates as the elder's ear-rings or decorations. But the whole attire of candidates is undoubtedly of a femine type.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

time. Then the dance is resumed until night. At this stage the initiate is allowed to have intercourse with his wife.

The next morning the initiate, as soon as he rises, again drinks some milk. Then he is smeared all over with a special mixture by two of the elders, who also present him with an olive and a bamboo stick. A procession is then formed from inside the hut, where these ceremonials have been accomplished, to the cattle kraal. Here the elders choose four or eight "(it must be four or eight)" head of the initiate's cattle, and he hits each one of them with his olive stick.

The initiate must now remain inside for five days. On the fourth day his mother pours liquid, half milk and half water, on his head, and then the mother shaves him.[138] The ceremony is now complete.

FOSBROOKE,[139] makes reference to a similar ceremony "by which a moran is permitted to drink the milk from his wife's cattle".[140] He then remarks that "this does not, however, permit him (the initiate) to drink milk by himself; this must always be done with his age-mates until such time as all go through the ngekerr ceremony". This indicates that "that ngekerr of milk" must also be considered as an individual anticipation of the status officially recognised only at the corporate ceremony.

We do not possess any detailed description of "the ngekerr of meat". We are informed by FOX,[141] that the ceremony takes place, and he records it as "the second el-ngeker ceremony, called the Ol-ngeker of meat". After such ceremony the initiate may eat meat freely, and, if he chooses, eat meat which has been touched by a woman.

The ngekerr proper is the closing ceremony which finally institutes the age class. It is celebrated by the Kisongo, but unknowledged and accepted throughout Masailand.[142] The ceremony is briefly described by MERKER,[143] as follows: "when all the members [138] These formalities may be performed either by the candidates' mother or his first wife, provided the latter had not conceived while he was still uninitiated, or by the two women together.

[139] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30.

[140] The expression "his wife's cattle" sounds inaccurate and indefinite. Probably it refers to the initiate's cattle tended by his wife.

[141] FOX, l. c., pp. 453 s.

[142] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30, states that the ceremony "is traditionally held at oldrupe loo 'l moruak (the hill of the Elders), Upper Sanyas, Moshi District.

[143] MERKER, l. c., p. 73.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 of these associations (the age-units) have long been married, the ol oikowi (the prophet) binds them more closely by giving a common name to both age-classes[xxx] each of which, as we have seen, had its own name. This takes place at ol naker feast. All the members of the associations come together at the ol oikowi's place and build a great kraal near his village. Everybody brings honey for making beer or an ox for meat. This last is then killed by suffocation at the en pakata feast. The feast consists in consuming all these things, and its climax is the proclamation by the ol oikowi that from now on all the assembled people shall belong to a single ol odji (age-class), and have a common class name".

561 624 Fosbrooke,[xxx] states that "a single official, ol-ko-ewuiya, is chosen as the head of the whole generation (age-class), thus symbolising the union of the two ages (age-units) which have up to now been independent, each with its own laonon or ceremonial leader".

561 It is after this feast that "those who are not yet married do so at the earliest opportunity. Those who are married, if their fathers [571] are still alive, move off from the paternal boma (village); for they are now in complete control of their cattle, and if they stayed with their fathers there would be constant bickering on animal husbandry matters. It is also this feast that "pigtails are cut off and are not allowed to grow again, the new elders may drink milk alone, eat meat that married women have seen, carry about short bladed spears (emberr serr) in place of the long polished warriors' spears, in fact all the customs of warriorhood are abandoned".[xxx] In other words through the ngakerr ceremony initiates reach a complete [554] social and economic independence and become full men or elders; they may beget children, own their own stock and build their own village or 'gate'.

There is no doubt that the value of the Ngakerr proper for the institution of the age-class is equal to that of Emboloot. This is stated by Fosbrooke.[xxx] He writes: "Just as the Kakonyuke ceremony of Emboloot starts off the age (class-period) for the whole tribe (read — the whole Masailand), it appears that the Kimotoi Ngakerr closes it throughout Masailand". This value of Ngakerr [xxx] Read — age-units (my interpolation).

[xxx] Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 36.
[xxx] Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 36.
[xxx] Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 36.

is also confirmed by the fact that, as Fox [] states, " the generation names (i. e. class names) emanate from the Kisongo in Tanganyika Territory and are common to all the Masai. They are given soon after the warriors (initiates) of the two combined ages (age-units) have become elders. Therefore the age-names (i. e. age-unit names) tend to fall into disuse and be replaced by the generation names (i. e. class names) ". (Words in brackets mine). 56 1

It should be noted here that the acknowledgement of the Kakeyuke Ewbolosat and of the Kisongo Ngokeve by all the Masai is the more remarkable if one considers the tendency of each territorial section to hold ceremonies of its own for the institution of the age-units.

X – THE GENERAL PATTERN OF THE INITIATION CEREMONIES.

At this point, when all initiation ceremonies have been studied, it may be of interest to note that the ritual patterns of all these ceremonies, whether their value is territorially sectional or extends throughout Masailand, are essentially similar. Initiation ceremonies are made up of four main elements: a) testing and instruction of candidates; b) election of a leader; c) sacrifice of a bull; d) ceremonial fire. 56 1 [114]

a) The testing and instruction of the candidates is a broad expression which covers various rites performed at different times. It refers to all the ordeals (except circumcision) and confessions which candidates are expected to pass through, and to the instructions, blessings and prayers which the elders impart to, or offer for, their given candidates.

b) Contrary to expectation the office of leader holds no attraction for the candidates. Very probably the reason is that such leaders, or officiers, as the olpumani and ewonoi are expected to act in a fashion which is not the fashion of their own age-mates at that moment. Indeed they are forced to act as elders when their companions are being recognized as junior or senior initiates. There is no detailed account of the election of the class-leader (olkiu-ewuiye). If that opposition to office is viewed in the background of the leader's limited and temporary authority in the age system, it may be taken as a further indication that these leaders have nothing in common with political chiefs as found in centralized societies. 56 1 [23]

 Fox, l. c., p. 226.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Masai FL.12

[54] c) That the killing of the bull is a religious sacrifice is shown [55] by the fact that the bull is killed in a ceremonial way, i. e. by suffocation.[109] Prayers are also offered to God, and ceremonial hide-rings from the bull's skin are distributed to all those present.

d) At first sight the ceremonial fire gives the impression of being inconsistent with this ritual pattern. It serves to destroy the bones of the sacrificed bull, and it is also produced at the foundation of the village of the initiates (manyatta). The importance of this ritual element, however, becomes evident if we compare it with the so called piron relationship. Il-piron is the firestick used for producing new fire. The breaking of a similar stick by the piron-elders is the main rite of Endengere, and the elders and candidates when they visit the prophet say: "This is our fire-stick, we are one".[110]

[55] Against the background of the above patterns, individual initiation, in this way is a new performance, i. e. by circumcision, seems to stand apart and follow a pattern of its own. This discord is somewhat striking, and one may be permitted to hazard the opinion that circumcision as such is foreign to the age-system of the Masai. Indeed, the structure of the age-system as such has no direct connection with individual initiation.

[56] The Overlapping Rhythm. Discussing the interval between the various ceremonies which institute the age-units we accepted the period of seven years as a good though vague, approximation. On that basis we may now assume that fifteen years is a parallel approximation of the interval between the institution of two age-classes.

The inaccuracy of any numerical computation with regard to Masai age-system is emphasized by what we call the overlapping rhythm.

Up to this point the age-class has been considered absolutely, i. e. without relation to preceding or succeeding classes. In fact the actual institution of a class is related to other classes, and especially to that class immediately preceding and the one which follows immediately. Similarly one age-unit is related to the unit next above it and the one next below it. Let us consider the phenomenon by focusing attention on the left-hand unit. This is the senior of the two units of a class, and the junior of the two. As soon as the lefthand unit is about to perform Uasin, and thus obtain the privileges of seniority, the candidates of the next class below hold the Emboloest ceremony and a new period of initiation is started. The rhythm of the age system moves on, and the right-hand unit of the new class enters the process of institution. When the left-hand unit in question becomes senior, the preceding right-hand unit has been senior for a long time, namely since the first initiation ceremonies (Endungore-Engibata) of the left-hand unit. Members of both, however, officially become elders at the same time by the performance of Ngakerr. At this same time the right-hand unit of the next class below is abouth to hold Uasin and become the senior unit. And so on.[18]

[57] [109] The ordinary way of killing a beast is by stabbing it in the nape of the neck. Cf. Hinzen, l. c., pp. 197, 200.

[110] Waweru, l. c., pp. 148 ss.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

The phenomenon is made clear by the following series of diagrams:

DIAGRAM 1. The overlapping of the age-units.

1 – Left-hand age unit of the preceding class.

2 – Right-hand age-unit } of a single class

3 – Left-hand age-unit } of a single class

4 – Right-hand age-unit of the succeeding class.

[18] LEAKEY, l. c., p. 196 sees the reason for this phenomenon of overlapping in the military aspect of the age-system. He writes: "so two warrior groups (units) may move out into the Elders stage until there is a new age-group in the novice stage, as otherwise it would mean leaving a single age-group alone in the warrior stage for too long, and this would be a serious thing when only warrior groups are the fighting forces of the tribe".

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

56 | DIAGRAM II. A single age-class in itself.

A – age-class

1 – Right-hand unit

2 – Left-hand unit.

DIAGRAM III. The overlapping of the age-classes.

A – the preceding class.

B – a full single class

C – the succeeding class.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

DIAGRAM IV. The overlapping rhythm in its entire complexity. 561

A – the preceding class

1 – left-hand unit of class A

B – a full single class

2 – right-hand unit of class B

3 – left-hand unit of class B

C – the succeeding class

4 – right-hand unit of class C

The Interrelations of Age-Classes. The rhythm of Masai age-system seems to allow for five contemporary classes. All these classes differ in status and power according to their seniority as well as the efficiency of their individual members. We may thus distinguish between the junior elders who are members of the last instituted class; the senior elders who are members of the next one above; the old men who might further be distinguished for they are the few surviving members of the other three classes above.

The junior elders "are mostly concerned with family matters establishing their own gates, marrying and performing ceremonies to ensure the fertility of their wives."[138] In other words, their 561 885

[138] FERRICCHIA, l. c., p. 31.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 immediate interest are in the main of a private nature, and their 885 share in tribal or public affairs is a minor one. They try to enhance [554] their social status by increasing cattle, marrying other wives, and having their sons initiated.

The senior elders have a full share in political life. It would even 561 be correct to say that this is their privilege, and theirs is the class
642 in power. Their sons are ready for initiation. Therefore it is upon their class that falls the duty of undertaking the institution of a new class by controlling and performing all the proper ceremonies. It is from such duty or privilege that the so called piron relationship is derived. It is a mutual relationship by which, on the one hand, the elders pledge themselves to assist the candidates, and be their sponsors, and, on the other hand, the latter revere the elders' authority and follow their advices. Thus the piron-elders control the main branch of social and political activity, namely the institution of a new class. And, because the initiates, both junior and senior, constitute the strongest body of the military force even this other branch of political structure, namely military organisation and activity, falls to some extent under the elders' authority. The peculiar nature of Masai society makes it out of place the search for individual political leaders, but if we want to express ourselves with usual terms, we could say that the piron-elders are the true political leaders of the Masai.

The three classes of the old men are the classes which have retired.
561 In practice they take no further active part in political life, but are 887 concerned with religious ceremonies in which their presence is greatly considered. Their number is naturally decreasing and the few survivors of the last classes are generally dotards. When possible, these survivors, particularly the former leaders, are consulted when tradition is to be ascertained.

561 Analysis shows that the prerogatives of the age-classes are common and proper to all their members, and it shows also that the number of class-members, after the class is constituted, is so closed as no member is any longer accepted into the class.

Junior elders succeed seniors in political leadership when the institution of a new class is officially opened. The phenomenon takes place through the rhythm of the age-system ceremonies.

In this connection FOSBROOKE,[179] speaks of a handing over ceremony performed by the senior and junior elders. "The matter", he writes, "is by no means clear, but there exist vestiges of a ceremony now practised in conjunction with fertility rites, etc., whereby the senior elders retire and hand over the government to the junior elders". Unfortunately, no details of such "vestiges" are indicated, nor is a similar ceremony mentioned by any other authority. 561

[179] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 23.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

In 1939 FOSBROOKE compiled a census of the class- and unit-members among some of the Kisongo. Above we reproduced the membership figures of the age units; it is now of interest to give the figures of the same census for the age-classes. 561 162

	PLACES	Kibaya	Samatwa	Ngaseumet	Longido	Total
Classes	NYANGUSI	1	–	–	–	1	Old men
	LAIMER	2	1	–	1	4
	DALALA	14	12	8	23	57
	DWATI	58	52	23	26	159	Senior Elders
	DARETO	49	69	38	62	218	Junior Elders
	TOTALS	124	134	69	112	439

The above totals should be compared with the total of the age-units members, which are as follows:

TOTALS	123	189	66	234	562	Initiates

A special officer is elected at the ngeherr. He is called ol-loosuruiya.[176] His functions are not very clear. He is described by FOSBROOKE,[179] as having "no duty", though he is held in great 561 624

[176] The name refers evidently to the elder's decorations. The suruiya are the ear-rings proper of the elders.

[179] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 40.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561
624

respect by all his age-mates. It appears that there is only one such officer for the whole class as there is a single performance of the ngeherr proper.

XI - THE PROPHET AND THE INSTITUTION OF THE AGE-CLASS

561
791

"There can be little doubt", writes FOSBROOKE,[176] "that at this time (i. e., in pre-European times) a laibon's chief functions were: i. dispensing charms for raids; ii. supervising and blessing the age grade ceremonies; iii. propounding the ritual and giving charms for local ceremonies, concerned with fertility and disease (both human and bovine) and with rainfall".

He also remarks,[177] that "although the supervision of the age grade ceremonies has been recorded as an important function of the laibon, this activity is subject to curious restrictions, the principle of which I have been unable to ascertain".

It seems to me, on the basis of the foregoing analysis, that the function of the prophet in connection with the institution of the age-units and the age-class is marginal and secondary to the authority of the piron-elders, and that it possesses a wholly ritual value. The authority of the prophet does not find a proper place in the structure of Masai age-system. This system is the principle which restricts his activity.

Whenever one of the inititation ceremonies is held, a delegation of the piron, both elders and candidates, approaches one of the prophets for his blessing. According to FOSBROOKE's information it does not matter whether the sought prophet is a prophet of the territorial section where the ceremony is performed or of another section or even an "unofficial" laibon.[178] The same con-

[176] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 15.

[177] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 17.

[178] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 17. The passage continues as follows: "For instance the Ngeherr or passing out ceremony of the Dareto age-set (class) of the Kissongo section was nominally held under Parrit, and the Unoto or promotion ceremony of the Kisale age (age-unit) under Mbeiya, who were respectively the ruling laibon at the material times. But in fact an old Kikuyu adopter of the Engidong clan, one Lolkokwa ole Kashungu (now deceased) was called to assist in both these ceremonies. By agreement the Mondul laibon received the fees in respect of these ceremonies from the Banerera and Kibaya areas, whilst those contributed by the Mondul and Longido Masai went to Lolkokwa at Bisil, Kenya Colony. In another case, Sangoyan, laibon of the Kisale age for the Matapatu and Lodokilani sections, which are nominally under Kimurusi".

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

tact with a prophet is established before a raid. All these delegations are expected to pay the prophet a number of cattle contributed by the age-set's members they represent. The responsibility for collections of this kind is one of the main duties of the leaders.[179] 561 791

The authority and the influence of the prophet do not extend beyond these contacts. The elders alone are responsible for the organisation of the initiation ceremonies and hence for the institution of the age-class.

However, in his description of the laibon FOSBROOKE assumes too much. He writes,[180] "On evidence which need not be recorded here, it seems certain that the Masai, whose age grade custom so closely approaches that of the Galla, were possessed of their present military organisation prior to leaving their original home.[181] Thus it appears that the laibon is a later adaptation imposed on a self-sufficient organisation of government through age-grades. Probably much of the confusion of function which exists today, the indefinite division of governmental authority between the laibon and the age-set leaders, is due to the adoption of an institution (namely, the laibon hood, B. B.) incompatible with the original culture. It would be wrong to regard the institution as being foreign to Masai nature, but it is probably true that it is a feature which had not found its true level in the tribal structure when European influence intervened". [171]

The assumption that the Masai age-system is related to the Galla age-system is frequently taken for granted but up to the present, nothing definite has been ascertained on this point.[182] On the basis of our present analysis we agree with FOSBROOKE's conclusion on the secondary character oft he prophet's function in the institution of the age-class.[183] But we find it difficult to agree with him when he states that "the age grades" have been the channel through which the laibon institution came to be established as an [171] [114]

[179] It frequently happens, remarks FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 18, that the contributor does not know exactly the reason for his contribution. Of course he relies entirely on his leader.

[180] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 12.

[181] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 3, "lying between Lake Rudolf and Kenya Highlands".

[182] On this point, see BERNARDI, l. c., p. 315, fn. 2.

[183] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 16: "But he (the prophet) is not responsible for the organisation of such matters (i. e. Embolosat, Unoto and Ngeherr ceremonies) nor is it on his initiative that new ages commence or hold ones stand down".

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 institution of Masai culture. We are much inclined to think on 79 different lines. The office of the prophet is essentially a ritual office.
[114] His true power derives from his ritual value. It seems evident from the preceding analysis that Masai political and social structure is primarily based on the age-system. We think that it is solely for this system that the laibon did not entirely succeed in invading the political field and usurping the authority of the elders.

That the function of the prophet is essentially foreign to the age system is a fact which the present analysis may also have helped to make evident. The conclusion arrived at by FOSBROOKE on " the incompatibility " of the laibon institution " with the original cul-
[114] ture " of the Masai is one that could only be properly reached after an historical and critical study of Masai ritual and religious institutions and not merely from a survey of their political and social institutions.

XII – THE RELATIONSHIP OF CLASS-MEMBERS [184]

561 A strong bond of solidarity is felt by all members of a class.
574 Such feeling is primarily due, as is natural, to the mere fact of belonging to the same social body. Other factors, such as a more or less equal age and the contemporaneous performance of essential initiation ceremonies give substantial cause for a feeling and bond of that kind. That such a bond is strong and effective is clearly shown by Masai hospitality customs. They show also what force of cohesion springs from the age-system structure. Any class-member has a right to stay and live at the house of any of his age-mates. While he is a stranger to the place, he is not a stranger to his age-mate for they are members of the same class. The latter cannot refuse him, otherwise he would be cursed by his own class. This [626] cursing power of the age-class is very significant to our present purpose. It shows the authority and power possessed by the class for keeping its structural cohesion and for defending itself from any disruptive attack. [185]

[184] MERKER, l. c., p. 47; HOLLIS, l. c., p. 480; FOX, l. c., p. 183.

[185] Masai hospitality customs are best described by HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 287 s. Translating, as he does, direct Masai accounts, he writes: " When a Masai goes to other kraals to pay a visit, he does not on his arrival enter a hut unless he knows the owner, for if he belongs, for instance, to the Aimer age, he must not enter the hut of one of the Kishumu age, as he does not belong to this age. He will ask where the huts of the members of the Aimere age are, and when he

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

It is possible to consider that solidarity as a kind of class identity. 561
This identity does not exclude the possible variations and differentiations of class-members arising from individual differentiations of talents and character, from leadership, seniority and social prestige attached to the possession of a great number of wives and a large herd of cattle. The main expressions of that identity are the use of a single name for the whole class and some special marriage regulations which apply to class members and, to some extent, to their children.

Thus, a man may not marry the daughter of a member of his [582] own class. If he fornicates with her he is punished by his own age- [684] mates. " His kraal is destroyed, he is severely beaten, and a number of his oxen are slaughtered ". Similarly, " if a warrior or boy commits adultery with a wife of a man belonging to his father's age-grade (or class), he is solemnly cursed by the members of that age-grade ". (HOLLIS). Furthermore, any class member when a guest [837] of any of his age-mates, has a right to cohabit with his host's wife.
MERKER, says that a widow " must not re-marry but she must live [587] with the members of her deceased husband's class ". This " sexual communism ", as HOLLIS calls it, takes place only among members [837] of the same class. It is limited, of course, by clan and kinship exo- [582] gamy, which, even for class members, is strictly enforced.

At the performance of the Embolosat, Engibata, Unoto, Ngeherr 561
names are given to sets instituted. Names assumed at the Embolosat, 552
Engibata, and Unoto are temporary, for temporary is the nature of the set thus established. At the Ngeherr-proper all previous names are discarded for a single name which is final and applies to the age-class as a whole. It is this name which is handed down to the following generations. Age-class names are, as it were, the milestones by which Masai can order their past into a certain historical perspective. Class names are thus recalled when historical facts are recounted.

Lists of class-names have been recorded by our authorities. It may be of interest to reproduce here some of those lists collected by MERKER, FOX, and FOSBROOKE.[184] FOSBROOKE has attempted has been shown them, he will enter one. When he has entered, the owner of [574] the hut leaves him and goes to search for a place to sleep in... A Masai cannot [759] refuse hospitality to a stranger (of his own age) for he is afraid that the other [62] members of his age will curse him, and he will die ".

[184] MERKER, l. c., p. 289; FOX, l. c., pp. 450, 462; FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 11 s.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561
552

a concordance of class-names with dates and some known historical facts.[187] At this stage there is no need to indicate how the very precise 14 years interval is misleading: dates must be taken as a vague attempt to a correct translation of Masai age-system intoour system.[188]

	MERKER (1904)	FOX (1930)	FOSBROOKE (1939)
1	–	Il Meshope	–
2	–	Il Salaash	–
3	El Diegi	Il Tiegi	Diogi	1766	– Members of this class can be remembered by living elders.
4	El Kisaroni	–	Kisaruni	1791
5	El Merischari	I Merishare	Merishari	1806
6	El Kidotu	Il Kidotu	Kidotu	1821
7	El Duati	Il Twati	Dwati	1836
8	El Niangui	Il Nyangusi	Nyangusi	1851	– One or two members still alive.
9	'l Aimerr	Il Aimer	Laimer	1866
10	–	Il Talala	Dalala	1881	– Famine, hinderpest and smallpox.
11	–	Il Twati	Dwati	1896	– First conctat with Eur. Adm.
12	–	Il Tareto	Dareto	1911	– The great war.
			Kisale	1926	– Right-hand unit.
			Merisho	1935	– Left-hand unit.

[114] [187] Figures of years are described by FOOSBROOKE as the "approximate date of circumcisions. The expression is very vague and shows how inaccurate the usual terminology is. Following our analysis it seems clear that "circumcision" means here "age-class", and, therefore, dates may be referred to either the performance of Embelosat or the performance of the Ngeherr proper.

[114] [188] A fourth list recorded by HOLLIS, l. c., p. 365, is not reproduced here because it is evident from a comparison with the other lists that it contains "an indiscriminate mixture of age (unit) and class-names" (FOX).

*648
177

discarded their old formations, adversities of various descriptions have introduced the necessity of undertaking manual labour in portions of each reserve and a succession of punitive expeditions or displays of force, the last of which occurred some ten years ago, has brought home to them a conception of the power of the Government, a realization which has tended towards a more progressive attitude owing to the diminution which it caused in their minds of the influence held by their medicine-men. No punitive expedition has ever been undertaken against the Masai, an omission which was very largely due to the authority and sagacity of Lenana, the chief medicine-man at the time when the European Government was first encountered, who survived long enough to keep his people in check until such a degree of administration had been effected as to render the despatch of a punitive expedition a measure that would only be resorted to in the last extremity. Further, the Masai now thoroughly realize how vulnerable they are if ever they come into armed conflict with the Government. Their enormous, immobile herds would immediately be lost and a sufficient degree of punishment could quickly be attained. For this reason, it is extremely improbable that they will, of their own initiative, so far forget what they consider to be their best interests as to cause a serious disturbance. The escape from punitive expeditions, however, has undoubtedly been a factor in the perpetuation in their original form of the Masai ideas and traditions.

101
184
578
628

The tribal formation of the Masai.

As will be seen in Chapter II., the Masai tribe originally consisted of both pastoral and agricultural sections, of which the latter was almost annihilated by the former and survives at present only in one or two scattered localities, mainly in areas reserved for other tribes. A small section of these agriculturalists, the Nguruman, is to be found at the north end of Lake Natron, but that is the only trace of them in the present Masai Reserve, and these people now show a tendency to assume the habits and customs of the pastoralists. The problem presented in the administration of the Masai is therefore almost exclusively concerned with the pastoral section. According to the social system of this section, the male sex is divided into boys warriors and elders. The first stage continues until circumcision, which may be performed approximately between the ages of thirteen and seventeen. These boys are called "'L-Ayok." After circumcision, they become warriors, or "Muran," those who have been circumcised at about the same time being said to belong to the same age. The "Muran" remain on the fighting strength of the tribe for periods varying from seven to fourteen years, during which period they constitute a standing army. They are divided into Companies, or "Sirits," which live in separate villages, or "Manyattas," some of these containing as many as six or seven hundred fighting men. With few exceptions, the "Muran" of the present day perform no work of any kind. In days gone by, they were expected to carry out raids and preserve the armed prestige of the tribe, but the introduction of the "Pax Britannica" has deprived them of such employment, and they, having found no alternative occupation, are content to remain in idleness and to live in the state of free love with immature girls which tradition prescribes as the duty of the warrior in the days of tribal warfare.

● 561

Social system of the pastoral section. "L-Ayok." "Muran."

The effect of the military organization.

This military organization of the Masai made them, in the past, a most effective body for destructive military operations, and explains not only the predominant position which they acquired in East Africa, but also the respect which they inspired and the extent to which their customs were imitated by other tribes. On the other hand, it probably also is the reason why they never founded any state or polity analogous to the Kingdoms of Uganda and Unyoro. The centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship and desirous only of military glory. Retirement from this band of warriors as a chief was honourable, but seems to have ben regarded as a removal to an inferior sphere of activity. The chiefs arranged the details of the raids which the warriors wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight.*

561
642
632

* Sir Charles Eliot, November, 1904, Introduction to "The Masai: Language and Folklore," by A. C. Hollis.

181 464 561 Employment of the "Muran."

More particularly does this argument apply to the "Muran" who are of the ages at which the members of agricultural tribes are expected to work. No suitable employment has as yet been found for them as a body, though a small number have been known to reside as herds on the farms of sympathetic European stock-owners who are willing to pay a high wage for a modicum of service and who will not insist on their performance of any uncongenial labour. A very few also have proved efficient in the Police Force and K.A.R., while numbers of them, employed in the capacity of native levies have frequently proved of assistance in punitive expeditions against other tribes,* but for the majority, all attempts to find a suitable form of employment have failed, and they continue to lead their idle life in the Reserve, where their attitude is one of conceited conservatism combined with opulent apathy. The discipline formerly necessary to their existance as a fighting race is rapidly falling into disuse, and the good qualities they once possessed are fast deteriorating. Many of them have confessed to a feeling of boredom with their idle life but few have had the moral courage to change it for one of labour. This manner of existance is having a disastrous effect both physically and mentally on the Masai as a tribe, and it is stated that the average height of the "Muran" has decreased by three or four inches during the last fifteen years.

181 232 233 197 Masai conservatism respecting cattle.

It has been said that the Masai Reserve is already, with certain reservations, stocked to its fullest capacity. Mr. Hemsted has estimated the natural increase in cattle at 15 per cent. or approximately 100,000 per head per annum. It follows therefore, that a similar number must be disposed of or perish annually; but this is an argument which does not appeal to the Masai. They have not only shown a marked reluctance to sell their stock, but they have made no serious attempt to accept the assistance of science in improving the grazing conditions of their country, and, being satisfied as a result of the few experiments they have made that the class of stock they possess—a small, degenerate, in-bred animal—is best suited to withstand the ardous conditions prevailing in the Reserve, they are unwilling to permit a cross-breeding with pure-bred or grade stock which might materially increase the value of their herds in the world's markets, and which would, by the introduction of fresh blood, obviate the ill-effects of in-breeding which has been rendered necessary by the cessation of raids. The wealth of the Masai, therefore, is turned to no good purpose; their style of living does not change; they are still content to live in low buildings constructed of poles, grass and mud, in conditions of filth that defy description; and, although an improvement has been noticeable in recent years, they have shown no great desire to utilize their wealth in the purchase of imported articles and in the improvement of their diet.

623 561 Councils of Elders.

Another aspect of the character of the Masai "Muran" which deserves consideration is the disregard which they evince for the authority of their own native administration as represented by the Councils of Elders. These Councils exist according to native custom, but have never been in the past, nor are they now, efficient to enforce the decisions they may give in respect of the young warriors. It may be said that serious crime in the Masai Reserve is rare, and that there are not more than three or four cases on record, since European administration was established, when the attitude of the "Muran" gave cause for anxiety and in no one of these cases did a disturbance of such magnitude occur as to render necessary a recourse to armed force to quell it. Politically, the Masai have remained loyal to the British Government since they first encountered it, and except for isolated instances where certain sections attempted to help the allied cause and to increase their herds by the despatch of raiding expeditions against German territory, their conduct throughout the trying period when the war in East Africa was on their borders was exemplary. Nevertheless, a catalogue of the misdeeds of the Masai will show a not inconsiderable number of instances

[674] Crime in the Masai Reserve.

648 674

---

* The Masai have rendered assistance in the capacity of native levies on the following occasions:—

(1) Nandi Expedition, 1900. 60 Moran.
(2) Nandi Expedition, 1905. 400 Moran.
(3) Maraba Patrol, 1902. 200 Moran.
(4) Teita Operations, 1902-03. 300 Moran.
(5) Irimi Patrol. 400 Moran.
(6) Kabwarwa Patrol, 1904. 100 Masai and Nandi.
(7) Sotik Expedition, 1905. 400 Moran.
(8) Kisii Patrol, 1905.
(9) Nandi Expedition, 1905-06. 600 Moran.
(10) Present Turkana operations.

Reports on the work of these levies have on the whole been highly satisfactory, except in the present Turkana operations where it is doubtful if the pastoral Masai have been used, and in the Kabwarwa patrol, where it was found that the Masai spearmen were of little use against the Nandi in forest country.

where unarmed natives of the neighbouring tribes, whose duty or pleasure took them into the Masai Reserve, have been wantonly murdered, and the catalogue also includes numerous instances of thefts of stock from neighbouring farms and territories. An investigation of the record of each of these cases will show that in a small number only of incidents has the perpetrator of the crime been brought to book. The probability that the commission of a stock-theft or a murder can be performed by a Masai of the "Muran" class without the knowledge of his associates is so slight that it has been found necessary to accept the principle that the responsibility for the surrender of criminals traced to any particular area rests on all the members of the section inhabiting that area. This system is in vogue throughout all the native districts of the Protectorate and is generally employed with a fair measure of success, but a similar success does not attend its application to the Masai Reserve, and this reserve is, in fact, the area to which the great majority of impositions of fines under the Collective Punishments Ordinance, 1909, have been applied, the refusal of the Masai to assist in tracing the criminal rendering it necessary to utilize the provisions of the Ordinance to effect the punishment of the whole section involved. The blooding of a spear by the murder of an unprotected wanderer or the theft of stock guarded perhaps by children is a survival of the traditions which necessitated the "Muran" to prove their manhood during the period in the standing army or the "'L-Ayok" to prove their worth before circumcision. Such acts may not be regarded at the present day as valiant, but it seems that the criminal's associates have not yet come to look on them as reprehensible, and the Masai, on account of their wealth, do not possess the same dread of a collective fine as is felt by certain of the poorer tribes. Under any circumstances, the "Muran" offer no assistance in the tracking down of the criminal and the elders, though professing detective zeal, are powerless to intervene. The attitude of the section involved in such cases is one of surprise and listlessness—they never know anything—and the collective fine which may ensue has not hitherto had the result of discouraging the adoption of such an attitude. 648* 674 648* 674 672 561 681

Divisions.

It will generally be found that fines of this nature have been levied on Companies or "Sirits" of different clans, and, sometimes, on all the members of a clan or division. There is no case on record in which a collective punishment has been imposed on the Masai tribe as a whole. It is therefore necessary to refer shortly to the divisions into which the Masai, who are all of one tribe, are divided by their traditions and customs, and to note also the divisions into which they are divided in practice for the purposes of the administration of the reserve. A description of the traditional divisions of the Masai people is given in Mr. Hollis' Book on the Masai, pp. 260 and 261, but the names which are now in use to denote the divisions of the tribe within the reserve do not exclusively follow either the genealogical or the geographical divisions which are there set out. The Officer-in-Charge of the Masai reserve is endeavouring to confine the members of each division to certain areas set apart for them as locations, and this step will have the effect of reconciling the name given to a division with the locality in which it is found, thus tending to perpetuate a convenient form of nomenclature. 619 621 634

Whatever may have been the original system on which these divisions were formed, it appears that there is a really marked clan feeling between them, and several incidents are recorded which disclose the presence of mutual distrust and strained relationship between the divisions, while interference by one division with another is keenly resented. These divisions form the basis of the tribal organisation of the Masai as it exists to-day and each division has its own Council of Elders. In the recently constituted "Masai Council," one elder, or more, has been chosen to represent each division and the Council so formed has been accepted as representative of the whole tribe. It will thus be seen that the division system presents an admirable method of dealing with the tribe, closely allied to the location system employed in other Native Reserves in the Protectorate, and has enabled unrest or crime to be so localized as to limit the liability for offences committed to certain definite sections of the Masai. Nevertheless, there is not sufficient difference in the behaviour or customs of the members of each 634 [628] [623] division to necessitate or render advisable a departure on their behalf from the general policy to be pursued in dealing with the tribe as a whole.

Masai Council.

634

634 167 561 321

The Tribal Divisions.

The Tribal Divisions of the Masai as they are recognised for the purposes of the administration of the tribe are as follows :—

Purko.

The Purko is the largest and most important division. They number about 16,500 and of these some 10,000 came from Laikipia. There are rather more than 2,000 Muran, who inhabit five large villages. The names of the "Sirits" are Il Kisaruni, Il Merisho, L'Aimer, Il Mejuali and Il Pelyani. In 1916, the Kisaruni Purko Muran decided to divide, and while one part retained the name of Kisaruni, the other adopted the name of "Il Kidemmi." In 1917, the Purko were estimated to possess 375,000 head of cattle, 1,000,000 sheep and 5,200 donkeys. They live in the country known as Ngatet and in Ol-Orokuti.

Loita.

The population of the Loita Division is ab[illegible]5,000 of whom some 700 are Muran. This division formerly lived near N[illegible] when Sendeu, their medicine-man quarrelled with Lenana, they mo[illegible] German territory returning subsequently to the Loita Hills wher[illegible] are. The Muran "Sirits" are known as Il Paragwo and Il Kisar[illegible]ita are estimated to possess 80,000 head of cattle, 225,000 sheep and [illegible]ys.

L'Otayok.

A small division known as the L'Otayak inhabits the same region as the Loita. They number about 800 of whom 60 are Muran. They are said to possess 1,000 head of cattle, 18,000 sheep and 100 donkeys. A small number of L'Otayok also live in German East Africa.

Salei.

The members of the Salei Division generally inhabit the Loita Country and they recognize Sendeu as their Laibon. Their population is assessed at 600 of whom about 50 are Muran. They possess 6,000 head of cattle, 15,000 sheep and 100 donkeys. A small portion of the Salei have amalgamated with the L'Odo Kilani.

Siria.

The Siria Division also recognises Sendeu as Laibon. They inhabit the Ol-Orokuti country, number about 1,200 of whom 80 are Muran, and possess 12,000 head of cattle, 25,000 sheep and 50 donkeys.

Il Damat.

The Il Damat form one location with Purko by whom they were vanquished some years ago. They are to be found on the Loita Plains and number 900 in all of whom 65 are Muran. They are estimated to possess 8,000 head of cattle, 20,000 sheep and 100 donkeys (see p. 37).

Kakonyukye

The members of the Kakonyukye Division number 2,500, of whom 350 are Muran, and possess 50,000 head of cattle, 200,000 sheep and 2,000 donkeys. They inhabit the country known as Il Molili and Mosiro, and the neighbourhood of Mount Suswa. The "Sirits" of the Muran are named Il Mejuali, Il Paragwo and Il Kidemmi.

L'Odo Kilani.

The L'Odo Kilani Division inhabits the country near the German border south of Lake Magadi. The population numbers 1,200 of whom 90 are Muran, and they possess 10,000 head of cattle, 30,000 sheep and 150 donkeys. The Muran are divided into two "Sirits" both known as Il Kidemmi.

Ngaruman.

The Ngaruman form a survival of the old agricultural Masai, but they have discontinued agriculture and now live in the same manner as the pastoralists. They inhabit the country near the mouth of the Uaso Nyiro River. They number 400, of whom 40 are Muran, and possess 1,000 head of cattle, 10,000 sheep and 50 donkeys.

Matapato.

The Matapato number 2,400, possess 40,000 head of cattle, 175,000 sheep and 500 donkeys. Their Muran number 180 and are divided into three "Sirits" named Il Kilume, Il Tetisin and Seure, and they inhabit the country between Kajiado and the German border.

634 162 The Sighirari of the Engidongi inhabit the country in the neighbourhood of the Ngong Hills and En Doinyo Narok. To this division belong the medicine-men of the L'Aiser Gilata of whom Seggi is now the chief. The Division is estimated to possess a population of 1,900 of whom 120 are Muran, 28,000 head of cattle, 80,000 sheep and 300 donkeys. Sighirari of the Engidongi.

561 231

[563] [149] The Il Dala Lekutuk came from Laikipia in 1912 and are sometimes known as the Nyeri Masai. They have a considerable admixture of Kikuyu blood in them. They inhabit generally the neighbourhood of En Doinyo Narok and their population is estimated at 700, including some 75 Muran. They are said to possess 6,000 head of cattle, 20,000 sheep and 75 donkeys. Their Muran are divided into two "Sirits" named Il Tareto and Seuze. Il Dala Lekutuk.

The Kaputiei are to be found in the neighbourhood of the Nyiri Desert. Their population is estimated at 2,600 including 175 Muran, and their possessions at 30,000 head of cattle, 100,000 sheep and 400 donkeys. Their Muran are divided into four "Sirits" whose names are Il Mokesen, Il Mejuali, Il Kidemmi and Il Sogon. Kaputiei.

The Sighirari of Laitokitok inhabit the country to the north of Kilimanjaro, which country is watered by the Engare Rongai, Kikalelwa, Naromuro, Ol el Tureth and Rombo streams. The population of this division is estimated to number about 2,600 of whom 180 are Muran. These are divided into two "Sirits," named Il Kituli and Il Mejuali. The live-stock possessions are said to number 60,000 head of cattle, 175,000 sheep and 500 donkeys. Sighirari of Laitokitok.

563 In addition to the Masai, there are considerable numbers of Wandorobo ("Il Torobo") living in the Masai Reserve. Their numbers are probably not less than three or four thousand, and many of them possess considerable herds of cattle, and live the life of ordinary Masai, from whom it is difficult to distinguish them. They may be conveniently divided into two classes, namely, those who live in the bush and forest, and those who possess cattle. The former possess little or no live-stock, and subsist almost entirely upon wild animals and honey, while the latter live in villages and subsist only to a very limited extent on game. Wandorobo.

The former are to be found mainly in the neighbourhood of the Mau, but small parties of them are also met on the Uaso Nyiro, on the Lower Mara River, along the Sotik border, and in the Trans-Mara region. They live on tree rabbits and the smaller game animals, in rough shelters in the forests, or in the huts in some of the Masai villages.

The latter are to be found on the Uaso Nyiro, in the neighbourhood of Ol Alunga and Ol Doinyo Rasha, on the western bank of the Mara River, and in the Siria country. In all, they probably number about 1,000.

564 326 There exists in the reserve, a special tribe of smiths, somewhat similar to the Wandorobo, called Il-Kumono, who make iron weapons, but are treated as inferiors, and are not allowed to marry Masai women. Il-Kumono.

181 105 To recapitulate, the Masai are a listless, conservative, slothful people, inadequately governed by Councils of Elders, who admit themselves to be impotent to deal with the idle body of warriors whose raisons d'être has now disappeared, but who are still sufficiently insubordinate to render ineffective the commands of their seniors. They have been concentrated in one area, where they have amassed enormous herds of cattle of a poor quality, and countless sheep. No suitable means of employment has as yet been found for the males of the tribe as a whole, though they are experts in the care of stock, and once possessed fighting qualities of a savage nature, which spread the terror of their name far and wide. They have considerable latent powers of organisation, alertness and ability, but these are largely discounted owing to their unreliability; they have always realised that it is in their best interests to be loyal to the British Government, and have never been responsible for any serious disturbance, being too proud to work, and rich enough to disregard fines, they are probably the most backward administered native tribe in the East Africa Protectorate. Summary.

The following quotations are made from the Protectorate Annual Report for the year 1903-1904 :— The year 1903-1904 CAP* 175

"About the beginning of September last, it was reported that the Masai contemplated a wholesale raid into the Kisii country; the adoption of prompt measures, however, both in this province" (Ukambani) " and at Naivasha, prevented any carrying out of their intentions. Since that time they have been quiet, with the exception of a party belonging to the Matapato section, which recently organized a small expedition some two or three months ago; the broad conversant was fined, and the 'Laigonon,' or head warrior, is now a fugitive, the raid having been abortive. With the exception of these two incidents, the conduct of this tribe has been satisfactory. . . . . ."

"Nothing of great political importance has occurred in this district" (Naivasha District, Masailand) " during the year. In the autumn of 1903, the Masai held a large circumcision festival on the plains of Kinangop (or Kinangop). This was attended by several thousand adolescents, and it was thought by some that the event would be commemorated by the dispatch of a large party to raid Lumbwa, Kisii, and, possibly, the German territory at the back of Shimbi. Though the idea was discredited by those on the spot, it was considered advisable to make a military demonstration in the neighbourhood of Naivasha to discourage any breaches of the peace. At any rate, the ceremonies on Kinangop passed over without incident. Curiously enough, about this time, a large war party of Masai did make a raid on the country east of Shimbi hill, but, owing to warnings sent by us in anticipation of such an event, little damage was done, and the raiders were dispersed by the German troops. Our German neighbours appeared to be under the impression that Sendeu organized this raid, but what 'dimoran,' or warriors, formed the war party seems to remain in obscurity. The elders of what may be termed the Naivasha Masai are undoubtedly loyal, and will do their best to discourage raids by the dimoran. [561]

"The executive officials in this district who may be considered to be in the confidence of the tribe, report that the elders discuss the question of raiding quite freely, and often enquire what is to become of the poorer dimoran, who have no live-stock, and thus cannot marry and settle down as 'Elmoran,' or Elders, and now raiding is forbidden, do not see how they are to acquire wealth. Numbers of these have a bare livelihood by herding the property of their richer friends, others serve in the King's African Rifles and police force, and those in regular Government employ, steadily save enough to start them in married life. It is probable that a partial solution of this problem lies in the formation of a labour bureau, the object of which will be to find suitable employment for the poorer dimoran and 'kiloi,' or youths, who have not attained the status of warrior." CAP* 175 175 178 469

As distinct from the Masai Nation, the history of which forms the subject of Chapter III., the early history of the Masai contains little further of interest. The administrative steps which have been taken on their account from time to time have been treated separately in the following chapters, and Masai raids may be said to have ceased after the year 1904, the last year in which they carried out a successful expedition against another tribe in the Protectorate. Their more recent raids against German territory, are referred to in Chapter VII. Conclusion CAP* 175

*C48 Secretary of State's views.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs expressed himself as generally in agreement with these views, anticipating that contact with other races and with Europeans would gradually result in a change in the customs and organisation of the Masai. It was agreed that the settlement of Europeans among the Masai would incline them to abandon their wandering habits and become, at least partially cultivators of the soil or servants of those who were developing the resources of the country. Sir Charles Eliot realised that such a condition of things implied some risk of conflict between the Masai and Europeans and he was prepared, but only as an ultimate resort, to remove the tribesmen from their present homes to a special reserve elsewhere, should experience prove that they could not get on with the settlers.

Mr. Hobley's reports on Laikipia.

In December, 1903, and January, 1904, Mr. Hobley made extensive tours through the country, in the neighbourhood of the Rift Valley, accompanied by Macdonald and a few other elders of the tribe, with a view to discussing some division of the eligible grazing land, without detriment to the Masai, while admitting of as many grants to settlers as was feasible. By the middle of February, 1904, he had amassed sufficient information to enable him to assure Sir Charles Eliot that the formulation of an agreement with the Masai on the question of the division of grazing land in the Rift Valley was possible, subject to compensation being paid for grazing rights over certain areas which would have to be given up.

Mr. Jackson's memorandum.

While on leave in England, Mr. (now Sir Frederick) Jackson wrote a memorandum on the Masai question, which it may be desirable to quote in extenso. The memorandum was dated the 22nd of February, 1904.

"The Masai will never give us serious trouble, so long as we treat them fairly, and do not deprive them of their best and favourite grazing grounds—i.e., those in the vicinity of Lake Naivasha.

"Apart from the just cause for complaint that such action would give them, it would be a great mistake to push them on one side and away from the close vicinity and control of the Government stations. The further they are away from us, the more trouble they will give us in the matter of raiding.

"Neither the Germans nor ourselves are in touch with the Masai occupying the country on either side of the boundary between Kilimanjaro and the Lake. It is, however, by no means certain that there are any Masai resident in British territory close to the boundary, but no doubt those resident in German territory take refuge across the border after a raid, and when pursued by German troops. The 'loyal' Chief Senkeye of the Laikia Masai, left German territory about a year ago, and came to Naivasha with 2,000 followers, including 500 or 600 women (warriors). The remainder of the clan declined to follow him. Senkeye, who now lives with his brother Lenana at Naivasha, has no power over, or dealings with, the rest of the clan resident in German territory. A raid, which is said to have taken place last May in, no doubt, the one that Bishop Tucker of Uganda brought to our notice, owing to the raiders having attacked one of the Church Missionary Society's stations on the south-east shore of the Lake. Several of the raiders were dressed in khaki uniforms, spoke Swahili, and were armed with breech-loading rifles. These facts, for presumably they are facts, point to Germans now being deserters from the German service, and as Senkeye left German territory owing to the ill-treatment he met with, it is not unlikely that the remainder of the clan, subjected to similar treatment, have a grudge against Europeans generally, and attacked the Mission station and settlement with the aid of the deserters. Up to the present, the Masai have never been known to attack Europeans in British territory, and they are not likely to, so long as they are treated fairly.

*C48 561

"The recent unrest was due, as Sir C. Eliot has pointed out, to an unusually large circumcision feast that takes place once in eight years. The ordinary ceremony is an annual one. The increase last year was due to a large number of young men, including many private servants of Europeans, and soldiers and policemen in Government service, postponing the service for one or two years.

and they were all, not unnaturally, keen to distinguish themselves in a raid on an [illegible] [illegible] ● [illegible] scale. There was even a considerable amount of open boasting amongst these recently-made 'natives,' that the Government would not, and could not, stop them. This led to grossly exaggerated stories being circulated in the Rotorua district, and these stories were made the most of by those settlers who are no good in the Maori, and are heavily desirous of appropriating the best of their grazing grounds at Rotorua.

"As a matter of fact, the local authorities were well posted by Lennox at Rotorua, and by Mackintosh, the principal Chief at Rotorua, as to what was going on, and there was never at any time justification for the alarmist reports that were circulated.

"The steps that were taken—viz., the temporary display of force at Rotorua by 100 men, under Colonel Harrison, who knows the Maori well—had the desired effect, and prevented the raid taking place. These steps were taken at the suggestion of Lennox.

"It is true that the Chiefs and Elders have little authority over the 'natives,' but they assist us in every way they can, and have given us information of contemplated raids.

"Up to the time I left Rotorua, the large grazing areas applied for in the Rotorua district, were 800 square miles ([illegible] acres) by the East Africa Syndicate, 100,000 acres by Lord Delamere, and 50,000 acres each by Messrs.
Chamberlain and Plummer, and I pointed out to Sir C. Elliot that these areas not only embraced the best and most favoured grazing grounds of the Maori between Lake Rotoiti and Rotorua, but also embraced both banks of the only four rivers in the vicinity.

"Within this area, there are at the present moment not less than a quarter of a million sheep. Lord Delamere's application was therefore refused, and he selected another area on the Hale River, to which there were no local objections, as the Maori do not extend so far to the west in the valley. I was also given to understand by Mr. Hollis, the Secretary, that the Charles Elliot would not consider any further applications for large areas—including Mr. Chamberlain's application—between Rotorua and Rotorua. To Mr. Plummer's application for land on the Waraki River, north of Rotorua, there were no local objections.
This left only the Syndicate's 800 square miles to be considered, and for this purpose Mr. Beggs, the Sub-Commissioner, called a meeting of the Elders, who, after pointing out that the area embraced the pick of their ground, eventually agreed to raise no further objections, provided the remainder might be left to them.

"Shortly after I left, Sir C. Elliot himself visited Rotorua, and informed the Elders that between Rotorua and Rotorua no further grants would be considered. I learn, however, from a letter to Mr. Beggs from Mr. Hobbs, who is doing my work as well as Mr. Beggs's, that applications for large areas have been received, amounting to 75 per cent. of the grazing grounds in the valley and on the Kinangop Plateau. These applications have embraced the whole of the Waiau River, the Kaiwaka, the Waraki, and Kaituna, and the greater part of the Gilfillan and Mamaku, and I cannot see how it is possible to allow these grounds without very seriously interfering with native interests. To any applications for land north of Rotorua and Rotorua there are no local objections, as the Maori for many years have not occupied it, but I would strongly urge that no grants—except the Syndicate's—should be made north of a line between the north ends of Rotorua and Rotorua.

"Our only hope of keeping the Maori under proper control for some years to come, is to keep them under us."

*C49
3
166

water in that country was sufficient for the requirements of the Northern Road. Lemaire's main object in recommending the move was to re-emphasize the various sections of the letter, in order to enable him once more to continue direct control over all his followers. Even since the removal of the Northern Road to Lubigele, he had found his authority to be waning. The Silk Valley Road had been separated more from the Outside Road than Lemaire had expected when the Agreement was signed. This separation was, to a large extent due to the fact that the Government had failed to carry out all the conditions of the treaty. The road had a side branch, which was to have been left undisturbed, between the reserves had been reduced to such an extent that it was practically useless for cattle, and the land on either side had been leased to Europeans. In August, 1906, the movement of cattle between the reserves was altogether prohibited, owing to quarantine regulations, and the Resident of Lubigele from then, to all intents and purposes, cut off from their Lubwa at Serenje. Lugalabu, who was present at the meeting, could not be induced to give his opinion on the subject. The Governor stated that the question of the move would not be entertained by the Government unless it was in accord with the expressed wishes of the Resident, and he refused to comply with Lemaire's suggestion that the matter might be settled without delay. He he considered that further investigation was necessary to ascertain whether the suggested area was suitable for the accommodation of the Northern Road.

Report of Mr. Sutton-Buller.

Mr Lemaire was as much in favour of the move, and as the reports were to be by Mr. Sutton and Captain Hamilton, though not enthusiastic, had been sufficiently encouraging the Government gave orders for two senior officers to inspect the country, and Messrs. Sagar and Sutton were entrusted with this work. The dates varied of the year, March, was chosen in order that the country might be seen at its worst, and an extended tour was made through a part of Bwa, Ndola, Ngoni and the Lake Plains to the Bwa River, thence along the Angle-Congo border, the Lake Hills and the Northern Cape Rivers to Fabruka. The gist of the reports submitted by these officers was that the land and grazing were, on the whole, good, but that there was an insufficiency of water and, which as they would like to see all the Bwa concentrated in one reserve, they could not recommend the move until steps had been taken to irrigate the land, and until the settlers who were living in the area had been given living allowance. Mr. Sagar, however, pointed out that the inclusion in the reserve of any of the country known as the Bwa Plateau had not been considered, and that it was probable that by engineering works the water supply might be considerably increased. He suggested that an engineer should be sent into the area to report on the prospects of irrigation near the Chingalomo River.

Inspection of Mr. Water.

On Mr J. Sutton-Buller's departure from Fort Aldea, Mr. Jackson instructed Mr. Water, the Commissioner of Public Works, to visit the Lake Plains, and to report on the possibility of irrigation. At the same time, the settlers in the area which might be allotted to the Bwa, were to be approached with a view to ascertaining if they would be prepared to move, should the scheme be carried through, on consideration of receiving compensation on Lubigele or in the vicinity, in the extent of their present holdings, plus half as much again. Mr. Water drew up an elaborate report and showed that by the expenditure of £2,000 the whole of the area could be irrigated. He also estimated that after deducting 12 million acres for grazing of goats, forest and waste areas, there remained 12 million acres of good grazing land available for the support of 100,000 cattle and 1,000,000 sheep, embracing areas some per acre and one per sheep. A sum of £2,000 was inserted in the Estimates for 1910-1911 as a contribution for the irrigation scheme, but was disallowed by the Secretary of State.

*C49
3
166
561

Proposal to Kasanga.

In August, 1906, the District Commissioner of the Northern Bwa Reserve reported that the Fabru natives wished shortly to proceed to the Kasanga reservation, which had been set aside for the Bwa's occupation, and to take over 10,000 cattle with them. The Fabru Bwa living in the Lake Plains District asked, through Lemaire, for permission to proceed to Kasanga. Arrangements were made with the Bwa Alien Syndicate, and the Northern Bwa was permitted to take their cattle to the Kinangop Reserve, but, although the Bond living in the Lake Plain were informed that they themselves might go to Kinangop, they were forbidden to take their cattle with them for fear of infecting with East Coast fever, the stock belonging to the European farmers through whose lands they would have to pass, and of carrying the fever to the Southern Reserve.

By December, the Southern Bond, with 10,000 cattle but unaccompanied by their principal chiefs, Mathenge and Lenjoroko, had moved to Kinangop, but the principals were commanded peremptorily by Lenana on learning that the Southern Parties might not take their cattle with them, withdraw the sanction, which is necessary, according to the custom of the tribe, before a chief can be made. On January 14th, 1918, he sent orders to Kinangop for the sections to proceed with their cattle to the Southern Reserve in order to hold the ceremony at Ngong. At the same time he appealed to the Governor and pointed out that, unless the authority were maintained and his instructions obeyed, he feared a disruption between the two sections of the tribe.

On February 3rd, the Party Governor held a meeting at Fajardo, at which were present Lenana and three chiefs of the Southern Reserve that were taking part in the ceremony on Kinangop. Lenana made a direct appeal to the Governor, and stated that the conditions of affairs which had arisen since the last 6 Grants ceremony, whereby the inter-communication between the two sections of the tribe had become impossible, was gradually but surely disorganizing his authority, a matter of great regret both to himself and to his people. It was, he explained, an outcomet of doing their share should be two ceremonies for one section of the tribe, one on Kinangop and the other at Ngong, and, since the Southern Bond were forbidden to take their cattle to Kinangop, he desired the Southern Bond to proceed to Ngong to hold the ceremony there. He further stated that it was the most earnest wish that all the Southern Bond should move from Lenjoroko and inhabit the proposed extended Southern Reserve. The Governor informed Lenana that he could not sanction the move of all the Bond without consulting Mathenge and Lenjoroko, but, as regards the ceremony, he was quite willing that it should be held at Ngong if that was Lenana's wish and if he could arrange matters with the people concerned. The Bond drove then proceeded to Lenana's kraal to discuss the matter with his chiefs, with the result that they returned to Kinangop, and, having collected their cattle, proceeded with the moveset to the Southern Reserve. It was, fortunately, unnecessary for the Government actually to intervene in support of the Lenana.

On February 26th, 1918, a second meeting was held at a camp known as Kiambu, close to Lenana's kraal near Ngong, with the Bond. At this meeting there were present, besides Lenana, Mathenge and Lenjoroko, respectively the senior elder and the spokesman of the junior sections (who are generally referred to as the two chiefs of the Southern Bond). These two representatives of the Southern Reserve not only agreed to the suggested move but expressed themselves in favour of it. It was accordingly proposed to carry it out as soon after the rains had commenced as practicable.

Mr. Collins, the District Commissioner of the Southern Reserve, was appointed Special Commissioner for the move, and, as ground, purchase and transfer were effected, he was directed to correspond with the Secretary for Native Affairs, who was to arrange the details, and submit recommendations for the disposal of the white settlers from the Southern Uasi Nyiro.

Everything went well. The majority of settlers were quite satisfied enough to remain in the Bond pending civil their farms, and had separate meets were arranged. Special officials were deputed to accompany the moke of cattle and a special was constructed on Lenjoroko for forest to which the settlers from the Southern Uasi Nyiro might proceed.

In April, gastro-enteritis, which for some time past had been prevalent all along the Rift Valley Reserves in Kenya as well as in the northern Bond Reserve, broke out among the Bond herds in epidemic form. It is possible that the bad

[illegible]

[illegible] on other tribes. But the present conditions have altered this by the enhancement of the importance of the reserve, and in addition to the deterioration caused by the lack of fresh blood and consequent inbreeding, the cattle suffer from want of pasturage and water in certain parts of the land that has been allotted to them. It is found generally that the quality of beef obtained from Maori cattle is very poor and is tending to become worse.

[illegible] Owing to this deterioration, the Director of Agriculture suggested the immediate purchase of a pure-breed bull for crossing with selected native cows. This experiment was tried, and the bull was sent to Ruatoki, where it died in 1917, leaving left a few useful calves, but not having survived long enough to demonstrate the success of such an enterprise.

Mr. Sheppard suggested the establishment of a Government stock farm, to be maintained at the expense of the Maori, and intended solely for the benefit of the tribe. This would be of an experimental nature at first, but would be developed as circumstances required, and as funds permitted. The half-breed stock produced on the farm, especially the bulls, would be sold to the Maori with the object of improving their herds. In conjunction with this farm a dairy industry might be started, and the Maori taught to manufacture ghee and dairy products. This would tend to make the scheme self-supporting. As a commencement, Mr. Sheppard asked sanction to purchase up to one hundred native cows or heifers and a few pure-breed bulls, and to establish a farm in the reserve by means of the funds derived from the Maori Purposes Account.

His proposal received the support of the Director of Agriculture, who thought that his working results might thereby be obtained in the improvement of Maori cattle.

The scheme was discussed by the Governor-in-Council on the 14th of April, 1917, when a decision was given that the time was inopportune for the establishment of such a farm, and the further consideration of the matter was postponed until the conclusion of hostilities.

[illegible] Before proceeding on leave in April, 1917, Sir Henry Ballhill recorded the following minute on the subject of the development of the Maori:—

"The proposal" (for the establishment of a stock farm) "is based on the assumption that the policy of the future is to develop the Maori as pastoralists. If this assumption is correct, the proposal is sound. Personally, I would rather see the possession of extensive tracts gradually discouraged by taxation, and encouragement given to industrial habits. Further, I would prefer to see local and expert assistance provided by our Ethnologist greatly rather than by the Maori. The proposal should stand over until the question of taxing of the Maori cattle has assumed a more definite form."

Section 4.—THE KOWHAI CEREMONY.

Purpose of the ceremony—Description of the ceremony—Kowhai—Application by the Maori for permanent ownership in Kowhai—A Gala ceremony in 1916—Regulations for the grants of rights in Kowhai—Conditions used by the Maori according to custom—Bands of organization—Renewed application made by the Maori—Completion of the ceremony—Decisions by Maori Council on members of Kowhai.

The Kowhai Ceremony, which looms large in the history of the Maori Movement, is a ceremony held according to Maori tradition at intervals of approximately seven years. The duration of the ceremony is from three to six months for each tribal division or group of divisions, and the duration for the whole tribe may, therefore, take from two to three years.

[illegible] The purpose of the ceremony is not too clear, but it is said to be for the bending over of the grounding of the Maori ancestry to the increasing age of wisdom, and it takes place a year or two before the dispersion commences. On the completion of these ceremonies, the past age of Maori ceremony to take wives and go out as Kohera. A similar ceremonial used to be held by the Maori, but at the close of the expedition of 1865 the Maori were induced to hold over the grounding of their ancestry to the Government. In the case of the Maori the ceremony would appear to be both essential and unbearable.

The following description is given by Mr. Hemsted :— Description of the ceremony 561

A Chief, known as "Ol Oiboni," and a Sub-Chief, known as "Ol Oiboni-gani," is chosen by the Elders from the ranks of the Moran for each division or group of divisions.

A black bullock is supplied, tied up and strangled with "tendes." The "Il Ayok" (boys) compete in pulling off the horns of the bullock. The one who succeeds in doing so is regarded as a great warrior.

The bullock is subsequently strangled—it must not be touched by a knife—and eaten by the "Il Ayok."

The "Aigwenak" (Counsellors) of the incoming warriors are selected prior to the ceremony. The Elders give each of them a black club, a knife, a large goat and some honey.

A new name is given to the outgoing Moran, and the incoming Moran are given an "age" name. [553]

Immediately after the E-Unoto, the "Il Ayok" return to their fathers' villages, where they are circumcised by certain "Il Tuodos," and their heads shaved.

They then have "Manyattas" of their own, and allow their hair to grow.

They are known as "Il Barneti" before their hair has become long.

The outgoing warriors also have their hair cut and return to their "Manyattas." They may still remain Moran for as long as three years, but it is said that in the absence of any wars this period will be much less.

There are therefore for a time, two groups of Moran, the senior and junior warriors. Constant fights are said to take place between them.

In the Agreement between the Masai and Sir Donald Stewart, executed in August, 1904, it is recorded that the Masai asked that they might be allowed to retain control of at least five square miles of land (at a point on the slopes of Kinangop) whereat they could carry out their circumcision rites and ceremonies in accordance with the customs of their ancestors. Sir Donald Stewart, in signing the document, stated that, subject to the Secretary of State's approval, he agreed to the terms embodied therein. The Agreement of 1911 contained a proviso that the Masai tribe should not thereby be deprived of the rights reserved to it under the former Agreement in respect of the land on the slopes of Kinangop, whereon the circumcision rites and ceremonies might be held. Reserve 647 521

The fact that that area was still reserved for them induced the Masai in January, 1914, to apply for permission for a few of their number to be allowed to reside permanently on the area, with a view to keeping it in good order. To this application the Governor was not disposed to consent, and he issued instructions for other methods to be employed to ensure that the ground did not become overgrown. At the same time, he gave his opinion that it was not essential for their ceremonies to be held on Kinangop, and suggested the utilisation of some place within the boundaries of the Masai Reserve. Application of the Masai for permission to reside on Kinangop

In 1918 a repetition of the ceremony was due to commence, and in February of that year the Laibons and headmen approached the Officer-in-Charge with a request that certain divisions might proceed to the reserved area at an early date. The divisions affected were the Kaimayokyo, Purko, Dala Lekutuk and Damat, each of which should, according to custom, proceed to the ceremonial ground with its flocks and herds in the order named and remain there separately for two months. Though the Government was bound by an Agreement in the nature of a treaty with the Masai tribe to allow them to control the area on Kinangop for ceremonial purposes, it was considered that it would be most inopportune to allow [illegible] would be insufficient for the needs of the Masai unless the number of cattle they were allowed to take was regulated; and the cattle would constitute a source of Efforts made to date.

danger not only to the surrounding forest but also to the forest over which they must pass in order to reach Kisumgop owing to the probability that the Masai stock was, to a greater or less extent, infected by disease. Mr. Hemsted estimated the period that would be taken by all the divisions to complete the E.Uasin to be at least thirty months.

Negotiations with the Masai chiefs for the abrogation of rights in Kisumgop

Negotiations were therefore opened with the Masai chiefs for the abrogation of the right to control and use the Kisumgop site for the E.Uasin and for the substitution of some other site within the Masai Reserve, while compensation in money, to be employed in improvements in the reserve, was offered in respect of the surrender of these rights. A suggestion was made by Ngeyera that the Kakwenyokye division be permitted to use unoccupied but alienated lands in the Kedong Valley, but this was regarded as unsatisfactory in that it did not afford a permanent solution of the Kisumgop difficulty, and it was thought that any solution must embrace the whole tribe by the substitution of a suitable site within the confines of the reserve.

Conditions laid by the Masai chiefs for the surrender of Kisumgop

While entering into the suggested negotiations with the Masai Chiefs in October, 1918, Mr. Hemsted pointed out that only four of the divisions, the Purko, Kakwenyokye, Dule Lekutuk and Dorsot, were desirous of proceeding to the Kisumgop area, and that the other divisions were unanimous in held their festival where and where it suited them. The Siglimori, Matapato, Kaputei and other divisions had always favoured the locality of the Ngong Hills, and the ceremony conducted by Lenana in 1911 had only concerned these divisions. The Loita division had already completed their ceremony in their own country. The main reason for the desire of the four divisions to hold the ceremony on Kisumgop appeared to be a desire to remove a number of cattle out of the reserve for a time and so relieve the congestion therein, and the result of permitting the ceremony to be held on Kisumgop would be that a number of Masai would reside outside the reserve for two or three years out of every seven. The sanctity of any particular site was not of such moment.

Result of negotiations

The result of the negotiations with the Masai for the surrender of the area on Kisumgop was a revival of hope that they would be permitted to hold their ceremony in their own, and Laigwenan, Sambawali, Ole Tole and the other Purko chiefs stated that they did not wish to give up the land. It was, however, decided in December, 1918, that the present conditions of the country made it impossible to allow the Masai to proceed to Kisumgop for the E.Uasin ceremony, and Mr. Hemsted was instructed to advise the chiefs to select an alternative site within the confines of the reserve.

Renewed negotiations

In the middle of May, 1919, a representative meeting of the Purko tribe was held, and on a month the Governor was approached with a request that they be permitted to proceed to Kisumgop for the E.Uasin ceremony. His Excellency understood that he was unable to remember his former decision in the matter.

Site in the Mau Narok

In October, 1918, Mr. Hemsted reported that the Purko and Dorsot divisions had agreed to hold their E.Uasin ceremony on the Mau Narok provided they might have the use of the land granted to Mr. Percy Cobb, generally known as the "Pyramid Land." Mr. Cobb was willing to place an area of 50,000 acres of his Likia and Mau Narok land at the disposal of the tribe for the purpose of the E.Uasin on the understanding that the ceremony commenced as soon as possible and that it would last more than one and less than two years, and upon conditions that communications should remain open between Kisumgop and Likia; that the Masai should move out of Likia and remain therefrom in Mau Narok if land-development conditions were passed by the Government during the construction of the ceremonies; that arrangements be made to the time allowed for the fulfilment of development conditions should such disease break out among Masai cattle as would render the land harmful to other stock entering upon it; that a nominal fee of one two-year-old heifer each be paid in advance by Laigwenan and Sambawali for each year the land was occupied by the Masai for the E.Uasin; and that the Masai be forbidden to cut down young and valuable trees for building or firewood.

4:Sandford G-4, 5 (1918) 1919 FL12 Masai FL12

[P.110-A]

102
183
561

4:Sandford G-4,5 (1918) 1919 FL12 Masai FL12
[P.90-8]

107
133
561

Sketch showing the Area made available for the

E-UNOTO CEREMONY

in 1918.

Scale: 4 miles to 1 inch

Northern Boundary of E-Unoto Area

648 S
561

The Masai chiefs agreed to these terms after prolonged negotiations, and they were approved by the Governor on the 28th of October. Mr. Hemsted reported that the ceremony in regard to the Purko division would occupy from five to six months, that the Damat division were uniting with the Purko and that these people were to proceed to the Mau Narok in some two-months' time, provided the rains were favourable.

The ceremony proper, in so far as it affected the Purko division, commenced in November, 1917, and was completed by December of that year. The new age of the Moran took the E-Unoto name of Meretarot. Completion of the ceremony.

The Loita, Siria and Salei divisions held their E-Unoto about April to July, 1918. The new name of the Moran of these divisions is "Il Kishongo." The last age was known as E-Retet, in common with the Moran of all the divisions.

The Matapato and L'Odo Kilusi held their E-Unoto together at a place called En-Dorikorosi at the foot of the Ngong Hills. The Siginyei held their ceremony in the Loitokitok country. The Kaputiei held it near En-Dorikorosi, but apart from the Matapato and L'Odo Kilusi.

The question of the surrender by the Masai of their rights to the reserved area on Kinangop was considered at the inaugural meeting of the Masai Council in April, 1918, when the Council stated that it was not prepared to authorize the sale of the Kinangop reservation, but it would further consider the matter. Surrender by Masai Council on question of Kinangop.

SECTION 5.—PUBLIC WORKS.

(A) BUILDINGS.—Ngong—Narok—Mau River.
(B) ROADS.—Kijabe-Gilgil Road—Lower Ewaso Ng'iro—Ngong Kedong—Naivasha-Longido.
(C) BRIDGES.—Mau River—Uaso Nyiro.

(A) BUILDINGS.

Ngong.

A small wood and iron house was built for the clerk in 1913.

Two stone houses for the use of the District Commissioner and District Clerk were completed about May 1914. The clerk's house has been occupied by an Assistant District Commissioner.

An office, with an iron roof and rough plaster walls, was erected in January, 1916, by the District Commissioner.

A small store was erected during 1916.

Narok.

Three small two-roomed houses consisting of unlined corrugated iron were completed in March, 1917.

An additional office and a store were constructed in the same year.

Two water tanks were placed at the houses of the Officer-in-Charge and the District Commissioner in 1918.

The estimates for 1916-1917 provided £180 for additions to buildings at Narok Station. This sum was utilized in quarrying and dressing stone and in cutting timber for a new house for the Officer-in-Charge.

A fire-place was built into each of these two houses in 1916-17.

In 1917-1918, an additional clerk's house was constructed.

Mau River.

A two-roomed iron house was built in April, 1914, and a clerk's house was erected in the same year. The former house was lined and improved during 1916-1918.

A new office was constructed during 1917-1918.

With regard to the potentialities of the Masai as a tribe, it must be borne in mind that the total population of the Masai in the Masai Reserve numbers no more than 43,000. Of these, it may be assumed that about 20,000 are males of all ages, while some 4,500 are Moran. Taking the proportion normally maintained among other native tribes, for which more accurate statistics are obtainable, it is found that approximately 10,000 males are boys under the age of the Moran class, while the remaining 5,500 are elders. It will thus be seen that the tribe under consideration is relatively small in regard to population, and that, therefore, specialisation will be necessary if the attributes of the tribe are to be utilised to their fullest capacity. Population. 162

Sufficient has already been said of the conservatism and stubbornness which are the dominating characteristics of the Masai. The state of idleness in which both young and old live has proved a barrier to progress which has resisted all efforts made in the past to introduce development on civilized lines. The only measure which has attained to any degree of success in the establishment of trading centres, where a carefully controlled trade has opened the eyes of the Masai to a small extent to the advantages of imported articles, and has created some desire on their part to invest a proportion of their enormous capital in trade goods. Even so, it appears that they have not been induced to desire anything more progressive than flour, sugar, and honey in the way of food, and such imported articles as umbrellas, blankets, cotton shooting, knives, axes, and cooking pots. They are still in a most primitive state. Conservatism. 181

The semi-military organisation which has been handed down by their ancestors is still preserved, and continues to act as a deterrent to any innovation. Now that raids are ended, the Moran have nothing to occupy their attention, and it is this fact that has rendered it necessary to consider the possibilities of developing them into useful citizens along a definite line of policy, rather than to adopt merely normal administrative pressure, which has been so successful among the other tribes of the Protectorate. Of their own free will, the Masai will do nothing except fight with the weapons they know, and the young men of between sixteen and twenty-five years of age have now no occupation of any description. It is on behalf of these youths, the Moran, that the first steps in the necessary policy must be taken. Employment for the Moran. 178 464 561

It is known that, by their training from their earliest years, the Moran are experts in the handling of stock. Each boy has been entrusted to herd hundreds of head of cattle since the days when he started to walk, and there is probably no other nation in the world that can boast such a measure of success in this branch of knowledge. But, after circumcision and the assumption of the status of warrior, the youth leaves the care of stock to younger boys, and his ability in this direction is thereby wasted. Stockmen. 464 561

It is said that about fifteen per cent. of the Masai of the Moran class are employed by various farmers in herding cattle, but, even to this extent, the value of their services is largely discounted by the aversion which they show to the performance of work which they consider to be derogatory to their dignity, and the limits of what is not undignified are very materially confined. Manual labour of any kind is regarded as objectionable, and the Masai are physically incapable of carrying loads. But, if they are given a wage high enough to satisfy their avarice, if they are considerately treated, and if they regard the climate of their employer's land as suitable, they cannot be improved upon as cattle herds. The employment of herds. [461] [149]

In normal times, the number of settlers in the Protectorate who would make use of this class of labour is not large, and the demand for public purposes is another still, while the utility of the Masai as a whole in this connection is greatly diminished by their dislike of working for a European whom they do not know, and by the weakness of their constitutions, which renders them suitable for work in a restricted area only. In order to make the Masai suitable for general employment even as cattle herds, therefore, it is necessary either to allow their conception of their dignity to be so to make their services of more general application, or else to insist on their performing for a another nonconversion the work that they will consent to do. Demand for herd labour.

464
561

It seems doubtful if either of these courses can be pursued without exercising stronger measures than persuasion, for this latter has not been lacking in the past. The numbers of the tribe being so small, it would certainly appear to be inadvisable to compel the Masai to undertake agricultural labour for work outside the reserve, as such a step would be sure to cause active discontent without adequate results, but there also seems to be no reason why these expert herdsmen should not be made to exercise their talent to the exclusion of the inferior material obtainable from other tribes. Herdsmen are of essential service to many farmers, and from among the Masai can be drawn some of the best herdsmen in the world.

Employment in K.A.R. or Police.

The reputation for cunning, organisation, and militarism which the Masai have enjoyed in the past has also led to consideration of the possibility of utilising these powers under modern conditions, by enrolling a number of Masai in the King's African Rifles and Police. Experiments have been tried in this connection for more than fifteen years, but, save for some individual exceptions, they have proved unsuccessful. One or two Masai who have succeeded in passing the necessary tests have developed into reliable and efficient soldiers and policemen, but, in spite of repeated trials, the vast majority, discharged as unlikely as to develop, have been turned back to the reserve and represent so much time, labour and money wasted. Such soldiering and discipline appears to the Masai to be too nearly akin to work to be acceptable to them, and they adopt from the first an attitude of passive resistance and listlessness, the exact opposite to that keenness which is essential to successful development. So much has been learnt from past experience, and the compulsory recruiting scheme which is now being acted on, apparently with the consent and approval of the elders of the tribe, has not yet shown signs of any improvement in this attitude. It remains to be seen, however, whether this renewed attempt to break down the barrier of conservatism and sloth will be such as to induce the Masai to take part, as a matter of pride in their ability to do so, in a branch of utility for which their traditional training would appear admirably to suit them.

General employment of Masai.

The employment of the Masai Moran as herdsmen, or as soldiers, seems to be the only obvious method by which they can be called on to demonstrate their position as an asset to the state outside their own reserve, and, provided that sufficient development can be procured inside the reserve, it would possibly be bad policy to hasten an outside labour by any of the other classes of Masai males. It remains to consider what may be the best means of utilising their services within the confines of the reserve, and this question is closely connected with the potentialities of the Masai possessions.

*C48 33 [454]

Masai stock.

The wealth of the Masai is entirely invested in stock, and is said to amount to the colossal figures of 750,000 head of cattle, more than 2,000,000 sheep and goats, and 10,000 donkeys. This stock is concentrated in a reserve of some 14,000 square miles in extent, of which part is waterless and unfit for stock, and of which part is regarded by the Masai as unsuitable for cattle owing to a complaint of disease. These two actual and problematical disabilities combine to make the stock-carrying capacity of the reserve but little in excess of what it carries at present, and it is maintained that, without the provision of veterinary facilities, and without the undertaking of public works towards the better distribution of the water, the reserve is now so full that the annual death-rate cannot be less than the annual increase, or in other words, that the amount of stock owned by the Masai is now stationary.

Veterinary work.

As may readily be imagined, the problem of providing veterinary facilities for these vast herds presents such difficulties on account of the magnitude that very considerable increases would be necessary in the Veterinary Field Staff before anything but isolated attempts could be undertaken. This has been the case heretofore in the past, and must remain so at any rate until the cessation of war conditions enables the Government to augment its Veterinary Department by the addition of other qualified officers. Money has been voted in the Estimates for the financial year 1918-1919 for a commencement to a comprehensive scheme of veterinary research in the Protectorate, and these proposed activities affect the Masai Reserve in many ways. A dipping scheme is to be commenced which will,

* C48 579

The matter was discussed in Executive Council on the 21st of June, 1917, when Mr. Hemsted, who was present, stated that there could be no doubt that the members of these "Siria" were well aware of the identity of the murderers and were deliberately shielding them from justice. Several murders of Kikuyu had recently occurred in or near the Masai Reserve, and an exemplary punishment was considered necessary. A fine of Rs. [illegible] was accordingly imposed on each of the three "Siria," the total fine amounting to Rs. [illegible]. The Secretary of State conveyed his sanction by despatch, on the 23rd of August, 1917. Some seventeen hundred head of cattle were seized in August as security for the payment of the fine, but, by October, no portion of the fine had been paid in cash. Instructions were, therefore, issued for the fine to be recovered by distress, by the sale of the cattle to realize the amount of the fine imposed. This sale was postponed owing to an outbreak of lung-disease among the herds.

* C48

Permission to shoot lions, December, 1916.

88. Owing to complaints by the Masai of the damage done to their stock by lions, and on account of several incidents where natives had been killed by these beasts, permission was granted in December, 1916, to District Officers working in the Masai Reserve, to shoot lions in the Southern Game Reserve, in cases where there was good reason to believe that the animals were dangerous.

Sale of the Kakamega Cattle to Ngong Hills, December, 1916.

89. Owing to the constant trespassing by the Kakamega Masai on the farms in the Kedong Valley, that division was moved in December, 1916, and was located in the vicinity of the Ngong Hills, on area which had, for some time past, been practically unused.

[231]

As the Kakamega cattle were highly susceptible to East Coast fever, it became necessary to erect a cattle dip for them, the dip already in existence at Ngong being insufficient for their requirements. The site selected for the new cattle dip was near the Kiwaiwa Stream, ten miles south of Ngong, and its construction was approved on the 9th of January, 1917.

* C48 579

Murder near Dagoretti, March, 1917.

91. In March, 1917, a young man and three boys were brutally murdered within a short distance of the Masai border, near Dagoretti. The circumstances of the crime pointed strongly to the fact that the Masai must have been the offenders, but there was no evidence of their complicity and no punishment was inflicted.

Murder of two Kikuyu girls, May, 1917.

92. In May, 1917, some Kikuyu were attacked while grazing their cattle in their reserve within one mile of the Masai boundary, and two boys were killed with spears. A witness, who saw the whole incident, escaped with his life, and subsequently gave evidence to the effect that the murderers were a band of Masai. In the judicial proceedings which ensued, the absence of any motive for such a deed on the part of the neighbouring Kikuyu was clearly established, while a motive was present in regard to the people of the Masai tribe, as it was by native custom necessary in certain circumstances for such people to have bloodied their spears before admission to the forthcoming E-Unoto ceremony. It proved impossible to trace any of the individual criminals, but it was considered that sufficient grounds existed for holding five divisions of the Masai tribe, resident in the neighbourhood, responsible for the outrage. The perpetration of a number of murders of the same nature and in the same area a short time previous to this crime, in no one of which had sufficient evidence been obtainable to warrant the imposition of a collective punishment, influenced the Governor in determining the severity of the penalty to be inflicted in this case and, as it appeared that the belief was growing among the Masai that they would escape punishment for such deeds if they were perpetrated outside the limits of their own country, he determined to make the punishment an exemplary one, and a fine of Rs. [illegible] was imposed under the Collective Punishments Ordinance on each of the Masai divisions implicated, namely, the Siginoi, L'Odo Kiboi, Mataputu, Kwenkai, and L'Odo Kiboi Siriana. It was decided that, from the proceeds of the fine, blood money should be paid to the relatives of the two Kikuyu victims.

* C48

Clash between the Masai and Lotha tribes, June, 1917.

93. Early in June, 1917, unrest was reported among the Morua of the Pokot and Lotha tribes. On the evening of June 3rd, the Pokot commenced operations for an attack on the Lotha, and the District Commissioner, Kerio, who followed

648*
561
578
628

them as far as Narosura on the following day, failed to get in touch with them, they having proceeded to Loita country. On the evening of the 4th of June, the Purko returned below the Ologos, and on the night of the 5th proceeded to Enkongoro, having refused to listen to the advice of certain elders who went to restrain them. On the 6th of June, the Purko returned home. No fight occurred, the intervention of certain Moran of the Il Moriako Sirit having prevented bloodshed, and the influence of the elders being then sufficient to turn the Moran back. Throughout the disturbance, the medicine-man, Senelee, was protected by the Moran of the Il Moriako Sirit.

In spite of the fact that this incident resulted in no serious trouble, recent events sufficiently indicated that the young Moran were a little out of hand, both as regards the Government and their own chiefs and headmen. Additional police were, therefore, procured for temporary duty in the Masai Reserve. The measures adopted to bring them under better administrative control included a visit by the District Commissioner of Narok southern to each of the Purko Masai villages, where all Moran from each village were interviewed. Legalishu, Mankiwali, Ole Kotikoik, and the principal Alayonk of the elders and Moran were present, and Nagol joined the party later. 71 ringleaders were arrested, all outstanding fines from the Moran were collected, of a number of bullocks and donkeys were procured for the Military Supply Corp. These measures were completed before the end of August. No opposition or obstruction to Government orders had been offered by the Moran, and although the relations between the Purko and Loita divisions continued to be somewhat strained, it appeared that they were convinced that Government would not tolerate a breach of the peace and, as Mr. Hemsted reported that he saw a reason to fear any recrudescence of the trouble, the additional police were withdrawn.

648*

17. In August, 1917, Mr. A. Moreno, the lawyer who had been appointed counsel for the Masai in the "Masai Case" brought a civil claim for some Rs. 90,000 against the chiefs and elders concerned in that case. The case was heard in the High Court, Nairobi, in January, 1917 and the action was dismissed with costs.

Mr. Moreno's case, August, 1917.

649*
561

Before the military forces had moved into German East Africa, the scouts employed in patrolling the border were largely composed of Masai Morans, who showed considerable skill and acumen in obtaining information, while such men were also employed as messengers for the Political Officers, and as herds at the stock depots. Over that portion of the boundary, west of the Usaw Nyiro, they were almost the only scouts employed, and they rendered valuable service in that area under the command of a few Intelligence Officers. While they were under the military authorities they received high wages and rations, but, in September, 1916, these scouts were placed under the control of the Administration, and the payment of wages to the majority of them ceased from that date. Under these conditions they proved somewhat apathetic at first and were inclined to resent the fact that work was expected of them, but they behaved well on the whole and proved themselves efficient scouts. The elders willingly supplied food for the Intelligence Officers and their employees throughout this period.

The Loita Morans kept out five patrols of from four to six men each at the expense of their division and the L'Otayok kept out one such patrol. In times of emergency additional patrols were supplied by these divisions free of cost to the Government.

The intelligence work on the Usaw Nyiro-Moru section was finally closed down in July, 1918, and the General Staff expressed their appreciation of the manner in which the work had been carried out.

In the early months of 1916, a number of rifles (about one hundred) were distributed among the Morans of the Loitokitok, Polyani (Purko), Kakonyokye and Sighirari divisions and the possession of these arms gave them more confidence, with the result that they scouted nearer the German border, while the armed Masai acted as a screen along the frontier. The Governor considered that this measure was unobjectionable so long as the rifles were under the control of the military authorities, and so long as the holders were gainfully employed on definite military work.

These rifles were supposed to have been withdrawn in June, 1916, but it was not until December of that year that the last were handed in. There is no doubt that the possession by the Masai of these few rifles largely helped to mitigate the majority of the raids which the Masai carried out against tribes in German East Africa.

648*

From the outbreak of war until September, 1916, supplies of meat for the troops were obtained by means of Masai traders, who exchanged breeds cattle for mutton and who, by this method, succeeded in obtaining about one hundred and sixty thousand sheep. Bullocks were bought for cash, or exchanged for heifers, some four or five thousand being obtained by this method.

In October, 1916, three officers of the Veterinary Corps were sent to the Masai Reserve to purchase sheep and bullocks for cash with the assistance of the Administrative Officers. This system worked satisfactorily and, with few exceptions, the Masai sold their stock voluntarily. In two months, 10,000 sheep and 4,500 bullocks were obtained, but owing to representations from the Commanding Live-stock Officer that supplies were not coming in fast enough, twelve officers and two commissioned officers of the East Africa Supply Corps were despatched in December to obtain supplies under the command of Major Rose, D.S.O. Some 40,000 sheep were obtained by these officers by the end of February, 1918, but the Masai did not appreciate the manner in which they were obtained and assumed an attitude of passive opposition, concealing their sheep whenever a Supplies Officer was in the vicinity. Several prosecutions and the imposition of some heavy fines did not succeed in overcoming this attitude.

Major Rose and the Supplies Officers left Narok in March, 1918, and the Supply Corps came under the control of the Director of Agriculture. Sheep and bullocks were subsequently commandeered in the Rift Valley, but there is no record of the number obtained. Moiben and other parts of the Narok District were also visited, with the result that several thousands of bullocks were procured.

5: Maguire G-5 (no date) 1928
FL12 Masai FL12
Kisongo

THE MASAI PENAL CODE

Some Notes on the Recognised Masai Punishments for Crimes, with Examples of Masai Oaths or Ordeals

121 The following notes relate to those punishments of ancient origin still remembered among the Kisongo [1] Masai. Some of the penalties are habitually inflicted up to the present day. Some, as will be obvious from a perusal of the text, have, of necessity, fallen into disuse. They have been written down 114 from the statements of certain Masai Elders of the 'L-aimar [2] 115 age, and have received the imprimatur of the 'L-oibon Párit. [561] Párit [3] has asked me to say that he cannot be responsible for the authenticity of what follows, though he has no doubt that it is correct, but being a comparatively young man of the 'Slure [4] age, he has not the knowledge of these things that the Elders have.

121 The notes are brief and unscientific, and were made, primarily, with the object of adding to our knowledge of Masai custom in the matter of criminal offences in view of the recent formation of Native Courts throughout Tanganyika Territory.

'L-oikop: Murder

689 (a) If one Masai kills another, all the cattle of the murderer are taken by the relatives of the deceased. A council is then

[1] Kisongo is the Masai name for the southern Masai areas. It includes almost the entire Tanganyika Masai District as constituted to-day. The principal Masai "Districts" included under the name Kisongo are (for the purposes of this article) Mulpo and Kiitia. [634]

[2] Circumcision of 1891, approximately, according to Hollis.

[3] Párit is a brother of Mbo and Kimdeva, of Kenya. They are all three of the class of the medicine-men or 'L-oibonok. Ol-Gumu (L-oumu) was Párit's father, and Párit is Mbo's brother by a different mother. Párit came down to Tanganyika in 1913 by his own desire, and at the request of the Tanganyika Masai. He has lived here ever since in the vicinity of Tarowen. (G.S.S.; Kilimanjaro; E; p. 8.)

[4] Circumcision of 1898, approximately, according to Hollis. I think the date of the ceremony was somewhat later among the Masai of Tanganyika.

as the Masai race shall exist," and to refrain from leasing or granting any land (except such land as may be required for mining or for any public purpose) " without the sanction of the paramount chief and the representatives of the Masai tribe." 631 648

As a people of Nilo-Hamitic origin, the Masai have an affinity to the Nandi, Kipsigis, Suk and Turkana of the Kenya Colony, but they have maintained more of their original customs and mode of life than the Nandi or the Kipsigis. A variety of circumstances have combined to produce this result, but it is undoubtedly due in large measure to the fact that the extent and quality of the lands occupied by them has allowed them, as a tribe, to escape the disturbance in their traditional life caused by the necessity of wage earning on the European farms and urban centres or of taking to agriculture. It is noteworthy that though parties of the Masai have on various occasions lent assistance to the Kenya Government in military or police operations against other tribes, they have never enlisted in any numbers in the armed forces maintained in the Colony, and they actively resisted the efforts made to secure their recruitment during the War of 1914-1918. 101 648

The social structure of the Masai has from the outset created an obstacle to the adoption of any system of native administration similar to that in force in other parts of the Colony. The military organization of the tribe was in earlier days maintained by a system which divided the male population into boys (L'Ayok), warriors (Morans) and elders. The first stage continued till circumcision, performed any time between thirteen and seventeen years of age. Those who were circumcised within a certain period, normally four years, formed an Age Group, and those circumcised during the succeeding period formed a second Age Group, these Groups being distinguished as the Right Hand and Left Hand Groups respectively. The circumcised youths became the warrior class, who were divided into Companies (ses) living in separate villages (manyatta) often of a considerable size, and the larger manyattas had their own " Councillors " (L'Aigonak) chosen from among the Morans. 561 901

The Morans had special privileges, such as that of cohabitation with unmarried girls, and were relieved of all tribal obligations save fighting and raiding. Even such forms of manual labour as were involved in a pastoral life were avoided by them. They remained on the fighting strength of the tribe or periods which originally varied from seven to twelve years, and then, after the celebration of the Eunoto ceremony, " drank milk " and passed into the stage of Elders. But, as Sir Charles Eliot observed in 1903, " the Elders' ideal of existence seemed to be ease, not unmixed with drunkenness."* These who attained a position of wealth and importance might be elected as Chiefs, but the functions of a Chief were restricted to leadership in raiding or warfare. [341] [334] [335]

There is another feature of importance in the social structure. The Masai are divided into Sections (Ainoko) which probably had their origin as clan or kinship groups, but have no clear correspondence with geographical divisions. There are 14 recognized Sections, of which the Purko is by far the largest and most sensitive. Each of these Sections has its own Age Grades, so that the period at which youths become Morans, or Morans become Elders at the Eunoto ceremony, do not coincide in the different Sections. Each Section used to have an informal Council of the Elders, but these had little direct control of affairs, particularly where the activities of the Morans were concerned, and the situation 639 [633]

* Introduction to The Masai, by A. C. Hollis, 1905. For the significance of the Eunoto ceremony see page 69 of the Administrative and Political History of the Masai quoted above.

7: Malley G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

GOO grade system. It consists of six senior Wadolli, or age grade leaders, from the three effective age grades, six deputy Wadolli and eighteen Wanyoroo wa Nyoo, elected citizens of standing and authority (three from each age grade). These thirty men comprise the Kyama Council and elect their own speaker. The functions of the Kyama are similar to those of the Engiparuan described above. The election of the Jumbe is in the hands of the Kyama but they must reach a unanimous decision on the subject.

The elected Speaker of each Kyama kya Mzungu and three other Wadolli chosen by the Kyama sit on the Kyama kya Uruka, which is in effect a Tribal Council, fulfilling the functions of the lower Kyama but at a tribal level. In addition the Government reserves the right to nominate six members. The Kyama kya Uruka elects six Wadolli each year on the Chief's Council to assist him in all his duties. One of these is the Kyama's Speaker.

The Arusha and Meru Chiefs are not united in any formal manner, but there is a single Treasury for the whole District.

THE MBULA NATIVE AUTHORITIES

In the Mbulu District the four Native Authorities shown in the statement bear a variety of titles, Waretema in the case of the Mbulu (Iraqw) and Gorowa (Fiomi), Mtemi in that of the Barabaig (Mangati), and Mangati in the case of the Mbugwe. One of the Iraqw chieftaincies has a large jurisdiction, extending to 25,000 taxpayers, but it is said that only one tribe, that of the Gorowa (Fiomi), has had any strong tradition of chieftaincy. Here the chieftaincy has been in the hands of a Muslim ruling family of more advanced status than the pagan peasantry, and the chieftaincy is in this case hereditary. Among the Iraqw (Mbulu) and Barabaig the administrative structure is built on the clan, and the chieftaincy is an innovation. Among the Mbugwe, authority was formerly vested in spiritual functionaries known as Wa-mangati, whose position had something in common with that of the Laibon of the Masai.[1] The method by which Chiefs in these three tribes are now chosen is described as that of "popular discussion and acclamation." Only one of the Chiefs is said to show any strong personality or ability, and only two are literate.

The sub-chiefs there bear the title of Gasan or Sagandan, the Headmen that of Yalosan, Barabaad or Mtemate. Both sub-chiefs and Headmen are chosen by the Chiefs in consultation with their Elders in local meetings.

The difference in tribal composition is reflected in the attitude of the Chiefs on the subject of unions for joint purposes, for they have not as yet united in any formal federation, and there appears to be opposition to closer union. There was formerly no combined Native Treasury for the District, as each Native Authority maintained its own Treasury. As from 1st January, 1949, however, the Chiefs of Iraqw, Gorowa and Mbugwe agreed to combine their Treasuries but the Barabaig Treasury remained separate.

THE MASAI NATIVE AUTHORITIES

CAT The Masai District has presented a problem of peculiar difficulty in the application of the Native Authority system, and it would be an advantage if the observations made here were read in connection with those made on the similar problem in the Masai Country of the Kenya Colony.[2] As there also the central feature of Masai society has been a well developed system of age-grades, which has resulted in seeking off the shade of the younger men, roughly up to the age of twenty-seven or thirty, we warrior class (morans) who are not only free from most obligations to work, but are independent in many other respects of tribal discipline. Though Elders authority has rested nominally with the Elders (Ingwenak) who have passed the stage of morans, and with the Councils of Elders who formed a regular feature of the Masai tribal usage, these Councils have not in the past nor are they to-day able to enforce decisions which may affect the younger men. It is true that the Elders have recently made decisions, accepted by the morans themselves, which will limit the period of moran-hood and may provide the morans with work on betterment schemes, but it still remains to be seen how far these will be effective in providing a solution for a problem of which the economic is no less serious than the social aspect.

[1] See page 288.
[2] See page 171, Chapter 15.

?: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

Attempts were at one time made in Tanganyika, as also in Kenya, to utilize the Laibon, the spiritual head of the Tanganyika Masai, as Native Authority. But the Masai themselves objected to his occupying this position, and as the result of a Sociological Survey made by H. A. Fosbrooke in 1948, the system was altered. The gazetted Native Authority then became the Masai Council, which in practice consisted of Headmen and Elders, and apparently also of any villagers outside the moran age grade who cared to attend. But this Council was in effect only a consultative body, without any practical authority, and since the Headmen were not gazetted as Native Authorities, they had no legal power to issue Orders under Section 8 of the Native Authority Ordinance.

A further reorganization has now been carried out. Each area now has its own Local Council, with locally elected representatives of age grades and clans, and these Councils have been gazetted as Subordinate Native Authorities. Representatives from each Local Council, differing in numbers in accordance with the size and population of the area involved, compose the Masai Council, which is the Superior Native Authority for the white Masai District, excluding Sonjo. The Council is now limited to these representatives: there is, however, provision for the addition of morans or uninitiated members if and when advisable. The Local Councils have begun to exercise their Order making powers under Section 8 of the Native Authority Ordinance. There are 41 paid Headmen, chosen by members of their own age grade.

There is a Masai Native Treasury, which however is managed entirely by the District Commissioner. The small Sonjo tribe has a Council of Sonjo Headmen, which is gazetted as a Native Authority, and has a separate Treasury.

THE WORKING OF THE NATIVE AUTHORITY SYSTEM

The variety of conditions is so great that it is difficult to generalize on the operation of the system of native administration in the Province as a whole. There are, however, certain points of general significance. The recent reorganization in the Chagga Native Authority area has placed in a superior position those Chiefs who already had a high status in view of the number of taxpayers in their jurisdiction, but its future success will depend on the manner in which these Chiefs can secure the co-operation of the more progressive elements who have now been brought within the framework of the system, as members of the new Divisional Councils. This is especially necessary, in view of the character of Chagga society, for though the Chagga are probably the

8:Whit[illegible]ouse U-3 (no date) 1933 FL12 Masai FL12
I'Digirari

MASAI SOCIAL CUSTOMS.

By L. E. Wauchope.

101 These notes have been prepared from information collected from the Masai who occupy the north-east corner of the Southern Reserve, between Kilimanjaro and the Chyulu Hills. They belong to a large section of the tribe called I'Digirari. This section unlike other Masai sections is divided into two sub-sections, the Ingidongi, to which all "medicine" men belong and the Il-Kiongo, the majority of whom live in Tanganyika Territory.

The Kiongo living in Kenya distinguish themselves from those of Tanganyika by assuming you a third name "Il Ghekiok." This name is undoubtedly derived from that of a spring "Ingurukiok," meaning "bubbling water." It was in the vicinity of this spring that the Masai settled when first they inhabited that part of the country.

561 I propose to deal with certain customs and ceremonies connected with the founding of a new age group. For the benefit of those who may not be conversant with the form of tribal government, may I briefly explain that the Masai tribe is divided into age groups called il parur or il-ari. All youths circumcised during a specified period of years are said to belong to the same warrior age and together they form one age-group. In some sections an age-group is formed of two distinct divisions, a senior and a junior, known as the right-hand circumcision and the left-hand circumcision. Later a group passes from the status of warriors to that of elders and then make way for a new age-group to rise to warrior rank.

[981] Masai boys are circumcised usually between the ages of seventeen and twenty-five. The ceremonies which commence about every seven years extend over a period of about five years. When the majority of the youths are circumcised and a warrior age-group of considerable number is secured, a movement is made to prevent any more boys from joining that group. Those responsible for the movement are the elders of the age-group next senior to the warriors at the time. These elders are to become sponsors and instructors to the members of a new age-group for the formation of which they make preparations.

They first send for a few of the bigger uncircumcised boys and explain that it is proposed to form a new age. In order to do this a ceremony called enkipanyi must be held. The boys receive their instructions and immediately don short skirts made from black and white and paint their heads with red earth that they may resemble warriors. They then set off in procession round the country on what is called an ol ewal. The boys may carry bows for dances but not spears, for it is said that a spear is a sign of force, and their quest is a peaceful one. Each boy must carry a bow, for the bow is a token of peace. Furthermore, it ensures that any reasonable request the boys may make during the ol ewal will be granted. No Masai may refuse the request of one who carries a bow in his hand. The boys take no arrows with them. They visit all the principal villages and in dance and song they announce the object of their visit. They then seek out all the bigger boys of the village and add them to their number. If they wish to spend a night at a village they beg an ox for food from the elder of their sponsor's age-group. Elders of other age-groups present them with milk to drink. In this way the news is spread far and wide and finally the boys, now of considerable number, return to the elders who deputized them, taking as a gift a large quantity of honey. Then a special village is created in which only the boys' sponsors and their families may live. The boys borrow ostrich feathers and lion mane head-dresses from the warriors and on the appointed day they collect at the elders' village.

The ceremony commences with a dance called enghata; for this the boys form three files, one wearing ostrich feather head-dresses, the second wearing lion mane head-dresses, and a third, of boys who have decorated their bodies with broad stripes of white earth to resemble zebras.

The latter must be quite nude; those who wish may wear thigh-bells. They may not carry weapons of any sort, but each carries a thin wand, the length of a spear. After much dancing, the boys form a procession and walk round inside the circle of huts following two leaders, one of whom blows a Kudu horn from time to time. The procession then halts and the leader prays aloud to Engai Narok —the Black God, to shower his blessings on the boys. This prayer has been taught them beforehand by the elders, some of whom stand by and prompt when necessary. When the prayers are over, the elders take the boys outside the village and spend some time instructing them in their duties to their sponsors and to the tribe. A return is then made to the village and the elders bring a fire-stick, the one called el-piron, also a male circumcision knife and a small dead bird. The bird may be of any kind other than a dove. The elders break the fire-stick before the assembled boys. They then place a curse upon the circumcision knife and taking the dead bird they bruise one of its legs and pierce one of its eyes—presumably as an indication of the ill which will befall any boy who dares to be circumcised before the eyes is taken off the knife.

In this way, the elders formally lay claim to the ownership of a new age-group. From that time the boys refer to their sponsors as Ilpiron, whilst the elders refer to the boys as Ilpiron.

[illegible] Soon after the endangered ceremony, the elders take turns or four of their charges to visit the "medicine man." They take with them three or four new gourds as presents for the "medicine man," who is called [illegible]. They must also take with them the bark and root of a tree called [illegible]. I have not been able to identify the tree; it is said to be scarce and is not found in the Lukachukai area. The root and bark are ground to powder and used to make a medicine against snake-bite, an ingredient used in the preparation of a wide variety of charms. The elders inform the "medicine-man" that they have broken the fire-stick and present the boys to him and say "[illegible] long life, love male [illegible]." This is our fire-stick, we are one."

[illegible] On their return home the boys' bodies each one of their number to appear on their spokesman called [illegible] at ceremony. They make no special efforts but during the many debates, to which they devote much time, they note those who show special ability; boy ability to speak well is not in itself sufficient; there are other considerations of far greater importance.

There are certain families whose sons must not be chosen for they would certainly die if elected; again, the mother of other families has an evil reputation and must be avoided. The result is do to select a spokesman from the [illegible] or medicine-man section or from the clans reported to be unlucky.

The chief [illegible] is one born of Mami parents in Mami country of a family from which [illegible] of former ceremonies have been chosen. He should be wealthy if possible and a member of a lucky clan, must be energetic, not given to favoritism, and known to be fond of his tribe. That he should be an outstanding good speaker matters not, provided that he satisfies the other conditions. It is said that his efficiency in debate will improve after he is appointed.

The names of possible candidates are submitted to the [illegible] elders for consideration; the elders do not actually select a boy but prevent any unwise choice being made. The responsibility of making a choice rests with the boys themselves. It is particularly a matter for the leading boys of whom there are probably several by this time. They are called [illegible], and are those who have shown ability and strength of character during the many debates already held.

Usually a [illegible] is chosen from among these [illegible]. They discuss the matter secretly amongst themselves sending all one of their number on some pretext in order to be able to discuss too freely. When a decision is made the boys call some of the [illegible] elders and send for the boy chosen. When he comes the [illegible] say to him: "[illegible] of [illegible]"—We make you our [illegible]. If he above substance, as he may—for many show shelves to the office—he is asked by the boys and hold until he agrees. Other boys set off to relate the news to the family. When the family has been informed the new apprentice is presented with his badge of office called of home grub—the black club. This club is made of olive wood. It must be quite straight and unlikely to break easily. It must not necessarily be black in colour. The club is blessed by the 3-price elders who spit heavy wine over it; it is then blessed by the regular boys in another fashion and handed to the Fajaweaver. He has to spit upon it blessing and prayers are offered that he may have strength, wisdom, and long life. Later the boys present their Fajaweaver with a heifer and a goat.

If at any time the boys go against his wishes, the Fajaweaver may resign by throwing his club to the ground before a meeting of the boys. Should they be dissatisfied with him they may make him resign by taking away his club. They may even take away the heifer if he offends in severe.

When the boys have elected their Fajaweaver the 3-price elders take him, together with a few boys to visit the medicine man. The medicine man always accepts the spokesman presented to him, and prepares for him a special medicine called of chapwapaka—the red bull. This the spokesman is made to drink; it is said to preserve him from witchcraft of the medicine man. In addition, the spokesman is given various charms for the benefit of the tribe. Possibly one is to prevent crocodiles to settle, another to cause the cows to calve freely, another to prevent malaria. Usually the charms are sewn in leather bags and are always accompanied by very intricate instructions as to their use. All these charms must be paid for by those who expect to benefit. An instance was related to me of a ceremony held at Lutembwe in 1928 for which a famous medicine man Bambayo supplied the charm. Its purpose was to prevent the old men of the tribe from dying until they reached a great age. Bambayo received all heifers and bullocks in payment. The medicine man does not state his price but it is usual to pay generously for his services as he is a dangerous person to offend.

Obtaining charms from a medicine man is not a matter to be undertaken lightly. Those who accompany the spokesman are always people of proved intelligence and good memory. Charms are always given with much complicated directions as to their use. If any one of the instructions are overlooked the charm may be rendered useless or may even work evil against its owner. The Bisai sometimes find that their purchase do not have the effect they desire and report the matter to the medicine man; the latter never fails to point out where an error in the method of its use occurred—and probably affects another sale! Sometimes circumstances prevent the immediate use of medicine obtained: a drought for instance might make it impossible to collect people for the ceremony; in such a case the charm might get old and lose its efficiency, or perhaps the object of its use may be forgotten. If this happens the medicine is conveniently mislaid or is thrown away, but if so a report must be made to the medicine man, for he will have seen what happened to his medicine and will be angry, if the fact is concealed from him.

After some years the boys are circumcised, and become moran warriors. As soon as most of them are circumcised the ingopior plan to form into separate companies in readiness for residence in warrior villages called inarepak. Messages are sent and the warriors of all clans are called together by means of an ol-ewal just as the boys did before the endengere ceremony. The number of companies, called i'siri, to be formed, also the names to be given to them are decided on beforehand by the ingopiri warriors. After discussion a division is decided upon. One warrior representing each company to be formed leaves the assembly, goes a little way and striking the haft of his spear with his club to attract attention, he calls: "Ee ale Il Mirisho" or "Ee ale Il Tetiaut"—" This way the Mirisho, this way the Tetiaut." The warriors then rise and join the man calling the name of the company they wish to join.

Groups of five will go together, to join the same company. A company may include warriors of more than one clan though as a rule the majority are of the same clan.

If the warriors of one clan are too few to form a separate unit they join the unit of another clan. If the clan is a very big one, the warriors may form two or even more siris. Having joined a siri a warrior may retract at any time before that siri forms the first warrior village. Once the warrior villages are formed, any warrior who leaves one siri to join another, incurs the bitter resentment of the others. In some cases a fine of cattle is inflicted.

The siris once formed, the warriors now approach the il-piron elders with a view to holding the ceremony of drilling—without which the first warrior village or manyata of new age-group may not be created.

The enthengori ceremony or the breaking of the fire stick, though it effectively holds up the circumcising ceremonies, is not finally binding. It sometimes happens that the medicine man decides that a left-hand circumcision shall be held, in which case all the boys, the Il piron planned to make their special case, will be lost to them, for the boys will be circumcised to form one age with the ——— or right-hand circumcision moran.

If however there is to be no left-hand circumcision the Il piron elders arrange to hold the fire-drilling ceremony. 54

This ceremony finally binds together the Il piron elders and their moran charges. The warriors and the Il piron elders decide on the suitable site for the first warrior village. The warriors, together with their mothers, sisters and cattle move in close to the site chosen and for the time being occupy any deserted village in the vicinity. When the warriors announce that they are in readiness, the elders give orders that on the morrow all the cattle are to move to a new village. Next morning at sunrise, the Il piron tell the warriors to bring the heifers, four sucis, four calves (all black). The heifers must have perfect eyes, straight tails, each must have four teats, in fact they must be perfect in every way. The warriors must find also a young bull, either a black one, or a fawn one; it must be perfect in eye, have erect horns, and its dam must still be alive.

The warriors are warned that after the ceremony, the bull must not be castrated, or sold, or slaughtered for food.

The nine cattle having been selected, eight moran are called for, and eight girls. The warriors must have unblemished eyes, must not have killed a Masai, or have committed any serious offence against tribal laws; also they must not all be right-handed. [328]

The girls, too, must be free from blemish and must not have reached the age of puberty. The warriors don a short coat of black calf skin, make a circle of white round the eyes, down each cheek meeting under the chin, and each carries a bow in his hand. The warriors and girls then drive the cattle to the centre of the chosen site and prevent them from running away. The rest of the warriors watch this proceeding until as soon as the ceremonial bull and the heifer have taken up their positions; the remainder are driven forward to the waiting group. The warriors then seize the ceremonial bull by the horns and twist its head so that the right side of its face is uppermost. A piece of hide which must have been cut from the back of an ox which when slaughtered was found to be in perfect health, is then placed on the bull's upturned face. The Il piron elders who performed the first ceremony were dressed in robes made from sheep skins. Now fire-sticks are then produced, placed on the bull's cheek and fire made by drilling, by the Il piron elders. [312] [362] [372]

The smouldering charred wood falls on the hide, pieces of frayed cedar bark are added, and the glowing ember is blown into a flame, when a fire will start with dry clean wood. The fire is then placed on the ground in the centre of the village; the place is given the name osingo. Large pieces of wood are added. One elder is then left to look after the fire whilst the others walk in a circle round the assembled

● 541 [104] hands. They are followed by the moran and the women who set back to mark where the elder has walked. When the circle is determined, they set to work to build a thick thorn fence to enclose the village. By the time the work is finished, it is evening. A special piece of olive wood is brought in readiness. The log used is a sacred ceremony is described as being four to five feet long, and of the thickness of a man's thigh. It had been part of the trunk of a tree, not a branch. A tree leaning in the direction of the rising sun had to be found. When it was cut, it had not to be allowed to fall to the ground.

In the evening before the cattle return, the olive log is brought and one end is placed in the fire. The wood is ——— and as the log burns away it is pushed further into the fire. The mothers of the moranes each come with four small pieces of olive wood to light at the fire; this they take to their temporary hut made of hide to start their fire. No other source of fire may be used. Great care must be taken that the log is burnt completely. A close guard is kept over it to prevent the cattle from disturbing it and to prevent evil-wishers from taking away the log to make black magic. The moranes guard the log through the night and the morning.

[104] In the morning all the moranes come and form a circle round the fire, they being their spears, and wear lion-mane and head-dress. Four elders of known good character, with wives and children, then walk round the moranes; two walk one way, two the other. One of each pair has a gourd of milk, the other a gourd of honey wine. As they walk they fill their mouths with milk or honey wine and blow it on to the sitting moranes.

541 539 184 Each girl has a slipper of green grass which when removed is held in the left hand, the gourd in the right. As the liquid is sprayed, so is the green grass waved toward the moran. As they walk the elders call down the blessing of the Engare-Narok.

Engai!

Enkoonyowan. Enjaro.
Enkoboto! Engai.
Eitan il kolobong o I'ong Ai. Hai.
Motayanak ndai il kolobi.
Enkiki il ainyanak, aye
Ala il kojak I'ninkopi! Enapa.

Enyo Lenana; Engoit o Mbatayan enjoon
Mokogolo ndoo il Ingoay
Eitan el Dunyo Piloon
Eitan Kanaanak
Enkoning on ayo il o naiji.

Enkomayeno! Ingai! Enjoro! Ingai!
Enkoo E kiboleng o I'ungai! Hai!
Motogoshi enkoo E kulali Ingai Kurok
Kulali E ulum kurok eyangiki kujak I'ooshoyo!
Ilayo Lenono O Ingai! O'Wiarlum enyoro Gai
Kulidule! Ingai! Motogoshi inkoo E lugiay
Enkoo Ol Doopo Filou! Ingai!
Kulidule! Enkoono E ——— ——— Ingai!
Enkoiyeyo enkiduli! Ingai!
Enoto ai ishiyuk! Ingai Kurok!
Motoyoyo ninoo Ingai! Motoyoyo ninoo E ulu!
Enkoolidum ninoo enulali o kule!
Motoyoo ninoo E ungani ulu I'ungkuwulu! Ingai;
Ol poro lang enoto ungkuni. Ingai!

Be trustworthy! Oh return safely! O God.
Receive ye safe out of God,
May the Heaven pass you by,
With those who hate us, that they may find day dawn on their journeys.
Lenono and Kulali and Wiarlum wish thy safe return!
Grow up! Receive possessed of wise heads!
Receive as green as Ellenatiyoo!
Be the father of my children; be father of boys and girls,
Be fathers of children, and bring them up well!
Have many grown!
May God love you! May the moon love you!
Be as sweet to us as milk and honey.
May the red bull of the night guard thee,
May our age be the heaven.

As soon as the prayer is finished the warriors rise and disperse. Later they reassemble and celebrate the handing of their age by dancing and singing. Thus is a new Masai age founded. Meanwhile the warriors live apart from the rest of the tribe.

9:Fosbrooke G-S (1936-1948) 1948 FL11 Masai FL11
Kisonko

175
641

remarkable and unique, such is its own area. But the Moita section seems to have flourished above all others and penetrated, during and after the war, into areas which had never before been in its possession.

The details of this period of famine, civil war and European intervention have not been recorded at length, but it is hoped that sufficient has been said to drive home the point that the period 1890 to 1900 was one of great upheaval for the Tanganyika Masai. The most obvious effect of this was the break-up and scattering of many of the sections, together with the loss of the loyalties which held these sections together and generally of political cohesion. Only time can bring about a reorientation in accordance with the present distribution of population.

Another aspect of the above historical review should also be borne in mind. It is almost impossible to find at the present day an elder who did not go through considerable hardship in his youth. To anyone who has lost and regained a generation, such generation is of greater value, at least sentimentally. The Masai of Tanganyika lost their cattle, their mode of living and their tribal life, and largely by their own efforts have once again regained them. It is suggested that their intense conservatism and resentment of change may perhaps be better understood in the light of the foregoing.

191

For clarity this historical section is concluded with a chronological chart showing the main events and personalities referred to.

175
641

CHRONOLOGICAL CHART.

Age	Approxi. date of circumcision.	Important Events.
SEYOKI	1770	Members of this age can be remembered by living elders. Sabei belonged to this age.
KIMAKIRI	1790	Masai penetrated to Ukiguru.
ARIKIRIAKI	1800	Conquered Wanyaru from Aikore.
KISOTO	1810	Took Kalenso from the Kwavi. Kibaia (the original Waarusha) brought up from Arusha Chini. Capture of Engarukia.
SIWAIT	1830	Captured Lulimo, Moita and Kisaya from Kwavi. Drove Darwa from Ngorongoro Highlands. Mbatian belonged to this age.
SIANGOIRO	1850	One or two members of this age still alive. Took Kwavi from Darwa. Death of Sabei.
LAGWEN	1870	Moita Masai called up by Mbatian for Lukigilak war. Capture of Tulamo and Kibeta.
OALALA	1890	Peace made between Masai and Kwavi at Naro. Death of Mbatian. Famine, rinderpest and smallpox. Lenana and Sendeyo brought to this age.
SIWAIT	1900	Civil war between Lenana and Sendeyo. First contact with European administration. Parti protected to this age, though actually Dareto.

175
544

DARETO	1911	Death of Lenana. The Great War. Fight between Orwit and Sarwa at Ini Kiseli. Return of Ishoe to Tanganyika. Mbaiya belonged to this age.
KIRALE	1888	Death of Farah.
		Death of Sendeyo.
MENGEDO	1888	Death of Mbaiya.

175
791

GENEALOGY OF THE LAIMOK FAMILY.

Showing only those who attained political importance.

9;Foxbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL-12 Maasi FL-12
Kisonko

726
711

Prior to a major raid, but not before a minor expedition, a visit would be paid by the participants to the laibon, who would give charms to ensure success. No payment was made at the time, but a portion of the captured stock was taken to the laibon on return. It was thus to his material advantage, as well as to that of his reputation, that the raid should be successful; it is consequently only natural that he should pass on any bits of intelligence brought in by previous visitors, and any hints which experience had taught him, to reinforce the efficacy of his charms. Thus a proportion of the spoils, lifted by a combined force of Kimonge Dwati and Dareto from the Lumbwa living beyond Kisii, about 1918, were taken to Laibon Parrit (18), later gazetted Chief of the Tanganyika Maasi, but at that time resident in Kenya.

721
711

The initiative of suggesting such raids seems to have rested with the moran, though the modern technique of an upstart laibon saying "There are plenty of cattle in such-and-such an area, I can't understand why you fellows don't go and take some", was doubtless used in the old days to encourage cleverly sections to action.

Minor raids, from all accounts, were organised locally and carried out without reference to the laibon, to whom some of the captured cattle were presented. The difference between a major and a minor raid appears to have lain not only in the numbers of Maasi involved, but also in the strength and reputation of the proposed enemy.

669
711

In the matter of civil war the laibon's position was rather different, as his own position was at stake. In contrast to the usual "We went and raided such-and-such a tribe", Laimer informants frequently refer to the time "when Mbatian called us up to fight the Lukipiak." In the struggle which followed the death of Mbatian, it is obvious that Lenana and Sendeya were encouraging war for the purpose of furthering their own personal ambitions.

561
711

The second main function of the laibon is that of supervising and blessing the age grade ceremonies. It is probable that a laibon at least blows charms, if he does not attend to perform the Enkolomi ceremony, the commencing ceremony of the age, held by the Kaboyoke section on behalf of the whole tribe. It is certain that he does so both at the Uasin and Ngabare ceremonies, that is at the promotion and passing out of the warriors. But he is not responsible for the organisation of such ceremonies, nor is it on his initiative that new ages commence or old ones stand down. As this is a matter of prime importance in determining his true position it deserves full attention. The closing of the present Morulon age was agreed to at an Ol Kiama (or General Meeting) of the tribe in 1937, and not done at the direction of the laibon. The 4 Prime elders, i.e. those of the recuperating age — not next but one above the warriors — are alone responsible for the initiation, promotion and standing down of the moran. An interesting case occurred in February 1938, after the Enduogoro, or closing, of the present age, when a Dwati elder at Naibor Mori decided to circumcise his two sons, and brewed beer in preparation for the event. The local Dapon, hearing of this, determined to stop him, marched into his home, and drank the beer himselfem. It

9:Foxbrooke G-8 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

is endowed by numerous reliable elders, that, even if the laibon had given his sanction for the circumcision, the Dorobo elders would have been justified in acting as they did.

On a safari in June, 1938, laibon Mbatyo laid down a ceremonial for closing the age. It consisted of taking a small bird (dead) and breaking its legs and putting out its eyes. Whitehouse records a similar ritual in the same connection. On further enquiry it appears that this procedure is merely a curse which may be laid on any elder who is determined to circumcise his son during the 'closed season' in defiance of warnings. It is generally considered improbable that such a ceremony will actually be performed. The point of recording this case is to illustrate that the laibon's part in this matter is merely to re-inforce by magical means a decision that had already been taken by the elders. It is also of interest to note that Mbatyo was passing off as original a curse which had been used in Kenya for years.

Although the supervision of the age grade ceremonies has been recorded as an important function of the laibon, this activity is subject to various restrictions, the principle of which I have been unable to ascertain. The facts, however, show that the laibon of one section may perform the ceremony for another, or alternatively the assistance of an 'unofficial' laibon may be sought; for instance the Ngokaro or passing out ceremony of the Dorobo age-set of the Kisongo section was nominally held under Parit, and the Uwoto or promotion ceremony of the Kisale age under Mbatyo, who were respectively the ruling Laibon of the material time. But in fact an old Kikuyu adopter of the Ingidong clan, one Lolkidewa ole Kashungu (now deceased), was called in to assist in both these ceremonies. By agreement the Moodal laibon received the fees in respect of these ceremonies from the Naberere and Kikuyu areas, whilst those contributed by the Moodal and Longida Masai went to Lolkidewa at Ruiri, Kenya Colony. In another case, Sangayan, laibon of the Loita section, performed the Uwoto or promotion of the Kisale age for the Matapato and Lodokilani sections, which are nominally under Kimoriani (10). All that can be said, therefore, in our present state of knowledge, is that the 'official' laibon to the section does not necessarily play the leading part in the age grade ceremonies of that section.

In the choice of Laigwanak or Spokesmen of the Age-grades, Whitehouse records "The medicine man always accepts the spokesman presented to him," a statement for which there is ample confirmation throughout Kisongo. Rolfe, it is true, states "If the chief medicine man approves of the selection, a cloth is made for the new chief . . . ", but this is with reference to the lesser who is a chief of ceremonies only, and certainly does not apply to the Laigwanak or Spokesmen.

It is also noteworthy that the 5 Piron elders keep in very close touch with the laibon, from the time they take charge of the new age, until their charge stand down. Most of the Laigwanak of the Kisale or Senior Warrior Age of today state that they were first taken to Laibon Parit when he was still resident in Kenya, i.e. prior to 1920; they were of course only boys at the time. The ingwenan of Lemagasin for instance states that he went eleven times to Parit before circumcision, numerous times after initiation, when Parit was resident at Mondul, and six times to laibon Mbatya. One cannot regard the figures as accurate, but at least they show that the laibon is in close touch with the developing moran and their guardians.

9:Foebrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

It has been recorded above that the third main function of a laibon is to lay down the ritual and to provide charms for local ceremonies, concerned with fertility and disease (both human and bovine) and with rainfall.

Whitehouse's description of visits to the laibon for this purpose is of interest. "Obtaining charms from a medicine man is not a matter to be undertaken lightly. Those who accompany the spokesman are always people of proved intelligence and good memory. Charms are always given with much complicated directions as to their use. If any one of the instructions are overlooked the charm may be rendered useless or may even work evil against its users. The Masai sometimes find that their purchases do not have the effect they desire and report the matter to the medicine man; the latter never fails to point out where an error in the method of its use occurred — and probably effects another sale! Sometimes circumstances prevent the immediate use of medicines obtained, a drought for instance may make it impossible to collect people for the ceremony, or perhaps the objects of its use may be forgotten. If this happens the medicine is conveniently mislaid or is thrown away, but if so a report must be made to the medicine man, for he will have seen what has happened to his medicine and will be angry if its loss is concealed from him."

Most of these points are confirmed by Kimongo informants. The organisation of deputations to the laibon is one of the principal duties of the leigwanak. I have heard it explained of various elders — "he always goes on dorsal as he has a good memory." The "complicated directions" usually involve the building of a boma, to which all the participants temporarily remove; the duration of their stay is laid down by the laibon. The charms given may be applied in numberless ways; they may be eaten or drunk, sprinkled or smeared over the bodies of those concerned. They may be mixed with decoctions of tree roots, with the fat of the sacrificial beast, or even with the liquor secretion if the slaughtered beast is pregnant.

The slaughtering of a beast is the most usual ceremonial, its species, sex, colour and condition being laid down by the laibon. Examples of such types are — black bullock, black and white heifer (well), brown cow, pregnant cow, etc., etc. The skin of the beast is usually cut up and divided amongst the participants. Such pieces of skin are termed il-kwata, (sing. el-kwata) and may be worn on the finger, in particular finger being named by the laibon) hung round the neck, or suspended over the door or bed in the house.

Other variants concern the situation of the boma, or the phase of the moon, or altogether there are an infinite variety of ceremonies which may be ordered.

9:Foebrooke G-5 (1936-1968) 1948 FL12 Maasi FL12
Kisonko

One is frequently told by elders that in the old days the laiboni concerned himself primarily with the moran, giving them war charms, supervising their ceremonies, etc., his payment consisting of a share in the spoils of war. After the Uasin or promotion ceremony it appears that a special raid was undertaken, called enyorkorori, a portion of the produce of this doubtless being handed to the laiboni. I should think, however, that the custom of collecting cattle by general levy on the Age, at some time after the raiding or 'passing-out' ceremony, is old established. When such cattle are presented to the laiboni, it appears customary for him to decree a ceremony, and to supply charms for it free of charge. This, according to some elders, was the last official connection between the laiboni and the age as a whole, except of course his natural association with the 0 grade elders concerning the initiation of a new age. Other dealings with him by the elders were in the nature of private practice.

Before concluding the consideration of a laiboni's functions in the old days, reference may be made to certain administrative actions alleged to have been taken by certain past Laiboniok. For instance Sulori (5) is alleged to have resulted a section of the Masai who had penetrated far into Dogo country (see fig. 1), and when they refused to obey him, sent a body of moran to compel them to return. Again he is credited with a complementary some function of an agricultural tribe. I Kilonu, from Arusha Chini to the slopes of Mount Meru, to grow his tobacco, and to dig water furrows, notably the Engaro el Mutonyi and the Engaro Sunyaki; these agriculturists subsequently developed into the Arusha tribe. Mbatian (6), apart from his civil war activities, took such 'administrative action' as telling the Masai not to move at the time of the famine — in fact imposing a quarantine — and ordering the tribe not to resist the Europeans.

But it frequently happens that past events become linked with the names of important personages of the time, when in fact there was no connection between the two. This may have occurred at least in the case of those actions recorded above attributed to Sulori. But even if this is not so, the few instances of executive acts undertaken by the laiboni in the past are insufficient evidence on which to base any theory that the institution of the laiboni at any time approached the status of chieftainship amongst the Masai.

The picture of a pre-European laiboni may therefore be reconstructed as follows:—

He was primarily the medicine man of the moran, both in respect of war charms and of supervising and blessing their ceremonies. In junior elders, the Masai still maintaining contact with the laiboni (paying epikoro fees) and as 0 grade elders visited him on behalf of the new age. But except as private patients the elders seem to have done less business with the laiboni than they do today. Administrative, executive or judicial functions were not part of a laiboni's duties, though he could exert a certain amount of control by judicious advice. He was in no sense a paramount chief.

9:Fuchsenke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Mawi FL12
Kiwuke

C. Modern adaptation of the Lalheneie — increase in land ceremonies — payment of fees — right to demand girls — ante-bellal contents attitude of Masai to Laibon and spiritual matters in general — conclusions.

The main factor altering the position of the laibon in the achieved production of cattle raiding. As pointed out above, the supply of charms for cattle raiding was one of the Laibon's chief functions. The first effect of this change was to reduce the laibon's status, in addition to cutting off his main source of income. Some continued to draw glory and dividends by continuing the practice in secret, others, more loyal to the new order, sought for something to replace this loss. It is difficult to assess which motive was uppermost, love of power or greed for cattle, but whichever it was, the reaction was the same. It consisted of an intensification of another of their main functions, viz. providing charms for, and prescribing the ritual for, land ceremonies. This is thought to have been less important in the old days, but it is now the laibon's chief function and principal source of income, and as such merits attention.

The nature of the ceremonies has already been briefly described and with regard to their frequency, it is improbable that a year passes without some ceremony or other taking place in every area of the district. An aspect not yet touched upon is that of the method of collecting the fees paid to the Laibon.

In respect of the cattle paid for the age grade ceremonies their number seems to be laid down either by custom, or by the laibon himself, (I am not sure which). They are collected by general agreement from the members of the age concerned, after long discussion. A point of interest is that members of the Engidong clan are not expected to contribute, but may add a 'present' of their own, e.g. in one instance mentioned, in the proportion of 5 Engidong cattle to 40 from other clans. But what is very striking about these levies is that the Masai in general are seldom sure for what they are paying. When enquiring about a heavy mob of cattle, one may be told that they are the fees being paid by the Dwani age in respect of their Eighteen ceremony, or by others that they represent payments by the Dwanie age in respect of their Uraka, or pre-initiation. One can only conclude that the general public do not really know for what they are paying, they have been told to contribute cattle, and do so without further enquiry.

In the matter of land ceremonies the situation is different. The idea of holding such a ceremony frequently arises from an old man having a run of bad luck — his cattle or children dying, or his crops not giving birth. He calls a number of his neighbours together, they discuss the situation and decide that a visit to the laibon is indicated — then the movement starts. Other land ceremonies may be sought when the area in general is affected by drought or disease, or again the laibon himself may remind an area that he has not heard from them for some time. This may be done, for example, in the following manner: when the laibon is discussing the issues or is in a trance deciding some matter for a Mainoto departure, he will suddenly switch round and say, "I see the Mainto people frequently fighting, contact must have been limited. But that is not the case today. When Mbatya's home was infected with measles in 1933 he hired a lorry and himself travelled to Kisoko and beyond, bringing back a Kikuyu medicine man to cleanse his home for him. Kutela (M) is reported to have obtained a charm to kill Mbatya from a Sukuma witch doctor in Pare, and Lelingo (M) and Sabai (M) hired a car to go and interview this doctor, in order to verify the rumour and/or to obtain charms stronger than those given to Kutela.

The cult of the lalkan must therefore have much in common with the beliefs and practices of neighbouring tribes, and I put it forward as a possibility that, with further contacts, the institution may eventually end up merely as an instrument of common witchcraft.

In the absence of rational scientific explanations for the many natural phenomena which surround them, — drought and disease, fecundity and sterility, birth and death, — it is natural that the Maasai, in common with all other primitive peoples, should regard the unseen with deep fear and awe, and grasp at any opportunity offered which purports to control these mysterious factors in their lives. They believe the lalkan to be capable of controlling these powers forces, for it is the intermediary between themselves and the supernatural. His blessing will ensure prosperity, his charms and rituals can alleviate an existing calamity, and his power of foretelling the future enables steps to be taken to ward off an impending misfortune.

It is extremely difficult to ascertain the strength of these beliefs amongst individual Maasai, but it is considered that the majority of the Kisonko hold them implicitly. Some areas, e.g. Kikuyu, have a reputation for consulting the lalkan more frequently than others, but nowhere the less the beliefs are general. The practice of the ritual may fall into temporary abeyance in certain areas, but the belief remains, and manifests itself in outward form on the advent of a drought or of a personal reminder from the lalkan. Modern contacts have as yet done little to shake these beliefs. A few Christian Maasai are completely sceptical, others may have their doubts, but when the occasion arises feel that they had better do what they are told, "to be on the safe side". One of the chief factors which guarantees the maintenance of these beliefs is the age grade system. From early adolescence the future bearers of the tribe, the laigwanak and ngatim, are frequently taken to the lalkan by their guardians, the il gwan olden. The lengthy discussions beforehand, the actual journey, the reverential attitude of the elders to the lalkan, the ritual, the mysterious voice in the darkness but foretelling the future, all these must make a deep impression on the youths. This in turn is spread to the rest of their age-mates when they return home and perform the ordained ceremony.

There seems little doubt therefore that as long as the age-grade system is maintained in its present form these beliefs, and the mysterious power they give the lalkan, will be perpetuated. Thus, as education progresses, this power will decrease, but disbelief will dissociate a youth from his age-mates, and consequently his influence on others will be small, as the other hand those brought up in one of the laibons are in a position to influence large numbers of their fellows. For this reason it is probable that these beliefs will be held for many years to come, although their intensity and their outward manifestations may decrease, as in fact they appear to be doing in Kenya to-day.

9:Footbrooks G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL.12 Masai FL.12
Kiwoko

The time has now come to summarize this section and to draw our conclusions. In doing so it will be necessary to differentiate between the Masai attitude to the laibon, and the laibon's attitude to the Masai. The Masai do not regard, nor have they ever in the past regarded the laibon as a chief or lawgiver. They regard him as an intermediary between themselves and the unseen, and in consequence hold him in great respect and awe. Any order that he cared to give, suitably disguised as a prophecy, would therefore be obeyed; the laibon is thus a great potential political leader. But here the attitude of the laibon to the Masai comes in. It may be that in the past a laibon has felt responsibility for the welfare of the tribe, but there are very few instances of this taking practical form. At the present time one can only judge the attitude of the laibon to the Masai on facts, and these reveal that he thinks only of himself and not of the tribe. With the possible exception of Lenana, no laibon has made any effort to assist the tribe to adapt themselves to modern conditions. Rather the reverse; for their own personal profit they have made themselves the focus of the tribe's income conservatism. Where not all from one source of income (a share of ruaha stock), they have used their powers to develop an alternative (extended sale of charms).

9:Fuchsuke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Mami FL12
Kisuke

AGE GRADE SYSTEM.

Year.	Generation A. Age a. (Alpha)	Generation A. Age a. (Beta)	Generation B. Age a. (Alpha)	Generation B. Age a. (Beta)
1.	[illegible]
2.
3.
4.	[illegible]
5.	[illegible]
6.		[illegible]
7.	[illegible]	[illegible]
8.
9.		[illegible]
10.
11.		[illegible]
12.	[illegible]	[illegible]
13.	[illegible]		[illegible]
14.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
15.	[illegible]
16.	[illegible]	[illegible]
17.			[illegible]
18.
19.
20.
21.			[illegible]
22.			[illegible]
23.
24.
25.
26.
27.
28.
29.
30.
31.
32.
33.
34.
35.
36.
37.
38.
39.
40.

9:Fosbrooke G-S (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kinaika

SECTION III: THE AGE GRADE SYSTEM.

A. Basic importance of the system — an age-grade chart — formation of a new age and its ceremonies — initiation — seniority — moiety.

The importance of the age grade system to the Masai social organization cannot be over-estimated. It regulates a man's conduct in relation to his fellow men; it is the basis of such political organization as the tribe possesses; together with clan and kinship it regulates a man's social life; organized religion, certain economic activities, and above all military organization are dependent on the age grade system for their existence.

In this chapter it is necessary to describe the system and therefore to examine it in relation to the above-mentioned activities, this procedure has the unfortunate effect of appearing to divide up in watertight compartments. So it must be stressed at the commencement and borne in mind throughout that there is hardly a phase of male activity which is not subordinate to, regulated by, or interlocked with the age grades.

It is not proposed to give full particulars of every ceremony: in some cases these are not known, in others they have been recorded elsewhere. Sufficient detail however must be included to emphasize the theme of this chapter, that the system is all-embracing and that in its various aspects it absorbs a considerable amount of the energies of those participating and is a constant theme of thought and conversation throughout the tribe.

A brief outline of the system will enable the ceremonies hereafter mentioned to be appreciated at their true value.

The accompanying chart, dealing with two generations (clays: plural(ilo) A. and B. each composed of two age (el parar: plur. il parar) or a, p, and c, will, it is hoped, make the overlapping clear. Disregarding their relationship with the previous generation, age a is circumcised over a period of four years. Being the first age in the generation they are called emurate ninna, the right hand circumcision, but they are none the less junior warriors, i.e. junior to those of the previous generation. After about 7 years they are promoted to senior warriorhood in a ceremony called emuto. About this time, preliminary steps are being taken for the formation of age c, which will also enter generation A, on the left hand circumcision, emurate kaigenge. About the time when age a is demanding promotion to senior warriorhood, some 5 years after their circumcision, age p of generation B, now again right hand, will be in process of formation. When p has been circumcised, c can perform their ceremony, thus becoming senior warriors, but nevertheless remaining left hand. When age p is nearing senior warriorhood, and age c about to be circumcised, ages a and c perform the al ngiboni ceremony, whereby they become elders.

From this it will be seen that the right hand circumcision invariably enjoys a longer period of warriorhood than the left, also that the country is never without a standing army of at least one complete age of warriors.

[1] An attempt is made in the chart to give approximate dates to the various stage, regarding the circumcision of age or as the year one. It should be borne in mind, however, that each period is liable to variation: as the old days Sentoo, civil war, etc., played havoc with the ordered sequence of events; modern conditions are causing certain further modifications in the system.

Down the lists, if the chart be studied vertically, the various stage through which any particular age passes become apparent; if it be read horizontally, the position of the ages in relation to each other at any given time can be ascertained.

Before embarking on a description of the various ceremonies involved, it may be helpful to tabulate as an example the Kimaka generations and ages and their status as at 1948, so that reference may be made to concrete examples in the succeeding pages.

Existing Generations and Ages.

Kimaka 1948.

Name	Status	Present political occupation.
Kimaka	Retired	Do not participate actively.
Lemoo	o	o o
Dabida	o	o o
Dwali	Senior elders	Guardians of morals, both Kimaka and Mwaka.
Dwala	Junior elders	Guardians of uninitiated youths, now being formed into new age.
Generations name not given.	Kimaka — senior moran	Now beginning to marry.
	Mwaka — junior moran	Now claiming privileges of the seniors.
	Uninitiated youths.	Performing ceremonies prior to circumcision.

The necessity for the formation of a new generation comes from the elders immediately above the existing senior generation, i.e. at present the Dwala. Such elders are the sponsors of the new age, and their guardians and instructors in all the ceremonies which lead from boyhood to elderhood. The recognised term ilpiro is used between guardian and ward, being derived from the Swahili which plays a conspicuous part at certain stages.

The official closing of one age is performed by the ilpiro of the succeeding age, i.e. the Dwala closed the Mwaka age before commencing to organise the formation of the uninitiated youths into an age of their own. It is marked by a ceremony called Kuhengwa (the closing) in the course of which a cows is held on a circumcision knife, and a fowl-pole is commonly broken. The actual ceremony is perhaps marked by confusion with the orgiastic (see below), but the knowledge that it is about to take place is a sufficient interest to prevent unauthorised circumcisions. The example has already been quoted (with reference to the before and age-grade ceremonies) of how, during the tour of Southern Mawd, in 1936 (Dent) the Lathos, Wherya, decreed at Ethaya, Makeni and Shenjiba that the endangers ceremony should be performed in a certain manner. In 1938 a certain Dent elder at Bulhamoni had learned how to prepare beer for the circumcision of his son. The Dents elders, hearing of this, ordered the beer to form, with the intention of spilling all the beer. In point of fact they doubt it in company with the offending person, but even the bell they prevented the circumcision from taking place, due to spite of the fact that the endangers ceremony had not been actually performed.

The ceremony of Engilishi appears to be a mourning campaign for the new age. Needs of people who are of a suitable age for circumcision consider round the country dressed as women, but carrying only bows in both hands. They send news to a certain elder, by an elected (deputation) of sons of Dent Elders, that they will visit his bows. The elder prepares food, milk and so on, and any people of the bows who are ready for circumcision are duly prepared to enter the engilishi. The band then wanders round the conjunction asking to its members on route. This ceremony is performed two times without further incident. (Twice only in the case of a left hand circumcision) on the conclusion of the fifth engilishi, by which time all suitable candidates in the area concerned have been enrolled, the people return to a secluded spot in the bush, in company with the 8 green elders. A beer is slaughtered, Kinsongo bended on the new age, and each boy given a strip of bark from the ceremonial ox.

There is a further pre-circumcision ceremony practised only by certain sections of the Mawd, namely the Kenya Kalenyoko. It is said to occur prior to the above two ceremonies. The ceremony appears to be somewhat on the lines of the Uraka (see below), showing a mixture of ceremonies from amongst the participants, arising on up by the bows, mostly between brothers, and all common features. The Kalenyoko ceremony must be performed before all others, and is attended by representatives of those sections who do not hold a ceremony of their own. There is, however, no information of representatives of the Kisongo attending this ceremony — in fact in South Mawd the elders are extremely vague as to its meaning — but that the new age is formally inaugurated by Fedorenko in Kenya is fully confirmed by the elders round Shenjiba.

The showing of a beginning or initiation for each age and each area normally takes place in the bush between the cut of one circumcision and the commencement of the next, i.e. at the same time as the above ceremonies. The method of their choice and their presentation to the bows are dealt with elsewhere. It is sufficient to say here that between one generation and the next there may be a gap of two or three years, no applications are not hurried, between the two ages of one generation the gap is probably less, but the ceremonies are likewise less important.

3. Junior Warriorhood, — circumcision — initiations of age — formation of Mazungira — relations between junior and senior warriors — promotion (Chaka).

As in the case of other ceremonies, it is not the details but the wider significance of the operation which claims our attention. The first most important point is that circumcision is the visible sign of admittance to full membership of the tribe, and that sincere desirous of becoming a "Mzee" must be operated upon. After admittance there are many ceremonies of promotion but it is not essential that every member of the tribe should attend; it is essential, however, that he should be circumcised. Prior to circumcision no youth may have intercourse with a circumcised woman. This is a rule most strictly adhered to. Further, the women, whose perquisite the mature girls are, deny the 'uncut' women to their girls. Consequently circumcision and its attendant ceremonies admit the youths to a full sex life.

Bulla states that circumcision usually takes place between the ages of 15 and 17, though orphans and the children of poor parents frequently wait until they are twenty. My own observations would indicate that 16 or 17 is the lower limit, except in the case of youths whose fathers have died, who want to be in a position to inherit. The existence of this latter motive, circumcision to permit inheritance, is a good example of the meaning of the ceremony. If it has not been performed, the youth whose father dies cannot inherit; the cattle, wives, etc., must all be taken over by a personal uncle as guardian pending the circumcision of the eldest male child. But if permission can be obtained for his circumcision a youth of ten or twelve can assume control of a home, to the exclusion of all other relatives. In other words, we stand above, circumcision is the mark of full membership of the tribe.

When the initiation of a new age has been sanctioned, circumcision takes place singly or in groups of two or three in the father's home. The ceremony is usually performed during or at the end of the rains, a time of plenty amongst the Masai, and is suspended during the dry season. Four successive years are taken up with the circumcision of an age, and it is natural that those circumcised in one season possess a marked feeling of affinity towards one another. This shows itself in the possession of a group name for each batch, the same names being employed from generation to generation. They are, for the first batch, i Chongoro again or i Kiparon, followed by i Partogoroiong, i Kiroobo and finally i Tarak. The above refers to a right hand age; a left hand age, being lower in number, possesses only the three last-mentioned divisions.

When all of one age have been circumcised they divide themselves into mugaanas (sect) each of which forms a warrior village or barracks (manyatta). In Tanganyika the manyattas are usually formed on a territorial or national basis, e.g. Engarukon, Olmolog, Mbangi (areas) or Sale, Purko, etc. (sections). Though Whitehouse describes a ceremony whereby the warriors, generally of one area, divide themselves up, frequently on a clan basis.

When the whole of one age has been circumcised, and the endogaare ceremony performed, the members of the completed age feel it is about time to claim some privileges from the prior age. Whether the age immediately above is of the same or a different generation does not appear to affect the rule that these privileges are only granted when the senior age begins to doubt its capacity to retain them by force. The chief privileges are (a) the wearing on the shield bearers of sacred ensembl (most important), (b) the spear bundle of black wood called enjata narok, and (c) the right to hold a dance without seeking permission from the senior menyo.

No formal demand is made. The juniors will assume one of the privileges, and when met by a band of seniors will be promptly beaten up and retreat. This process continues till seniors become frequent in these affrays. When the seniors feel that they are on the point of losing their ascendancy they gradually hand over these privileges to the juniors, who may then proceed to the Uasin ceremony.

In the last few years subsequent to circumcision, the new menyo have been kept in a position of subjection by the menyo of the preceding age or generation. But these latter have now handed over the reins of seniority and entered into elderhood through the ngabem ceremony. What does this change of status mean to the menyo concerned?

Fundamentally it means that having shown their worth in the fights for the sacred insignia, the junior menyo are now deemed capable of guarding the country. Their seniors can retire to the more peaceful occupations of marriage and animal husbandry, in the knowledge that their juniors are worthy successors. But their period of junior service has done more than make them efficient warriors; it has moulded them in ways which are today more important than the purely military aspect. Both as individuals and as a group they have been taught respect for authority. If as individuals they are found associating with the sacred girls who are the paraphrase of the seniors, they are beaten; if as individuals they quarrel with a member of the senior grade, the wrath of the whole of that age falls upon them. An example of this is the case of a Moruko of Kisaaka who at Kisaaka quarrelled with a Kaale of Maiwani. The Kisaaka Kaale promptly gave the Moruko a good beating. A few days later, having got news of the quarrel, a party of Maiwani Kaale appeared on the scene to beat the Moruko. But having heard that the Kisaaka Kaale had done the job for them they went home forthwith.

The ceremony of promotion from junior to senior warriorhood, called nyoto, is probably the best known and most sensational ceremony in the Maasai age grade system. Purko, Kisaaka and Siuna Fan all regard it as the step between warriorhood and elderhood, and only Loodoki and Kaimosi (the latter somewhat regretfully) regard it as a ceremony of promotion.

It is performed by seniors or groups of seniors. The Kisaaka traditionally perform the ceremony at Kisaaka near Mara, in the eastern slopes of Mashai mountain, actually in the Arusha district. As many as possible of the age attend, but by no means all. The Arusha side [illegible] also by sodium pos in the Kisonga ceremony. The Lakeyok of Lokiriak are believed to perform the ceremony by themselves. The Lotia and Turkana of that area do not apparently attend the ceremony performed by the remainder of these sections living in Kenya. They are sent a bit of the hide of the ceremonially slaughtered ox, and certain charms, and told what one might call a "sub-ceremony" of their own.

But all members of the age attend, some are declines detained by family matters, others are perhaps detained by a magical test designed to discover whether they have had intercourse with a married woman. However, a very large number do attend and perform various ceremonies. They compete in eating an ox by the horns, ceremonial fire is kindled, pigtails are cut off but are subsequently grown again, the leaves or shields, the ceremonial and spiritual head of the age, is chosen and installed. (The details of the ceremonial are described by Whiteheads under the term "fire drilling ceremony", which must be left for the centre, the exact procedure is however antiquated). The charge is extra which the ceremony gives to discussed earlier in this chapter.

[illegible]

C. Senior Warriorhood and the passage to elderhood — the Ngabore ceremony — ceremonial shaves of Warriors — elderhood — the distribution of population between the ages — advantages and disadvantages of the system.

[illegible] It is obvious from the chart that the right hand age of any generation must go through a longer period of senior warriorhood than the left hand age. That means may not marry is a rule so frequently expected that one is almost compelled to believe that in pre-European times they did not marry. But there are many indications to the contrary. Aged elderhoods will sometimes admit that they were married whilst still moran, though they often did not set up house on their own, but left the wife with her mother or mother-in-law. Again there is a special ceremony by which a moran is permitted to drink the milk from his wife's cattle. He brews beer for his age mates, calls them to his house and receives the necessary permission and blessing. This does not, however, permit him to drink milk by himself; this must always be done in company with his age mates until such time as all go through the ngabore ceremony. It is improbable that this ceremony is of recent origin, one therefore feels justified in concluding that towards the end of the period of senior warriorhood the moran were beginning to marry and settle down.

[illegible] The final step between warrior- and elder-hood is taken at the ainghiarr or ainghiarr ceremony. Just as the Kakamyoke ceremony of circumcision starts off the age for the whole tribe, it appears that the Kisonga ngabore closes it throughout Maasailand. It is traditionally held at Oldoyo Ole Imorutik (the hill of the Elders), Upper Kenya, West Narok. Here again details are only of interest in so far as they show the purpose of the ceremony. Pigtails are cut off and are not allowed to grow again, signing entrance to elderhood. A single official, ainghiarrayiga, is chosen as the head of the whole generation, thus emphasizing the union of the two age which have up to now been independent, each with its own leaders or ceremonial leader.

After going through the ceremony, the new elders can drink milk alone, eat meat that married women have seen, carry short short blanket cloaks (embers are) in place of the long goatskin warrior's cloak; in fact all the customs of warriorhood are abandoned.

On return to their homes those who are not yet married do so at the earliest opportunity. Those who are married, if their fathers are still alive, move off from the parental home, for they are now in complete control of their cattle, and if they stayed with their fathers there would be constant bickering on animal husbandry matters.

From the foregoing it may be concluded that the average Mawai male spends at least 10 years of his life as a moran. What are his economic duties and privileges during this period? In olden times his primary duty was to defend the country and, by raiding other tribes, to maintain and increase the cattle population. But European intervention has deprived him of his main occupation, and the only duties which the moran by custom were bound to perform today are (a) drawing water from wells for his father's cattle or supervisiding their watering at flowing streams, (b) cutting the thorn tree branches which form the fence of the boma, and (c) escorting home nightbound cattle or searching for lost beasts. It was natural that few everyday tasks should be imposed on the standing army, but although the military duties are now in abeyance, the moran have retained the privilege of freedom from responsibility together with many other perquisites. These include access to the unmarried girls and the right to demand milk in any home. In the matter of bullocks for slaughter or of goat, the rump of which the moran may alone eat meat, the warriors seem to have a fairly free hand. If an elder withholds his consent, his moran son (with friends) will frequently help himself. It is not improbable that with the prohibition of raiding the moran exert these privileges to greater degree than they used to. If the elders are to be believed they spent a considerable portion of their time as warriors absent from home on raids, living in the bush on stolen cattle preparatory to stealing more. Consequently the time which they spent wandering round the bomas making their demands must have been considerably curtailed.

Another duty, or rather, restriction placed on the moran was abstinence from tobacco and beer. The former is largely breaking down, but fortunately the latter still holds to a considerable extent. This is not so with the Arusha, amongst whom drunken brawls between groups of moran are not infrequent.

The above largely refers to the unmarried moran; once they settle down, even before the eighteen ceremony, their mode of life is practically indistinguishable from that of a newly made elder.

Elderhood is in turn marked by different stages, each of which has its own privileges and responsibilities. The members of the generation immediately above that of the moran are mostly concerned in family matters, establishing their own gains, marrying and performing ceremonies to assure the fertility of their wives. The generation next above the most junior elders, as explained earlier in this chapter, is responsible for the

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

[264] moran, acting as their guardians and instructors. But after the period devoted to family matters the newly made elders also start thinking about their protégés. Thus, at the moment, the Dwati are responsible for both ages of moran, Kisale and Meriaho, yet the Dareto are already engaged in the preliminary ceremonies, endungore and enjibata, of the future moran. This means that under the age grade system, two generations of elders are responsible for two generations of moran for a short time (note overlap on chart). But the elders who shoulder most political responsibility are the il piron or guardians of the main body of moran. The matter is by no means clear, but there exist vestiges of a ceremony now practised in conjunction with fertility rites, viz., whereby the senior elders retire and hand over the government to the junior elders.

So it should once more be stressed that after his service as a warrior a Masai does not settle into a dead level of elderhood. The different generations keep themselves aloof in such matters as deputations to the Laibon (though at times they combine) and in the meetings preceding [264] and ceremonies following such deputations. A modern tendency to be noted is that when camped at cattle auctions each generation will cook and eat by itself. It is natural that men of equal age should associate, but the age grade system provides a clear-cut means of providing for this.

[264] 162. The following table, compiled in 1938, gives some examples of the distribution of population amongst the then existing age-grade generations. It is probable that there were a few more Nyangusi and Laimer than the table indicates, but that they had been exempt and omitted from the tax-registers which were used as the basis of enquiry.

Distribution of Population by Generations.

	Kibenge.	Sawatura.	Enguesumet.	Longida.	Total.
Nyangusi ...	1	—	—	—	1
Laimer ...	2	1	—	1	4
Dalala ...	14	13	8	22	57
Dwati ...	38	52	22	28	139
Dareto ...	49	69	38	62	218
Total Elders ...	104	134	68	112	419
Kisale ...	82	123	55	200	460
Meriaho ...	41	30	11	34	122
Total Moran ...	123	153	66	234	582
Grand Total ...	247	293	135	346	1021
% Moran to Total ...	49.9	54.3	48.9	67.6	57.0

The two most striking facts that emerge from this table are that more than half the adult male population were at the time moran, and that the Meriaho or left hand age formed only a quarter of the moran population.

[264] 163. The basic function of the age grade system is doubtless military, and now that the necessity for maintaining a standing army has been removed it might be thought that the early demise of the system is an object to be desired and encouraged. True, modern conditions make many of its features undesirable. The body of young men is largely relieved of economic duties and might be more fully and profitably employed for the benefit of the tribe and the community in general. Further, the process whereby the juniors have to fight the seniors for promotion is wholly bad. Again, the disparity of age between husband and wife is a direct result of the system; a large proportion of unmarried men leads to restlessness on their part; a large number of divorcees and wives leads to infidelity (even within the wide bounds of the Masai system) on theirs. Thus there is a constant threat to family stability.

9:Foxbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1962 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

But the system possesses many features of value, which are worthy of retention. It teaches discipline, manners and respect for one's seniors, the passing of which the elders of so many Bantu tribes deplore. Earlier circumcision, which would be one of the first results of any breakdown of the system, would shorten the period now devoted to herding, with consequent upset of the economic system. It would also mean that a full sex life could, with traditional approval, be practised earlier, with consequent detriment to the social organisation. Again, abstinence from tobacco and intoxicants during warriorhood are doubtless advantageous. Finally, the all embracing nature of the institution was stressed at the beginning of this chapter and was illustrated throughout. Its abandonment would, therefore, remove one of the main interests of a Masai's life, remove one of his chief topics of conversation and, unless replaced by an equal interest, lead to reduced vitality in the tribe generally.

What is required, therefore, is obviously adaptation of the system to modern conditions. The most pressing need is fuller occupation for the moran, to replace their previous military exploits. Many ideas, ranging from organised games to road work, have been and are being discussed and tried out with varying success. An alternative or complementary solution lies in shortening the period of warriorhood. This should not be done by later circumcision but by earlier standing down. If each age performed a ngeherr (or retirement) ceremony immediately after their tnoto (or promotion) ceremony, they would have served as moran for a period sufficient — perhaps more than sufficient — to gain all the advantages which the age-grade system gives. Such a course would do away with the right and left hand ages in each generation. Each age would be a generation in itself, thus reducing the incidence of inter-age disputes. It would also mean that all moran would serve for an equal period and not involve the right hand age in 15 or more years' service. The Masai can adapt their organisation when conditions demand. For instance the right and left hand ages of the Dalala generation performed separate ngeherr ceremonies. The Dwati and Daretɔ generations were composed of right hand ages only. If such changes were possible in the past, they can and must be made at present, since the necessity for adaptation is even more imperative.

But retirement to elderhood involves more than the ritual act now practised at the ngeherr ceremony. It means a complete change of outlook brought about by the assumption of responsibilty in family and economic matters. In other words it involves a psychological rather than a ceremonal

9:Foxbrooke G-5 (1936-1968) 1948 FL-12 Masai FL-12
Kiwanka

● 564 change. To assume sidehood a Masai must have a wife or wives, and cattle. But the majority of both of these are at present under the control of the elders. How this has come about is recorded in the later section on Clan and Family matters.

The root difficulty is that neither party, the moran nor the elders desire any change; the former are perfectly happy to be in a more or less irresponsible state, the latter naturally unwilling to give up their matrimonial and economic privileges. But there is little doubt that this difficulty can in course of time be overcome, both by constant propaganda and also by economic methods. Thus, if the principle is accepted of using taxation to achieve desirable social ends, a cattle tax might be adopted to ensure a more even distribution of stock among which males. If such a tax were so graduated that, say, 400 head in a single herd would be taxed at four times the rate applicable when divided into two herds, direct encouragement could be given to an elder to allow his sons to depart with their cattle and to the sons to take over that control, to marry and settle down.

570 Many other methods of tackling the problem may be devised, but whatever the means there is no doubt that the adaptation of the age grade system is the most urgent administrative problem and the key to political development, increased family stability, improved treatment of women and economic progress.

SECTION IV: TRIBAL OFFICIALS.

A. The Laigwanan and his Assistants — status of Laigwanak — visits to the Lalkau — installation — unpopularity of office — the head Laigwanan — relations between officials.

The following are brief definitions of the Masai terms involved :—

104 el oigwenani, pl. il oigwenak. Hollis translates this word as 'counsellor or spokesman.' It is a generic term, and specific appointments bear their own designation, i.e.

el oigwenani loongiaka paiim, literally, the laigwanan of all the cattle. The chief lai gwanan of the age.

el oigwenani lai kwan orok; a duly appointed laigwanan, to whom a black club has been presented.

e mort el oigwenani; literally, the "neck of the laigwanan," the laigwanan's right hand man, in whose absence no important decisions are taken.

enpiron, pl. inpiron; the leading men of a given age and area. They form an inner council for appointing or degrading the laigwanan, and for the conduct of important public business.

564 The officers of an age are not appointed simultaneously, nor do they immediately attain their full status. Some years prior to circumcision, the il piron elders, i.e. the guardians of the youths, start coaching the senior boys in citizenship, taking them to the lalkau, making them sit at their meetings, etc. These senior boys are the inpiron, and it is their duty, under the guidance of the elders, to choose the laigwanan. At first a leigwanan will be chosen for a large area, e.g. Naiserera, including Enguanani and Ilaro. But later, as the number of recruits to the age increases, the ingolor of Enguanani and Ilaro will choose leigwanak of their own. These latter will, however, remain in a status of slight inferiority to the leigwanan first appointed. In their own areas they will be virtually independent, but at any communal gathering the senior appointment takes precedence.

9:Fosbrooke G-S (1936-1948) 1948 FL.12 Masai FL.12
Kimeto

This process of sub-division is important, as it not only gives a key to the really influential people, but also accounts for the fact that the areas of leigwanak vary from age to age. For instance, when the Dwani age was in process of formation, numbers were so few that in the whole of Tanganyika there were only three areas, Moita, Kiteto and Engarukwa. In the Dwani age, both the divisions and sub-divisions were more numerous, whilst the number of Kisale candidates justified even more appointments.

The visits to the kraals of the embryo leigwanak and ingolor appear to form a large part of their training. Even prior to the selection of a leigwanan, the leading youths are taken by the il piron elders, and the lengthy discussions which precede such visits must give the youths good practice in debate. Of these visits Whitehouse writes, "when the boys have elected their leigwanan the il piron elders take him, together with a few boys, to visit the medicine man. The medicine man always accepts the spokesman presented to him and prepares for him a special medicine called el engoongoolia — the red bull. This the spokesman is made to drink; it is said to preserve him from witchcraft of the medicine man. In addition, the spokesman is given various charms for the benefit of the tribe." It would thus seem, and my informants confirm, that the leigwanan has no power of veto over these appointments.

The official installation of the leigwanan may take place immediately after he is chosen, or it may be delayed. This is some cases it occurs before, and in others after, circumcision. An assembly is summoned for the ceremony; the ingolor of the moran and the il piron elders are the chief participants, but others drawn both from these and from the remaining age are naturally present. A black club is prepared beforehand, which forms the centre of the ceremony. In some accounts a cow with a female calf at heel is brought in, and its milk smeared on the right arm and on the club of the leigwanan, the divine blessing being invoked, and prayers offered that the new leigwanan may rule his people with strength and justice. Other accounts replace the milk with beer, and state that the milk need not be that of the mother of the calf, which incidentally the leigwanan keeps, but that it must be such-and-such a coloured cow. Again, others say that the club must be bound with green grass. The details are immaterial, but the ritualistic nature of the ceremony indicates that the office is regarded as one of permanency and importance.

The discussions preceding the choosing of a leigwanan never take place in the presence of possible candidates. For frequently they will refuse to undertake the work, and will run away if they know beforehand that they may be chosen. The chosen one may even throw down the [illegible] club — a gesture of resignation, — when it is presented to him, but is too likely to be so if taken by surprise.

The second favourite to the discussions usually becomes the owner of the chosen lagwanan, but there is no definite appointment or installation ceremony.

It appears that there is no lagwanan of the whole age until all sections and areas meet together for the costa ceremony. Then one man is singled out to be head lagwanan of the age in respect of all sections attending the ceremony. Thus at the time of writing Lutoiko is nominally the head of all the Kinds of Moko, Kiwra, Lutoiko, Ngaroko, Bake and Sevogan sections. But never when all meet together, he carries this weight in any but his own section. He does not appear to have to track with his (nominal) subordinates in other sections, nor even with the leading lagwanak of the Moko of other areas, — Wanaki, Ngaroogaro and Nakoma — which are then, in respect of the Kinds age, practically separate sections. Lutoiko claims, however, that a deputation from the Lutoyak of Lutoiko came to consult him about their standing down, but he took no decision, and referred them to the Lawan, the ceremonial head of the age, at Wanaki.

The relations between the senior lagwanan of an area and his juniors are only important when all are concerned in a common matter. In most affairs, even a subarea has a lagwanan of its own, it acts as an independent unit. It will send its own deputation to the Ishen, and perform its own local ceremonies. But when an occasion arises when the whole area are in concert, e.g. payment of ngahari cattle or assembly to greet a visiting Ishen, the senior man takes precedence. But the relations between the lagwanan, his council, and the ngahari in any particular subarea are much more close. The lagwanan should take no important decision except in the presence of his council, whose duty it is to prevent him from taking any rash step. The ngahari also play a large part in local politics, for it is their duty to depose an unsatisfactory lagwanan, or to choose a successor to one who has resigned. But there is no definite office of ngahari. As Whitehouse says "... they are those who have shown ability and strength [67] of character during the many debates ..." For this reason they are not necessarily confined to the first batch of initiates in any age. For amongst those circumcised later, youths of ability and strength of character are bound to emerge who will be taken into the confidence of their seniors and so come to rank as ngahari.

This process of strong characters emerging after the age has been formed continues during elderhood. In areas recently opened to settlement, as for instance Longido, elders will emerge as leaders who are in effect lagwanak or ngahari, though lacking the title. It appears that once a lagwanan has reached elderhood he cannot thereafter be deposed. But a forceful character who is desirous of undertaking the work may in effect deprive the lagwanan of his position, and the Maasai are, in fact, glad to accept anyone who is willing to undertake by no means always popular duties.

5. The duties of Lajnawah — to Sheny — and to position — influence in wills and war — position in regard to individual disputes.

One method of discovering the duties of the lajnawah is to ask them what they regard as their task. This method does not necessarily show what they actually do in practice, but it gives a very good idea of their own conception of the office. Placed by different informants in different orders, the following list represents the majority of the answers given :—

(a) To collect cattle fee, and organise deputations to the lakes.
(b) To represent their age in disputes with other ages, and to prevent such disputes from developing into fights.
(c) To lead their people in war, or raids-in-force, to prevent them going on raids, (probably a slip in the questioner).
(d) To settle individual cases — payment of debt, compensation, blood-money, etc.

One old gentleman, whose duties as lajnawah take him from his home perhaps once or twice a year, imagined himself so overwhelmed that he described a lajnawah's duties as being like those of a laundry!

The above are specific duties, but what may be called the guiding principle were best summed up by the Kimin lajnawah of Lengwat :— "a lajnawah does not like to see a poor man robbed by a rich, or an old man opposed by a young one."

But how far are these principles lived up to in practice? How are the above duties fulfilled? The organisation of deputations to the lakes, if informants are to be believed, fell in the old days mainly on the lajnawah of Sheny, as when he went to get charms for war, or to take the lakes his share of raided stock. But now-a-days this duty falls on all ages except the very senior, i.e. from Dalala upwards. If one age, say Sheny, thinks it good to send a deputation to the lakes in conjunction with the other ages, the Sheny lajnawah will call the Kimin and Dwat lajnawah and together to a meeting. There it will be decided how many cattle each will contribute, and when the deputation will depart. Thereupon the leaders of each age call a separate meeting, and decide who shall go to the lakes, and who shall contribute cattle. It is the meeting and not the lajnawah which decides these points, but the lajnawah, having obtained his position by virtue of his strength of character, probably has more say in the matter than the others. Considering that these cattle are often in the nature of fines, and that a journey to the Lakes at Wandal is frequently unpopular, it is a tribute to the Shami organisation that such meetings pass off peacefully. No instance is on record of a single dispute coming to official notice arising from such cause. The lajnawah does not necessarily escort the deputation, but quite frequently he does. On the return of the deputation a meeting is again held to hear a report of the lakes's message, and, if a local ceremony has been decreed, to make arrangements for holding it. In any given area it is improbable that a single year passes without the dispatch of a deputation, or the holding of a local ceremony. So, considering the time it takes a Shami meeting to reach a decision, these duties must occupy a considerable — but not inordinate — proportion of a lajnawah's time.

N.Pawhenake G-6 (1956-1968) 1968 FS.12 Maori FS.12
Kinaka

SG1
G29

By the very nature of the Maori organisation, inter-age disputes are bound to crop up periodically (see Age-grades). In the 'Promotion' dispute between the Kinaka and the Morehu of the Mondal area in 1898, the respective laigwanak played a considerable part, not only at their own meetings, but in reporting decisions to the District Office.

In the old days it was the duty of the laigwanak to assemble his people for war, and to settle the disputes which inevitably arose when the spoils were divided. But by custom he should not enter into the actual fight, but remain in the rear with a small body-guard. This is probably because the laigwanak were the chiefs which had been elected from the taitoa, and its loss could not be risked. It is difficult to say what part the laigwanak play in what they regard as their present-day duty, namely the suppression of rioting. Very probably in respect of laigwanak rioting they have considerable influence. If any area were openly considering a major raid, and the laigwanak agreed to it, many would join in against their better judgment, but if the laigwanak discouraged it, the project might well be dropped.

G24
G27

Generally speaking it is unusual for a laigwanak to interfere in an individual dispute without invitation. It appears to be the privilege of the aggrieved party to select his judges. He knows best, perhaps slaughters an ox and calls in neighbouring elders, together with the defendant. If a local laigwanak has a reputation for fairness and justice, he will be called even from a distance, but proceedings are not considered if no laigwanak is present. If the defendant fails to turn up, the assembled elders will now the less discuss the case, and if the claimant's case is well founded, they will tell him so. He in his turn will go and tell the defendant that the elders have given judgment in his (the claimant's) favour. This may be sufficient to induce the defendant to pay up, but if after as not he will refuse. The claimant may then muster his mates, and take his claim by force, in which case the defendant will call a meeting and claim the return of property wrongfully removed from his home. And so the circle starts again. Or the matter may be allowed to drop, to be re-opened after a year or two, possibly on the appearance of some new witness.

G24

To sum up the laigwanak's position in relation to the dispensation of justice, it cannot be said that he holds a formal position in the judicial system. He is sought as a judge by virtue of his qualities and not of his position. Nor is this aspect of his duties (where, once a case means a social gathering, and attendant hospitality. The position is different of course in the case of laigwanak who are at the same time paid 'Native Authority' officials. When the assistance of such people is required, it has become customary to take the case to them in their own home.

The above descriptions is intended to convey some idea of how far the laigwanak do in practice fulfil the duties imposed on them. The duty of helping the poor and oppressed seems to be honoured in the breach. The deputations to the taitoa appear to occupy the major portion of the time which a laigwanak devotes to public duty, but even here the time he spends is little more than that spent by the average elder of the area.

9:Fuekwaka G-6 (1935-1948) 1948 FL.II Sheet FL.II
Kiwaka

The organization of these departments is actually a magico-religious rather than a political duty — that is, from our point of view — to the Nuer it is just one aspect of the general theme of ensuring peace and prosperity to the area.

It will also be noted that there are very few duties which might be called executive. The leopardess does not enforce judgments, or even issue collecting cattle for the latter — the matters are discussed in open forum and the weight of public opinion compels the individual to act as required. When this fails there is nothing to take its place. This explains why the leopards often make unsatisfactory paid headmen. Frequently the action required of a headman has not got the necessary weight of public opinion behind it, and consequently there is no religious method of enforcing an order.

The relations between senior leopards and their juniors are very low. It is probable that this is due to the prohibition of raiding and consequent reduction of the occasions on which large-scale communal efforts are required. In the old days when large groups of moves got together for raids the senior leopards most of necessity have asserted his position, and the others must have obeyed him, to ensure the success of the venture. With decreased opportunities of asserting his position, it is natural that the power of the leopardess should itself decrease.

Another tendency to be noted is the manner in which leopards move from their areas, more especially during childhood. A senior leopardess of the Eterio lives at Bulwenn, one from Bogum Ruzyuki at Ngarangum, another from Bogwaka at Pieye, each at least a hundred miles away from the people they are supposed to lead. This is only another aspect of the break-up of the sections previously recorded, but it does illustrate the loss of old loyalties.

C. Other officials — the leopard — magico-religious position — his duties — the of leopard magnate — the leopardess.

As the units, or protectorates necessary, there is chosen an official leopard as the Leopard, — of moves gi. d nawak, — or Chiefs. He is acknowledged by all the sections which attend the units, as their ceremonial or religious head. The position is not popular, so the candidate has to be installed by compulsion. After appointment the leopard takes on the mode of living of an elder, being given a wife and cattle by his age-set.

The duties of the position are obscure, but as far as is known the leopard appears to be a sort of scape-goat for the age. If he flourishes and begets many children, and if his cattle prosper and increase, it is a bad omen for the rest of the age. But his adversity will indicate the age's prosperity.

He must do everything in advance of his age-mates, marry, settle down, make the final payment that binds the marriage. It is as though the moves, standing on the brink of childhood, send forth the leopard as an explorer into the unknown country, so that any bad luck which may be awaiting them shall be focused on one individual and not on the whole age.

N.Pawlowska G-5 (1934-1948) 1948 FS.12 Maori FS.12
Kinship

561
634

But the lawyer is held in great respect by his age-mates, and any demands that he makes on them must be fulfilled. It is stated that he is the only official whose order must be obeyed. In discussing this with an elder, I pointed out that this should give the office great political importance, to reply to which the elder indicated that such did not necessarily follow, as " we can always tell the lawyer what order to give!"

Hohi states that the lawyer is responsible to the lakes for the appearance of the moves in case of war; this may well have been so in the old days, for it is generally admitted today that he is responsible for the exact turnout of the moves. Thus unless in case of extreme or unexpected, a moves is not supposed to set off his pipe(s) without the lawyer's permission. It is alleged, however, that the office is being in status and authority, for whereas the Dawes age lawyer is supposed to have gone on frequent "tours of inspection" and to have collected many fees, nowadays many Elmslie shave their heads without consulting their lawyer.

During childhood, by virtue of his previous position, the lawyer is still held in respect, though no specific duties seem to attach to him. He may perhaps play some part in the sports and against ceremonies of the age-mates below, by virtue of the of gerne relationship.

Another official chosen at the courts is called of here engene, who spits the skin of the ceremonially slaughtered ox. He is given four or five cattle as a fee, and is after life is held in respect, but appears to have no duties.

As the ngaheri ceremony, an official, the Lawrenge, is chosen in respect of the whole generation, whose position corresponds to that of the lawyer at the courts. As there is only one ngaheri ceremony for all sections of the Maori, so there is only one lawrenge. He duties, but considerable respect, appear to attach to the office in after life.

CLAN ORGANIZATION CHART.

561
619
616

GROUPS	CLANS	SUB-CLANS
Rodolodo	Englishmen	Ogiwia
	I. Engaje Maori.
LAIRER or LOORDETERO (right hand)	LAIRER	Englishmen Parkinson Pantings Engaje-Ranuki or Lindenglaka Partinsons Paree Boko
	LIGHTMAI	Grapa Kerlingaka

G. G Hingano. (Lamgoi)

Square brackets indicate exogamous groups, when not shown, sub-clans may intermarry.

SECTION V. CLAN AND FAMILY MATTERS.

A. Clans — the clan chart — ownership of waters — areas peculiar to certain clans — clan responsibility.

The chart reproduced above explains the system more clearly than a lengthy description, but a few explanatory notes are necessary. The true Hawai, i.e. those who regard themselves as descendants of Mamitoto, divide themselves into two main groups (mokoleiha, sing. mokoleiki), the Laiam or Lomsichong (black bullets) who are regarded as the right hand of the tribe, and the Mokoiau or Loushongwu (blood-red bell), the left hand.

These main groups are in turn divided into clans and sub-clans, called on the chart angkoma and alpiata respectively. Some informants however reverse the terms. The clans are patrilineal, i.e. a child takes the father's clan. They are also exogamous, i.e. a man may not marry

[illegible] OF THE MAKI WARRIOR

By D. F. I. Elliott

It is surprising to find that in Duffel' excellent work on the Masai there is no precise description of the head gear of the 'moran' or warrior. No doubt the fashion has been described somewhere, but some details of present day practice in Tanganyika Maasland may perhaps be put on record here.

Of all the distinctive features of the Masai, this is the one which attracts most attention from the casual traveller and invites references to 'Roman Centurions', 'Red Indians' and the like. Its adornment refers to certainly considerable and not ignored by the Masai in their constant or occasional efforts to preserve their identity. Certainly removal of the earlier and its consistent and where has a surprising effect in obliterating Nilotic characteristics of feature and bringing out those derived from the new (Hamitic) admixture of 'Masai' blood.

It is still an customary for youths after circumcision to adopt the traditional garb, even though they may be sons of progressive parents and themselves have been to school, that there might well be an 'old school pupil' for graduates of the Masai school. It is by no means unusual to hear a pair of pupil-and school 'moran' discussing their performances in some cross-country football match of their school days, while leaning on their spears in the precincts of a native market.

There are many variations of head gear to be found in Tanganyika, one, two, three or more pigtails, the 'ridged helmet' style, heavily plastered and heavily beaded styles, but it seems to be purely a matter of fashion and not linked with clan, section, age set or even locality (except in so far as fashions naturally tend to be localised). The construction of all is basically the same and the result is covered by the single term 'Ol daiko'.

The materials used in the head gear are as follows:

(i) a length or lengths of plant but straight stick one foot to fifteen inches long, cut from the tree known as 'Olmati' (Tamarindus indica L., the name is also applied to the shrub Grewia which may serve the same purpose at highland altitudes).

(ii) a strip of the inner skin of a sheep six inch wide and two or more feet in length.

(iii) several feet of fine string made from sisal or sinew.

(iv) a foot or two of cord made from the 'olmati' tree. This tree is, I think, correctly identified by Hollis with a species of fig, Ficus Sycomorus, the cord being prepared from the aerial roots. But there is some doubt in the matter which perhaps a reader of this note may get an opportunity to clear up. For Settlements and also provided they avoid such young girls as are attached to men in the warrior classes. That these young unmarried girls may try to have intercourse with married women is certain, so there is a special penalty provided for women who so follow themselves. (See Marriage.)

Preparation for Initiation.—No boy is allowed to think about preparing for initiation until he can show a growth of facial hair indicating puberty. Boys are always very anxious to be initiated as soon as possible, and as soon as they consider that they are quite a reasonable claim that they are old enough, they form themselves into groups of anything from six to a dozen, form themselves in rare mid-dikos, and, taking with them horns and arrows, go out on a tour of all the villages of the district announcing that they are candidates for initiation and demanding presents. These groups are called shamal, and by long custom they must be given anything they ask for which is within reason.

Custom dictates that they shall ask especially for honey and hyrax skin harness, and these they take and present to senior and influential elders belonging to various circumcision groups, at the same time requesting them to bring up the question of their initiation at the ceremonies, and to make all the necessary arrangements. There is often a delay of anything from six months to a year before the consent of the ceremonies is obtained and arrangements are set on foot. In the meantime the groups of boys continue on their visiting tours collecting more presents as further persuasion to the elders to do as requested, and both groups of boys are formed and add themselves to the number of the candidates for initiation.

During the whole time that these shamal groups are wandering about from village to village they may sleep with any of the uninitiated girls in the villages which they visit (even those who are attached to young warriors), provided that they observe the usual restrictions of the warrior classes.

Ceremony of Seizing the Ox by the Horns.—When at length the elders have consented to proceed with the initiation ceremonies, those elders to whom the presents of honey and hyrax skins were given make the necessary arrangements for the ceremony of seizing the horns of the black ox. These elders select a village of some elder of the Lokumai sub-clan (the ox must always be supplied by a member of this sub-clan), and demand a black ox without any defect and without any trace of other colour on any part of its body. Should the owner of the selected village not possess such an ox he must obtain one from another member of the Lokumai sub-clan, and if he cannot do so he must obtain it from another clan by purchase or exchange, and present it to the elders. This ox is called ongoing.

When the ox has been procured, a special village is built near where the ox was obtained, and a day is fixed for the horn-seizing ceremony. Only those of the candidates for initiation whose fathers took part in a horn-seizing ceremony are allowed to take part; the rest of the candidates cannot do so, but stay at their homes while the ceremony takes place.

These candidates who are eligible to take part in the ceremony assemble on the day fixed for the proceedings. They come from all parts of the Masai country, south, south, east, and west, as there is only one no-writing ceremony in the whole of Masai country before a new age-group proceeds to initiation and circumcision. They wear ordinary everyday dress and carry sticks. The ox is brought into the village by the elders in charge of the ceremony, and the boys are lined up some distance away. A signal is given, and immediately the boys race to the ox, each boy endeavouring to get a firm grip of the ox's horns or of the hump. As soon as two boys have succeeded in gripping these parts firmly, all those boys of the same clan present join with their sticks, while all the elders endeavour to force the boys to release their grip. Should they do so and should boys of another clan succeed in taking their place, they in their turn are attacked by the other clans and defended by their own. After a time the elders stop the contest, and those who succeeded in keeping their grip are greatly lauded. The two boys who actually held the horns and hump respectively will be renowned for their success for the rest of their lives. It is a recognized thing that during the contest very many individuals receive more or less serious wounds.

As soon as the contest has been stopped, the ox is slaughtered and eaten by all present at the ceremony, and the hide is cut up into small strips, to each of which a hole is cut, and a strip put as a ring on the middle finger of the right hand of each of the boys who participated in the contest. If any skin remains over after each boy has been thus decorated, it is cut into a long thin thong, which is given to a boy candidate of the Lelkonot sub-clan (i.e. the sub-clan who provided the ox). This boy is called olokiboni olapong. This thong must never be lost or parted with, but the small strips of skin placed on the boys' fingers must be removed a day or two later and thrown down in that part of the boy's mother's house where the calves sleep.

When this ceremony is over the boys go to their own homes to await their turn for circumcision.

Circumcision.—The candidates are not circumcised in groups at local centres, but individually at their own homes, and as the number of operators is limited, candidates may have to wait for anything up to two years before their turn comes. The operators travel from district to district, visiting all the villages where there are candidates, and circumcising them at their own homes. During the interval between the end of the no-writing ceremony (before which none of the candidates may be circumcised) and the time when his turn to be circumcised arrives, each boy goes back to his cattle-herding and carries on with the normal routine life of an uninitiated boy.

The operators who circumcise the boys are never true Masai, but invariably "Wandorobo" living in Masai country, but no explanation of this could be obtained except that it had always been so from the beginning.

[illegible] As only those candidates who belong to a given village may be operated on in that village, it is seldom that there is more than one circumcised at a time, but should there be two or three candidates belonging to a single village they would be circumcised together on the same day at the same time. There is no elaborate ceremonial accompanying the operation or preparatory to it. A boy will continue herding his cattle until the late afternoon of the day before that fixed for his circumcision. He is then brought back to the village and has his hair shaved off by his mother, and has new sandals and a new skin dress given to him. This dress must be made of the skins of four goats sewn together, and will be worn the following day during the operation. The actual operation takes place next day, either early in the morning or in the middle of the day. If it is in the morning, the cattle are kept in the yard until the ceremony is over, but if it is in the middle of the day the cattle are brought into the yard and kept there during the ceremony, for it is absolutely essential that the cattle shall be in their enclosure during the whole of the ceremony. Sheep and goats are not included in this rule. The boy (or boys) who are to be circumcised in the courtyard in front of his mother's hut wearing his new skin dress and sandals, and the operator performs the operation with a special small knife without any elaborate ceremonial. The boy then retires to his hut to convalesce. A hut was is killed for the patient, who is fed on meat boiled in fat and on gruel, with fat, "so that he may get well quickly." After about five or six days the other boys in the district who have already been circumcised and have recovered, call for the boy, and he joins their band for the period of their novitiate.

The Novitiate.—The period of novitiate varies in length of time, as a boy must remain in the novice stage from the time that he is circumcised until every other candidate has been circumcised too. Usually a period of about two years elapses between the time of the hair-shaving ceremony and the time when the last candidate has been operated upon. There are group ceremonies the hair-shaving ceremony which marks their transfer from the novice stage to the senior stage; thus, the last five to be circumcised may only have a few weeks in the novice stage, while others may be about two years in that stage. During the novitiate, there are certain rules and regulations which must be observed by the novices. They wander about the country in bands armed with bows and bird-arrows visiting more especially those villages where they hear that fresh candidates have just been circumcised, and exhorting them to their groups. During the whole novitiate period the novices must not cut their hair at all, nor may they indulge in any form of sexual intercourse, nor may they use red ochre, but only plain fat on their bodies. They are required to shoot as many birds as they can, and to skin them and stuff them roughly with grass, and tie them to their hair as a decoration. More and more skins are added to this head-dress as the weeks go by, until at length a boy has a complete wig of stuffed bird skins. Certain birds must on no account be so used, notably birds such as pigeons, doves, and

[illegible]

Generally. These bird skins, worn hard to the hair of the head, may not be removed until the general hair-shaving ceremony, when the hair of each novice is shaved off with the skins attached. During the period of the novitiate the boys are known as kiliokoro and are free to go anywhere. "Ole ensero," said, in fact, may even visit the ensigatin or warrior villages of the existing warrior groups with impunity.

There are special dances, called ensigatin, which are danced by the novice class. [illegible]

The Shaving Ceremony.—When or bought all the candidates have reached the novice stage, the shaving ceremony, which marks the end of the novitiate, takes place. For this ceremony the novices are assembled in territorial groups, and each boy has his hair publicly shaved off by his mother (or in the event of his mother being dead, by another of his father's wives). This shaving ceremony is accompanied by the killing of a cow for each novice, after which his father presents him with a spear, shield, sword and headdress, which are the insignia of his new status as a warrior. [illegible]

The new warriors now form themselves into groups, and organise the building of villages, which will be their headquarters. These villages are the ensigatin of the warrior groups (see below). [illegible]

Part III.—Warriorhood.

The Age-Group System.—The general word denoting an age-group is ipuriaro, and this word is liable to some considerable confusion unless very great care is taken, as it denotes to a general way several widely different forms of age-groups. All those warriors who pass from the novice stage to the warrior stage at the same time—in fact, all those boys circumcised between a single ea-mining ceremony and the succeeding hair-shaving ceremony—are grouped as members of a single age-group which is given a name which lasts for life. Besides this permanent name, however, the age-groups during the warrior stage are known by the alternating names of ipuipuaher and ewangalanga. [illegible]

There may never be more than three age-groups in the warrior class at the same time; and also, a group with the name of ipuipuaher must always be the senior warrior group. This, in effect, means that a single age-group cannot be transferred from the warrior class to the elders' class, but that two groups, a ipuipuaher and a ewangalanga, must move out together, leaving the next ipuipuaher as senior age-group in the warrior class, and temporarily the only age-group in the class. As soon as the two senior groups have moved out together, the next group, already in the novice stage, transfers into the warrior class with the name of ewangalanga, and in due course yet a third group will be initiated and enter the age-group as ipuipuaher, after which no further transfer of a novice group can take [illegible]

[illegible] place until the two senior groups have met together into the elders' class. The result of this arrangement is that no group which enters the warrior class as youngsters ever stays in the warrior class for as long as any juniorder group.

[illegible] Mungatos.—During their time of service in the warrior class the members of each age-group live in special villages built every from the main married men's villages. These villages are temporary, in that all the warriors of a single age-group in a single area live in one only village. Warriors of different age-groups never live in a single mungato, as each mungato is essentially the headquarters of the warriors of a single age-group in the warrior class in a given area. Mungatos are moved about from place to place when fresh grazing is necessary.

[illegible] A mungato consists of a number of huts each one of which is built, and lived in, by the mother (or another married woman relative) of one of the warriors of that mungato. Normally each warrior has his own mother living in the mungato and she is accompanied by her children, especially by some of the man's unmarried sisters and half-sisters. The elder women are there to do the work of the mungato, such as milking, fuel gathering, water fetching, etc., and to this they are assisted to a certain extent by the girls, but the latter are chiefly in the mungato as companions and lovers for the warriors. No girl may live at a mungato at all unless her brother or half-brother is a member of that mungato, and each warrior living at a mungato is expected to bring two or three of his sisters or half-sisters to live at the mungato, and if possible some of them should be fairly grown up and others quite children who will grow up at the mungato.

[illegible] Sex Life.—During the warrior stage no man may have sexual intercourse with any unmarried girl or with married women, but on the other hand, there exists in the mungato a system of sex life which is decidedly interesting. The warriors, whenever they feel like it (which, as my informant pointed out, is "very, very often"), invite one of the girls (sisters of the other men in the Mungato) to sleep with them. This is done by a method and formula which corresponds in some ways to the custom of the Kikuyu peoples, but has certain marked differences.

A group of warriors at any time of the day will stand outside the village and call to any of the girls whom they see about, and when they come they say to them nandiko, and the girls then each select one of the men, and say "I choose no-and-no," not mentioning the man by his own name but as "the man of no-and-no." By so doing the girl binds herself to go and sleep with the man so chosen that night. It is a point of honour and etiquette that no girl so called upon to choose a man may refuse to do so unless she is (a) actually at a menstruation period at the time, or (b) has already promised herself to another man for that night, but she may make her choice from any of those men who were in the group that called to her.

Before dealing with the subsequent procedure, after a girl has promised to visit a warrior on a given night, it is necessary to outline the sleeping arrangements and accommodation in a sanapia hut. The hut is not divided off into rooms in any way, and at one end of the hut is the bed upon which the women (neither of one of the warriors) to whom the hut belongs, sleep with her younger children. At the other end of the hut, not screened off in any way, is the bed upon which the warriors and girls sleep. The warrior may even sleep upon the married woman's bed, but the woman's husband now sleeps down and with her whenever he likes, and when he does so, no warriors or girls may sleep in the hut. Ordinarily, however, the woman's husband does not live at the sanapia, and the only hut small children sleep on the bed at the one end of the hut, while the warriors sleep on the bed at the other end of the hut with the girls. No warrior ever sleeps in his own mother's hut, but always in one of the other huts if he has invited a girl to sleep the night with him. When, therefore, he has arranged for a girl to visit him at night he goes in the evening to one of the other huts and arranges to sleep on the young people's bed there. He then sends a message by the woman who owns the hut to tell the girl that he is sleeping there so that she may come to him. There is absolutely no objection to several men coming in this way to the same hut, and sleeping on the same big bed each accompanied by his girl. In fact, it is considered wrong for a warrior and a girl to have sexual intercourse unless there are also other couples sleeping on the same bed. Moreover, besides those men who have come to the hut and sent for their girls to join them there, there are usually several younger girls, daughters of the woman who owns the hut, sleeping on the bed too. These young girls, too young as yet to sleep with the men sexually, nevertheless, sleep on the same bed as the warriors and older girls, and thus grow up accepted as the customs of the sanapia.

It is exceptionally difficult for a European to understand all the full details and facts concerning native sex life, but the following facts have been noted and verified for the Maori. The girl may sleep with a man except she be absolutely male, but on the other hand, although by tradition and by etiquette she may not refuse an invitation to sleep with a man (except for the two reasons already given above), she is not necessarily expected to allow him full sexual intercourse, and, in fact, often does not do so. Thus—strange as it may seem—Maori girls do sometimes go to their husbands as virgins in the physical sense of that word (see Marriage), although they may have slept with men in the sanapia countless times. Usually, however, Maori girls have no objection to full intercourse except during the first four or five days after each menstrual period (see Children), for the Maori firmly believes that conception cannot occur unless intercourse takes place every men after menstruation, and four to five days is considered an absolutely safe margin. Moreover, this belief seems to have a strong foundation in fact, and it thus raises a very interesting point for physiologists as to whether this is an trait of primitive people as it was, i.e.

[illegible] is of animals. It is apparently this fact which explains why there are so few cases of unchastened girls conceiving despite the Masyoite sexual regulations. My informants insist that cases of conception only occur when a girl has been persuaded by a man to have full intercourse just after her menstruation. It is quite easy for a girl to see to it that she does not have full intercourse if she does not want it, since there are always at least two other couples sleeping on the same bed, and there is also always a married woman in the same hut to see to it that no harm is used by the men.

(For details of procedure should an unchastened girl conceive, see Childbirth.)

[illegible] Permanent Lovers.—Besides the usual day-to-day lovers described above, a girl may also have a more permanent lover in the manyatta in which she lives, chosen from among the ranks of those who have been her usual lovers. The actual choosing ceremony takes place in public, but the choice is usually made privately beforehand. This permanent lover in some cases will eventually be the girl's husband, but this is not usual, as nearly every Masai girl is betrothed during childhood (see Marriage), and usually girls are quite content to marry those to whom they were thus betrothed. Should a girl be unwilling to marry the man to whom she is betrothed she usually continues to become pregnant by her "permanent lover" and so persuade him to marry her (see Childbirth).

[illegible] The actual ceremony of selecting a "permanent lover" takes place on a public occasion. A group of the warriors, including the man, collect together and one of the man's friends then announces the girl and hands her a spear, and she is told to go and give it to the man she chooses as "permanent lover." Having thus been publicly accepted, the warrior from then on becomes responsible for supplying the girl with such ornaments and necklaces as she may need from time to time, and he also gives her a special necklace to be worn as a talisman. After this ceremony she continues as before to sleep with any of the warriors who may ask her to do so in the way detailed above (see Sex Life). Equally the man may sleep with any of the other girls, but the girl and her "permanent lover" can arrange to sleep together without adopting the usual formula and procedure.

[illegible] The Emoran Ceremony.—After nine years of Junior Warriorhood a big ceremony called Emoran takes place, at which all the members of a given group from the whole of the Masai country, north, south, east, and west, are required to be present. This ceremony marks their rise from Junior to Senior Warriorhood. During the whole of the nine years of Junior Warriorhood they have not been allowed to shave their heads at all, but their hair has been gradually tied and twisted into a long pigtail at the back of the head, which is the sign of Junior Warriorhood. (The only exception to this rule of not shaving the head during Junior Warriorhood is in case of severe illness, when the head may be shaved if so desired.)

When the time for the ceremony arrives, a very big village is built called ramba, and all the members of that age-grade which is to be transferred from the Junior to the Senior Warriorhood stage assemble here with their friends and relations. The warriors concerned all dress up in their very best finery, and few skins especially are in great demand; and for nine days they dance a special dance called Kathaka of warriors. During the whole nine days of dancing a very great number of cattle are slaughtered, and there is great feasting and beer-drinking, but neither the dancing nor the feasting are the important part of the ceremony; they are merely incidentals, centred around the thingira.

[SL] [SB] [SB] [SB]

The Thingira.—Away from the main village an enormous hut has been built, which will accommodate anything up to four hundred men at a time. It is said to be round in plan, to have a pointed roof, and to take very many days to build. There are no partitions inside it, but in the centre is dug a circular pit. Outside the hut is a dung fence with only one entrance. This hut is called thingira (a word which has been borrowed by the neighbouring Kikuyu and applied to ordinary bachelor huts), and is the centre of the whole of the Ituriri ceremony. During the whole of the nine days of the ceremony this thingira is used as a "club-house" by the men of the age-group concerned with the ceremony, but there are certain restrictions, and it is these restrictions which give the key to the meaning of the whole ceremony. It is considered both ignoble and dishonourable for any man in the warrior groups—and more especially the junior warrior groups—to have any sexual relations with any but the uninitiated girls, but, of course, some do never either openly (see Sexual Marriage) or in private. Now all members of the age-group concerned must be present at the Ituriri ceremony, but only those who have strictly observed the above regulation and have never had sexual relations with an initiated girl or married woman may enter the thingira. In order that no one may do so under false pretences the entrance to the thingira is barricaded by the elders, so that if anyone ineligible enters he will surely die.

[91] [SB] [SB]

The thingira is not big enough for all the warriors concerned to use it simultaneously, and each day for the nine days there is a public ceremony when the various individual sectional groups are expected to enter. For this ceremony all the friends and relations of those who are expected to enter collect round the entrance and each individual as he enters is greeted with applause, as he has shown by entering that he has not dishonoured himself or his family. Those warriors who dare not enter try to slink away unobserved, for they are disgraced. Inside the hut—as mentioned—is a large hole which is used as a cesspool, into which the men who enter the hut must urinate. This cesspool is also barricaded as an extra precaution, and anyone who has falsely entered and evaded the witchcraft of the entrance will certainly die upon urinating in the hole. All those who enter the thingira on any given day during the ceremony sleep there that night, and also have milk and meat brought them for food, and sit and talk for hours. During

[SB] [SB]

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 the nine days the elders in charge of the ceremony go about looking out for two
346 warriors from the group noted for their humility and honesty, and having selected them they keep their names very quiet, as the position for which they are being chosen is not at all sought after. In fact, as soon as the selection has been made, the relations of the two men chosen are heavily bribed in order that they shall allow them to be appointed.

561 Shaving Ceremony.—On the tenth day of the ceremony the heads of all the warriors of the age-group are shaved, and during the shaving the elders come and 624 point out the two warriors whom they have chosen, and publicly proclaim them as the [302] heads of the group during its time in the senior warrior stage. These two men are called respectively olutunot and oloboruengene, and there are certain very strict regulations and restrictions attached to their position, the breaking of which would result in punishment by death; hence the unwillingness of the warriors to be chosen for these appointments, and the bribing of their relations. Unfortunately, no information about the duties of these two, or of the restrictions which they must observe under penalty of death, could be obtained from my informants. After
561 the shaving ceremony is over and these two have been appointed, the warriors go back to their normal life; but before doing so they first go all together for a few nights to a new village built for the purpose called ngang'ongarithi, and from there
[361] they scatter to their own districts. They may not, however, return to their old manyattas, which they vacated when they came to the Eunutu ceremony, but must build new manyattas.

Becoming Elders.—The length of time spent in the senior warrior class depends entirely upon whether a man belongs to an age-group called jangienobur or murategedienye (see the Age-group system). Transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage takes place as a group transfer, but one age-group cannot transfer alone, but always two groups, a jangienobur and a murategedienye, must transfer together. No transfer, therefore, can take place until there are two age-groups in the warrior stage who have gone through the Eunutu ceremony. Once there are two such groups in the senior stage the actual time of transfer is dictated by whether or not there is a new age-group waiting in the novice stage ready to move up into the junior warrior stage, for as stated above (see the Age-group system), there may never be more than three age-groups in the warrior stage at one time. Equally no two warrior groups may move out into the Elders' stage until there is a new age-group in the novice stage, as otherwise it would mean leaving a single age-group alone in the warrior stage for too long, and this would be a serious thing when only the warrior groups are the fighting forces of the tribe. The actual transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage takes place without any ceremonial, and the [591] men just leave their manyattas and go and live with their wives, with whom as yet they have never lived, although the wives may be mothers with several children (see Marriage).

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Summary of Warriorhood.

From boyhood upwards to the Elders' stage there are the following recognized steps, each with appropriate "rites de passage," except in the last stage. 561

(1) Candidate Stage.—After the boys have attained puberty, as shown by the first signs of hair growth on the face, they form bands who wander about the country receiving presents, and finally there is the horn-seizing ceremony, after which the candidates are circumcised and enter the novice stage. [881]

(2) Novice Stage.—No sex life is permitted to novices, who during their novitiate wander about with bows and arrows shooting birds for head-dresses. This stage is concluded by a head-shaving ceremony, after which the novices enter full warriorhood.

(3) Junior Warrior Stage.—This is a period of roughly nine years from the end of the novitiate. During this time—with certain exceptions—no warrior may shave the hair off his head. Life is in the manyattas. This period is concluded by the Eunutu ceremony and a general head-shaving which marks the entry into the senior warrior stage.

(4) Senior Warrior Stage.—Warriors remain in this class until there are two age-groups in it, and then transfer to the Elders' group. Transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage cannot take place unless there are two age-groups ready to move up together.

PART IV.—GIRLHOOD.

Work.—As soon as girls are old enough to do so, at the age of about seven, they start helping their mothers and sisters in the general work of the village, sweeping out the huts, milking the cows, nursing the children, drawing water and sewing skins. There is, however, one sort of work which is never done by any uninitiated girl, and that is getting firewood. This work is specially reserved for married women. The girls' work may either be in the home village or else in a warrior's manyatta, should they have brothers living in a manyatta. 857 [313 581]

Sex Life.—From a very early age indeed the young girls imbibe the general atmosphere of Masai sex life. As already mentioned, those of them who have brothers living in the manyattas sleep from a very early age—long before puberty—on the same beds as couples indulging in sexual intercourse; and even those girls who live in the home villages learn all about such matters at a very early age owing to the fact that they always sleep on their mother's bed. As soon as ever the first signs of puberty are noticeable, girls may be asked by the warriors to sleep with them, and the question of whether there is complete intercourse or not rests then entirely with the girls. Moreover, the uninitiated boys, and especially those who tour the villages as candidates for initiation, expect any young girls who are not already 864 883 836

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Moreover, there will be no lack of married men willing to be the physical father of her children, since no married men may have intercourse with uninitiated girls, nor yet with their own wife or wives if with child. 585 837 843

Married women make a point of having intercourse immediately after menstruation in order to "get a child." All children born to a woman who is married are considered to be the children of her husband, no matter who their actual father may be. Owing to this system it may happen that by the time a man leaves the warrior stage and passes into the Elders' stage, and goes to live with his wife, he may find that she already has one or more children. 585 842 [561]

Normal Marriage (of a subsequent Wife).—In the case of a girl marrying a man who already has one or more wives, she simply goes to his village—where she has either already built a hut or had it built for her—as soon as the shaving ceremony is over after her initiation. She then lives with him in the normal way and he will probably be the physical father of her children, although not necessarily so, as she is permitted to have lovers if she wishes it, provided they are married men. 595 [837]

Forced Marriage.—It occasionally happens that the father of a man who is still in the warrior class decides for some reason or another that he wishes to have his son at home—wishes, in fact, that his son should leave the warrior stage before the age-group to which he belongs is due to move up to the Elders' stage en masse. In such a case he waits until the girl to whom his son is betrothed has been initiated and is ready for marriage (or even arranges for her initiation to be hastened) and then proceeds as follows. The marriage transaction having been completed and the girl's new hut built in the village, he sends for the girl and secludes her in the hut. He then arranges with some of the young men of the same age-group as his son to bring the youth to the village on some pretext or other. The usual pretext is that of going to the village to ask for a bullock for a meat feast (see Part IX). As soon as the village is reached these young men together with some older men seize the man and carry him forcibly to the girl's hut. The girl is alone in the hut; not even her mother may be present when the man is brought in. The two—man and girl—are forcibly held together so that their bodies touch. Once his body has touched hers (an initiated girl) in the presence of witnesses he cannot go back to the warrior group, and so has to remain and reconcile himself to premature married life with its restrictions. 585 561

Marriage of a Virgin.—There is a very curious custom connected with the marriage of a girl who is a virgin in the physical sense of the word, i.e. of a girl whose hymen has never been penetrated. Should a girl's husband find that his wife has come to him in this condition, he must send her back to her father's village the next morning carrying on her back a milk gourd without its stopper. This is a sign to her father that she went to her husband as a virgin, and her father must send her back to her husband with a gift in the form of a heifer as compensation to the husband. The husband may not himself perforate the hymen until this heifer has been received. 585

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

684 Boyhood. Sex Life.—In past times uncircumcised boys were severely punished by the warriors if they had sexual intercourse with a girl of any sort. This is no longer the case, probably because the warriors are afraid of Government interference should they ill-treat the boys. [178] [248]

Should an uncircumcised boy have intercourse with a married woman he may, when his time comes to be circumcised, fail to find an elder who will sit behind him according to custom and hold him during the operation, but may have to sit unsupported. In an instance which I observed a boy who had so offended was circumcised in due form on payment of a fine of four oxen. [304]

881 561 The elders who decide when a new circumcision is to take place are those of the Ol-Piron generation to that which is about to be circumcised.

Ol-Piron means a firestick, and its significance is explained below under organization of generations and ages.

Ceremony of Seizing the Ox by the Horns.—The Masai call this ceremony Embolosat o ol-Giteng, which means the tearing of the ox. Ol-Giteng is the general word for an ox and is not confined to the one used at the ceremony. It must be performed first by the Il Kakonyuki section. I have not seen it performed.

881 Circumcision.—I will endeavour to describe a circumcision as I saw it. On my arrival a few minutes before sunrise the two boys who were candidates were standing naked and shivering outside one of the village gates. They had previously been completely shaved. An old man poured a little water over each from a pannikin. Ox hides were brought out and each boy sat on one. Each boy was held by an elder sitting behind him. They were just outside the village with their backs to the thorn fence which encircles the village. The operator appeared and circumcised each in turn. He was a Kikuyu and performed the operation with a dirty-looking razor of a type made in Birmingham or Germany. [304] [413]

As soon as the operation was finished new sandals were put on the boy's feet by the elders; and the elder who was sitting behind him stood up, still holding him, and walked him off backwards through the village gate.

As soon as both boys had been circumcised the operator rushed off to repeat the performance at a village near by before the sun was high. I went back into the village with the elders. One of them drew blood from the neck of an ox for one of the candidates. We went into the hut of the mother of one of the candidates, where the boy sat silent on a bed while we elders refreshed ourselves with honey wine. The boy is not allowed to speak for a period after the ceremony, but I have forgotten the length of the period. [273]

A branch of a tree is tied to the front of the boy's mother's hut by leather thongs passed through the wall.

561 178 The Novitiate.—Nowadays the novices do not need to remain in this stage till all the other candidates have been circumcised, but shave after a few months. They are often called I-Sipolio or 'Laibartan (see Hollis, p. 298, Pl. XIX). They shoot at girls with wax-headed arrows, and a girl who is shot must then give the novice a ring, which is usually, if not always, of a special type, being very much curled and twisted. The novices must observe the following rules :— [56] [178] [301]

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

They must enter the village before the cattle every evening.

Must not drink blood or cut meat or touch it with the hand.

Must not wash.

Must not have sexual intercourse with girls (this is not kept strictly).

Must not fight or be struck by anyone. Anyone who strikes a novice must put milk on his head.

Must not go out in the day time without the head-dress of stuffed birds.

O-Singolio, plur. I-Singolion, is the general word for any dance. (Cf., p. 191.) [535] [192]

Warriorhood.—The Age-group system plays such a large part in the tribal organization that I will deal with it in detail.

A right-side circumcision is called E-Murata e tatene = the circumcision of right. A left-side circumcision is E-Murata e kedyanye = the circumcision of left.[1]

Each of these groups is called Ol poror, an age-group. Each age-group takes a temporary name soon after circumcision and receives a new one at its E-Unoto ceremony. For example, the present age of Purko warriors was called Il-Tiegi prior to their E-Unoto, when they took the name of Il-Salaash.

A right and a left age-group together form a larger group, which I shall refer to as a generation in contradistinction to an age. The term for a generation is Ol aji, but it is also often loosely designated as Ol poror.

Speaking generally, each section has a different name for its warrior age-groups. The exceptions are (a) Loita and Siria. (b) Kabutei, 'L Odokilani and Matapato, who respectively share a single E-Unoto ceremony and therefore have age-names common to their respective groups.

The generation names emanate from the Kissongo in Tanganyika Territory and are common to all the Masai. They are given soon after the warriors of the combined ages have become elders. Thereafter the age-names tend to fall into disuse and be replaced by the generation-name. [184] [552]

A large number of names is given in Hollis, p. 263, but forms an indiscriminate mixture of age- and generation-names.

In the following table I have confined myself to names in everyday use in order to avoid errors and make for simplicity.[2] It will be noted that several sections do not have a left-side circumcision. In the remaining sections the right side is more popular than the left.

[1] I do not know the origin of the terms "right" and "left."

[2] For other generation-names see History, infra.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 Siril. The age-group of each section forms one or more siril or companies.
634 Each siril has its Aiguenan, who performs some of the duties of a captain. The 624 word literally means counsellor. One of the captains is considered to have authority over all the age-group as well as his own siril, and he is called 'L-Aiguenan l'ol poror in contrast to the others who are 'L-aiguenak loo siril.

As an example of the siril divisions, the Il Kitoip age-group of the Purko has three sirils—Il-Meshuke, 'L-Aitetti and Il-Kanyara.

When the warriors become elders the Aiguenak usually retain their authority.

(a) Generation-names common to all the Masai :—

Il Nyangusi. Very few survivors now.
Il Aimer.
Il Talala.
Il Twati. The present ruling elders and Ol piron to the present warriors.
Il Tareto (?). This is believed to be the new name given to the groups who have most recently become elders. It had not come into general use in Narok District when I left last May. I therefore give below the various age-group names of the warriors of this generation :—

(b) :—

Section.		Purko.	Loita and Siria.	Kakonyake.	Il Damat.
Il Tareto.	Right hand	Il Meruturut.	Il Kishangop.	Il Meshuke.	Il Meruturut.
	Left hand ...	Il Kitoip.	None.	I Rayani.	Il Kitoip.
	Right hand	Il Salaash.	I Rimirim.	?	?

Section.		Kabutei, Lodopilani, Matapato.	Il Dalalagotok.	Laitokitok.	Kissongo.
Il Tareto.	Right hand	Il Aitetti.	?	Il Kibomi	?
	Left hand ...	None.	?	None.	Il Kerimbut.
	Right hand	?	?	?	?

Some of the names are omitted because they have not yet been given, and others, e.g. the Il Dalalagotok, because I have not had anything to do with that section for some years.

An Aiguenan appears to be chosen in the first instance by the elders, but if he proves unsatisfactory the warriors sometimes exert themselves successfully to get him changed.

561 Ol Piron.—The elders of the generation next but one senior to another generation are said to be the Ol Piron of that generation. Thus the 'L Aimer are Ol Piron of the Il Twati and the Il Twati are Ol Piron of the present warriors, e.g. Il Salaash.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

As stated above, Ol Piron means a firestick. I have been given a reason for the use of this term, but was not convinced of its truth. The elders of the Ol Piron generation stand in a particular position of guardians to their juniors who recognize their authority to a far greater extent than they do that of elders of other generations. This relationship has considerable political as well as domestic importance. 561

Manyattas.—The sirit is the unit for a single manyatta, except when the whole age-group of a single area combines to form one manyatta for some ceremony, e.g. the E-Unoto. 561 361 648

For some years the policy of Government was directed towards suppressing the warrior system, and manyattas were prohibited, each warrior being supposed to live in his father's village. With increasing control and understanding of the tribe this rule has been somewhat relaxed, and the warriors are now commonly allowed to have manyattas provided that they continue to behave themselves before the law.

But the general effect of Government policy has profoundly modified the original customs with regard to warriorhood, and it is now rather difficult at times to know exactly what these were. The main political effect is that warriorhood lasts for a much shorter period than formerly, and most men marry and become elders within four or five years of their circumcision. 561 177 361

Nowadays the parents are somewhat unwilling that the girls should live in the manyattas, and so there are only a few of them to be seen there.

A manyatta usually differs structurally from an elder's village in that it is simply a circle of huts without the usual thorn hedge round it.

Sex Life.—The word written by Mr. Leakey tasiukiu would perhaps best be spelt as two words Tasioki iyook. Tasioki is a second person singular imperative of a dative word (see Hollis, p. 77) which I have never heard except as described by Mr. Leakey. Iyook means "we" or "us." 836 [193] [114]

When a man has been accepted by a girl who has been so addressed he usually holds out his hand to her with the tips of his forefinger and thumb touching to form a circle. She is then supposed to break the circle so formed with her forefinger. This is regarded as making her acceptance binding. [201] [832]

It is a great disgrace for a warrior to cause an uninitiated girl to conceive, and he must kill an enemy in order to wipe it out. This is, in fact, the usual reason for the occasional murders of people of other tribes, frequently ascribed erroneously to a desire on the part of the murderer to "blood his spear." 842 154

The E-Unoto Ceremony.—Nowadays this takes place from three to five years after initiation. It is not a single ceremony for the whole of the Masai, but there are a number of separate ceremonies according to the groups enumerated in my age-group table above. 561 884

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561
884 The Loita and Siria E-Unoto ceremony took place in July, 1929, and lasted three days. They invited me to it, but, owing to pressure of political work, I was unable to arrive till the morning of the third day at about 10 a.m. (Pl. XIII, Figs. 1-3, and Pl. XIV, Figs. 1 and 2).

The Masai definition of the E-Unoto is as follows :—

"The E-Unoto is a religious ceremony of blessing of the age-group, after which the warriors have leave to marry.

"The O-Singira gives the warriors permission to have sexual relations with initiated women."

The warriors were dancing at the time (Pl. XIII, Figs. 1 and 2). After about an hour they went off to a spot about a mile away in the forest, where I was [789] informed that they sacrificed a bullock as a charm.[1] They returned about 3.30 p.m., [787] about twenty of them being dressed in a manner similar to that of the three functionaries (Pl. XIII, Fig. 3). They danced round the O-Singira hut, and those warriors who were entitled to enter it led their families up to smear some cow-dung on it. The warriors then squatted down in a close group in the centre of the manyatta, while some elders walked round them drinking honey wine and spraying it out of their mouths over the group as a blessing. Others of the elders sat by the O-Singira hut and refreshed themselves with honey wine. It was at this point of the proceedings that the age-group of warriors was named Irimirim (from verb arim, pierce). This terminated the festival.

561
884 The chief functionary is the Ol-Otuno, but I cannot say what part he takes, having arrived so near the end of the ceremony. He is held in great reverence for 624 ever afterwards, and it is unlucky for the age-group if a mishap befalls him. He must not take part in political affairs. He is always spoken of as Ol-Otuno, and his son, when he grows up, is known as the son of Ol-Otuno. (Pl. XIII, Fig. 3.)

There is a minor official called Ol-Oiber engāne. Eng-āne is a thong of leather. If my spelling of the first part of the title is correct it would perhaps mean "He who splits the thong." But there are several words from which it might derive, and I have no knowledge of his duties to assist me in checking my spelling of the name.

561 O-Singira (Thingira).—Being ignorant of Kikuyu I had been puzzled by this 346 word prior to reading Mr. Leakey's article. At the Loita E-Unoto it was built just within the eastern edge of the village. The village consisted of a circle of huts [361] about 300 yards in diameter. I looked in to the O-Singira, but it was too dark to [337] see anything. It was made of cow-dung plaster like an ordinary hut, but was much bigger. Ranged against the wall outside were the heads of numerous oxen which the warriors had slaughtered.

561
884 I was informed that 109 of the warriors had not had sexual relations with initiated women and could therefore enter the O-Singira. After the E-Unoto the

[1] Masai, Endalingoi, the general word for a charm.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 884

warriors may have sexual relations with initiated women. This is regarded as being the first stage in a warrior becoming an elder.

The warriors have their heads shaved—usually by their mothers—at the close of the E-Unoto ceremony, but they allow the hair to grow again, and plait it into a pig-tail when long enough. [302]

Milk Drinking by Warriors.—A warrior may not drink milk unless it is handed him by another of his age-group. They must therefore always go about in parties of two or more. The procedure on arrival at a village where they want some milk is as follows :— 561 574 272

The warriors enter the village and stand in the open space within the circle of the huts till one or more of the old men comes to greet them. They ask for a hut of their age-group, or, failing that, a hut of an elder of their Ol Piron. On being shown a hut to enter they go in and sit down on a bed or the stool, and wait till milk is handed to one of them (for description of hut see p. 463 ff.) He shakes up the milk, removes the cap of the gourd, and hands it to his companion, who drinks it. If only one gourd is brought they share it, handing it from one to the other. If a second gourd is brought the warrior to whom the first gourd was originally handed may open it and drink it himself provided that he has given the first gourd to his companion. Belching after a drink of milk is a sign of repletion and is good manners, showing the guest's appreciation of the hospitality of his host.

Ol-Ng'esher of Milk.—This ceremony is performed by each warrior individually. He is given milk by an elder in his mother's hut, and drinks it by himself. He shaves his head and does not grow a pigtail again. Thereafter he may drink milk by himself. He usually marries very soon after this ceremony, and is no more regarded as a warrior after it. The ceremony usually takes place nowadays a year or two after the E-Unoto owing to Government policy of reducing the period of warriorhood as much as possible. In the Purko, most of the Il-Salaash have already performed their milk Ol-Ng'esher, although there is as yet no left-hand age-group for their generation. 561 [272] [302] [648] [177]

I have heard it said that in some tribes there is a ceremony of handing over warriorhood from one generation to a junior one. Among the Masai there was no such ceremony. When the young warriors of a new generation became strong enough they fought and defeated the old ones, taking on the warriorhood by force.

Meat Feasts.—No man may eat meat which has been touched by an initiated woman until he has performed the second Ol-Ng'esher ceremony, called the Ol-Ng'esher of meat. After that he may eat meat which a woman has touched if he likes. The Il Meruturut and Il Kitoip age-groups of the Purko were said to be going to have their meat Ol-Ng'esher in June, 1930 ; but I left Africa before it was due, and therefore cannot describe the ceremony. [262]

A man of the generation immediately older than the warriors must not be seen eating or drinking milk by a warrior until one of the warrior age has given him a heifer.

561 Prior to the meat Ol-Ng'esher the men must eat meat in the forest or bush.
[264] They build a small round stockade, called Ol Pul, of thorns with one entrance about [343] 2 ft. 6 ins. high through which one must crawl. Here they store the meat, and sleep. They may eat the meat either within or without the Ol Pul. There is a picture of an Ol Pul opposite p. 292 in Hollis.

[252] The meat is pierced by a wooden spit about 18 ins. long. This is stuck in the ground by the fire and the meat is toasted. Soup is also made of fat and water and the bark of Il Kitoloswa or Il Kiluretti trees. The decoction of these barks [276] makes the warriors fierce. They also ascribe to this cause the curious hysterical [158] fits into which they frequently fall when excited. I can vouch for the Il Kitoloswa, small doses of which do, in fact, produce a fierce and unbalanced state of mind. I have never tried the Il Kiluretti.

561 When the warriors sleep in an Ol Pul they pray to God at sunrise on behalf 782 of their age-group. Each one takes his skewer and rubs it in the ashes of the fire 539 in the Ol Pul. He then goes out of the entrance and strikes the sides of it and walks towards the East reciting his prayer and striking trees with the skewer. While [533] returning he sings the war song Eng-ipolossa of his age-group. As he re-enters the Ol Pul he thrusts the skewer into the thorns at the entrance on his right and leaves it there. There are nearly always a bundle of skewers to be seen in this position.

The prayer is as follows :—

"Na Ai aatomono atabukua olemeänikino enkila etabukutua linono lemaar il ogarak ol lughunya. Na iye Eng Ai aatomono injoki iyook ingishu naang'ang'unyi. Naa iye Eng Ai naatejo Na Ai taänyiki iyook ol poror naa ol kilo. Naa iye Eng Ai naatejo injoki iyook nemear il ogarak il lughuny otabukua il omunyak neinguaa kulikae omunyak nemear il ogarak il lughung. Aatomono Na Ai uasen ai engolong meilepu t'ol ondolu tangoro iyook il tiil-omunyak."

Here is the translation :—

"O God I have prayed Thee having come out hither with my garment unbound. Thy (warriors) have come out here, let not wild beasts hurt my head. And Thee O God I have prayed give us the cattle which prosper steadily. And Thee O God I have prayed bind together for us the age-group in one garment. And I have said to Thee O God let not the wild beasts hurt the heads of the fortunate ones who have come out here and let them not hurt the heads of other fortunate ones who come from far away. I have prayed Thee God, my beloved, when the sun rises from the valley, strike thou us with the rays which are lucky."

Each age-group has a different song. The song of the Il Kitoip is "Tangoroki [533] iyook t'alema tauwa neduru indonata o asurai nemetii ol morani le sayet elobi." I cannot translate it because, like other Masai songs, it is couched in rather cryptic language.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Marriage.—The warriors may not marry till after the E-Unoto, and do not usually do so till after their first Ol-Ng'esher. The case stated by Mr. Leakey,[1] in which a warrior cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice. 561 582 884 585 833

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be reclaimed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where lives a man of his generation he may choose in which hut belonging to his generation he will sleep. When it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to vacate it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 202) are observed. It is said that if a woman is persistently unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle. 583 561 837 684

On the other hand, the members of one generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of one generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women. 918

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his eldest son is old enough, and then sends him to fetch her back. 586

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (mother's son), but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister. 835

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names. 551 593

Father-in-law
Mother-in-law
Son-in-law
Daughter-in-law
} Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Ol Marei. Relationship is not recognized beyond first cousin. The Masai take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Masai descent, Ol Masaini oinoti, he is proud of the fact. 602

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the hyænas, except for those of Laibons or very influential old men. These are buried under cairns of stones. 764 766

[1] See p. 200 of this volume.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561
535

FIG. 1.

411
561
535
←

791
634
291
→

FIG. 2.

FIG. 4.

561
634
411
301

FIG. 3.

FIG. 1.—Loita E-Uasin. WARRIORS DANCING IN THE MANYATTA. HUTS IN BACKGROUND.
FIG. 2.—Loita E-Uasin. WARRIORS DANCING.
FIG. 3.—Loita E-Uasin. OL-OTUPO, OL-GEBER ESGÂNE AND 'L-ARUWENAN (LEFT TO RIGHT), WITH O-SEPURA HUT IN BACKGROUND.
FIG. 4.—SEGGI WITH THE METAL CLUBS OF HIS FATHER AND GRANDFATHER.

FURTHER NOTES ON THE MASAI.

[P. 466-A]

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561
292
411

FIG. 1.—Loibe E-Unoto. WARRIORS WITH OSTRICH FEATHER HEAD-DRESSES.

302
291
301

FIG. 2.—Loibe E-Unoto. UNINITIATED GIRLS.

FURTHER NOTES ON THE MASAI.

[P. 466 - B]

15: Margetts D-5 (1968) 1963 FL12 Masai FL12

[p. 190]

000

[114]

243

On the Masai E-Unoto. By Edward L. Margetts, M.D., Associate Professor, Department of Psychiatry, University of British Columbia, Vancouver, B.C. (Specialist Psychiatrist to the Kenya government, Mathari hospital, Nairobi, 1955–9). With three text figures

121 This note will supplement Lord Claud Hamilton's recent essay on the Masai E-unoto ceremonies, the details of which are not fully known, let alone witnessed and understood. The chief value [126] which can be claimed for the present article is the series of unique photographs which I was able to take of some of the ritual.

56 It was my good fortune to attend, over a one day period, that part [114] of the Masai E-unoto in which the sacred heifer is sacrificed and the [789] morans receive the hide finger rings. The date of the ceremony was

[text continues on p. 192]

15: Margetts D-5 (1958) 1963 FL12 Masai FL12

FIG. 1. THE GATHERING OF THE MURAN

(a) About 500 muran gathering in a circle; (b) Seated and ready to start the heart and finger-ring ritual.

[R 191-A]

561
133
291

FIG. 2. THE HEART

(a) Heart rubbed on the forehead; (b) Muran takes a bite of the heart.

[P. 191-B]
561
391
302

FIG. 3. THE HIDE STRIP

(a) Hide strip is placed on middle finger of right hand; (b) Mzeen admires his ring.

[P. 191-C]

561
381
302
301

[P. 192]

561 789 25 July, 1958, and the place was somewhere between Uaso Kedong and Suswa, i.e. west of the Kedong River in the Rift valley below the Kikuyu escarpment in Kenya. The gathering site for the warriors was deep in the bush about two hours march from the manyatta outside of which the O-singiro hut was located. Europeans in the party, in addition to myself, were Charles Hayes, Jack Couldrey and Jeremy D. Lunn. About 500 morans, heads shaved and reddened with ochre, carrying sticks instead of spears, sat around in a huge circle. The forehead of each warrior was rubbed with the heart of the slaughtered animal and then the moran took a bite of it. Following this, a strip of hide, about four or five inches long and one-half or one inch wide, pierced at one end by a one-inch slit, was placed over the middle finger of the right hand of each tribesman.

The magical significance of the heart and finger strip is not accurately known. Nothing magical is ever very clear! The heart probably signifies life and blood, and the binding of the warrior to cattle, the life-giver of the Masai. The significance of the hide strip is even more obscure, perhaps merely a symbol of brotherhood and of the association with cattle but possibly of sexual connexion (finger symbolizing male genitals, slit in skin female). If the latter, the individual Masai would certainly not be aware of this meaning, which would have originated long ago in an individual magician's mind and have been obscured for all others over the years. Finger strips and rings, and wristlets, are commonly (though not always) used as symbols of sexual union in East African tribes, e.g. the Wakamba use a finger ring from the knuckle hide of a goat as an amulet against male sexual impotence (Margetts, personal observation) and prior to marital sex consummation the Nandi groom wears a goatskin ring on his right middle finger and the bride a strip around her left wrist (Huntingford, 1953, p. 28). [171]

After this day-long ritual the tribesmen returned late at night to the manyatta, where further ceremony was carried out at the O-singiro hut.

References

113 Fosbrooke, Henry Albert, 'An Administrative Survey of the Masai Social System,' Tanganyika Notes and Records, Vol. XXVI (1948), pp. 1–50.

——, 'The Masai Age-Group System as a Guide to Tribal Chronology,' African Studies, Vol. XV (1956), pp. 188–206.

Fox, D. Storrs, 'Further Notes on the Masai of Kenya Colony,' J. R. Anthrop. Inst., Vol. LX (1930), pp. 447–65, Plates xiii–xv.

Hamilton, Lord Claud, 'The E-unoto Ceremony of the Masai,' MAN, 1963, 135.

Hollis, A. Claud, The Masai: Their Language and Folklore, Oxford (Clarendon P.), 1905.

Huntingford, G. W. B., The Southern Nilo-Hamites, Ethnographic Survey of Africa, London (Internat. Afr. Inst.), 1953.

Leakey, L. S. B., 'Notes on the Masai of Kenya Colony,' J. R. Anthrop. Inst., Vol. LX (1930), pp. 189–209.

Merker, Hauptmann Moritz, Die Masai: ethnographische Monographie eines ostafrikanischen Semitenvolkes, Berlin (Reimer), 1910.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

are taken in another direction, which means that they drink only on alternate days, but at the same time graze over a larger area than if they went to water every day, thus helping to conserve the grazing. There are two types of kraal. The married men with their wives and children live in one type, and the warriors with their mothers, sisters, and girl lovers in another type. The main structural difference between the two types seems to be that the warriors' kraal has no fence, while the elders' kraal is surrounded by a thorn fence. The elders' kraal varies in size: it may contain from seven to several hundred huts, though very large examples (such as were seen by Teleki and von Höhnel) are probably uncommon; the average is probably about 20 to 50. The warriors' kraal may contain between 50 and 100. In the elders' kraal the huts are built round the inside of the fence, which is also the enclosure in which the livestock are housed at night. The number of gates in the fence depends upon the number and size of the families which live in it. Each family has exclusive rights over at least one gate, and a large family with many cattle has more than one. The kraal, esh-ay, thus approximates to a village, for several families live in it, and the gate, hishomi, has come to typify the family, the word being used with the article (en-hishomi) as a synonym for ol-mani, "the family." When a man sets up his home in a kraal, he puts his first wife in a hut on the right of his gate as one goes in, and the second wife on the left; the third, if he has one, goes on the right, and the fourth on the left, and so on, the huts being so arranged that each succeeding wife lives immediately to the right or left of her gate. The people on each side of the gate form two distinct groups, in-taloishin, the effect of which is felt most in matters of inheritance. (See below, p. 108.) The warriors' kraal or e-manyata is inhabited by all the members of one age-set in one district, who constitute a company, sirit, and the kraals are built in strategic positions. With the men live their mothers, and some young sisters who help their mothers, and if old enough become lovers of warriors. The mother, her warrior son, and younger children share a hut, all sleeping on separate beds; when the warrior wants to sleep with his lover he goes to another hut. The mother's husband may visit her at any time, and when he comes her hut must be given up to the pair. The inhabitants of a manyata vary considerably in number, ranging from 30 to several hundred.

Livestock

Cattle

Cattle, in-kishu, are the object on which the lives of the Masai are centred, and on which their whole existence depends. Their importance is both material and spiritual, and people who perform any kind of work other than tending cattle are despised by the Masai, whose attitude towards cattle is similar to that of the Nandi. The Masai believe that in the beginning God gave them all the cattle in the world, and therefore nobody else has a right to possess any. Cattle provide the Masai warrior with his food in the form of milk, blood, and meat, and they give him spiritual and mental satisfaction through their existence, though it would seem that there is less outward and ritual expression of the love of cattle than among some other East African tribes who combine pastoralism with agriculture. This, however, does not by any means indicate that the Masai are an agricultural people who have wholly given up agriculture and taken to pastoralism. Since the Masai, unlike the Nandi, kill large numbers of their cattle for eating, it was essential in the past for them to maintain the size of their herds by continual raiding, for the natural reproduction rate would not have been enough. On account of its high ritual value, milk may not be drunk on the same day that meat is eaten, nor may it be boiled; but it may be drunk mixed with blood. Grass also has a high ritual value, being the food of cattle, and is used as a sign of peace. In 1930 the average size of an elder's herd was officially estimated at about 75 head of cattle, 85 sheep and goats, and 18 donkeys; this was based on the estimate of 720,000 as the total number of cattle belonging to the Kenya Masai. In Tanganyika, it was found that the average number

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12
Agricultural Masai

In 1932 the Il-Tiamus numbered about 2,250 (3,423 according to the 1948 Census), and though they are of Masai stock, being descended from a Sambur section called Il-Doigio, they have admitted a variety of refugees including Kamasya, and become rather mixed. According to von Höhnel they had originally four villages at the south end of Lake Baringo, but two were deserted on account of Masai and Suk raids, and some of the inhabitants, having lost all their cattle, took refuge on Kokua Island in Lake Baringo. They are expert swimmers and possess canoes, though von Höhnel saw none in 1887. Their dwellings are round huts with rather high-pitched and somewhat convex thatched roofs, and walls of posts and sticks. These are crowded into two permanent villages known as "Njemps Kubwa" and "Njemps Ndogo" in the Tigrish valley a few miles south of Lake Baringo; the closely packed huts almost touch each other, and the mud-walled granaries are surrounded by strong palisades.

In general the Il-Tiamus keep as close as they can to the dress and customs of the pastoral Masai; they have circumcision and eunoto and other ceremonies, and practise the "free-love" system of the pastoralists, though without the manyatas. Today they have some 180,000 acres of poor land, most of it unfit for cultivation; but they have acquired, since the establishment of British rule, some 12,000 or more head of cattle, and 30,000 goats and sheep, thus achieving in part the ambition of all Il-Oikop to become cattle people again. In the time of Thomson and Teleki, however, Njemps was an important station on the caravan route, and von Höhnel noted that they had a large extent of cultivated land. This was divided into blocks (he says of three to four miles square) which were intersected by irrigation channels bringing water from dams across the river Tigrish. This system was still working in Dundas's time, who says that the opening of the main ditch was performed with the sacrifice of a sheep at the mouth of the ditch.[13] Besides agriculture, the Il-Tiamus fished and hunted, using the bow, and spears of Suk and Turkana types.

It is possible that the fishing group called Il-Molo who live on the east shore of Lake Rudolf is to be classed as Il-Oikop.[13] They subsist on a diet of fish alone which, when Teleki and von Höhnel saw them in 1888, had produced no ill-effects; but it seems now to have resulted in considerable physical degeneration, and in the appearance of rickets in all members of the group. There seems to be a good deal of Gelaba blood in them.

The Il-Arusa round Mount Meru are a large tribe of agricultural Masai, originally of Bantu stock, but now accepted by the pastoral Masai as worthy of recognition as a group which can pay and receive cattle for compensation in cases of homicide. The Baraguyu in Southern Masailand are also to be classed as agricultural Masai.[14]

SOCIAL ORGANIZATION AND POLITICAL STRUCTURE

Social Organization

Life Cycle

From birth to circumcision a male is a boy, ol-ayioni. At circumcision[15] he enters an age-set and becomes a warrior, ol-murrani, "one who is circumcised," and may associate with unmarried girls. At the ol-gesher ceremony he becomes an elder, ol-moruo. Warriors may marry when they become senior warriors. After the ol-gesher the newly made elders attend to their family concerns, and get wives

[13] K. R. Dundas, JRAI, XL, pp. 49–55.
[13] W. S. Dyson and V. E. Fuchs, "The Elmolo," JRAI, 1937, LXVII, p. 327; von Höhnel, II, pp. 139–40.
[14] The people known as WaMeru in northern Tanganyika are not Masai, but people of Bantu stock who have imitated them.
[15] There is some uncertainty as to the age at which boys are circumcised. Hollis gives the limits as 13–17 years; Fosbrooke gives the lower limit as 16 or 17.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

.561 if they are not already married. They have duties also towards the uncircumcised boys as guardians and instructors, while the elders of the ol-aji senior to them (see p. 117) are said to be responsible for the ol-aji of the warriors. One hundred years ago Krapf wrote that the Masai had six age-divisions: "(1) Engera, little children. (2) Leiok, boys. (3) Elmoran or elkeiteau, from 17 to 20 or 25 years of age. These have not yet married wives, nor obtained cattle of their own. . . . (4) Ekieko, who marry and have cattle of their own. (5) Esabuki, older than the Ekieko. (6) The Elkijaro or Elkimirisho, the aged persons."[16] A woman is classed as a girl (small, en-kiyio; older, en-tito) till married, when she becomes e-siankiki, "young married woman," and then en-kitok, married woman.

Kinship and Behaviour

601 [171] The Masai kinship system stresses agnatic descent, and in this respect differs somewhat from the kinship systems of the Nandi peoples; but the distinction between agnates is not taken into the third and second ascending generations. The Masai system is therefore different from the Nandi tiliet; and though the word -sotua, meaning both "peace" and "relative" occurs in the Masai system, it is not used with the group-significance of the Nandi term tiliet. The Masai system has not yet been studied in detail, and the following analysis is based mainly on Hollis's account, the fullest that we have.[17] Certain alterations and additions have been made after discussion with John Tombo ole Mbaei; but there are considerable discrepancies between him and Hollis, and this analysis must be regarded as purely provisional.[18]

There are 11 terms used of both kindred and affines, together with two others used only of affines. The words koko, papa, and yieyio are used without gender signs; koko is derived from enk-oko; papa and yieyio are the correct words for "father" and "mother" (not menye and goto, which mean "father of" and "mother of"). Apu and its derivatives take gender signs (ol-apu, o-le-nk-apu, en-e-nk-apu, ol-aputani, enk-aputani); as do akui or akuyia (ol-akui, enk-akui); sotua (o-le-sotua, en-e-sotua); e-sindani (only feminine); ol-ayioni, en-tito, meaning son and daughter (both covered by en-kerai, "child," referring to either sex); and ol-alashe, brother, enk-anashe, sister, which have in addition the internal change of L to N indicating the feminine.

In the third ascending generation all males are ol-akui and all females koko. In the second ascending generation, all males are ol-akui, except the father's mother's brother, who is ol-apu. The wives of all -akui are koko; but the wife of ol-apu is yieyio. The husbands of koko are: (1) of father's brother's sister, ol-aputani; (2) of father's mother's sister, mother's father's sister, mother's mother's sister, o-le-sotua.

In the first ascending generation, the father and his brothers are papa, the mother and her sisters yieyio, as well as father's sister. Mother's brother is ol-apu. Father's brother's and mother's brother's wives are yieyio; husband of father's sister is ol-aputani, of mother's sister, o-le-sotua.

In a man's own generation, brother and father's brother's son are ol-alashe, and their wives e-sindani, brother's wife being distinguished as e-sindani e-anyit to indicate closer relationship. Sister and father's brother's daughter are enk-anashe, and their husbands ol-aputani. Father's sister's son is ol-apu, and his wife yieyio; mother's brother's son is o-le-nk-apu and his wife yieyio. Father's sister's daughter is en-e-nk-apu and her husband o-le-sotua, a term applied also to mother's sister's son and daughter (masc., o-le-, fem., en-e-), and to the husband of the mother's brother's daughter, who is en-e-nk-apu.

[16] Vocabulary, pp. 14, 15. In modern spelling, the Masai words are en-kerai, il-ayiok, il-murran. The remaining words are names of age-sets. (See p. 116.)

[17] JRAI, 1910, XL, pp. 473–82. This supersedes Merker's account in Die Masai, pp. 40–3. There is an excellent analysis of the Masai system by Radcliffe-Brown in African Systems of Kinship and Marriage, pp. 18–22. [114]

[18] It may be mentioned, however, that the use of terms within a tribe is not always uniform, as I have found among the Nandi; and this may sometimes account for apparent discrepancies.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

553 and three old men. If it has not previously received a name, it may have been 852 called by the name of its father's father; but at the naming ceremony it receives a name which may be that of its father or a name not connected with any relative. People are also given nicknames referring to their physical or other peculiarities.
551 There is much uncertainty about Masai names; but every man has a patronymic, consisting of O-le, " son of," preceding his father's name; this he appears to assume after circumcision. Girls after circumcision may be referred to as E-na, " daughter of," preceding their fathers' name. At marriage, the husband gives his wife a new name. The practice of tecnonymy is a regular feature. Before the circumcision of his eldest son, a man becomes known as " the father of " So-and-so, i.e., if his son is called Sendeu, he becomes Menye Sendeu; his wife similarly becomes Ŋoto Sendeu, the mother of Sendeu.

551 The name of a dead child, woman, or warrior is not spoken again, and if the 768 name is an ordinary word, that word is no longer used by the family. Thus, if a man called Ol-onana, " the gentle one," died, on his death the word nana would be replaced in his family by some such word as polpol, " smooth."

Circumcision (E-murrata)

881 Boys' circumcision ceremonies take place at intervals of about three years, and 304 the circumcision period is " open " for about four years. Though the operation may be performed on boys singly or in small groups, the whole number of those circum-
[171] cised at the same time throughout Masailand forms an associating group corresponding in some degree to the Nandi mat (see pp. 31 and 49). Judging by the published accounts, circumcision was a much less prolonged and ceremonious affair than among the Nandi. Before a boy can be circumcised, the father must submit to what is called em-polosata e-sita, " the passing of the fence." After making honey-wine, he stays alone in a small hut outside his kraal, dressed as a warrior. After four days, some elders bring him back to his kraal, where he is told to remove the warrior's clothes and become an old man. His son may then be circumcised.

Circumcision begins with the shaving and bathing of the initiate; in the afternoon after this has been done an ox or sheep is killed and eaten by the warriors
[824] and elders of the neighbourhood. On the second day, the boy cuts a tree called at this time e-latim,[11] which the girls of the kraal carry to the door of the hut [in which the boy sleeps?], where it is planted. On the third morning the boy gets up early and sits outside to get cold; after sunrise he is circumcised, the operator being often a Dorobo. From the fourth to the seventh day he remains at home, and then goes out, shooting with blocked arrows at the girls, and with other arrows at small birds
[884 which he wears hung from his head. This is his occupation till he has recovered: during this time he is known as o-sipolioi and wears the dress of a married woman, 292] including the i-surutia ear-rings, and an ostrich-feather on his head. After recovery he is shaved, given weapons and warrior's clothes, and becomes ol-barnoti, " the shaved one," i.e., a junior warrior. Till his local company forms its masiyata, he lives at home.

Girls undergo the operation of clitoridectomy in preparation for marriage. There are no special times for this. An ox or sheep is killed before the operation. During the period of recovery they are known as e-sipolioi, and wear on their heads a wreath of the Hyphæne palm, ol-merisian, or of grass, instead of an ostrich feather.

Age-sets

●561 Unlike the cyclic age-sets of the Nandi division, those of the Masai are of linear type, that is, they do not work in recurring cycles and do not come into existence till they are required. Nevertheless, it is clear from the lists of Krapf (1854), Hollis (1905), and Fosbrooke (1948), as well as from the Taveta age-sets (Hollis, 1901), that some at least of the names are fixed and recur. In 1939 the names Il-Kisalie [11] Zizyphus mucronata; normally called ol-oilulei.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

and Il-Merisho are recorded by Fosbrooke from the Kisonko: the first is given by Hollis as occurring in 1806 among the Masai, and in 1774 among the Taveta; the second, in 1874 among the Masai, and in 1879 among the Taveta. Moreover, all the names in Hollis's list from Il-Merisho in 1874 to Il-Kinyoyo in 1791 are found in the Taveta system (Lumerisho, 1879, going back to Lukinyoo in 1684 by 15-year intervals).[23] This repetition of names suggests the possibility of an original cyclic system. 561

The actual working of the Masai system is still not absolutely clear, but Fosbrooke has done much towards solving the problem. The main facts seem to be as follows. A boy is not born into a set, as among the Nandi, for his set does not come into existence as a named group till after circumcision. About two years before a circumcision takes place, the elders of the set immediately senior to the existing warrior group (ol-aji) start the process of inaugurating a new set, at a ceremony called em-polosata; this, as we have seen, is described by Hollis as a ceremony performed by individual fathers (p. 116 above), while Fosbrooke regards it as a national ceremony performed by the Il-keek-onyokie in Kenya as a common ceremony for all Masailand. The elders who take part in the inauguration become the sponsors, il-piron (lit. " fire-sticks "), of the new set, and the guardians and instructors of the initiates, thus corresponding to the Nandi moterenik. The em-polosata is followed by a ceremony called en-dunore, " the cutting," which closes the current period of circumcision; at this ceremony the formal relationship of instructor and initiate is established. After this, there follows a series of activities called en-kipaata, beginning with a dance which gives its name to these activities.[23] Between now and the opening of the circumcision the boys go round collecting candidates for initiation. In each circumcision area the il-piron and a few boys also go to the tribal laibon, and apply for his sanction to open the circumcision. When they return, the boys elect a representative called ol-aiguenani (pl. il-aiguenak), " the counsellor," who must have special qualifications of birth, physique, and social status, and is chosen from among those of their number who have distinguished themselves in the debates which are held frequently, and are in consequence called ink-opir.[24] The duties of the ol-aiguenani are to act as intermediary between the warrior company to which he will presently belong and the laibon, to maintain liaison with other companies, to arbitrate in disputes, and to organize raids. He is confirmed in his office by being given a black club which has been blessed by the il-piron elders. [624]

Each age-group or " generation," ol-aji (pl. il-ajijik), is divided into two age-sets, il-porrorri (sing. ol-porror), the first or senior known as e-murrata e-tatene, " the right-hand circumcision," the second or junior as e-murrata e-kedianye, " the left-hand circumcision." Those of the Right Hand are circumcised first over a period of four years, and when the circumcision is finished the young warriors divide into i-sirit or companies formed on a territorial basis, each of which has its own barrack, e-manyata. Soon after this, the preliminaries for the formation of the next ol-porror, the Left Hand, are undertaken, i.e., the em-polosata, en-dunore, and en-kipaata as for the previous ol-porror. About seven years from the beginning of their circumcision period the Right Hand become senior warriors by means of a ceremony called e-unoto, " the setting up," for as junior warriors, during the three years or so between the end of their circumcision and the e-unoto, they have begun to fight the senior warriors (of the previous ol-porror) for the full privileges of warriorhood. These they get by means of the e-unoto, and at the same time they elect a ceremonial leader called ol-otuno (Kisonko, ol-aunoni). As senior warriors they may marry. About eight years from the beginning of the Right Hand circumcision the Left Hand

[23] The Taveta are a Bantu tribe living to the east of Kilimanjaro; they have strong Masai connections.

[23] En-kipaata also means a dance held by warriors before a raid.

[24] Ink-opir means " ostrich feathers," and indicates seniority, as in the term Il-cagen-opir applied to the senior division of each age-set. The ink-opir are the lieutenants of the ol-aiguenani.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

561 are circumcised, over a period of three to four years, forming their sirit in the same way as the Right Hand. The preliminaries for the formation of the next age-set (ol-porror) which will belong to another "generation" (ol-aji) then take place; and about seven years from the beginning of their circumcision period the Left Hand become senior warriors through their e-unoto. When the Right Hand of the next ol-aji is getting near its e-unoto, both the Right Hand and Left Hand of the current ol-aji go through the ceremony called ol-gesher, by which they become elders; this is about 21 years from the beginning of the Right Hand circumcision, and 14 from the beginning of the Left Hand circumcision. It will be noticed that since the ol-gesher is common to both Right and Left Hand, the Left Hand men have a much shorter period as warriors; hence the Left Hand is considered slightly inferior to the Right Hand. Fosbrooke thinks that the ol-gesher, performed by the Kisonko, is a common ceremony for all Masailand, just as the em-polosata is a common inaugural ceremony. At the ol-gesher the outgoing warriors remove their pigtails, and a ceremonial leader called o-loo-surutia is chosen for the whole outgoing ol-aji in place of the two former il-otuno.

TABLE TO ILLUSTRATE SUCCESSION OF IL-AJIJIK AND IL-PORRORRI
(Based on Fosbrooke)

Year	Ol-Aji		Ol-Aji
	Right hand	Left hand	Right hand	Left hand
1	Em-polosata
2	En-dupore
3	En-kipaata
4
5	E-murrata
6
7	Form manyata	Em-polosata
8		En-dupore
9	E-unoto	En-kipaata
10
11		E-murrata
12
13			Em-polosata
14		Form manyata	En-dupore
15			En-kipaata
16		E-unoto
17
18	Senior		E-murrata
19	Warriors
20	may	Senior
21	marry	warriors	Form manyata	Em-polosata
22		may		En-dupore
23		marry		En-kipaata
24	Ol-gesher	Ol-gesher	E-unoto
25
26	End of ol-aji as a warrior force			E-murrata
27
28
29				Form manyata
30 31
32				E-unoto
33			Senior
34			warriors	Senior
35			may	warriors
36			marry	may
37				marry
38			Ol-gesher	Ol-gesher
			End of ol-aji as a warrior force

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

The members of each ol-porror are circumcised in batches. Each batch forms an associating group throughout Masailand (like the mat of the Nandi), and has a permanent name which recurs in each age-set, and in each succeeding age-set. There are four such groups in the Right Hand; they are called Il-cagen-opir, "the big ostrich feathers," senior;[55] Il-parigotua lag, "our swift runners"; Il-hirimbot (meaning unknown); and Il-tareto, "the helpers," junior. The Left Hand, being smaller, has, according to Fosbrooke, only the last three of these groups. Women have no age-sets, but are considered to belong to the ol-porror which was in formation at the time when they were circumcised. 561 [562]

The main function of the age-sets was to provide a permanent source of man-power for fighting, and through them are still taught discipline and respect for elders; they thus affect behaviour patterns. An attitude of respect is required of junior to senior age-sets, while between members of the same set there is a relationship of equality and a sense of solidarity in their relations with other sets. Membership of a set also involves restrictions on both pre-marital and marital relations, of which mention has already been made. In the old days, the duties of warriors were chiefly to raid, in order to maintain as well as to increase the numbers of cattle; and to defend the country. Warriors were not allowed to drink intoxicants, but they had a number of privileges, which included access to the unmarried girls, and the right to demand milk at any homestead, and to oxen for eating. Though officially their fighting duties have been replaced by certain aspects of cattle management, mainly watering and night herding, there is a constant tendency in some tribal sections to raid their neighbours. [182] 561 701

Clans

Clans (in-kishomin, sing. en-kishomi) are divided into sub-clans or primary divisions, il-gilat, sing. ol-gilata. They are dispersed throughout Masailand, among all the tribes (il-oshon), and are totemic and patrilineal.[56] It is not certain how many clans there are, and this uncertainty seems to exist among the Masai themselves. The exogamous unit is probably the ol-gilata, though Tombo ole Mbaei says that 614

	Hollis	Merker	Fosbrooke
Clan:	Il-Aiser	Il-Aiser	Il-Aiser
Sub-clans:	In-Kidogi	En-Kidog (1)	En-Kidog
	Il-Parkeneti	Il-Parkeneti (1)	Il-Parkeneti
	I-Lukumai	I-Lukumai (1)
	Il-Partimaro	Il-Partimaro (1)	Il-Partimaro
		Il-Parsinko (2)	Il-Parsinko
		Enk-aji nanyokie (2)	Enk-aji nanyokie
Clan:	I-Lukumai		I-Lukumai
Sub-clans:	(According to Tombo ole Mbaei)		Kerin-kishu
		Sitayio (2)	Sitayio
Clan:	Il-Molelian	Il-Molelian	Il-Molelian
Sub-clans:	Il-Molelian-aate
	Il-Mamasita	Il-Mamasita (1)
	Il-Pojos
	Il-Kipuyioni	Il-Kipuyioni (2)	Il-Kipuyioni
	Il-Moshono
	Il-Masagua	Il-Masagua (1)	Il-Masagua
	Il-Mokorere	Il-Mokorere (1)	Il-Mokorere
		Il-Muinko (2)	Il-Muinko
		Il-Parserenko (2)	Il-Parserenko
		Il-Parsinde (2)	Il-Parsinde

[continued

[55] In Nandi the senior mat is called Cagenopir, usually shortened to Copinish.
[56] On the authority of Tombo ole Mbaei.

16:Hamilton U-5 (1959) 1963
FL12 Masai FL12
[P.107-A] Loita

561 The 'E-Unoto' Ceremony of the Masai. By Lord Claud Hamilton. With three text figures

135 The cycle of ceremonies connected with the forming of a Masai age set starts with that known as em-polosata, performed by the members of the age set immediately senior to the existing warrior set. These members are destined to become the instructors in tribal lore of the youths who are about to comprise the new age set. Em-polosata is followed by en-dungare which marks the end of the current circumcision. These two ceremonies are followed by a four-day dance of the initiates-to-be [535] called en-kipaata; and the circumcision of the new age set is carried out over the next three to four years, the youths being 14–17 years of age. Each generation is divided into Right Hand and Left Hand circumcisions; the latter begin their ceremonies about six to seven years after the former, but both cease to be warriors at the same time.

Seven years after the beginning of their circumcision, the members of the Right Hand Circumcision become senior warriors through the e-unoto. This ceremony, which is part of the age-set institutions, is held about every seven years, when an age set of junior muran (warriors) feels that it is sufficiently strong and mature to graduate into senior muran, and so 'push' the next senior warriors of the previous age set up into adult manhood. The word e-unoto is derived from the verb a-un, to plant upright or set up (i.e. a new age set of senior warriors is 'set up') and, as will be seen below, certain things are ceremonially 'set up' in the manyata (warriors' kraal) where the ceremony is held.

Tribal elders choose a site for the ceremony, and there the muran who are to take part, aided by their mothers and girl friends, build a new kraal. Each young man has his own hut, a [342] [361] long, low building of withies, mud and cow dung. These are built in a circle, facing inwards. At night branches are pulled into the gaps between the huts to keep out wild beasts which might prey on the cattle sleeping in the arena encircled by the huts.

Besides choosing the site, the elders also select 49 muran from those about to take part in the ceremony. These 49 'pure ones' as they are called must be young men of good character, 100 per cent. full-blooded Masai and without physical blemish. Their leader, the Ol-Otuno, is chosen secretly and is not told of his appointment until the ceremony is due to start. Every murani dreads being called upon to fill the position for the Ol-Otuno is regarded as a scapegoat for the misdeeds of his fellows. They [783] believe that if he dies young as a sacrifice for their sins, they will live long and prosper.

After the other huts have been built, the mothers of the 49 [346] 'pure ones' build the sacred hut called O-Singira. This is a round building, also made of branches, mud and cow dung, topped with a conical roof of the same materials. Around its base is laid a circle of bullocks' skulls on which are left the horns and a strip of skin [239] running down the face. Inside, in the centre of the O-Singira, the Ol-Otuno 'sets up' a stick of the wild olive tree (Olea chrysophylla) and so receives his name which means 'He-who-set-it-up.' The doorway of the O-Singira faces that of the Ol-Otuno's hut, next to which is that of his assistant known as 'The Cutter-up of the Hide.'

The e-unoto of the Loita division of the Masai was held on 10–13 June, 1959, at Entasekera in southern Kenya. The youths taking part were of the right-hand circumcision, the members of which are known as Il-Deregeyani.

561 The ceremony lasts for four days, and the first of these is called 535 'The Day of the Red Dance.' As dawn breaks, all the people assemble outside their huts facing east. Four elders chant a prayer

16:Hamilton U-5 (1959) 1963
FL12 Masai FL12
Loita

[p. 107-B]

SHORTER NOTES

561 535 [237] calling on every man to love his neighbour, and the crowd then call 'Hoi-yoov' three times—a form of 'amen.' In the centre of the arena—about 70 yards across—some long poles were 'set up' in the ground. To the tops of these were tied some of the ostrich-feather headdresses which Masai muran like to wear; and on the branches of nearby trees were more of these and also a number of [292] the conical hats made from lions' manes—not unlike guardsmens' bearskins—which are worn on ceremonial occasions by those who have killed a lion with a spear.

FIG 1. THE E-UNOTO, FIRST AND SECOND DAYS

Above, the Red Dance, girls and warriors dancing; middle, the White Dance, diatomite-smeared warriors dancing; below, the White Dance, bowing to the O-Singira. Photographs: Lord Claud Hamilton, 1939

[292] The muran taking part in the Red Dance wear a single garment consisting of a length of russet-coloured calico knotted over the [302] right shoulder and hanging down to the thighs. Their hair is worn shoulder-length (a feature of the young men of pastoral tribes of

16:Hamilton U-5 (1959) 1963
[P. 108 – A] FL12 Masai FL12
Loita

561 East Africa), and the whole body is smeared, from the crown of 535 the head down, with a mixture of red mud and beef fat. The [302] dancers gather together into groups of a dozen or more, all facing inwards towards a small open space. One young man steps forward into this space, makes a few prancing dance steps, and then starts to jump perpendicularly up and down, his long hair flying up above his head into a kind of halo at the top of each jump.

FIG. 2. THE DAY OF THE SACRED HUT

Above, warriors leading their families round the O-Singira; middle, the warriors throwing fits; below, warrior with feather headdress throwing a fit

Meanwhile the other dancers chant and grunt, awaiting their turn to jump. Now and then this type of dancing was abandoned and the dancers formed up to single file, going in procession back and forth across the centre of the manyatta. As the number of dancers increased, the young men became more and more excited and [158] soon a number were throwing fits. Foaming at the mouth, eyes staring, arms rigid at right angles to the body the sufferers stagger wildly about until friends come to their aid and hold them down.
[207] These fits are caused by the habit of drinking an infusion of the 276 561 535 bark of certain trees, a relic of the old cattle-raiding days, for when the fit has passed the sufferer loses all fear and is ready for battle. An unusual feature of the drug is that, once in a man's system, its effects last for life, and, given sufficient excitement, the man is liable to fits for the rest of his days.

561 535 386 [302] The second day of e-unoto is called 'The Day of the White Dance.' Soon after sunrise the muran went off into the bush to

[346]

[302]

FIG. 3. E-UNOTO CEREMONIAL

Above, some of the 49 'Pure Ones' dancing with their comrades; middle, the Ol-Otumo, who is the first to be shaved, and who wears white diatomite on face and legs, leads his family round the O-Singira; below, a mother shaving her son's eyebrows as he sits on the beaded circumcision hide.

[484] paint their bodies with diatomite. This white, chalklike substance is brought on foot from the Eburru Mountains near Naivasha in The Rift Valley. To bring it, two senior muran of good character are chosen, and they go off dressed in women's clothing and ornaments, carrying bamboo staves and cattle-branding tools as a sign that they are on a peaceful errand. Nearing the destination they stalk the diatomite as if it were game. Then they give the 561 warcry of old: 'I am the son of So-and-So,' and 'I am the Son of 535 Such-and-Such' and drive their branding irons into the outcrop.

[386] They fill their gourds with it and then return home and are [574] treated with great reverence at Masai villages en route, being fed [262] on a hot mixture of milk and water, known as 'blue water.'

Once painted, the young men formed into two columns, some 50 yards apart, and marched to the village. Many wore ostrich headdresses and some the lion-mane caps. Around their necks and waists they wore gaily coloured lengths of calico and beaded thongs secured crescent-shaped bells to their thighs. The clashing of the bells was deafening. This return journey to the village is carefully planned so that the young men do not have to walk through or near any water or cross a stream. On nearing the village, the columns counter-marched, then joined together into double file and entered the arena. As they passed, their mothers called out: 'Endopok!'—'May you survive!'—but many of the women were busy attending to those throwing fits. There were a number of very violent ones as soon as the columns had passed within the circle of houses. Then the columns split up into groups and marched back and forth across the arena, each group [534] led by an elder blowing a kudu horn (one of the very few Masai musical instruments). Now and then two groups would halt and, forming line, kneel and bow to one another; or to the O-Singira hut.

561 Late in the afternoon of this day the mothers of the 49 'pure [302] ones' shave their sons' heads. All the hair, eyebrows included, is [413] removed by means of a spatulate Masai razor. Milk is used in place of soap. Whilst being shaved, each young man squats in front of his hut on the ceremonial hide on which, as a boy, he had sat to be circumcised, and which, in future, will form the top layer of his mother's bed. A little of the hair from the Ol-Onuno and his lieutenant is also put in their mothers' beds, the remainder being thrown into the calf pens which form a part of their family [825] home. Great care is taken that none is left lying about in the open [554] in case birds should use it for their nests—a grave affront to the young men's sacred role.

During the course of the day the branches used as night barri-[789] cades between the houses were replaced with new ones bearing green leaves. This is a symbolic act, meant to ensure that the muran may flourish as 'green bay trees.'

The third day is called 'The Day of the Sacred Hut.' During the morning a heifer, a gift to the Ol-Onuno from his father, is driven into the bush and slaughtered. This animal, called 'The Cow of the Rings,' must be a first-calver, well built, and black with a white belly. All the muran gathered at the slaughtering place to receive their rings from 'The Cutter-up of the Hide,' whilst their families waited in the village in an atmosphere of great expectancy.

Late in the afternoon the first of the muran, naked and still whitened with diatomite, came running back to his hut. There he received a deafening welcome from his family, whom he then led in a boisterous procession round and round the sacred hut. Soon, the whole arena was full of muran leading their families round the O-Singira, everyone shouting and highly excited. Each young man wore, on the third finger of his left hand, a ring from the hide of the Ol-Onuno's heifer. These rings are really only strips of hide about four inches long with a hole near one end to take the wearer's finger. After a time, the 'pure' 49 arrived, their shaven heads gleaming, white circles of diatomite like spectacles round their eyes and garlands of green leaves round their necks. They stood in a group near the O-Singira whilst the Ol-Onuno was led to his hut. In front of his doorway was placed the hide on [351] which he had sat to be shaved, and on this was set his three-legged stool, and into its concave seat was poured a mixture of water, milk and honey. The Ol-Onuno, who seemed all too conscious of his role of scapegoat, then sat on the stool.

16:Hamilton U-5 (1959) 1963
[P. 109-B] FL12 Masai FL12
Loita

56] The fourth and last day is called 'The Day of Shaving.' Today [789] the parents take the hide ring off their son's finger and tie it to the stopper of the gourd which his mother uses for milk. On this day, too, each of the moran gives a black bead to the Ol-Oruno who [754] makes them into a necklace. In later life, if one of the givers ever does him any harm, the Ol-Oruno throws that one bead away—and the giver dies.

[302] The final act of the ceremony is the shaving of the youths' heads. This is done in the same way as yesterday with the 49. It is a solemn, indeed sad, operation and many a mother was in tears at the thought that her treasured son was no longer a boisterous youth and must soon assume the almost Roman gravitas affected by the adult male Masai.

18: Merker

FL12 Masai FL12

561

[For additional information on the Ol Morani (warriors) where age-class is not specifically stressed, and particularly for information on life in the warrior kraal, see category 701.]

582 /47 cont./
[614] by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a
[178] legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this [583] case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed
[613] to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her
[561] mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age class (1)

1. Cf. Chapter IX of this part.

(ol boror) or to his age-class association (ol adji). The bride may not be from an older age class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the Masai are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between foster brother and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as [613] incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage; it is precisely in membership in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

[564] Moreover, a marriage between relatives of blacksmiths and those [326] of nonblacksmiths is not permitted.

Widows (eñ goliai, ñ golia) or divorced women who have living [587] sons may not marry again, but live with men who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an [565] obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man.
[595] The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

585 The wedding feast, allegedly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal in which the bride's parents live.

/60 cont./

881 The circumcision of boys is a public affair and is ordered by [791] the ol oiboni. With the issuing of his order, the circumcision years ('l arî omeratyakî 'l aijok) begin, that is, the following four to five /61/ years during which the boys may be circumcised. In all
[634] the districts the old men now hold consultations and set a definite day (1)

[613] 1. The circumcision of the boys belonging to the lineage of the El kiborôn always takes place on the 20th day of the Masai month.

for the circumcision of the first division of the boys in question. Similarly, later, in the following years, the circumcision days, usually only one in each year, will be determined for the following divisions of boys. It should be mentioned here, beforehand that all boys cir-
• [561] cumcised during a series of circumcision years form an age class (ol [791] boroi) and that this age class is given a definite name by the ol oiboni. The circumcision period is ended by the ol oiboni ordering the en gebata. This is a festival which is celebrated by the first boys in

291
142

Ill. 17. Masai boys.

/67 cont./

881 of grass (ol máritian), into the front of which she sticks an ostrich
[301] feather, and, just like them, paints her face with white clay. On [302] the circumcision day the women of the kraal arrange a feast among themselves, for which the girl's father has given a head of cattle
[583] and her mother has brewed honey beer. As soon as the bridegroom of the es sifiglki (pl. es sibiglkin) -- this is the title for a circumcised girl and for a young woman -- learns that she is well again, he brings her father the last remainder of the bride price, whereupon nothing more stands in the way of the wedding.

The above-mentioned years counted as circumcisionless years for the boys do not come into consideration for the circumcision of the girls, as, indeed, is in the nature of the matter: rather, they may be circumcised at any time.

VIII.

000 Age grades. -- Designation of the members of the different age grades of both sexes. -- The terms of address, affected by membership in an age grade, among male individuals, female individuals, and male and female individuals between each other.

• 561 As among almost all culture-poor peoples, so too among the Masai the social position is assigned to the single individual in general
[562] by the age grade to which he belongs. That this is shown most clearly in the life of the man is explained by the mere fact that he is the lord living for his own pleasures: far below him stands the woman, who has a right to live only because of her labor power for him and her ability to bear children.

Until circumcision the male individual is regarded as a boy (ol aijoni, el aijok): during the preparation for circumcision and until after the healing of the wound, he is called os siholi (pl. es sibolin). Thereafter, for a space of time of about two years, he is introduced to the warrior's life and during this period is called ol barnot (pl. el barnot). When this apprenticeship, during which folly and youthful exuberance are supposed to spend themselves, is over, he is regarded as a full-fledged warrior, ol morían (pl. el mórau). As such the Masai spends his "best years," until he leaves the warrior standing at the age of 28-30 in order to get married and, as ol mórau (el morauk), 561 /ss/ to enjoy, to the end of his life, respect and esteem based on his life's experience and his father- or fatherlike-position, which he occupies in relation to his immediate and more extended sphere.

A female individual, until her circumcision, is regarded as a girl (en dik, o dik), is called en siholi (pl. en sihoile) during the circumcision, until the healing of the wound; after that she is from called e silugiki (pl. silugikin), after the beginning of the menopause 'n sikitok (pl. o sikitwa) or en dalgile (pl. o dalgilin), the latter term also often used formerly instead of e' ilgonjani a married woman, whereas now one only rarely hears it with this meaning. As soon as her head hair turns gray, she is called Kolo = old woman.

342
291
516

Merker photo

Ill. 21. Men and women with child.

571
576

The connections between age grade and social position are to be discussed later. Here there are to be discussed first of all the terms of address that are customary between members of the same age grade and of different age grades and -- if an injury or insult is not intended -- must be used.

/88 cont./

561
976

The terms of address between male individuals

ol ajani to ol mórua ol beyan.
ol barnati to ol mórua ol beyan.
ol merkai to ol mórua ol beyan.
ol mórua to ol mórua ol mórua.

/89/

ol ajani to ol merkai ál merkai.
ol barnati to ol merkai ñó.
ol merkai to ol merkai ñó.
ol mórua to ol merkai ? ajani.

342
291
137

Pl. 22. Older men.

142
291
301
302

Pl. 23. Masai girls from the child to the young woman.

/69 cont./

• 561
576 ol aijoni to ol barnoti: lɛ̄ morɛ̄ni, ol barnoti to ol barnoti: ɛ̄rɔ̄,

ol morɛ̄ni to ol barnoti: ɛ̄rɔ̄, if slight age difference, ol morɛ̄ni to ol barnoti: ol barnoti, if greater age difference, ol móruo to ol barnoti: 'l aijoni.

/70/

ol aijoni to ol aijoni: ɛ̄rɔ̄,
ol barnoti to ol aijoni: ɛ̄rɔ̄,
ol morɛ̄ni to ol aijoni: 'l aijoni,
ol móruo to ol aijoni: 'l aijoni.

Ill. 24. Mother with children.

The terms of address between female individuals:

[291] → en ditɔ̄ to kokot koko, es siɛ̄ŋgiki to kokot jɛ̄jo (= mother) or koko, koko to kokot eng aini ai, which means that the husbands on both sides belong to the same ol borɔ̄r or ol adji.

en ditɔ̄ to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: n akitok, es siɛ̄ŋgiki to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: 'siɛ̄ŋgiki, if only slight age difference, es siɛ̄ŋgiki to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: jɛ̄jo, if greater age difference,
koko to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: na gerai (= child).

en ditɔ̄ to en ditɔ̄t nairo, es siɛ̄ŋgiki to en ditɔ̄t na gerai, koko to en ditɔ̄t na gerai or na gerai ai (= my child).

The terms of address between male and female individuals:

ol aijoni to kokot koko or jɛ̄jo, ol barnoti to kokot koko, jɛ̄jo or 'n akitok, ol morɛ̄ni to kokot koko, jɛ̄jo or 'n akitok, ol móruo to kokot e' ɛ̄gooojoni, if slight age difference, ol móruo to kokot koko or 'n akitok if greater age difference.

/70 cont./

• 561
576 ol aijoni to es siŋŋgiki: 'n akitok, ol barnoti to es siŋŋgiki: 'n akitok, ol morini to es siŋŋgiki: 'n akitok, ol moruo to es siŋŋgiki: e' ŋgorojoni.

ol aijoni to en diŋŋ nairo, if slight age difference, ol aijoni to en diŋŋ naito, if former is considerably younger,
ol barnoti to en diŋŋ nairo,
ol morini to en diŋŋ nairo, ol moruo to en diŋŋ na gerai.

en diŋŋ to ol aijoni: ɛrɔ, if only slight age difference, en diŋŋ to ol aijoni: 'l aijoni, if greater age difference, in which case the girl usually calls mockingly 'n ŋguini = pygmy, little man, es siŋŋgiki to ol aijoni: ɛrɔ or 'l aijoni, if slight age difference, es siŋŋgiki to ol aijoni: na gerai, if the latter is considerably younger, koko to ol aijoni: na gerai or na gerai ai.

/71/

en diŋŋ to ol barnoti: ol barnoti, if slight age difference, en diŋŋ to ol barnoti: lɛ' morini, if the latter is considerably older, es siŋŋgiki to ol barnoti: ol barnoti, if slight age difference, es siŋŋgiki to ol barnoti: na gerai, if the latter is considerably younger,
koko to ol barnoti: na gerai or na gerai ai.

en diŋŋ to ol morini: lɛ' morini, es siŋŋgiki to ol morini: name, if slight age difference, es siŋŋgiki to ol morini: na gerai, if the latter is considerably younger, koko to ol morini: na gerai or na gerai ai.

/71 cont./

561 576

en dito to ol móruot bábá, es siẽ̀ngiki to ol móruot bábá, or ol móruo, if the latter is almost the same age as her husband, koko to ol móruot ol móruo.

[572] Friends often address each other with ol djore lai or ol jerai = my friend.

Instead of the address term 'n akitok, an ol barnoti or an ol morĩni says to an es siẽ̀ngiki whom he has known from childhood 'siẽ̀ngiki or es siẽ̀ngiki, whereas an ol móruo in the same case uses the address term naito. The term of address "'n akitok" for an es siẽ̀ngiki is more polite than "siẽ̀ngiki," the latter used toward a strange es siẽ̀ngiki would be downright impertinent and rude (1).

1. In places the term es siẽ̀ngiki also has the meaning "married woman"; thus, at different times I heard a young woman call out coldly to one not entitled to use this designation when he used it: "I am not your es siẽ̀ngiki."

The obsolete term address en dagile, used for 'n akitok, is often regarded nowadays as affectedly polite.

[601] [65] [431] The terms of address required by kinship or livestock-gift take precedence over the above.

/71 cont./

IX.

000 Age classes. -- The annual courses of an age class. -- Age-class association. -- Organization of the circumcised. -- Choice of speaker and of the ol aunoni; their activity. -- Festivities at the formation of an age-class association. -- Significance of the age classes. -- Division of an age class. -- Names of age classes.

• 561 All the boys circumcised during a series of circumcision years belong to an age class (ol borōr). Within them the boys form, since they are circumcised at yearly or somewhat longer intervals, annual courses by way of divisions.

The first annual course of an age class is the el jangēn ōbīr; they are followed by the el baringo-duallan; the youngest annual course of the ones circumcised during the circumcision years is the el gerimbot. They are followed by a fourth one, the el oirogua. These are circumcised only after /72/ the circumcision years have officially ended by the celebration of the en gebāta festival ordered by the ol oiboni. Anyone who wishes to be circumcised after this festival may not take part in celebrating the above-mentioned festival, otherwise his circumcision is not permitted.

Every two age classes together form an association (ol adji) in which the older is designated as the right circumcision (emorat' ertatenne), the younger one as the left circumcision (emorat' ekediēnje). Each of them has definite rules forbidding for them the uttering of certain words or the enjoyment of certain foods. The emorat' ertatenne may eat neither head nor tail pieces of slaughtered livestock and do not say eng an en dare for goat-kraal, /Ill. 25 appears here/ but rather e merata en dare; moreover, they say ol ogunja for head, and not ol ukungu, and for tail piece, not ol gorom, but rather en aisuba. The others may eat neither gourd nor cucumber, and for arrow poison they say en duerai, instead of e sajet. It is an insult, which often leads to immediate violence, if the one does or says the things forbidden to the other, which are called en dorotj, in the latter's presence.

561
262
784

/72 cont./

142
291
411
701

C. G. Schillings phot.

Ill. 25. Warriors.

• 561 It is to be inserted here that the girls who have been circumcised in the period from the beginning of a series of circumcision years to the beginning of the next series are counted in the age class in which the boys circumcised within the same period up to the en gebata festival are reckoned.

/73/ As long as the members of an age class still belong to the warrior standing, those living in each area have their own head, the speaker (ol aigwenani), whom we shall meet again in the warrior
561 kraal. But if those belonging to one ol borõr are all married, they 634 are given a head for the entire district, the ol aunoni, whom not only the people of his age class, but also those of all younger age [791] classes are obliged to obey. It is the business of the ol oiboni to arrange matters so that in each district only one holds this rank. The discussions with regard to his appointment begin even before all the ol borõr members have left the warrior standing. The speakers of the district go to the ol oiboni and put their request before him.

/73 cont./

561 634 [791] [787] After he has counted off the little stones of his oracle game for a while, he decides that N., the son of M., is to become ol aunoni. This session is secret, and the speakers also have a duty to keep its result secret for the time being. A man can only become ol [554] aunoni who is distinguished by physical beauty, faultless build, strength, and health. After the speakers have returned home again to their area, they call together all the ol borõr members there and, with these, again set out for the ol oiboni. Then a very large hut (os siñgira otunigi) is built there. When it is finished, the speakers take a number of warriors into their confidence and tell them who has been named ol aunoni. Then all gather in the hut, in the center of which stands a new, neatly carved wooden stool, toward which the one named is inconspicuously pushed by those who know. As soon [301] [291] as this has been accomplished, a few of those standing around him push him down onto the stool, others place a string of blue ring-beads (ñ gonoñgo) around his neck, tie the spiral ear ornament made of copper wire (e surudia), such as is worn by old men and women, into his ear lobes, remove his short, skin-apron (e megiti) of the warrior, and in its place drape around him the long one of the married (the ol gela l ol moruak). Finally all those present cheer the new ol aunoni and cry out tadarawá jo ijõk eñ gischon, that is, remain poor, [556] bring us luck. The Masai in general maintain that every ol aunoni has remained poor; if he were to put livestock in his kraal, he would soon die, his wives would bear him few children, wealth would remain [431] denied him. But he does not need it, for every man under him is obliged to give to the ol aunoni visiting him a fat ox and milk. Hence he is constantly on visiting trips, which explains why he has neither a large stock of cattle nor numerous progeny. In his kraal the lord who keeps the women at work is missing, and the latter in turn indeed have no incentive to work, for, by means of the gifts that fall to their husband, an excess of foodstuffs always prevails.

[574] After the ol aunoni festival is over, the other ol borõr members wander back home and celebrate a long meat feast (ol bul), where- [721] upon they /74/ usually set out on a war expedition, while the ol aunoni himself goes back to his kraal and remains there.

/74 cont./

561 634 578 The principal activity of the ol aunoni consists in keeping the people of his district together and protecting them from splitting up, which could be more or less disastrous for the Masai. Occasion for this is furnished by both the constant petty jealousies and friction between the warriors of the various areas, who, for example, not infrequently plan two war expeditions at the same time, instead of concentrating on one, and the short-sighted selfishness of many old men, who are inclined, in the selection of new pasturing places, to think only of the quality of the pasture, instead of also considering whether the warriors are in a position to protect the desired place from hostile attacks. An enemy's success affects not only the one who loses all his property in connection with it, but is a disgrace for the [681] whole people. In such cases the ol aunoni asserts his authority. To one who does not obey him, the authority of the ol aunoni is, as a 561 rule, made clear by the others by means of a beating. Besides this 634 activity, the ol aunoni, if necessary, acts as an intermediary between [791] the people of his district and the ol oiboni, and sometimes his de- [692] cision is requested in legal disputes, but since in this case he is guided very little by legal principles, but rather by political shrewdness, one cannot actually designate him as a judicial presence. The conjecture that the ol aunoni might have something to say in matters pertaining to the cult or might make magic amulets is obvious, but does not prove to be true.

561 We have seen above that every two age classes form an associa- 791 tion. If the members of this association have all been married a long time, the ol oiboni binds them even closer in that he bestows upon the two age classes, each of which -- which is to be said beforehand -- has its own name, a common name. This takes place at 561 the ol ñeher festival. For this all the men of the association gather 791 near the ol oiboni and build a large kraal in the vicinity of his village. 527 Everyone brings honey for beermaking or a head of cattle for the food. The latter is then killed by suffocation, as at the eñ gebāta festival. The festival consists of the consumption of these things, whose climax is formed by the declaration of the ol oiboni that those assembled henceforth belong to one association (ol adji), which only now actually exists and are to bear a common association-name.

/74 cont./

• 561 701 The strict organization of the Masai war power rests primarily on the institution of the age classes. With circumcision the youth enters the army to perform his -- the universal -- military service, and, to be sure, as ol barnoti. His age class is that of the recruits and usually forms, together with the next higher one, that of the warriors, the peacetime strength of the standing army.

The next age class, the youngest of the married men, which performs no war service in peacetime, but also sets out in times of war, may /75/ be regarded as reserves and counted in the standing army. The older age classes take up arms only to defend their own district. There are two exceptions to this regular procedure. If a warrior feels still too young to leave the warrior standing along with the other ol borōr members, he joins the next younger age class and is designated as ol gaitul (pl. el gaitu) of it. This is done especially often by those who belong to the last course of an ol borōr, the el oirogua. The other instance occurs when a youth is heir to large herds of livestock and he lacks another man to be concerned

291 142

C. G. Schillings phot.

Ill. 26. Older men.

/75 cont./

561 701 with managing them. He must then take over the property himself, and he marries soon after circumcision. He is taken into the youngest age class of the married ones and designated as ol ñosaniki (pl. el ñosanik) of it. In the age class of the recruits as well as in that of the warriors, those living in one district form a company 100 to 200 men strong. In order to prevent a company from becoming too large through the presence of too great a number of boys fit for circumcision, which would be injurious to discipline, they have the remedy of circumcision by divisions. Then a special company is formed out [791] of one or even two annual courses, which the ol oiboni does by the bestowal of a special name. /76/ Otherwise every age class gets only one name at first, which is then often replaced by a new one after a successful, larger war expedition as a distinction for bravery shown or, more correctly, for particularly rich spoils, but only when the ones concerned have become older warriors. The ol oiboni gives [791] the next name to the ol borör after it has received an ol aunoni; he bestows the last one with the union of two el boröri into an ol adji, which then bears this new name until it dies out.

561 The present (that is, -1901) youngest age class is called el gischön; it is the first of an association whose second has not yet been formed. The next association consists of the younger el kipuani and the older el meruturut. The latter were called el ñgarebut as youths and were given the name el merututut after a successful war against the Ukamba area. The next association is the 'L aimerr, consisting of the younger el kitoib and the older el merischo. The former, as recruits, were called el mañguscha; after a war against Uhehe, el ñgischañgob; and after the selection of the ol aunoni, el kitoib. The el merischo as youths were called el metaröni; after a successful war against Laikipia as el morän, they received the name es sögon; and after the ol aunoni selection; their present name.

Merker phot.

291 142 ← Ill. 27. Very old man.

/76 cont./

561 701 According to this, the institution of the age classes together with the existence of the age grades, which were more sharply defined and made more prominent in their meaning by the former, seems so important for the maintenance of a constantly war-ready troop that the thought obtrudes as to whether that institution did not first become formed out of a striving for such a band of warriors. [703] The warriors' living together as a valuable impetus for comradeship and esprit de corps, in which lies a chief condition for success in war, leads further to celibacy and then to free love; one can see as its sequel the women's society that belongs to an age class. This in turn then is the first step for mother right, of which, indeed, we also find remnants among the Masai.

X.

000 Introduction of the youths to the warrior life. -- Their first war expedition. -- The ol oiboni gives them the name for the age class. -- Shield escutcheon: its individual constituent parts and their meaning. -- The youths become warriors.

701 702 561 [291] [302] [411] As soon as the circumcision wound has healed, the circumcised exchange the long apron (ol gelí, el gelíni) for the short skin-cape (e megiti, /77/ megitin), again put on their ornaments, anoint their bodies with red paint and, after they have once more shaved their heads, set out as el barnot (sing. ol barnoti, formed from barno = bald-headed), armed with spear, club, sword, and shield, into the bush to celebrate the ol geteń l oń gutui. Spear, shield, and sword are gifts from their fathers; they have carved the club themselves. As we shall learn later in connection with the warriors, they divide themselves into mess-groups of five or six. In the forest they erect [342] a kraal of thorns for themselves or even build small huts out of leaves. 701 702 561 527 [262] [822] The festival consists of consuming large quantities of meat and nothing but meat. For this each participant furnishes a fat ox obtained from his father, which must be plain-colored, black if possible.

561 /77 cont./
701 Mixed, light colors are the symbol of fickleness, frivolity, flighty, 702 childlike, and childish sentiments; they are not proper for adult men 152 with a serious conception of life. The festival lasts about a month 865 as a rule. During it the youths practice handling the weapons, tell [822] each other gruesome war stories, which they have heard from warriors or invented themselves, and thus stimulate their imaginations, just as the reading of Indian and pirate stories does this on occasion among [276] European boys. They artificially make themselves positively wild, to which also the taking, still strange to them, of various roots and barks with a nerve-stimulating effect (which will be discussed later), which they add to the cooking meat, contributes a great deal. All their yearning is directed toward war and murder, everything in them is pressing toward killing an enemy, and enemies for them are all non-Masai. Each of them would like soon to be no longer an ebor alem = [721] white, that is to say, not yet dyed with blood, sword. Not infrequently they turn against defenseless caravans if such happen to be in the vicinity. Whether or not spoils are to be taken in this is of no importance, only killing and murdering, they do not think any further.
Many attacks on caravans have come about in this way. Such opportunities, however, are always rarities for individual troop of youths.
561 The rule is a war expedition against a sedentary tribe. After the 701 fighting, the el barnot again return to the paternal kraal to live there 702 a few more years. During this time they attach themselves more and [721] more closely to the warriors, in order to learn from them and to improve themselves in the art of war. They accompany the warriors on their raids and now and then also take part in their forest meals.
Nevertheless they do not gain admittance into the warrior kraal, which is just as wounding to their self-confidence as the circumstance that they are looked down upon by the warriors and treated almost like boys. The wish to be on an equal footing with the warriors grows ever keener in them. But they still lack two things for that: the name for their age class and the shield escutcheon.

561 In order to request the bestowal of the former from the ol oiboni, [791] a gathering (eñ giguana) (1)

1. Any gathering for a consultation is called this.

/77 cont./

561 791 of all the age-fellows is first convened, so that they /78/ may choose a delegation from their midst. To it belongs in the first rank the speaker, then a rather large number of the strongest and handsomest el barnot. All are provided with rich adornment, as well as beautiful weapons. Each ol barnoti has brought along a fine head of [431] cattle. The large herd formed by this is taken along by the delegates as a gift for the ol oiboni. When they have then presented their request to the mighty one, he directs them to come the next day, when he imparts the answer by giving them, for example, the name el gischon. The ones circumcised during the period from 1896 to 1901 were given this one. It is supposed to mean: the generation after those weakened and impoverished by the rinderpest. After the

714 411 291 531

Brauer phot.

Ill. 28. Shield escutcheons of the Masai.

561 791 [714] delegation has been dismissed by the ol oiboni, they return to their native kraals. At a gathering again held there, all learn the new name and then consult about the choice of a shield escutcheon.

/80 cont./

714
531
291
411

Bezzer phot.

Ill. 29. Shield escutcheons of the Masai.

714 influence of the Moschi military station better. The answer to the 531 question concerning the meaning of the black bows was almost always 634 merely that they probably served as ornamentation, since, with the 184 application of the warrior emblem on the one side, the other half
791 of the shield would look unattractively empty, and only a few old men
174 opined that it was originally a lineage emblem of the En gidoñ. This conception seems to me the right one, and it would explain why the emblem /81/ has been commonly used in Kisongo from time immemorial and then also came to Loita after Mbatyan's death.

714 The lineage emblem is almost never found on the shields of 531 today; thus I did not come across it until I had drawn by a number of 613 old men the shield escutcheons carried by them in their youth. The illustrations of Plate 2[1] show a collection of lineage emblems. We see there that the emblem is sometimes applied on the front of the shield surface, sometimes on the back of the shield. While the
• [561] warrior emblems have remained the same for a long time, the lineage emblems were always quite variable, and it seems that each age class made up its own.

1. [See p. 608--Analyst]

/81 cont./

714 531 613 [561] The illustrations give the lineage emblems that the members of the el meruturut age class carried before the livestock epidemics around the year 1890. It furthermore seems that even in the times in which the carrying of lineage emblems was customary they were not generally carried by all lineages, but only by those whose members predominated in number in the part of the country concerned. The practical utility of this mode of procedure was to keep constantly before the eyes of compeers of other lineages the fact that these lineages were particularly strong and that therefore the individual belonging to them was entitled to a larger share of the spoils, in accordance with the principle: might comes before right. The emblem of such a lineage was then also sometimes adopted by all the warriors of that part of the country.

714 531 [703] Those warriors who take the lead in battle, the el kigeloni, have the right to carry the emblem of bravery on their shields. This is the small colored emblem that is on the periphery of a longitudinal side and is to be found in Figures 9, 10, 13, 16, and 17 of Plate 1. It is still commonly used today.

[704] The last emblem that may be included in the shield escutcheon is the one mentioned above as the section emblem. By section is to be understood here one of the many small divisions out of which the camp of a troop found on a war expedition is made up. In accordance with its secondary significance, the emblem is not very striking to the eye. A comparison of Illustrations 11 and 12, Plate 1, shows an example. These represent the escutcheons of two shields whose owners belonged to one company and within it to different sections.

714 531 178 It is also to be mentioned that both the shield escutcheon as a whole and its individual constituent parts were probably always dependent on fashion and other circumstances of the moment. Sometimes simplicity was fancied, sometimes garishness. Sometimes a close feeling of comradeship prevented the carrying of the clique-forming lineage emblem, sometimes internal discord involving grounds of penal law or civil law called forth the opposite. The above-mentioned shield paintings of old men proved to me that the shield escutcheons of a province were uniform during periods of successful warfare. On the [721] other hand, /82/ one can observe almost daily on the Masai steppes that

714
531
178
[721]
[177]

/82 cont./
nowadays the warriors, out of boastfulness, go on using shields, with unaltered escutcheons, taken as booty in battle with Negroes (1)

1. The fact that Negroes also carry shields of the Masai type, and, to be sure, with similar escutcheons, is a consequence of the above-mentioned Masaization.

or half-breeds of Negroes and members or bastards of the Masai people or, with the present discord, even those of other Masai.

714
531
701
561

The shields of the el barnot, the recruits, do not appear as gaily colored (Plate 1: Figs. 1 and 8). As soon as the youths have received the shields, they ask the most esteemed of the married men, a former speaker of the warriors, for his consent that they be permitted to paint a black emblem on the surface of the shield. At the time he gives his permission, he also determines the form of the emblem, that is, he does not invent a new one, but chooses one from among the old familiar ones. With this and with an ornamental band only drawn in

701
714
531
411

Merker phot.

Ill. 30. Shield escutcheons of young warriors.

/82 cont./

714 black, the youths then paint their shields. The red color may appear 701 in the ornamental band only with the carrying of the large red emblem.
531 They carry the black emblem and the ornamental band until they 561 have become the equals of the warriors and are able, by their ability, to obtain the red emblem by obstinacy or force, for the warriors, of their own accord, will not let a younger age class carry those emblems. Therefore, when the youths feel strong enough, they complete their shield escutcheon in the aforesaid way and then carry it 714 /83/ ostentatiously for show. The warriors see it, become angry, 701 and scold. The el barnot, for whom the warriors have until then 531 been persons of respect, answer snappishly and impudently and scoff
561 that the warriors have now become old and weak and neither need 578 nor deserve the red emblem any longer. No one likes to be reminded of his shortcomings, and a Masai least of all tolerates the reproach -- for that is what it is for the one still in the warrior association -- of incompetence in war, especially if it is hurled at him in streeturchin fashion out of the taunting mouth of a younger person. At the [591] same time the youths build a circular barricade of branches and move in, possibly even before it is filled with huts -- a further provocation of the warriors, for with that the el barnot declare that they too now have a right to their own warrior kraal and are no longer to be regarded as recruits, but as full-fledged soldiers. The consequence of this is that during one of the following nights the warriors attack the growing kraal in order to make the point clear to the el barnot with force. If the latter are defeated, nothing remains for them for the time being but to scratch the red emblem from their shields again with [721] all haste. They give vent to their anger over their defeat by scolding and by one or two small raids against Negro tribes. Sometimes the 701 warriors then acknowledge them as equals, especially if the raids have 561 brought rich spoils, but often too they must force their recognition as [531] before. If this succeeds, they may now also carry the red emblem and [714] are henceforth regarded as true warriors. They continue to build the kraal that was started and live beside the other warriors, but go to war with them. Usually, however, this situation does not last long; rather, the old warriors soon quit the service and marry. It is therefore an exception if there are two warrior kraals in one region at the same time.

701 /104 cont./
182 a little while, will then lead them farther. Otherwise they leave it 222 the rest.
[825] When the warriors of an ol boror notice that their bones are 701 getting old and the el barnot surpass them in strength, they agree
• 561 that it is now time to think of marriage. After they have obtained 582 the permission of the speaker and then that of the chief, one after the other leaves the warrior association, each one shortly before his 701 wedding. He announces his retirement by means of a feast, the ol 561 geteñ l ol bãã, that is, ox slaughtering with a tournament. To this 574 all the inhabitants of the nearest kraals are invited and are shown hospitality with the meat of one or several head of cattle. As soon as these are killed, each warrior cuts off a piece of meat for himself and devours it behind a bush standing somewhat apart. Then each of those present receives his share, while the remainder is strung on sticks two meters high. For these the warriors fight with the girls and women in a game in which the latter vigorously swing the sticks, before which the former has more fear than the women, somewhat [526] accustomed to beatings. Then the younger ones amuse themselves and play, for instance, tag (tosudja). Before there is thought of de-[539] parture, about five o'clock in the afternoon, a married man and his principal wife go to the host and make the following speech: "adjogi megur' ira ol morani dada it' ol móruo, iñora ñ gischu inonu, ñ gera inonu, iñora naleñ, tabala 'mbaa el móran, ida tada ol móruo, tabala n dogitin bãgin el móran, ida tada ol móruo": in translation:
I say, you are no longer Ol morani, but Ol móruo, take care of your cattle and your goats and sheep and watch over them well, leave the occupation of the warriors, now you are ol móruo, refrain from all things of the warriors, now you are ol móruo.

701 After this feast it is up to the warrior whether he takes part more 561 or less regularly in the expeditions of war. As a rule he soon marries [582] and lives with his wife either in the father's kraal or in the warrior kraal until all his contemporaries are married. Only then are they [591] considered ol móruo: each one builds his own kraal and removes clothing, ornaments, and braid of the warriors. He is now at the end [145] of the twenties, his best strength has been spent. In general the Masai, just like all members of the black race, spend their lives very quickly, they age early, without ever attaining a really advanced age.

/120 cont./ If they 181 spare women and children in war, it is not out of compassion, but [567] solely in order to make them useful as slaves, whereas the Masai do not keep such. In general one cannot attribute to them a lasting vindictiveness toward their own kind. The Masai only in part possesses the courage attributed to him. Their extraordinary impudence often makes them appear more courageous than they really [593] are. Their sensuality equals that of most East African tribes. The [837] wife is at the disposal of every man who belongs to the age class
• [561] (both oi horor and oi adjl) of her husband and desires her. It is 593 obvious that, as a result of such conditions and in conjunction with the prevailing polygyny, there can be no question of a proper family life in the higher sense. For her own husband the woman is especially the labor force that he needs for household and livestock management and the means of fulfilling his wish for as many progeny
as possible. Accordingly her treatment depends on how she measures 562 up to these tasks. Moderate beatings are not uncommon, but rough 461 treatment almost never occurs. In contrast to the men loafing
[462] about lazily, the women are busy all day long. For the married [517] women there are scarcely any amusements except dance and song;
they had their share of them before their marriage, when they could have their fling in the warrior kraal. In public life, as well as with respect to her own husband, the wife has no rights. Of course the Masai woman does not regard her servile position as such. She knows nothing else, and fortunately one does not miss a comfort that one 562 does not know. As soon, however, as she is transplanted from her 461 own tribe into a foreign one through kidnapping in war, her willing-178 ness to work immediately comes to an end. The less oppressive 177 her new position is, the lazier and at the same time more demanding she becomes. She suddenly regards herself as too good to work, and her desire for clothing and adornment often increases immeasurably.
/121/ Accordingly, her interest in the household becomes less to the point of disappearing and her passion for amusement great. The reason for this phenomenon undoubtedly lies in the fact that she regards life among the hated and despised el mûg as a disgrace and the work required of her by them as an insult inflicted on her.

/173 cont./

233 [561] [857] Small livestock and donkeys are tended by little boys, cattle by older boys, under the supervision of a few old men. Dogs are no longer used for this now; rather the livestock heeds the whistle or call of the herdsmen. To what extent this is the case is best demonstrated when Masai flee with herds of livestock. A number of men, shouting and whistling, run before and behind the herd, which rages across the steppe in a mad chase. In former times the herdsmen quite generally used dogs. The dogs did not serve so much to keep the herd together, but more for guarding. They announce the approach of predatory animals by barking or by hastening to the herdsmen.

[231] [178]

231 [562] [272] /174/ As has already been mentioned above, fresh livestock blood alone or mixed with milk forms a food prized as quite particularly nourishing. The blood for this is drawn off the living cattle and goats in the following manner: A strap is tied around the animal's neck in such a way that the blood returning to the heart in the large vein is blocked by it and breathing is not affected. Then a man shoots an arrow (Fig. 78) with a bulb-shaped, thick tip (el kerer), from which projects a scale-shaped sharp piece of sheet iron six to eight millimeters long and equally wide, into the swollen vein, whereupon the blood squirts out in a stream and is caught in a good bottle (el bugut). The bleeding is stopped by a simple carrying of the strap after the operation is finished. From a strong bull or ox approximately four to five liters of blood are drawn at one time, from a cow only half as much, and this is repeated every month. No blood is drawn from good milch cows and cows with young calves. Blood is drawn from sheep by means of an incision in the depression above the eyes or between the eye and the middle of the forehead. The slaughtering of cattle is done by a stab in the neck after the front and hind legs have been fettered; goats and sheep are suffocated by having their mouths and noses held shut. Cows are never slaughtered, not even when they are too old to be used for breeding. Livestock that has died is eaten. As soon as the animal is dead, one removes the skin from the neck, severs the neck veins, and catches the blood flowing out in the skin. The cutting up of a head of cattle is done with the greatest care; almost every single muscle is carved

[811] [416]

231 [262] [561]

/174 cont./

[91] out, since special food laws determine to which class of people this or that piece will fall. From a head of cattle slaughtered during the meeting in the bush the warrior will send his father a shoulder-blade (ni ikwhwacha) and for the wives of his father the head (ni ogunja), peanch (ni gunji), the entrails (nomin), feet (ni ofiniki), as well as the hind leg without the rear ha if (ni gidi), and to the girls, the lateral belly-piece (e mumi). The warriors eat all the rest of the meat. If they have visits from other warriors, the latter are entitled to the long, straight belly muscle (ni gulumiki) and rear hock (ni ewuhiki). On the other hand, if a head of cattle of a married man is slaughtered at the kraal, the warriors get nothing. From the cut-up animal there is put aside flat for the other married men: the tongue (ni ilejiki), a shoulderblade (ni ikwhwacha), a rear hock, the rear part of the hind leg (ni mimu), the long belly-muscle: for the unmarried boys, the ribs (ni ori), a rear hock, the flat (ne mumi), the "Sacha /flat/ Scarlbeef" -- as my cookbook calls it -- (ni ori), the heart (ni ofi). The rest of the meat is given to the women, who give the girls the lateral belly-piece and the neck (e mumi) from it. The principal wife of the one to whom the slaughtered animal belongs is given the tail piece.

/175/ If the warrior slaughters a goat, the married men are given half the liver (e ofiniki), the wives the peanch and head, the girls the back (ne gunji) and the feet. If a married man slaughters a goat, he gives the wives the peanch, the rennet bag, spleen, entrails, and head, the girls back and feet, the boys a side of ribs, lower (ni ogunji), lungs (ni kiliki), heart, and a hind leg (ni gidi mumi), while he himself keeps the rest.

[93] From a warrior's sheep, the father gets the neck; the wives of the father, peanch, rennet bag, entrails, and liver; the sisters, feet and back. If a married man slaughters a sheep, the distribution to the women and girls is the same, and the boys receive the same pieces as from the father's goat. Of the individual pieces of meat, one boils the bones for soup, furthermore the fibers, the carved-out entrails, the dark meat on the hind leg, and the heart. Everything else is roasted at the open fire. Brains and spinal marrow are not eaten, but thrown away. Bone marrow is sucked raw out of the smashed bones.

[215]

361 /177 cont./
233 animals that go forward only with difficulty are carried in the arms.
• [361] Boys take care of the livestock driving, under the supervision of [701] married men. With each party is found a younger guard of warriors.
[492] Meanwhile the women are still busy with the loading of the donkeys, on which all the household equipment is packed. More rarely a few oxen or cows must help out. After this work is finished, the herd of donkeys follows the tracks of the livestock. Behind them come the women, girls, and children; almost every one of them also drags along some household object or at least a small-livestock or neat [701] skin. Oddly enough, a guard of warriors is not found with this party, as there was with all the preceding ones, but rather at most a few old men armed with spears or bows and arrows. Usually the destination is reached on the same day. If this is not the case, however, camp is pitched during the night within a hastily constructed barricade of thorny branches. The next morning the march then continues
361 before daybreak. After arrival at the new site the women immedi-
462 ately start laying out the kraal. First the thorn barricade is laid out, and in the following days the huts are built. Erecting the kraal proceeds very rapidly; as a rule it is finished in a week at the latest. The old kraal was not destroyed upon being vacated. It is left standing and reoccupied later, after the pasture has recovered. Meanwhile, of course, much has deteriorated, so that the work of reconstruction almost equals that of a new installation. In the last [136] few years, since the sand flea (Pulex penetrans) has become a pest in East Africa, the reoccupation of old kraals is declining more and more. In order to destroy the noxious insects inhabiting them, they are burned when vacated.

000 It is obvious that the European who wants to engage in stock-breeding here cannot move about with his herd in the manner of the Masai. Moreover, a division of the herd in such a way that sufficient grass is present throughout the year within range of the kraal for the individual parts does not seem feasible, and, to be sure, especially because of the difficulty of personal supervision and observation of the sicknesses arising, as well as of isolation in case of an epidemic. An improvement of the pasture by means of

/186 cont./

276 171 [171] have adopted many of their manners and customs the warriors regard becoming stricken with the em boechona as a sign of true, ferocious warriordom, and they frequently simulate it for this reason. Amidst whooping cries the simulator with spear in hand dashes out of the camp and would surely not inflict an injury on anyone, even if -- as in the /187/ cases observed among the Wadschaggs -- a few people did not immediately run after him, seize him, and lead him back.

276 [152] The lack of any control over emotions and inclinations probably also plays a not unimportant role in the occurrence of em boechona. Its cause seems to me, however, to lie entirely in the excessive use of the aforementioned excitants, so that the illness would not occur at all if they were avoided completely or were taken only in a very 276 561 considerably lesser volume. Their harmfulness can be observed almost daily among the warriors in an abnormal state of nervous irritability. This view is based on my observations (with which all the statements on this point made to me by the Masai agree) that only the warriors, that is, the young, strong, healthy men, are stricken with em boechona, while boys and youths, before they enter into the association of the warriors, and even during the first period as such, and furthermore married men, as well as girls and women, remain completely immune to it. These persons, however, either do not take any of the stimulants named at all, or only in very small measure.

276 158 171 In this description of em boechona one is inevitably reminded of the running amok of the Malays. Only the complex of symptoms is similar, however, while the etiology and the prognosis are entirely different. Whereas running amok as a rule ends with the death of the person concerned, em boechona is cured within a few days. Whereas the effect of opium as the original cause of running amok is today no longer regarded as decisive, in every case of em boechona the copious use of those agents only a short time before will be indicated.

/217 cont./

681 Unknown in penal law are: an aggravated death penalty, for example, death by fire, the principle of an eye for an eye, the view that the perpetrator must pay with the body part with which he has sinned, as well as symbolism, imprisonment, enslavement, a public monetary fine besides the composition, public monetary fines in general, a right of pardon.

683 599 There still remains to be pointed out one penal decree, which, however, exists only for warriors. That the calling and way of life of the warriors, who are impressed primarily by brute strength and force, are not suitable for preventing rowdiness is obvious and is shown by the frequent, more or less rough brawls among them. Insofar as they seem useful for promoting personal courage, they are not punished; for those connected with bodily injury what was said above applies. For the brawls a stick or a club is used as a weapon and the shield for display. In order to force the opponent to leave himself open, one directs a blow on the left lower arm holding the shield, and, to be sure, not infrequently so violently that it shattered. Now, if a warrior has already inflicted broken bones on the opponent several times, especially in the manner just described, all the warriors, under the leadership of their ol aigwenani, gather together and announce to him that he will be outlawed if he once more /218/ engages in a brawl; if the one warned violates this prohibition, every warrior of the kraal is justified in killing him.

692 561 [556] [628] The legal proceedings are the same in civil and penal cases; in both there is only one court for the people of a district. For the warriors this is the speaker (ol aigwenani); for the older married men an older, respected, i.e., wealthy, man chosen each time by the persons concerned to settle the particular case presented. In controversial matters between warriors of different kraals or, which is usually the same thing, of different areas, the speakers concerned jointly confer and decide, either alone or, if they do not reach a definite decision, with the advice of an ol aunoni, whose voice is then decisive. In disputes among married men of different areas a mixed council of elders decides. The ol olkoni may be regarded as a court of review, who, however, is called upon only in those 692 cases which concern the commonweal. There are civil proceedings

/299 cont./

000 Among them the boys were clipped (circumc.) at the age of 10-12, the girls at the age of about six (exc. clit.). As bride price the husband paid the father of the bride 40 beehives and 12 pots of honey. After the birth of a child the woman did not leave the hut for five days. On the day of the first walk outside, her head and that of the new born child were shaved.

Several times during the month whole bands of older women and men, laden with honey and clay pots which they made themselves, set out for tribes engaged in agriculture, in order to get vegetable foods in exchange for them.

/300/ Nothing is known to my informants about the significance of the animal figures made out of clay that were seen in their kraals and huts.

They called God Schábischab.

173 In contrast to the extensive and firmly established traditions from the remotest past stand the paucity and uncertainty of the information from more recent times. Coherent historical memory does not extend beyond a generation; what lies before that is uncertain. The somewhat certain information tells of war expeditions, livestock epidemics, drought, and similar unimportant events. Therefore only the order of the age class associations, which, incidentally, also has gaps and is uncertain, and that of the chiefs are still to be completed:

173 561 791

El diñgi	ol oiboni: Kibebgte.
El kisaroni	ol oiboni: Sitonik.
El merischari	ol oiboni: Subgt.
El kidotu.
El dusti	ol oiboni: Mbatyan.
El ñiañgusi.
'L aimerr	ol oiboni: Lenana (1).

1. Zendeo only belongs to the age class of the El kipuani, which at the present time is attached to the next older one, the El meruturut, not yet to an ol adji.

19: Talbot E-4,5 (1956-1962)1964 FL12 Masai FL12

142
30 291
• 561

Figure 21.

A Masai junior elder from Tanganyika. He has served his period as a warrior, then at the olngesherr ceremony he shaved off his pigtail hair-do and became a junior elder. The facial scarification marks him as belonging to one of the fringe sub-sections of the Masai tribe.

19: Talbot K-4,5 (1956-1962)1964 FL12 Masai FL12

Their ¹
#233 livestock, described below, consist of herds of cattle,
[231] sheep, goats and donkeys. The Masai way of life revolves around the grazing and water requirements of their livestock.

621
a 561 Their principal units of social organization, as they affect this discussion, are sections, age grades, 614 villages, and families. Clans have an important place
177 in ethnological discussions and in some areas they
178 determine matters such as water rights (Fosbrooke, 1948). Our impression is that throughout most of Western Masailand the concept of clans is of more ethnological than ecological interest. One basic reason for this is the effect of the Government administration in Western Masailand.

With the physical and social upheavels in both Kenya and Tanganyika from the 1880's through about 1920, the establishment of African District Councils (District-wide governing bodies), creation of the park and conservation unit, and various development projects, the clan and other social units have been greatly disrupted. Grant (1954, 1957) describes this effect in some detail for the Masai in the former boundaries of the Serengeti National Park.

¹ [i.e., the Masai.--Analyst]

for Tanganyika.

561 181 (b) Age grade: The age grade system is of great importance in the life of a Masai man, since it regulates his conduct toward other men and women and is the baisis for the political organization of the tribe. The system is also of significant use in dating past events (Fosbrooke, 1954).

721 181 Warfare was of great importance to the Masai prior to the 1900's. The whole social organization of the tribe was built around the production and maintenance of an effective fighting force. Although actual fighting is relatively rare now, the customs and social organization remain basically the same.

857 *233 881 561 701 Until his early teens the primary duties of a boy are herding livestock (Fig. 9).[1] Roughly every seven years there are a series of ceremonies culminating in a circumcision ceremony. This ceremony is taken by all the young men of the correct age (roughly in their mid teens), and it produces a class of warriors each of whom is known as ol-murrani, or moran. This is considered the most important occasion in the life of a Masai man, and from then on he is a full member of the tribe. Each group to be circumsized is given an age

[1] [See p. 53.--Analyst]

561 class name, and is allied with the next (or previous) 701 group, the first being the right hand grade and the other
(881) being the left hand grade. After several years the (884) junior warriors go through another ceremony and become full warriors. Their total period of warrior duty may 714 be about 15 years. The warriors are distinguished by their hair style and spear.

714 The hair style involves a complicated 302 plating of the hair with some combination of cords, pieces of hide or gut, bark, or stick; all liberally plastered with sheep or cow fat and red ochre. Elliott (1948) has detailed the methods and materials used and variations in style between areas.

714 The warriors' spear is often over five feet 411 long. It has a long, narrow, double-edged blade, an equally long but round and pointed tail, and between them a very short wooden hand grip serving as a shaft.
Warriors also carry a flat, double-bladed long knife or short sword called a simi. These useful weapons are 177 carried at the waist in a red leather sheath. Originally 44 the metal weapons were produced by metal-working tribes.
326 They now come from England and the first thing a moran does after buying a spear or simi is to file off the 411 brand name. When in ceremonial dress or at war the 411 warriors also carry a narrow oval shield made of buffalo or giraffe hide on a wooden frame, and painted with insignia including the warrior's age grade and clan.

561 701 [712] [562] [836] Originally during the period of warriorhood the morani were not expected to do any work except fight. They lived in a separate village, called a manyatta, and were generally taken care of by the unmarried girls of the tribe. Discipline was reputed to have been extremely good. The warriors had older advisors whom they obeyed.

224 [223] [301] [411] Ostrich's were hunted to obtain feathers for ornaments, buffalo and giraffe for shields, and lion for the highly prized mane. Traditionally the moran was expected to blood his spear on a lion. The dramatic Masai lion hunts are famous. (Simon, 1962). At 177 178 present warfare and lion hunting are illegal. The obvious 561 701 result is a large body of young men with absolutely 224 nothing to do for a period of up to 15 years of what 721 could be the most energetic period of their lives. * [233] They tend the livestock some, but much of the time there is nothing for them to do. As a consequence discipline is breaking down. The elders apparently have much less influence or control over the morani than they did 177 178 224 561 701 721 previously. There is a considerable amount of raiding to steal stock from surrounding tribes. This precipitated several minor wars when we were there, and administrative action prevented one major war with thousands of combatants. Some lions are still killed, and the morani have been blooding their spears on a variety of other animals, most notably rhinos.

561 Following the period of service as warriors, each age class goes through another ceremony. Two age classes, a right hand and left hand together, take the ceremony and they then receive another age grade name which they retain the rest of their lives. Thus these elder age grades each span a period of about 15 years (Grant, 1957).

177 178 561 Periodically the administration has tried to discourage the moran system. In late years some of the elders have also tried to change the system in order to maintain better control over the young men. The system still continues in Western Masailand but it is much less regular than previously.

561 593 591 When a warrior becomes circumcised he may take his mother with him to the warrior' manyatta, or he may leave her home or apparently even stay home himself.

561 He may marry when he is a senior warrior. When he becomes 593 an elder he may take his mother (if he wants) and her 591 share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given [582] share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given [422] share of cattle) and move off to join others in a village
[562] (Fosbrooke, 1948).

561 The unmarried girls of the tribe live in the 836 warrior's manyattas and normally each moran has one [583] favorite girl who becomes his concubine. They told us that usually that girl became the warrior's first wife.

621 (c) Villages: Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called bomas or 361 (improperly) manyattas. Each boma consists of an outer
#233 circular thorn fence with a series of gates, one for [417] each Masai elder. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Often around the huts are small thorn fences in which young livestock are kept. The cattle of the village are normally herded into the space in the center of the boma each night for protection from two and four legged predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

595 When a Masai marries, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left,

301 Women and occasionally men wear necklaces of beads. Women have ornate jewelry consisting of rings, beads, beaded bracelets, and wire loops around their [304] neck, wrists and ankles. Both men and women pierce and stretch their ear lobes; the women wear large ear bangles through them and the men use them to carry snuff containers or other articles about the size of a 35 mm film casette.

411 Spears, simis, and knobkerries and shields may [714] be carried by the men. Elders often carry a long staff [561] instead of a spear. Cooking utensils are simple, some- 415 times consisting of a few pots and pans. Bedding consists [513] of hides, with sometimes a blanket. The gourds mentioned 492 above are always present. When moving from one place to another a pack saddle is used which consists of two large (two by three feet) flat rounded plates made of sticks bound and laced by leather thongs. These are tied above and on either side of the donkeys' backs, giving the appearance of semi-folded wings. Hides, lodgepoles, cooking utensils, and other kit are placed on 443 the donkey's back between these. Trade goods are purchased or traded from small dukas around the edge of the area or more recently from itinerate traders who visit the larger and more accessable bomas in trucks.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

428 a small legacy of a few cattle to anyone he likes, but the bulk of his property must be inherited according to the above rules.

422 Women's Property.—As a general rule a woman cannot own cattle herself, but 562 holds them in trust for her husband. I have twice come across exceptions to this :—

(a) A woman who had plied the profession of a doctor (i.e. native herbalist) and had received cattle in payment.

(b) A woman who had amassed wealth outside and independently of the tribe.

Household utensils such as gourds, hides, and donkey saddles belong to the woman of the house.

175 Laibons (Masai, 'L-Oibonok).—Hollis, pp. 324–330, gives the history of the 791 Laibons up to the beginning of the present century. I will therefore briefly sum-648 marize their more recent history.

634 Lenana was made paramount chief of the Masai in Kenya Colony by the Government. He died in 1911. Some people thought that his brother Sendeyo had bewitched him, but little credence need be attached to this opinion. He appointed his small son Seggi to succeed him. As Seggi was a minor, Ngaroya, son of Neilian, first cousin to Lenana, was appointed as regent. Between the years 1912 and 1923 it was the Kenya Government's policy to curtail the powers of the Laibons. Seggi grew up a weak and lovable person, who has little authority, and is more often drunk than sober. At one time he was deposed from paramount chieftainship for persistent inebriety, but was subsequently re-appointed to be paramount chief of the Kajiado District only.

His brother, Kimuruai, is Laibon of the Purko section. He is a weak character, but vainglorious and boastful. He is very untrustworthy owing to his desire to seem more important than his character warrants him to be.

Ngaroya is now a very old man. He is Laibon of the Kakonyuki section. Sendeyo is Laibon of the Loita section. He was deported to Meru in 1923, it having been alleged that he was implicated in the rising of the Il Kitoip age-group of the Purko at the end of 1922. He was allowed to return to Loita in 1926 and still lives there, much loved and respected.

Whereas in Kenya the power of the Laibons has been much reduced since Lenana's death, and councils of elders have been created to try and take their place in the government of the tribe, in Tanganyika Territory the authority of the Laibon has been upheld and he is regarded as the paramount chief. I believe that the system has worked well. Until recently their Laibon was Parit, a son of Lenana. Parit is now dead, and a minor, whose name escapes me, has succeeded him.

In Pl. XIII, Fig. 4, is seen a photograph of Seggi holding in his hand the bronze club of his grandfather, Mbatian, and the iron club of his father, Lenana (see Hollis, pp. 329 and 330). Mbatian's bronze club is at present in my possession, but should be returned to one of his descendants at some future date.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

The members of each ol-porror are circumcised in batches. Each batch forms an associating group throughout Masailand (like the mat of the Nandi), and has a permanent name which recurs in each age-set, and in each succeeding age-set. There are four such groups in the Right Hand; they are called Il-cagea-cpir, "the big ostrich feathers," senior;[55] Il-parigotua lay, "our swift runners"; Il-hirimbot (meaning unknown); and Il-tareto, "the helpers," junior. The Left Hand, being smaller, has, according to Fosbrooke, only the last three of these groups. Women have no age-sets, but are considered to belong to the ol-porror which was in formation at the time when they were circumcised. 561 [562]

The main function of the age-sets was to provide a permanent source of man-power for fighting, and through them are still taught discipline and respect for elders; they thus affect behaviour patterns. An attitude of respect is required of junior to senior age-sets, while between members of the same set there is a relationship of equality and a sense of solidarity in their relations with other sets. Membership of a set also involves restrictions on both pre-marital and marital relations, of which mention has already been made. In the old days, the duties of warriors were chiefly to raid, in order to maintain as well as to increase the numbers of cattle; and to defend the country. Warriors were not allowed to drink intoxicants, but they had a number of privileges, which included access to the unmarried girls, and the right to demand milk at any homestead, and to oxen for eating. Though officially their fighting duties have been replaced by certain aspects of cattle management, mainly watering and night herding, there is a constant tendency in some tribal sections to raid their neighbours. [182] 561 701

Clans

Clans (in-kishomin, sing. en-kishomi) are divided into sub-clans or primary divisions, il-gilat, sing. ol-gilata. They are dispersed throughout Masailand, among all the tribes (il-oshos), and are totemic and patrilineal.[56] It is not certain how many clans there are, and this uncertainty seems to exist among the Masai themselves. The exogamous unit is probably the ol-gilata, though Tombo ole Mbaei says that 614

	Hollis	Merker	Fosbrooke
Clan:	Il-Aiser	Il-Aiser	Il-Aiser
Sub-clans:	In-Kidogi	En-Kidog (1)	En-Kidog
	Il-Parkeneti	Il-Parkeneti (1)	Il-Parkeneti
	I-Lukumai	I-Lukumai (1)
	Il-Partimaro	Il-Partimaro (1)	Il-Partimaro
		Il-Parsinko (2)	Il-Parsinko
		Enk-aji nanyokie (2)	Enk-aji nanyokie
Clan:	I-Lukumai		I-Lukumai
Sub-clans:	(According to Tombo ole Mbaei)		Kerin-kishu
		Sitayio (2)	Sitayio
Clan:	Il-Molelian	Il-Molelian	Il-Molelian
Sub-clans:	Il-Molelian-aate
	Il-Mamasita	Il-Mamasita (1)
	Il-Pojos
	Il-Kipuyioni	Il-Kipuyioni (2)	Il-Kipuyioni
	Il-Moshono
	Il-Masagua	Il-Mamgua (1)	Il-Masagua
	Il-Mokorero	Il-Mokorero (1)	Il-Mokorero
		Il-Muinko (2)	Il-Muinko
		Il-Parserenko (2)	Il-Parserenko
		Il-Parsinde (2)	Il-Parsinde

[continued

[55] In Nandi the senior mat is called Cagenopir, usually shortened to Coginish.
[56] On the authority of Tombo ole Mbaei.

/67 cont./

881 of grass (ol márisian), into the front of which she sticks an ostrich
[301] feather, and, just like them, paints her face with white clay. On [302] the circumcision day the women of the kraal arrange a feast among themselves, for which the girl's father has given a head of cattle
[583] and her mother has brewed honey beer. As soon as the bridegroom of the es siéngiki (pl. es siéngikin) -- this is the title for a circumcised girl and for a young woman -- learns that she is well again, he brings her father the last remainder of the bride price, whereupon nothing more stands in the way of the wedding.

The above-mentioned years counted as circumcisionless years for the boys do not come into consideration for the circumcision of the girls, as, indeed, is in the nature of the matter; rather, they may be circumcised at any time.

VIII.

000 Age grades. -- Designation of the members of the different age grades of both sexes. -- The terms of address, affected by membership in an age grade, among male individuals, female individuals, and male and female individuals between each other.

561 As among almost all culture-poor peoples, so too among the Masai the social position is assigned to the single individual in general
[562] by the age grade to which he belongs. That this is shown most clearly in the life of the man is explained by the mere fact that he is the lord living for his own pleasures; far below him stands the woman, who has a right to live only because of her labor power for him and her ability to bear children.

Until circumcision the male individual is regarded as a boy (ol aijoni, el aijok); during the preparation for circumcision and until after the healing of the wound, he is called os siboli (pl. es sibolio). Thereafter, for a space of time of about two years, he is introduced to the warrior's life and during this period is called ol barnoti (pl. el barnot). When this apprenticeship, during which folly and youthful exuberance are supposed to spend themselves, is over, he is regarded as a full-fledged warrior, ol morani (pl. el móran). As such the Masai spends his "best years," until he leaves the warrior standing at the age of 28-30 in order to get married and, as ol móruo (el moruak),

/120 cont./ If they
181 spare women and children in war, it is not out of compassion, but [567] solely in order to make them useful as slaves, whereas the Masai do not keep such. In general one cannot attribute to them a lasting vindictiveness toward their own kind. The Masai only in part possesses the courage attributed to him. Their extraordinary impudence often makes them appear more courageous than they really [593] are. Their sensuality equals that of most East African tribes. The [837] wife is at the disposal of every man who belongs to the age class [561] (both ol boror and ol adji) of her husband and desires her. It is 593 obvious that, as a result of such conditions and in conjunction with the prevailing polygyny, there can be no question of a proper family life in the higher sense. For her own husband the woman is especially the labor force that he needs for household and livestock management and the means of fulfilling his wish for as many progeny
as possible. Accordingly her treatment depends on how she measures
.562 up to these tasks. Moderate beatings are not uncommon, but rough 461 treatment almost never occurs. In contrast to the men loafing
[462] about lazily, the women are busy all day long. For the married [517] women there are scarcely any amusements except dance and song;
they had their share of them before their marriage, when they could have their fling in the warrior kraal. In public life, as well as with respect to her own husband, the wife has no rights. Of course the Masai woman does not regard her servile position as such. She knows nothing else, and fortunately one does not miss a comfort that one 562 does not know. As soon, however, as she is transplanted from her 461 own tribe into a foreign one through kidnapping in war, her willing-178 ness to work immediately comes to an end. The less oppressive
177 her new position is, the lazier and at the same time more demanding she becomes. She suddenly regards herself as too good to work, and her desire for clothing and adornment often increases immeasurably.
/121/ Accordingly, her interest in the household becomes less to the point of disappearing and her passion for amusement great. The reason for this phenomenon undoubtedly lies in the fact that she regards life among the hated and despised el mŋg as a disgrace and the work required of her by them as an insult inflicted on her.

/220 cont./

562 694 695 Women are also entitled to make a complaint. Evidence presented by witnesses is valid only to the extent that the persons assembled for the proceedings wish to be convinced by it.

683 [692] The crime of sorcery is only rarely dealt with in a judicial assembly. For the most part the one bewitched, after he has learned from an ol goiatiki the name of the bewitcher, prefers to induce the latter, through gifts, to bewitch him healthy again. Thereupon the two conclude friendship /221/ or, however -- and this not infrequently happens -- the bewitched one now kills his opponent, and, to be sure, without inviting blood revenge upon himself because of it.

681 648 [575] [781] There are no secret societies for the purpose of legal actualization or for other purposes. Her tests or the belief that the dead person will reveal the murderer in a dream are unknown. The Masai do not live with other peoples in such a relationship that the latter could demand or request expiation for murder or some other crime or misdemeanor committed by a Masai on a non-Masai. In this case, therefore, the deed remains unexpiated, whereas the Masai as a rule practice retaliation if the deed was committed on one of their people. Whether or not the murder committed on an Asá or an ol Kuafi by a Masai is expiated depends in each case on the greater or lesser degree of friendly relations that exist between the communities of the murderer and the one murdered. In most cases expiation does not take place, whereas if the injured one is a Masai, his fellow tribesmen will answer with war.

44 warriors also carry a narrow oval shield made of buffalo or giraffe hide on a wooden frame, and painted with insignia including the warrior's age grade and clan.

561 701 Originally during the period of warriorhood the morani were not expected to do any work except [712] fight. They lived in a separate village, called a * [542] manyatta, and were generally taken care of by the [836] unmarried girls of the tribe. Discipline was reputed to have been extremely good. The warriors had older advisers whom they obeyed.

224 Ostrich were hunted to obtain feathers [223] for ornaments, buffalo and giraffe for shields, and lion [301] for the highly prized mane. Traditionally the moran [411] was expected to blood his spear on a lion. The dramatic 177 Masai lion hunts are famous. (Simon, 1962). At 178 present warfare and lion hunting are illegal. The obvious 561 result is a large body of young men with absolutely 701 nothing to do for a period of up to 15 years of what 224 721 could be the most energetic period of their lives. * [233] They tend the livestock some, but much of the time there is nothing for them to do. As a consequence discipline is breaking down. The elders apparently have much less influence or control over the morani than they did

He may marry when he is a senior warrior. When he becomes an elder he may take his mother (if he wants) and her share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given share of cattle) and move off to join others in a village (Fosbrooke, 1948).

The unmarried girls of the tribe live in the warrior's manyattas and normally each moran has one favorite girl who becomes his concubine. They told us that usually that girl became the warrior's first wife.

[a] Villages. Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called kraals or (improperly) manyattas. Each kraal consists of an outer circular thorn fence with a series of gates, one for each Masai elder. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Often around the huts are small thorn fences in which young livestock are kept. The cattle of the village are normally herded into the space in the center of the kraal each night for protection from two and four legged predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

When a Masai marries, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left.

2.27 hair styles. The gourds are grown by nearby cultivators
[445] and purchased or traded by the Masai. The calabashes are cleaned between usings by soaking in water (if available) and then purified with a mixture of ashes and wood ash. After being carried in one of these containers the milk has a rather characteristic, somewhat smoky-sweet taste that may stay with one for several days.

443 The maize meal is purchased or traded from the duka or trading post run general stores which are found at Narok, Loitokitok, and at other points around the periphery of the area.

144. 172. Meat comes from the Masai livestock and occasionally game. The old traditions laid down specified rules for who in the tribe might eat what kind of meat, and at [704] what times. Apparently the warriors had a right to demand milk and sometimes meat from anyone, at least in their section. Milk and meat were not to be consumed on the same day, but blood could be mixed with the milk.

Meat was fighting the warriors could carry out [414] an ilmoti, or meat camp. They would take goats or a bullock and make camp in the bush, drink and eat the animals. The ilmoti might take from a week to a month, [704] depending on the available time and meat. We presume that the principle was that the meat and blood strengthened the warriors for fighting. We periodically came upon moran cooking fresh meat. It was usually goat or sheep, although occasionally bovine, and they cooked it either by skewering pieces on green limbs which they held over the fire, or by placing the strips of meat on a wooden grill above the fire. Youngish children usually accompanied the moran. Gower (1948:79) notes that in Tanganyika Masailands

> At an olpul a few moran (warriors) will go into the woods and slaughter a bullock or goats. They take with them a few uncircumcised boys and girls. They camp in the bush for any period from 10 to 30 days, depending on how many bullocks they have to slaughter. For the first few days they eat the meat roasted and cooked; thereafter they subsist on soup. The Masai consider that this diet gives considerable strength.

We never observed moran cooking meat far out in the bush. Usually these feasts were close to a boma.

We were told that eland and buffalo were considered close enough to cows to be proper food for Masai and this was also postulated by Grolnek and Grolnek (1960a) and described by Huntingford (1953:108). The women apparently could eat game meat, especially gazelles, during pregnancy. From the reception of the meat we brought to bomas, we believe that in addition to women and children elders and a few moran will gladly • 562 eat meat from wildebeests and gazelles. When I shot an elephant near one boma the Masai women turned out in [252] force. They spent most of the day cutting off strips of [442] subcutaneous fat and some flesh. A few elders joined [825] the women in the cutting. Several Masai requested fat from a lion I had shot (which had been raiding their boma), but they said that their use was for medicine rather than food. We have records, therefore, of Masai eating (or taking to eat) wildebeest, Grant's gazelle, Thomson's gazelle, elephant, buffalo, eland, and kongoni.

Cattle are usually eaten when they die. Cows are rarely slaughtered, although bullocks sometimes are killed for food and prize ones are killed and eaten [562] by men at ceremonies. We have watched women picking up the remains after livestock have been slaughtered, and Miller's (1920) spoke of Masai women eating offal and other remains of cows or sheep after the men were through eating.

231 272 Bleeding of cows and sheep is accomplished by tying a thong about the animal's neck so the jugular swells, then shooting a partially blocked arrow into the jugular vein and catching the spurting blood in a gourd.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

we have here primitive and undeveloped religious sentiment where the personality of the deity is hardly separated from striking natural phenomena, or remnants of some old cultus of the heavenly bodies, mountains, and tribal deities preserved in a hazy way by a military race which had not paid much attention to religion.

The Masai believe that ordinary persons die like cattle, and they throw away their corpses to be eaten by hyenas[1], in the revoltingly unceremonious way common to many East African tribes. Medicine men, however, and influential people are buried, and their souls are said to pass into snakes, which are respected in consequence. Many tribes on the Nile also reverence snakes. It is noticeable that death and misfortune are not attributed to witchcraft. The Laibon is not the same as the Witch Doctor of the Bantu tribes, and it is no part of his duties to detect witches.

As the Masai men will practically do nothing but fight or tend cattle, they are naturally dependent on others for all articles, including their arms, which cannot be manufactured by women. There is among them a special tribe of smiths, called Il-Kunono, who make iron weapons, but are treated as inferiors and not allowed to marry Masai women. A somewhat similar tribe are the Dorobo or hunters.

It would appear that the military organization, the aversion to hunting, to eating game or vegetable food, and to engaging in agriculture or any productive art are peculiarities specially developed by the Masai, though some of them have been imitated by other tribes. Another peculiarity is the shape of their houses—long low buildings constructed of poles, grass, and mud, and divided into rooms by partitions. Their other customs, however, seem to tally with those of the Latuka, Bari, and Dinka, as far as differences of residence and occupation permit. Remarkable points of agreement are the nudity of the men, the shaven heads of the women, extraction of the middle teeth of the lower jaw, resting in a standing position on one leg, drinking the blood from living animals, and spitting as a sign of affection or benediction.

Linguistic evidence points the same way, though ampler and clearer information about the languages of the Nile is desirable for purposes of comparison. It is no want of respect to the labours of Sir H. Johnston and others to say that the researches of Mr. Hollis have for the first time

[1] It has been suggested that this practice may be due to a desire not to contaminate the earth by burial, but Mr. Hollis could find no trace of this idea, although he carefully inquired.

634 162 561 231 The Sighirari of the Engidengi inhabit the country in the neighbourhood of the Ngong Hills and En Doinyo Narok. To this division belong the medicine-men of the L'Aiser Gilata of whom Seggi is now the chief. The Division is estimated to possess a population of 1,900 of whom 120 are Muran, 28,000 head of cattle, 80,000 sheep and 300 donkeys. Sighirari of the Engidengi.

[563] [194] The Il Dala Lekutuk came from Laikipia in 1912 and are sometimes known as the Nyeri Masai. They have a considerable admixture of Kikuyu blood in them. They inhabit generally the neighbourhood of En Doinyo Narok and their population is estimated at 700, including some 75 Muran. They are said to possess 6,000 head of cattle, 20,000 sheep and 75 donkeys. Their Muran are divided into two "Sirits" named Il Tareto and Seure. Il Dala Lekutuk.

The Kaputiei are to be found in the neighbourhood of the Nyiri Desert. Their population is estimated at 2,600 including 175 Muran, and their possessions at 30,000 head of cattle, 100,000 sheep and 400 donkeys. Their Muran are divided into four "Sirits" whose names are Il Mokesen, Il Mejuali, Il Kidemmi and Il Sogua. Kaputiei.

The Sighirari of Laitokitok inhabit the country to the north of Kilimanjaro, which country is watered by the Engare Rongai, Kikalelwa, Naromuro, Ol ol Turesh and Rombo streams. The population of this division is estimated to number about 2,800 of whom 180 are Muran. These are divided into two "Sirits," named Il Kituli and Il Mejuali. The live-stock possessions are said to number 60,000 head of cattle, 175,000 sheep and 500 donkeys. Sighirari of Laitokitok.

563 In addition to the Masai, there are considerable numbers of Wandorobo ("Il Torobo") living in the Masai Reserve. Their numbers are probably not less than three or four thousand, and many of them possess considerable herds of cattle, and live the life of ordinary Masai, from whom it is difficult to distinguish them. They may be conveniently divided into two classes, namely, those who live in the bush and forest, and those who possess cattle. The former possess little or no live-stock, and subsist almost entirely upon wild animals and honey, while the latter live in villages and subsist only to a very limited extent on game. Wandorobo.

The former are to be found mainly in the neighbourhood of the Mau, but small parties of them are also met on the Uaso Nyiro, on the Lower Mara River, along the Sotik border, and in the Trans-Mara region. They live on tree rabbits and the smaller game animals, in rough shelters in the forests, or in the huts in some of the Masai villages.

The latter are to be found on the Uaso Nyiro, in the neighbourhood of Ol Alunga and Ol Doinyo Rasha, on the western bank of the Mara River, and in the Siria country. In all, they probably number about 1,000.

564 326 There exists in the reserve, a special tribe of smiths, somewhat similar to the Wandorobo, called Il-Kumono, who make iron weapons, but are treated as inferiors, and are not allowed to marry Masai women. Il-Kumono.

181 105 To recapitulate, the Masai are a listless, conservative, slothful people, inadequately governed by Councils of Elders, who admit themselves to be incompetent to deal with the idle body of warriors whose raison d'être has now disappeared, but who are still sufficiently insubordinate to render ineffective the counsels of their seniors. They have been concentrated in one area, where they have amassed enormous herds of cattle of a poor quality, and countless sheep. No suitable means of employment has as yet been found for the males of the tribe as a whole, though they are experts in the care of stock, and once possessed fighting qualities of a savage nature, which spread the terror of their name far and wide. They have considerable latent powers of organisation, alertness and ability, but these are largely discounted owing to their unreliability: they have always realised that it is in their best interests to be loyal to the British Government, and have never been responsible for any serious disturbance, being too proud to work, and rich enough to disregard fines, they are probably the most backward administered native tribe in the East Africa Protectorate. Recapitulation.

character and great reputation as a medicine-man, but even his influence does not extend throughout the Purko and Loita divisions. The Council presided over by Sendeu also possesses a certain measure of authority, but these two present the only instances where respect is given and the respect shown in these cases is due almost entirely to the personalities of the individual presidents and not to the system which they represent. 646

The Kikuyu element in the Masai Reserve. 563

The population of the Masai Reserve numbers not much more than 40,000 of whom the great majority are Masai, but which also includes a considerable number of pure or half-caste Kikuyu. The indigent lives led by the Masai pastoralists possess considerable attraction for the neighbouring Kikuyu, who being less wealthy, are under the necessity of performing agricultural and manual labour either in their reserves or on alienated lands. For many years, the Kikuyu and Masai have engaged in trade, and their lands being contiguous, they have had ample opportunities for intercourse. To satisfy their ambitions of an idle life, migrations of individuals from Kikuyu to Masai country have been of not infrequent occurrence and the Masai Reserve therefore contains these scattered units, mainly among the divisions known as the Kaputiei and Il Dala Lekutuk.

Masai aversion to manual labour. 648* 461 291

The policy of the Government in dealing with the native tribes in the East African Protectorate has been to develop their agricultural instincts and industry and to discourage tendencies towards pastoralism. This policy has been pursued with success among the Kavirondo, Kikuyu and other tribes who, when encountered by the administration were under the necessity of engaging in agriculture and has been introduced with fair results into the system of such pastoral tribes as the Nandi and Lumbwa, but with the Masai it has been a total failure. Though encouragement has always been given, the Masai have shown no inclination to till the soil, and in the only recent cases where gardens have been prepared at the instigation of Masai owners, the labour employed was drawn from the Kikuyu tribe.

Work by Kikuyu in the Masai Reserve. 648* 563

The increased activity in recruiting natives as porters for the Carrier Corps necessitated by the military situation in March and April, 1917, led to the emigration of a number of Kikuyu from their own country into the Masai Reserve, and these emigrants, with a view to escaping enrolment, signed agreements to work as servants for Indians, Somalis and Masai. Colonel Ainsworth, then Military Commissioner for Labour, represented that, while such evasion of their duties was highly reprehensible in regard to the employment with Indians and Somalis, any system which admitted of Kikuyu working for Masai was open to the greatest objections on both administrative and economic grounds. The question of such Kikuyu emigration to the Masai Reserve and elsewhere was discussed in Executive Council in June, 1917, and was referred to the Chairman of the Special Committee appointed to consider the "Resident Natives Bill," but no decision on the matter has yet been reported.

Present policy in dealing with Kikuyu emigration.

In view of the general desirability of discouraging such emigration of Kikuyu natives, the policy has been adopted in the Masai Reserve of prosecuting all Kikuyu living in that reserve who cannot claim by long residence or circumcision rights to have become Masai, and of returning them to their own reserve. This policy applies to the cases of all those Kikuyu who have joined the Masai since the move from Laikipia. Efforts have also been made to register all Kikuyu who may be considered to have become Masai.

The Paramount Chief. 648* 791 643

An important step in the revision of the system of Masai administration was undertaken early in 1918, when for reasons mainly connected with the personality of the holder, the Acting Governor recommended that the office of Paramount Chief of the Masai should be abolished.

Seggi.

At the time of Lenana's death, in 1911, Seggi was still a boy, and control over the Masai was exercised by the two regents, Ngatova and Legalishu. When Seggi came of age and assumed the duties assigned to him in his capacity as Paramount Chief, he was given an extended trial but proved himself to be totally unreliable. He lacked energy, physique and moral courage: he was intemperate and untrustworthy: he appeared to regard any administrative function as an

*648 Turkana raid on Masai, June, 1912.

2. A large party of Turkana raided Kune, about forty miles north of Rumuruti, in June, 1912, and carried off cattle estimated by the District Commissioner to number 158 head. One Masai elder was killed. Fifty-eight of the cattle were recovered by the District Commissioner, Turkana. A patrol which toured Turkana at the beginning of 1913 captured from them a number of cattle, and one hundred head of the captured stock was reserved as compensation for the Masai. Owing, however, to an outbreak of disease, it became necessary to sell the remainder, and eventually, at the end of 1915, Rs. 3,621 were paid to the Masai, a further Rs. 1,500 being subsequently added in compensation for loss and as blood money.

*648 509 721 Raids on Samburu, June, 1912, October, 1912.

3. In June, 1912, the Samburu of the Embarta plains were raided by a small party of Masai. On the 28th of October, the Samburu in the same place were again raided by similar people. No trace of the stolen cattle was found, though it was reported on reliable information that they had been taken into the Southern Masai Reserve.

*648 563 Possible removal of Masai into German territory, July, 1912.

4. In July, 1912, a number of Masai Wandorobo living near the border were raided by German patrols and were forcibly removed with their stock across the border into German territory. A meeting was arranged between Herr Altmann, Imperial Secretary of Schirati District, and the District Commissioner, South Kavirondo District, when the affair was investigated on the spot where the outrage was supposed to have been committed, but with no good results.

Further enquiries were made and the assistance of the German Governor was solicited, but the evidence obtained was inconclusive, and as it was stated that the Wandorobo in question had, until shortly before the incident, lived in German territory the matter was allowed to drop.

*648 519 [121] Raids on Moru and Kikuyu in Nyeri District, August and September, 1912.

5. On August 1st, 1912, the sub-district of Sigania in the Nyeri District was raided, five men were killed and ninety head of cattle taken.

On September 5th, a trading party of Kikuyu were attacked at the Siki River on the Nyeri-Meru road. One Kikuyu youth was killed.

On September 20th and 22nd raids were attempted on Kikuyu kraals close to Nyeri.

Murder of two Kikuyu, September, 1912.

6. In September, 1912, two Kikuyu natives were murdered by the Masai near Lenana's old kraal some fifteen miles from Nairobi. Two Masai were arrested, convicted, and hung for the offence.

Friction with the Lumbwa, October, 1912.

7. In October, 1912, while the Masai move was in progress, a certain amount of friction was noticeable between the Masai and the natives from Lumbwa and Sotik and raids were reported from Ol-Orokuti and Norgunono. A patrol under Captain W. B. Brook operated in Sotik country along the Mara River to keep such raids in check.

Raids and murders towards the end of 1912.

8. Several isolated raids and murders which took place during the last few months of 1912 were traced to parties of unidentified warriors, believed to belong to the Purko and Loita divisions of the Masai who were then settled on the western boundary of the Southern Masai Reserve. Five such incidents were reported, namely :—

(1) The murder of two Lumbwa men and one woman on the south side of the Mara River close to Lemek Valley.

[121] (2) An attempted theft, on the 16th of December, of forty head of cattle from Mr. Johnson's farm, during which attempt three Lumbwa were killed.

(3) An attempted theft in Uregi, a location in the South Kavirondo District, in the course of which one native of that location was killed. One of the natives implicated in this affair was a Purko, who alleged he had been accompanied by a Loita.

[121] (4) A raid into German territory among natives known as Ngorioni, in the course of which fifty head of cattle were stolen and a woman and child were killed.

(5) An alleged theft of ten head of cattle from natives in German territory. This was probably the work of some other tribe.

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

ing to his father to learn something about his origin, and 869 this I believe is—among other stories—what he was told.
The primal ancestor of the Masai was one Kidenoi, who 869 lived at Donyo Egèrè (Mount Kenia), was hairy, and had a 773 tail. Filled with the spirit of exploration, he left his home and wandered south. The people of the country, seeing him shaking something in a calabash, were so struck with admiration at the wonderful performance that they brought him women as a present. By these he had children, who, strangely enough, were not hairy, and had no tails, and these were the progenitors of the Masai. As Moran had not heard anything of the theories which were convulsing scientific Europe and America, he remained ignorant of the fact that he had struck upon an interesting legend which the savants of civilized society would have given their beards to verify.

Meanwhile Moran practised with the spear, and killed 858 innumerable imaginary enemies. He listened intently with beating heart to the stories of daring cattle-raids and san-guinary fights, but as yet he could only dye his spear in the blood of an antelope, or, it might be, of a buffalo. His food [262] still continued to be that of a non-fighter, namely, curdled milk, maize, or millet, and meat. But vegetable paste was the meat of women and children, and he loathed it, though he ate it.

As he approached the age of fourteen he began to develop a truculent and ferocious expression, instead of making himself sick in the attempt to smoke a cigar, or examining his upper lip in the glass, as a lad of proper spirit in England would have done at the same age. It is quite laughable to think of Moran trying to look dangerous, pursing his brow, and generally cultivating the fiendish. And really, I am told he was the admiration and the envy of all the Lèon (boys) of the district, and quite won the hearts of the girls.

At last it was agreed that Moran had become a man, and 881 was fit to be a warrior. A certain rite, better known in Africa than in Europe, was performed; and Moran was no longer a boy, he was an El-moran—a warrior. His father, who was wealthy, resolved to rig him out in the height of military fashion. For this purpose they journeyed to a [563] neighbouring settlement of Andorobbo—a clan who are despised heartily by their distant relatives, the aristocratic Masai, on account of their ignoble mode of gaining a livelihood by the chase. After making the Andorobbo quake in their [714]

6: Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

881 sandals, they chose a handsome shield of buffalo hide, [714] beautifully made, elliptical in shape, and warranted to stand a tremendous blow from a spear. The price being asked, a bullock was mentioned as the very lowest cost price. But the unfortunate maker had to be content with a scraggy sheep—and a blow. This purchase accomplished—for the Masai never make shields or spears, though there is nothing in the possession of which they pride themselves so much—881 they returned to the kraal, and then called for an El-konono.
563 This is an inferior race kept in servitude to the Masai, for whom they make spears and swords. They do not go to war, and are not allowed to intermarry with their superiors. They all speak Masai, though it is believed they have a language of their own. In response to the call a miserable, half-starved object appeared with a selection of most 881 murderous-looking weapons. After a careful examination 411 Moran selected a spear, with a blade two feet and a half long, a wooden handle fifteen inches, and a spike at the end about one foot and a half. The blade had an almost uniform width of from two to three inches, up to near the top, where it abruptly formed a point. A sword and a knobkerry of formidable appearance completed his warlike equipment.

881 These important acquisitions made, our hero now pro-
[302] ceeded to dress himself up as became his new character. He first worked his hair into a mop of strings, those falling over the forehead being cut shorter than the rest. Instead of the ivory ear-stretcher hitherto used, he put in a swell
[301] ear ornament formed of a tassel of iron chain. Round his neck he put a bracelet of coiled wire, and round his wrists a neatly formed bead mitten. On his ankles he bound a strip of the black hair of the colobus (monkey) of Central Africa. A glorious layer of grease and clay was plastered on his head and shoulders. This completed, he donned a very [291] neat and handsomely decorated kid-skin garment, of very scanty dimensions, which served to cover his breast and shoulders, but hardly reached below the waist, and thus stood forth the complete military masher, ready for love or war.

882 And now the great step of his life was taken. Thus far he had lived in the kraal of the married people, and accordingly had to comport himself as "only a boy." Now he proceeded to a distant kraal in which were none but young, unmarried men and women. To keep up his dignity and supply him with food his father provided him with a number

[text continues on p. 250]

6: Thomson K-3 (1883-1884) 1887
FL12 Masai FL12
Dorobo FL6

M 563 D 224 Before closing this chapter it may not be out of place to say a few words regarding a tribe of people whom I have referred to as the Andorobbo. This tribe—the Wa-ndorobbo of the Wa-swahili—is a small race of people scattered over Masai-land, who gain their entire livelihood by the chase. They neither keep cattle nor cultivate the land. The antelope, the buffalo, and the elephant supply them with such meat as they may desire, while they always find neighbouring tribes, less skilful in hunting, eager to exchange vegetable food for game. The elephant, however, seems to be their staple food, and as a rule the Andoroddo are to be found only where those animals D [131] [361] abound; as, for instance, in the dense forests of Kenia and Kikuyu, the forest-clad escarpment of Maü, the top of Elgeyo, Maragwet, Chibcharagnani, Buru, Dondolè, &c. They are rarely found in numbers, and usually in very small villages, so that there is nothing like tribal life among them. They M 563 D 439 enjoy considerable immunity from attack by the Masai, as they are sources of wealth to the latter by attracting the coast traders; usually, too, the Masai fall heir to a considerable share of the ivory. They also act as go-betweens or middlemen in getting the married people the vegetable food they require. To such an extent is this system carried, that on the plateau to the east of Naivasha, at the place called by the traders Mianzi-ni, a very large village of Andorobbo have altogether given up hunting, and subsist entirely by buying vegetable food from the Wa-kikuyu and selling it again to the Masai, or it may be the traders.

M 563 D 192 105 The language spoken by the Andorobbo is allied to that of the Masai, but they can all speak the latter in its purity. They build regular villages, and in general appearance they resemble the inferior class of the Masai. As I have already remarked, they make the buffalo-hide shields of the warriors, as well as the coarse earthen cooking-pots of the women. They are on the whole looked upon as a species of serf, and treated accordingly. Their transactions with the traders must be done secretly, or everything would be stolen from them.

D 224 411 In hunting the elephant the Andorobbo use a peculiar weapon. In shape it is like the rammer of a cannon, the heavy head being intended to give additional weight in dealing a blow. In the thickened part is placed a weapon like a short but thick arrow, fifteen inches long, the head of the arrow being smeared over with the deadly poison of the mserja. The whole spear is little short of eight feet. With this the

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

[pages preceding p. 167 not processed]

SECTION VII

THE MASAI EXTRA PROVINCIAL DISTRICT

GENERAL NOTE

MASAILAND constitutes an Extra Provincial District under an Officer in Charge, holding the powers of a Provincial Commissioner, with two District Commissioners, stationed at Kajiado and Narok. The legislation in force in other parts of the Colony applies to the District, but the Outlying District Ordinance, No. 25 of 1902, has also been applied to it, in order to provide a means for controlling immigration from other tribes, a matter to which, as will be subsequently shown, much importance is attached by Masai tribesmen. The area of the District is 15,177 square miles and the population was estimated in 1945 at 53,000.[1] The density is thus 3.4 per square mile. 631 [31] [61]

The Masai District contains in its more northern section a considerable area of land which ranks for agricultural or pastoral purposes with parts of the neighbouring Highlands reserved for European use, though it is to be noted that the rainfall here is more variable than in the central part of the Highlands. The lower parts of the District have a lower and even more variable rainfall, with the result that there is an area, conservatively estimated at a little over 3,000 square miles, which is arid and for all practical purposes waterless.[2] But the value of the large area held by the Masai is not to be judged by its agricultural possibilities, for if the Masai no longer justify the character assigned to them by history as "a virile tribe of predatory nomads," they have at all events maintained their traditional habit of life as a pastoral people, and though there is some cultivation in the Nairage-Ngare area and also near Ngong, this forms only an infinitesimal part of the District, and is for the most part carried out by Kikuyu immigrants on behalf of the local Masai. 311 132 311 563

It is of interest to note that in 1904 the number of cattle was estimated at only 50,000 and the sheep and goats at 600,000. This may have been an underestimate, though it must be realized that the country was still to some extent suffering from the effects of the great rinderpest epidemic of 1890, which had entailed such catastrophic results both on the numbers and the military power of the Masai. By 1914 the estimate had gone up to 600,000 head of cattle and over a million and half sheep and goats.[3] The Masai herds suffered severely in the drought of 1933 and 1934, when their losses of cattle were estimated at over a quarter of a million. But a recent estimate has put the number of cattle at over 700,000, with 800,000 sheep and a large number of donkeys. The further increase in the number of cattle is to some extent affected by the existence of fly, which is prevalent on the South Kavirondo boundary, in the extreme west, and also in the middle area, where the Kajiado and Narok Districts join. But if the present estimate of the stock is correct, 233 195 [131] 471 233

[1] Kenya Colony Blue Book, 1946, page 252.
[2] There is a summary of the physical conditions of the district by L. James at page 49 of Africa, January, 1939, together with a useful bibliography.
[3] Administrative and Political History of the Masai Reserve, G. R. Sandford, 1918, page 3.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

the Masai must, considering their small numbers, have a larger potential capital per head than any other tribe in East or Central Africa.

Practically the whole population may be said to belong to the Masai tribe, though there are a small number of immigrants, numbering rather less than one thousand in all, ninety per cent. being Kikuyu. As shown above, they are for the most part employed by the Masai in the cultivation of the small area of land used for agricultural purposes. There has been a certain amount of intermarriage, but the penetration of the country by the Kikuyu is viewed with distrust by the Masai, and three Alien Committees have lately been established in order to consider measures for the control of alien immigration. An area of 47 square miles (known locally as Olenguruone) within the Masai Native Land Unit was set aside in 1942 for "squatters" displaced from European farms, most of whom are Kikuyu.[1] But this area will remain politically separate, and it will not affect the position of the Masai as a homogeneous population.

Early records refer to the existence in Masailand of a number of Dorobo, of whom Masai tradition speaks as the original inhabitants of the country. When Europeans first came into contact with the Masai, part of the Dorobo were still leading a primitive life in the bush, while part served the Masai as herdsmen and in some cases had small herds of their own. These people have, however, now been absorbed by the Masai and are not readily distinguishable from them.

THE MASAI TRIBE

Reference will be found in the Chapter on Tanganyika to the circumstances in which the Masai tribe, as it existed in 1890, was cut in two by the international boundary drawn between Kenya and Tanganyika.[2] The area thus left to the Masai in Kenya, now estimated at 15,177 square miles, compares with the area of 18,470 square miles now held by the Tanganyika Masai, with an estimated population of 32,168, and a density of 1.7 per square mile. The proceedings as the result of which the Kenya Masai were in 1911 placed in occupation of their present area have had a prominent place in the controversies connected with the alienation of native lands in the Colony, but it will be sufficient to refer here to the facts as summarized in paragraphs 635 to 674 of the Report of the Land Commission of 1933.[3] The Masai lands are now held as a Native Land Unit under the terms of the Native Lands Trust Ordinance 28 of 1938 and the Kenya (Native Areas) Order in Council 1939. There is, however, one fact which differentiates the Masai lands from those occupied by other tribes under the terms of this legislation, or those held by the Tanganyika Masai. Whatever the judicial value of the Agreements made with the Kenya Masai in 1904 and 1911, it is held, in the words used by the Governor of Kenya in 1946, that they "have the validity of a Treaty."[4] If so, the terms of the Order confirming the Agreement of 1911 constitute a moral obligation to the Government to reserve these lands for the exclusive use of the Masai, "so long

[1] Report on Native Affairs 1939–45, page 54. But see also the Agrarian Problem in Kenya, 1947, page 14 for more recent developments. Most of the Kikuyu are said to have abandoned their lands in the Settlement.

[2] Chapter III, page 282.

[3] Cmd 4556 (1934) page 185. For fuller details see Chapter III of Administrative and Political History of the Masai Reserve, previously referred to.

[4] Despatch No. 4 dated 17 April, 1946. The Agreement of 1911 is printed at page 577 of the Report of the Land Commission previously referred to.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

divided into two sections, the agricultural ('l-oikop) and the pastoral Masai, there now remains in Tanganyika little vestige of the former.[1] A few scattered plots are cultivated by Masai, but it is with the help of alien labour. For the rest, there a little cultivation by the small Sonjo Tribe (3,521 in the 1948 Census), a people living below the Rift Wall who have not been assimilated by the Masai. The only other tribe in the District, the Dorobo (believed to number about 1,500), who are known traditionally as the "hunting people," are possibly a survival of the original inhabitants, and have become practically a servile class to the Masai.

As a pastoral people the Masai are semi-nomadic in the sense that they move with their herds in order to avail themselves of the seasonal variations in water supplies, so that they in effect practise a system of rotational grazing. They are credited with the possession of three-quarters of a million cattle and large herds of sheep and goats, but the number of their stock is subject to large and rapid variation in times of drought, and moreover East Coast fever, rinderpest and other diseases take a heavy toll of them. In the late 'eighties a combination of drought and disease almost wiped out their cattle and greatly reduced the numbers of the people themselves. Though like many other African pastoral tribes they make a cult of their cattle, they show little interest in improving their quality, and in the past have been prepared to dispose of them only in so far as they might need cash for their Poll Tax or for the few articles of food required to satisfy a people whose ordinary diet is limited to milk, meat and blood. To some extent, this position was improved during the recent War, which provided a stimulus to production of beasts for sale.

From an economic point of view therefore the Masai present a difficult problem, since the contribution they make to the economy of the Territory does little to justify their occupation of so extensive an area as twelve million acres. From a social point of view they are also a problem, owing to their reluctance to avail themselves of facilities for education. And as will be further explained in the following pages, they present an equally difficult problem of native administration, for their social system is still reminiscent of a period when their chief concern was in fighting or raiding at the expense of their neighbours.

THE FORMATION OF THE SYSTEM OF NATIVE AUTHORITIES

As already indicated, the diverse social and economic conditions prevailing in different parts of the Province have been reflected in the variety of forms taken by the Native Authorities as now constituted. Before, however, proceeding to describe these in detail, it will be convenient to give here a statement which summarizes their chief features. See page 284.

THE MOSHI NATIVE AUTHORITIES

In the Moshi District the present formation of the Chagga Native Authorities is the result of a somewhat radical reorganization carried out in 1946. Up to that time the Chagga had been split up over nineteen chiefdoms, divided from each other not only physically by the deep ravines of the mountain side, but also politically by the obstinate clan feuds and jealousies of past days. These chiefdoms were all treated as of equal standing, though their jurisdiction varied from 11,500 taxpayers in the Machame chiefdom to 400 in the Mrao. They were united in a Council of Chagga Chiefs, which was conspicuous mainly

[1] The Masai, A. C. Hollis, 1905, page xi and xiv.

[pp. 284-286 not processed]

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

791 success in war, adequate rainfall, or immunity from disease, both human and bovine. Such a laibon of course retains his private practice. The final stage is when a laibon is invited to superintend and bless ceremonal affecting the whole tribe, such as circumcision, promotion of warriors, standing down, etc. Such a one retains the duties of the two previous stages, and is in fact the Chief Medicine Man of the section or tribe. This is the status which the term laibon popularly connotes, and is the sense in which the word is used throughout this paper, unless otherwise indicated.

It is very possible that the office of laibon developed by progression through the three stages outlined above. It may further be assumed that the process took two or three generations to complete, before the laibon was fully installed in a position of power. For this reason the immediately pre-European conception of the office was not as old as the genealogy would at first indicate.

It is possible to quote examples of practising laibonok, representing each of the three types of medicine man. Any number of the Engidong clan is credited with a certain amount of supernatural power. Not all exercise their gifts, but as an example of one who did, Kakenya, murdered at Longido in 1939, may be quoted. In addition to the Engidong clan, however, numerous aliens, particularly Kikuyu, often build up reputations as private practitioners.

[614] [778] [563]

Of the second type, those who cater for various groups, the example of Oruma (22) springs to mind. He probably exercised 'group' functions in the supply of charms for cattle raiding, but was brought to book when he tried to usurp the privileges of the elders in the matters of tribal ceremonial. Taiko (18) was doubtless another member of this class, supplying raiding medicine to the moran of the Longido area. Both these people are of the Engidong clan, but as an example of one who is not, one can quote ole Shongo, of the Ngorongoro Highland area. He is a Kikuyu, and his activities are not fully understood. He was believed responsible for a series of raids in 1933, and has still got a reputation, known beyond the bounds of his particular area, as a powerful laibon.

[563]

The third type, the acknowledged laibon of the tribe or group of sections, must always be a member of the Engidong clan. One frequently hears that in olden times all the Masai acknowledged one laibon, but Mbatian (9) had a fellow practitioner, if not a rival, in his brother Mako (10), and it is more than probable that many other figures, important competitors to the known holders of office, have been lost in the mists of antiquity. The phrase "all Masai acknowledged one laibon" requires also a further qualification, as the rival sub-tribes, Uasingishu, Kwavi, etc., had their own medicine men.

The office is hereditary, insofar as the holders must be members of the Engidong clan, and preferably close relations of the deceased laibon. More distant relatives confine themselves to activities of the two inferior laibon types. There are, however, no definite rules of succession, the

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Those candidates who are eligible to take part in the ceremony assemble on the day fixed for the proceedings. They come from all parts of the Masai country, north, south, east, and west, as there is only one ox-seizing ceremony in the whole of Masai country before a new age-group proceeds to initiation and circumcision. They wear ordinary everyday dress and carry sticks. The ox is brought into the village by the elders in charge of the ceremony, and the boys are lined up some distance away. A signal is given, and immediately the boys race to the ox, each boy endeavouring to get a firm grip of the ox's horns or of the hump. As soon as two boys have succeeded in gripping these parts firmly, all those boys of the same clan protect him with their sticks, while all the others endeavour to force the boys to release their grip. Should they do so and should boys of another clan succeed in taking their place, they in their turn are attacked by the other clan and defended by their own. After a time the elders stop the contest, and those who succeeded in keeping their grip are greatly lauded. The two boys who actually seized the horns and hump respectively will be renowned for their success for the rest of their lives. It is a recognised thing that during the contest very many individuals receive more or less serious wounds. 881 564 [484] [614]

As soon as the contest has been stopped, the ox is slaughtered and eaten by all present at the ceremony, and the hide is cut up into small strips, in each of which a hole is cut, and a strip put as a ring on the middle finger of the right hand of each of the boys who participated in the contest. If any skin remains over after each boy has been thus decorated, it is cut into a long thin thong, which is given to a boy candidate of the Lukumai sub-clan (i.e. the sub-clan who provided the ox). This boy is called olobolosi elapteng. This thong must never be lost or parted with, but the small strips of skin placed on the boys' fingers must be removed a day or two later and thrown down in that part of the boy's mother's house where the calves sleep. [301] [230] [614]

When this ceremony is over the boys go to their own homes to await their turn for circumcision.

Circumcision.—The candidates are not circumcised in groups at local centres, but individually at their own homes, and as the number of operators is limited, candidates may have to wait for anything up to two years before their turn comes. The operators travel from district to district, visiting all the villages where there are candidates, and circumcising them at their own homes. During the interval between the end of the ox-seizing ceremony (before which none of the candidates may be circumcised) and the time when his turn to be circumcised arrives, each boy goes back to his cattle-herding and carries on with the normal routine life of an uninitiated boy. 881

The operators who circumcise the boys are never true Masai, but invariably "Wandorobo" living in Masai country, but no explanation of this could be obtained except that it had always been so from the beginning. [563]

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

death taking place within the village. This means that as soon as a young or middle-aged person shows any signs of approaching death, he (or she) is hastily carried out into the bush outside the village and left to die there. 761 [763]

Should the death of a young or middle-aged person occur within the village the body must be carried out and thrown into the bush. The proper person to perform this last service is a son of the deceased, but if no son is available the body must be moved by a stranger (usually a member of the Wandorobo tribe, who is always willing to perform this work), and the fee for doing so is a heifer. The village must be moved as soon as possible after such an occurrence, but otherwise there is no purification ceremony. 764 [763]

Burial of Old People.—Only an old man, or a woman past child-bearing, is allowed to die peacefully in a hut in the village, and the body is then buried in the following way:—As soon as death occurs a ram or bullock is slaughtered and the fat used to anoint the body and clothes (sewn skins) of the individual. All ornaments are removed, and the burying-place is then prepared as follows: A spot in the bush not far from the village is selected and cleared and a hollow square of rough logs is then built up. This structure is usually about four feet square and three feet high. On the ground inside the structure the deceased's sleeping-skin is placed, and on it the body is laid (with the knees sufficiently bent to fit the space). Men are placed lying on their right sides, women on their left. The body is then covered by the various skin dresses owned by the deceased and left, no attempt being made to cover over the top of the structure with wood or earth in order to protect the body from scavenging animals. 766

About a month after the burial has taken place the village must be moved, with the exception of the hut in which the death took place. The hut is left to fall into ruin. Meanwhile, until the move takes place, any other occupants of the hut continue to live in it as before. 768

Ceremony at the Burial-place.—On the day that the village is finally abandoned every member of the village must file past the burial-place and the older people stop and drink beer and slaughter an ox there. My informants, however, insist that this is not a sacrifice to the departed spirit as among some other tribes, and as proof pointed out that they did not pour out any beer at the grave or leave any offering of meat. 769

Inheritance.—A man's possessions all pass to his male children, but if they are too young to take charge of them themselves the deceased's own brother, who acts in loco parentis (see Widowhood) looks after the property for them. In return for this he is allowed to retain a very small percentage of the stock. 438

A man's personal ornaments are put on his various children about two months after his death, with a certain amount of ceremonial and much beer-drinking. His weapons are kept for his sons until such time as they shall require them.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

233 232 villages the shields are removed to allow mating to take place with the owner's own cows. The same method of preventing mating is used with rams, but to a much lesser extent. If a man has several good rams he keeps shields on a few of them at a time in order to use his rams in rotation.

233 [362] Blood-letting.—Among the Masai, blood is a staple article of diet. It is either drunk hot and fresh, or cooked with bits of fat and meat into a "black-pudding," or else mixed with fresh milk and allowed to curdle.

In order to obtain blood every sheep and every head of cattle is bled at intervals. Cattle are bled by one method and sheep by another. In the case of cattle, the animal is seized and held, and a thong is then tied round its neck until the vein at the side of the neck swells up under the pressure of the blood. The vein is then [413] punctured by means of a special instrument which may be termed a "blood-letting arrow." The blood-letting arrow consists of a small stocky shaft into the end of which a small flat blade is inserted. This blade has a curved edge and is very sharp. This arrow is used with a special bow which is always small and usually very roughly made. The arrow is not shot from a distance, but placed against the swollen vein. The bow string is only pulled back very slightly and when released drives the arrow just far [415] enough to open the vein. The blood is caught in a gourd and the animal released.

Sheep are bled by a different method; the animal is held and a small incision is made just above one eye and blood drawn off.

362 527 Meat-feasts.—Young men and old alike indulge in frequent meat-feasts, meat being a staple article of diet. No men may eat meat inside the villages, so meat-feasts take place either in special huts built at a little distance from the villages, or in a cave if there is one near by.

There are certain rules and regulations concerning meat-feasts, as follows:—

(1) No man may eat meat that has been touched by a woman.

[331] [543] (2) No Masai man may slaughter cattle himself. In every case a man of the Wandorobo tribe must be called in to kill the animal, and he must be rewarded by being given a part of a fowlog.

(3) The neck, stomach and some of the intestines are always given to the women, who may come and fetch them. The breast must be given to the man to whom the slaughtered animal belonged.

(4) During a meat-feast, some at least of the feasters must sleep in the hut or cave where the meat is, and it is usual for all to do so. If by any chance the fire should go right out in the course of the night, it would be considered a very serious matter indeed. In such a case no one inside the hut may go out by the normal entrance, but must break through the walls (in the case of a cave they must break through the brushwood screen which is invariably built across part of the entrance to the mouth of the cave), and all the meat that is left over must be deserted and left to the hyenas. The breaking of this rule [illegible] to result invariably in the death of the miscreant.

Milking.—Milking is usually done by women and girls, but uninitiated boys may also milk. Milk is either drunk fresh or is curdled by mixing with blood, or is curdled alone by leaving for two or three days. 234 462 252

Raiding.—Frequent raids on neighbouring tribes are carried out by the warrior classes, and the cattle and sheep so obtained are some of them distributed to a warrior's parents and friends and some kept for himself. When cattle are raided from another clan or sub-clan in order to repay a murder (see Murder), all maimed, blind, and otherwise damaged cattle are returned immediately afterwards, for to keep these would certainly bring bad luck on the raiders. 721 [682] [907]

PART X.—MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Fire.—Fire for special occasions is made by means of the hand-drill method, and women may not make fire by this means. Normally, fire is obtained from the ashes of the previous day's fire or from a few live coals borrowed from a neighbouring hut. The first fire in all new huts must be made with fire-sticks. 372

Murder.—Should a man kill a member of his own sub-clan there is no punishment. "What would be the use of taking a fine from one's own sub-clan?" If, however, a man of another sub-clan is killed, then the sub-clan of the murdered man raid the murderer's sub-clan and try to seize cattle in compensation. Usually a free fight takes place and if, in the course of this, a man of the murderer's sub-clan is killed, the matter is considered all square, and any raided cattle are returned. In the course of such a raid all sorts of cattle are driven off, but all the blind and maimed ones are returned next morning (see Raiding, above). 682

Smiths.—Among the Masai smiths are considered "bad." There are smiths in each clan, and the business is purely a family one handed down from father to son. Young boys of smiths' families are initiated alone, and once initiated go straight to the business of smithing and may take no part in the life of the ordinary warrior or warriors. Smiths are considered to be considerably lower in the social scale than even the Wandorobo. A Dorobo can leave his hunting life and rank as a true Masai if he so chooses, but never a smith. 234 564 [823]

If a smith comes and sleeps at a village he is given a bed, but must sleep on the wrong side of the sleeping hide (i.e. the rough flesh side). Smiths may only marry with smiths' families. No Masai would dream of marrying or having any kind of sexual intercourse with a smith's daughter (Wandorobo girls may be married by Masai, but not vice versa), nor can a smith marry an ordinary Masai girl. Smiths make spears and small knives, cattle bells and iron ornaments, but never swords, which are always bought from the Kikuyu. Should a Masai buy the cattle or sheep of a smith he must dip them in the river before adding them to his flock. [594] [812] [823] [811] [812] [438]

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL.12 Masai FL.12
Kenya

FURTHER NOTES ON THE MASAI OF KENYA COLONY.

(With Plates XIII-XV.)

By D. Brunton Fox.

Preface.

My excuse for writing the following is that in the capacity of District Officer, Kenya Colony, I have administered the Kenya Masai for periods aggregating rather more than three years between 1925 and 1930. Being able to speak the language fluently, and having observed their life and habits from day to day, I can supply a certain amount of information supplementary to the notes recently published in the Journal (pp. 185-202) by Mr. Leakey and the earlier work of Sir A. C. Hollis (The Masai, by A. C. Hollis, Clarendon Press, 1905). I have avoided repeating facts already recorded by these two authorities except where I can add to them or correct them.

In the following notes the first part consists mainly of additions to and comments on Mr. Leakey's article. Later on, I have dealt with other customs with which I am conversant. By the Masai I mean the people who comprise the territorial sections enumerated in the age-group table below. There are other tribes sometimes called Masai, i.e. the Uasin-Gishu, Arusha, Samburu Njampe and Ngurumana, of doubtful origin and divergent customs to whom this article does not refer.

The Masai are a secretive people, suspicious of strangers, and unwilling for the most part to discuss with them their customs. But there live amongst them a number of natives of other tribes such as Kikuyu, who have been adopted by the Masai. Such folk are very ready to expatiate on Masai customs, but their testimony is often misleading because it is only half the truth.

Until recently I had no idea of setting down in writing the facts which I know about the tribe. I made myself acquainted with their language and customs simply because, without such knowledge, I should have been largely unable to appreciate their point of view or make decisions and give advice of value to them.

As there are many things still to learn about the Masai, I have omitted the sections on which my information is as yet insufficiently verified.

Childhood. Games.—Little girls sometimes play with dolls. These are made readily by their mothers of mud, which they dress. I have seen a little girl dressing her doll with a bit of cloth, giving it milk from a tiny gourd, suckling it at her breast and rocking it to sleep, just as a European child might do. The Masai name for a doll is Ilo-pirai e o-nong'ap, which means child of mud. (See Hollis, p. 301.)

634 The name of the main group 'Loodo-nongi' is very liable to be confused with that of the sub-class 'Loodo-Kidoto' because the former means "the blood-red buffaloes and the latter the blood-red cattle."

It is further difficult, if not impossible, to know whether to treat some of the divisions as clans or sub-clans.

The two words used by the Masai are Ol-piroto (the clan) and Ilchikiboni (the sub-clan). But these words are not much help to the enquirer, because the Masai use each to some extent interchangeably.

Hollis, p. 300, speaks of a group of Masai called 'L-Oikop or D-Lumbwa. I have been unable to discover these people. The tribe called Lumbwa, which lives to the west of the Masai area, is quite different in language and customs from the Masai, being similar to the Nandi.

[91] Some clans are associated with certain totems as under :—

'L Aiwa of Oiwanan Orok (the black zebra ?), 'Laghwanan of Amoni Sangai Orok (the thin black snake), D Dawanto of Amoni Sero (the brown snake), D Ilchilion all snakes.

977 Adoption.—The Masai like to adopt children, and even grown men, of other clans and other tribes, who may help them to herd their cattle. Of recent years they have also shown a tendency to adopt Kikuyu cultivators to plant maize for them in the more fertile areas Naivasi Sagare and D Ilchil, west of the Rift valley. [96] [96] An adopted person is called O-Kiaga. Having been adopted he is regarded as being a member of the family and clan of his adoption and has nothing to do with his former clan. He may even marry a woman of the sub-clan of his natural father, provided that it is not also the sub-clan of his adoption. But he may not marry or have sexual intercourse with a woman of the sub-clan of his adoption. Accordingly, an adopted Kikuyu may call himself a Masai, and even though he may be unable to speak the Masai language he is not telling a lie according to Masai ideas.

When a man or boy is adopted as a herdsman he is treated by the head of the family as one of his own sons. He is given his head of cattle and is helped to marry a wife. But if or when he starts to leave his adopted family he must go empty handed as he came, leaving behind him such cattle, wives and children as he may have acquired under adoption.

[98] An adopted man takes an inferior position socially to a well-born Masai. He would not in practice hold any important position in the tribe nor be able to marry a well-born Masai woman.

941 942 Inheritance. Arrangements of Wives' Huts.—Before dealing with inheritance it is necessary to explain briefly the arrangement of huts in a village in order that the terms "right of the gate" and "left of the gate" may be understood.

13 Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Mawi FL12
Mawi E-4
Talaya FL126

THE NORTHERN NILO-HAMITES[1]

INTRODUCTION

The Nilo-Hamitic peoples included in this volume form, in the main, two comparatively compact colored groups: the Nandi, who live on the western edge of the Kenya highlands, and to the east of them, the Masai, whose land formerly stretched north and south for 400 miles along the Great Rift Valley. The Nandi-speaking tribes, homogeneous in culture, are derived from a common stock, and their culture has in very a good deal to common with that of the Masai. Distributed through the high lands occupied by the Nandi and Masai are the scattered hunters of Okiek, more commonly known as Dorobo or Wandorobo, the forest-dwelling hunters who preceded the present native inhabitants of Kenya Colony and northern Tanganyika Territory. The racial position of these Dorobo is uncertain: some people regard them (I believe erroneously) as early Nilo-Hamites; but since they have derived their present language and much of their culture from the Nandi, they are entitled to a place among the Nilo-Hamites.

The Tatoga division of the Nandi group is separated from the rest of the Nandi speakers, and lies close to the edge of the southern Masai; these people are included with the Nilo-Hamites on the score of language alone, since at present there seems to be no evidence of physical or cultural connection between them and the rest of the Nandi group. The languages, however, are considerably related, and therefore justify their inclusion here.

The third group, described as "unclassified," has been included because the peoples embraced by it live on the fringe of the Nilo-Hamites and would otherwise have been left out of the Ethnographic Survey altogether, since they cannot be fitted into any East African group under any existing scheme of classification. For these reasons it is considered that their appearance here is justifiable. The Teuso and Kuki languages are sometimes described as Hamitic; but this attribution is by no means certain, and has it yet been possible to classify their languages in spite of the availability of material, and for the present they must be left as "unclassified." The Dadogo are "bushmen"—wild hunting people of the bush and the Sandawe seem to be analogous to the Bushmanoids. There have a number of links with the Dadiaga and Dahalonga of South-West Africa; but they belong territorially to East Africa.

The majority of the Northern Nilo-Hamites are pastoralists practising (with the exception of the Pastoral Masai) a little agriculture, intensely conservative, devoted to their cattle, and regarding the rest of the world with contempt, a condition from which even now many of them are but slowly emerging. These characteristics help to explain such things as the absence of any extensive development of trade, and the lack of territorial ends among many of them by aboriginal efforts. In pre-European days they not only lay outside the slave trade, but largely controlled the ordinary coast trade to the highlands, hence Swahili did not appear among them.

NOMENCLATURE

1. Name Group

There is no general term which is used by the people themselves to cover the main Nandi-speaking group, but (1) all Dorobo call themselves Okiek, sing. Okiek, though they have no "tribal" sense of their own; (2) the term Tatoga(n) is a group name covering eight tribes of which the Kwanhaya are the largest.

[1] For the relationship of the Northern Nilo-Hamites to the other Nilo-Hamitic Peoples, see Ethnographic Survey, East Central Africa, Part IV.

[2] The reason for choosing this term "people" are given in my paper "The social institutions of the Dorobo," Anthropos, 1951, 46-91, p. 1.

/12 cont./

In connection with the ecmatic view of the three Maasai branches the following is to be considered. The band that immigrated last, the true Maasai, have kept themselves quite pure as a race. They practically never submitted to the kidnapping of women and children in war, otherwise commonly everywhere in Africa, they did not marry Negroes and did not take Negroes into their community.

Photo 12 plate.

Ill. 1. Three Maasai women.

Therefore they more closely show the racial characteristics peculiar to the Maasai people. The same was true of the Wakwafi until the time when they became sedentary. Then, however, they needed not only replacements for their lost cattle, but also many hands trained in the cultivation of the soil. For this reason on war expeditions they dragged off, not only the livestock of the enemy, as before, but also the women and children. The degree of mixture between Wakwafi and Negroes is very different in the individual [illegible]. [i.e., the Maasai, Wakwafi and the Wandorobo —danlyet]

/112 cont./

564 326 192 784 578 because he thinks a misfortune will be conjured up by it; it is feared that a lion would get into the kraal or the camp at night or that the enemy would carry out an attack. To call someone "ol kenoni" is regarded by the other Masai as a strongly insulting invective expressing contempt.

564 326 779 829 583 The contempt toward blacksmiths is based on the view that the blacksmiths are unclean. God forbade human beings the shedding of blood. By making weapons, the chief product of the blacksmiths among primitive peoples, they induce transgression of the divine commandment, work against the latter. Hence they are condemned by God, and therefore they are regarded by their fellowmen as unclean, contemptible, bringing misfortune. Daily observation also teaches -- so the Masai say -- that God does not love blacksmiths, for a blacksmith actually never becomes prosperous; if he should happen to become wealthy, however, he would soon die, without being able to enjoy his property.

564 326 142 It should expressly be brought out here that, despite all the efforts devoted to it, I have not been able to determine the slightest somatic difference between blacksmiths and non-blacksmiths and that all non-blacksmiths questioned by me (there were several hundred) described the blacksmiths as pure, unmixed members of the Masai people, which the blacksmiths themselves also maintain without exception (2).

564 326 197 198 114 2. Obviously the Masai blacksmiths speak the Masai Language and not another one of their own, as had been supposed from the statement by C. Hollis in his book, The Masai, their language and folklore, Oxford, 1905, p. 331. Hollis says there /the quotation is in English/: "The smiths have their own language, which, although a corruption of Masai, is not understood by the ordinary Masai. Not all of /this footnote is continued on the next page in the original source/ them can speak this language; it is only a certain number of them who know it." This statement by Hollis is er-

[563]

/115 cont./

/footnote 5 cont./ plained by the fact that a few El lumbwa blacksmiths also live among the Masai blacksmiths. They speak their own dialect, which, of course, is unintelligible to the non-blacksmith El masai ("ordinary Masai," as Hollis designates them), who, indeed, scarcely come in contact with them.

The opinion of many a European, that the /115/ relative diligence of the blacksmith might have brought to him the scorn of that type from the non-blacksmiths not inclined to work, is also a rude error. I have become acquainted with a large number of El lemomo who for about two decades have not had a hammer in their hands and very many who have not even made an attempt to learn the trade, but rather live entirely like other Masai. All these, however, were despised exactly the same as their forging fellow caste members.

Like the blacksmiths themselves, the products of their art, the weapons and utensils made by them, are regarded as unclean. In order to take the uncleanness from them, the Masai rubs with fat every new object fetched from the blacksmith's shop, as well as his hands which have touched the still unclean object.

Even the reputation that a few armorers enjoy, on account of the excellence of their products changes nothing in their low social position. The most famous at the moment, old left-handed Kigumo from Ol bragga, an artist in his field, is just as despised as any other blacksmith. The Ol bragga people, however, jealously see to it that he does not also work for warriors of any other province or even for members of another people.

While the other kraals, tied to the presence of good pastures, are always moved with the disappearance of the latter, the blacksmith kraals remain for a long time in the same localities. The el lemomo have only very little livestock, but for their craft they need charcoal and ferruginous sand. They establish their homes where both are to be found nearby. The workshop (el ayyeri) is built close to the kraal. It consists of a grass roof resting on six to eight posts. In the center lies the hearth (el ndolelaye). The smith makes his tools as well as his some amongst them, and it is not difficult with a little practice to tell the particular division to which a Kikuyu belongs. Thus the people of Iriniri* have pronounced Masai features, and many of their chiefs are pure or half Masai by birth. This is due to the fact that when the Kikuyu invaded that district about forty years ago they found it occupied by the remnants of the Ahlipish and Dala-le-tenik Masai, who owing to famines, raids, and other causes were too much weakened to resist them. The two tribes therefore settled down peacefully side by side, and by intermarrying formed one people.

12:Dundas G-5 (ca. 1900) 1906 F14 Dorobo F14
Kikuyu F10
Masai F12A

Again, many of the Kikuyu clans claim descent from certain particular tribes; thus, the Angiro and Chakamaya clans say they are descended from the Sheka, the Akhendiko and Achera from the Kamba, the Aneka from the Chaga of Kilimanjaro. Anyone enquiring into the descent of those present at a meeting of Kikuyu elders will find an extraordinary number of different tribes represented. One is a Masai, another a Chaga, a third a Masai, a fourth a Sheka, a fifth a Dorobo, and so on.

The actual Kikuyu themselves are said to have come from two tribes called the Ilangulon and Ngumba, both of which still exist as tribes somewhere beyond the Masai country, north of Mount Kenia.

I cannot speak from experience of the Ilangulon, but I have met a native of Ngumba whose appearance reminded my companion of a Kikuyu. This man, who said he had never seen a white man before, told me that his country lay beyond Masai and that he had come here to visit relatives. These same Ngumba are believed to have been originally Dorobo, and Karari, one of the paramount chiefs of the Kikuyu, who is himself a Dorobo, claims descent from them. The Ngumba of the present day are probably analogous to the Kikuyu, i.e., they are a mixture of Dorobo and some other tribe or tribes.

Many absolutely foreign tribes have had relations in Kikuyu for shorter or longer periods. A tribe of exact people called Ilgo are stated to have lived for many years on the Tana River, in what is now known as the Fort Hall District.† Samuel, Galla, Somaia, or some other similar people affected a very strong feeling in Kikuyu some fifty to seventy years ago. According to tradition they belonged to the Ilembolo, Ilgoni, and Kahumaroni clans,‡ and they had settlements at Ryori, Kaimbaka, Kijabe, Potsi Hills, and generally all over the Kikuyu country.

In these days the Ahlipish Masai occupied the Lelkipia Plateau, the Purko Masai were at Naivasha, the Kaputei in the Kidong Valley, and the Tarosero at Iriniri. The Dorobo, who were still the dominant tribe, occupied with the Kikuyu the present Kikuyu country.

With all these tribes the Samuel or Galla lived in a state of chronic warfare.

The Lorosa, a Kikuyu clan, and the Arwa, a Dorobo clan, unable to hold out any longer, migrated. The former have, it is said, preserved to this day their tribal identity and customs, and are still to be found somewhere in the vicinity of Kilimanjaro; the latter were Masai.§

The remaining tribes appealed for assistance against their oppressors to a great medicine man called Sogi (or, to give him his correct name, Sogoni), the grandfather of Lenana, the present Masai chief.

---

* The name Iriniri is said to be derived from Ilkaroro stock, my informant remarks. Tarosero is the name of the most important clan in this particular section of the Masai.

† Mr. Kelly informs me that the Ilgoja, who have intermarried with the Ilgo, a subtribe of the Wa-Kipsigis, have a tradition to the effect that they once lived on the Tana River.

‡ Resident in the Kikuyu, Ilgoniaki the Masai for Samuel and Galla.

§ Possibly the Arwa, who live on Mount Kenia in Kenyan Bull clans.

‡ Mr. Hobley the ex-country native clan name the most generally. According to Mr. Hobley the Ilembolo and Kahumaroni are known to the Galla as, Waaro, sing., Waqio.

21:Huxley Q.T-5 (no date) 1960 FL11 Luo
Masai FL12

133 Mau is the source of all the rivers watering the western half [137] of Massailand, Kipsigis and part of the Rift Valley. The birthplace of innumerable streams, it is, in theory, protected by its status as a forest reserve.

185 Looking out from the small yellow aircraft expertly handled
311 by June Wright, one of the best commercial pilots in East Africa, one could quickly see how different theory was from practice, here as elsewhere. In a forest reserve no one is allowed to fell trees, cultivate, start fires or graze livestock. In less than half an hour, I counted seventeen active fires and saw the shambles created by innumerable others. Whole ridgebacks of the mountain, sticking up like black spines, were as bare as slag-heaps and already runnelled and creased by gully erosion. Older fires were still smoking in some of these devastated areas; one could see the forest being eaten into like a great fur pelt attacked by moths.

As sure as fate, one day there will be no more water for cattle in the streams below. 'God is punishing us,' will say the Masai: but it will not be God, it will be themselves. The [233] streams are already shrinking and the Masai are driving their herds farther into the hills to find grazing. They cannot take cattle into forest and so they burn a way in. They are creeping upwards, spreading destruction as they go in order to escape the consequences of destruction they have already caused.

[222] Other fires are started by honey-hunters who burn down trees to smoke out the bees. Often, in the forest, you can see blackened hollow cedars and olives killed by fires tucked into the roots. If the foliage is dry and the wind right, the fire will spread and get out of hand.

563 And then there are 'acceptees': a clumsy term given to men of other tribes who are settling in Massailand, family by family, with the permission of Masai elders. They are tenants: but it is very unlikely that they will ever go.

In South Nyanza and in Kipsigis it is reckoned that upwards [167] of two thousand families a year are crossing the southern border into Massailand and Tanganyika. In recent years a
[582] good many Masai have married Kikuyu or Kamba wives
[342] because so many of their own women are sterile; at one time there was quite a trade in Kikuyu girl-children, exchanged for cattle.

21:Huxley Q.T-5 (no date) 1960 FL11 Luo
Masai FL12
Kenya FL1

cattle. The Kikuyu and Kamba have brought in the habit of eating ground maize. And so when a man of some other tribe asks a Masai elder if he may cultivate a patch of land, and offers in return to supply maize, the elder will often agree. The cultivator will clear his patch and grow a crop; next season, he will ask permission to bring his wife and family; soon his cooking-stones, his household goods, his thatched hut are installed; he is there, probably for ever. His daughters may grow up to marry Masai men. That is the way the Masai doom will overtake them—as a people, as a warrior race.

Some of these accepters, used to the cold, are creeping up into the Mau, burning the trees to make their shambas as they have done before in other places. Their actions are illegal, but there is no one to enforce the law and no one dares to do so. This country the Masai know to be theirs. If they agree to let people cultivate in the forest, who is the Government to gainsay them? Attempts to remove intruders might well be met by force, and that is a thing no Government dares to contemplate. It was an attempt to use force, after all, for the ultimate good of the people, that led to the Hola disaster. If the tenant were to be hurt, and the Masai to be angered, and a fracas to arise, denunciations of colonialist oppression and tyranny would thunder from the benches of the House of Commons and repercuss all through the Secretariat. So the Mau forests burn.

IV

From our camp on the Talek, a tributary of the Mara, Dr. Philip Glover showed us a little of a tsetse research project which combines the excitement of scientific discovery with that of tracking in the old-fashioned, footprint-in-the-sand way. A tough, enthusiastic and handsome young man called Jungle Smith, helped by several veterinary scouts, has cut traces in the bush to make a grid three miles square. Each trace has been cleared of vegetation so as to leave a path receptive to the footprints of animals.

Each morning, scouts patrol the grids with notebooks in which they enter every spoor they see. By about eleven o'clock

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

we have here primitive and undeveloped religious sentiment where the personality of the deity is hardly separated from striking natural phenomena, or remnants of some old cultus of the heavenly bodies, mountains, and tribal deities preserved in a hazy way by a military race which had not paid much attention to religion.

The Masai believe that ordinary persons die like cattle, and they throw away their corpses to be eaten by hyenas[1], in the revoltingly unceremonious way common to many East African tribes. Medicine men, however, and influential people are buried, and their souls are said to pass into snakes, which are respected in consequence. Many tribes on the Nile also reverence snakes. It is noticeable that death and misfortune are not attributed to witchcraft. The Laibon is not the same as the Witch Doctor of the Bantu tribes, and it is no part of his duties to detect witches.

As the Masai men will practically do nothing but fight or tend cattle, they are naturally dependent on others for all articles, including their arms, which cannot be manufactured by women. There is among them a special tribe of smiths, called Il-Kunono, who make iron weapons, but are treated as inferiors and not allowed to marry Masai women. A somewhat similar tribe are the Dorobo or hunters.

It would appear that the military organization, the aversion to hunting, to eating game or vegetable food, and to engaging in agriculture or any productive art are peculiarities specially developed by the Masai, though some of them have been imitated by other tribes. Another peculiarity is the shape of their houses—long low buildings constructed of poles, grass, and mud, and divided into rooms by partitions. Their other customs, however, seem to tally with those of the Latuka, Bari, and Dinka, as far as differences of residence and occupation permit. Remarkable points of agreement are the nudity of the men, the shaven heads of the women, extraction of the middle teeth of the lower jaw, resting in a standing position on one leg, drinking the blood from living animals, and spitting as a sign of affection or benediction.

Linguistic evidence points the same way, though ampler and clearer information about the languages of the Nile is desirable for purposes of comparison. It is no want of respect to the labours of Sir H. Johnston and others to say that the researches of Mr. Hollis have for the first time

[1] It has been suggested that this practice may be due to a desire not to contaminate the earth by burial, but Mr. Hollis could find no trace of this idea, although he carefully inquired.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

791 293 [753] hengei, nemweiyu, nōū. Nēji tosh 'M-Batyany il-tuñganak kumok to-'l-kuma lenye, neiteri nōū, neisho 'M-Batyany ol-chani, neishiu; kake mōosh Ol-Ōnana 'l-tuñganak amu ol-tuñgani oirōbi.

person sickens and dies. It is said that Mbatian often struck people with his club, and waited until they were about to die, when he gave them medicine and cured them. Lenana, however, is a gentle man and does not kill people in this manner.

Il-kunōno.

463 326 Meiyōlo 'l-Masaae pōkin áidoñgu 'remeta oo 'l-alema, kake en-gias oo-'l-kunōno, naa ninje ooidoñgu 'n-areta, neinyañgu 'l-kulikae pōkin.

325 Ore 'n-dōkitin náidoñgiabore 'l-kunōno to-'l-kūkwet naa o-seit, o ol-kiriáet, o ol-garamet, o en-gunei. Ore 'n-dōkitin náidoñgi naa 'l-tidii, oo 'n-dareta, oo 'n-dōlua, oo 'n-alulañgani, oo 'n-areta, oo 'n-gulye-tōkitin.

[439] Ore 'seghenge naasta too-'l-Asiumba eiayañgani, arahi eidoñg o-ainyai le-'l-keju le-Matapato.

326 564 Metii en-gisbōmi nemonta 'l-kunōno, kake nalo-kisbōmi naata 'l-kunōno kumok, atji inna-kisbōmi 'l-Kipuyōni.

Meiyam il-kulikae-Masaae 'n-deiye oo-'l-kunōno, amu ōjo

The smiths [1].

All Masai do not know how to make spears and swords; this is the work of the smiths. It is they who make the weapons, and the others purchase from them.

The smiths use in the forge a stone, a hammer, pincers, and bellows, and they make needles, bracelets, axes, anklets, weapons, and other things.

The iron which they work with they purchase from the Swahili, or they smelt the ore which they find in the bed of the Matapato river.

Every clan has its smiths; but there is one clan, the Kipuyoni, to which most men of this class belong.

The other Masai do not marry the daughters of the smiths, for it

564 191 [1] The Kuenos and Dorobo seem to hold much the same position among the Masai as the Tumaloda (smiths) and Ramia (hunters) among the Somali. No free Somali enters a smithy, or shakes hands with a smith; none takes a wife from this stock, or gives his daughter to a member of it. The Tumaloda are spread over the whole of Somaliland as the Kuenos over Masailand, and no instance is known of them giving up the trade. Still more debased and poorer are the Ramia, who, like the Dorobo, live by hunting game. Cp. Bulmer, The History of Kaabtoul, vol. ii, p. 250.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

torono. Il-kunōno ooiyama oopeny.

Ten eibuñg ol-Masaini endōki naibuñga duo ol-kunōni, anaa em-ḇere, anaa ol-alem, nepik e-ilata eng-aina, amu ṭjo torono ten eibuñg te-'ngaina aka.

Mosta ai 'l-kunōno 'n-giahu kumok anaa 'l-kulikae-Masaae; meinosare 'n-giahu. Tin idol ol-kunōni ñata 'n-giahu artam, naa kumok naleñg.

Eata 'l-kunōno o-rowi lenye ol-loo-'l-Masaae, kake eitawai; lemeniñg il-Masaae. Mme pikin oosta, e-matwa aka naata.

'Mōtio oo 'l-pukurto.

Eidim i-ñgurōyuk oo-'l-Masaae kulye ñitohire 'mōtio; nemeidim kulye, neinyuñgu ake too-'l-mosk.

Einyuñgu ai 'l-pukurto, arukí etum too-'miñgan.

Eidim ostimir en-gine ñitenye e-mōti naka.

Ore ten eitohir il-Masaae 'mōtio, neitohir in-gitonk oo 'n-gutini, nepik pikin in-gumuki y' eibuñgye ten edōto.

Ten epwo 'l-muran nayuñgiake, nepik en-gine pe etum eibuñga.

is not considered correct. The smiths marry amongst themselves. 321 564

If a Masai takes in his hand a spear or sword or other thing which a smith has held, he first of all oils his hand for it is considered improper for him to take it in his bare hand. [576]

The smiths are not rich in cattle like other Masai. They have no luck with cattle. If you find one possessing forty head, it is a very large number. [233]

The smiths have their own language, which, although a corruption of Masai, is not understood by the ordinary Masai. Not all of them can speak this language: it is only a certain number of them who know it. [198]

Earthenware pots and gourds.

Some Masai women are able to make earthenware pots; others who are unable to make them buy them from savages. 323 [439]

Gourds are also bought, or they are collected in the deserted kraals. [415]

One pot can be purchased for a goat. [435]

When the Masai make pots they make them in two sizes, big and small; these pots are also provided with handles[1] by which they can be picked up.

When warriors go to the woods to slaughter cattle, they carry their cooking-pots by a strip of hide fastened to the handles[2]. [482] [701]

[1] Lit. ears(?).

[2] For illustrations see Hinde, The Last of the Masai, p. 6[illegible].

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

residential place of the initiates, and the sirit which is a manifold grouping of comradeship.

The manyatta is the village where the initiates live in segregation from other people. Externally it does not differ from any ordinary village. Some authorities state that there is only one manyatta for each territorial section.[104] But FOX,[105] qualifying LEAKEY, states that this is only true for some special occasions as when all the initiates of one section come together to perform some special ceremonies, as, e. g., Uasin.

In the manyatta the initiates are assisted by their mothers who do the housework, and by some uninitiated girls (ya sandja or ditto)[106] who are there mostly for their sexual pleasure.[107] Uninitiated boys may also live in the manyatta for the menial works and for tending cattle.[108]

The groupings named sirit, pl. isirit, are formed, according to WHITEHOUSE,[109] at a meeting called by the ingobir when it is decided to build the manyatta. Membership of the sirit is a matter of free choice. An initiate is free to join any sirit, and he is free to change it for another soon after his first election. But if he does so when the manyatta has been formed, he "incurs the bitter resentment" of his sirit-mates, and he may even be fined for that.

As far as numbers go, WHITEHOUSE states that "groups of 5 (initiates) will go together to join the same company" (sirit).[110] MERKER, however, says that the inhabitants of a single manyatta

[104] MERKER, l. c., p. 83; LEAKEY, l. c., p. 188; HOBLEY, l. c., p. 91 writes that "every section has usually some three favourite districts, in each of which is a village, called 'manyatta'".

[105] FOX, l. c., p. 431.

[106] MERKER, l. c., p. 83.

[107] Although the sexual life of the initiates with these girls is promiscuous and free, full sexual intercourse is strongly condemned.

[108] According to MERKER, l. c., p. 118, the initiates who belong to the smith trade usually do not share the village with the other initiates, but have their own villages and the girls who live with them are from families of the same trade. The smith initiates organize their own raids, but because they are few their booty is always small and they are easily deprived of it by other warriors.

[109] WHITEHOUSE, l. c., p. 180.

[110] WHITEHOUSE described the sirit as based on the class. The MK, ob, p. 6, states that "manyatta is inhabitated by the warrs of one particular class". It seems, however, that this is not a fixed principle, and certainly does not obtain with the Kisongo. Cf. FOREMAN, l. c., p. 24.

634 162 581 583 Sighirori of the Engidongi.

The Sighirori of the Engidongi inhabit the country in the neighbourhood of the Ngong Hills and En Donyo Narok. To this division belong the medicine-men of the L'Aiser Gilata of whom Seggi is now the chief. The Division is estimated to possess a population of 1,900 of whom 120 are Murran, 28,000 head of cattle, 60,000 sheep and 300 donkeys.

583 [194] Il Dale Lekuruk.

The Il Dale Lekuruk came from Laikipia in 1912 and are sometimes known as the Nyiri Masai. They have a considerable admixture of Kikuyu blood in them. They inhabit generally the neighbourhood of En Donyo Narok and their population is estimated at 70, including some 75 Murran. They are said to possess 6,000 head of cattle, 20,000 sheep and 75 donkeys. Their Murran are divided into two "Siritu" named Il Tweto and Seure.

Kaputiei.

The Kaputiei are to be found in the neighbourhood of the Nyiri Desert. Their population is estimated at 2,600 including 175 Murran, and their possessions at 30,000 head of cattle, 100,000 sheep and 400 donkeys. Their Murran are divided into four "Siritu" whose names are Il Mokesen, Il Sejusili, Il Kidesmai and Il Sogoe.

Sighirori of Laikipia.

The Sighirori of Laikipia inhabit the country to the north of Kilimanjaro, which country is watered by the Engare Rongai, Kikaleiwa, Naromoru, Ol ol Turesh and Rombo streams. The population of this division is estimated to number about 2,000 of whom 90 are Murran. These are divided into two "Siritu," named Il Kitoli and Il Sejusili. The live-stock possessions are said to number 60,000 head of cattle, 172,000 sheep and 500 donkeys.

563 Wandorobo.

In addition to the Masai, there are considerable numbers of Wandorobo ("Il Torobo") living in the Masai Reserve. Their numbers are probably not less than three or four thousand, and many of them possess considerable herds of cattle, and live the life of ordinary Masai, from whom it is difficult to distinguish them. They may be conveniently divided into two classes, namely, those who live in the bush and forest, and those who possess cattle. The former possess little or no live-stock, and subsist almost entirely upon wild animals and honey, while the latter live in villages and subsist only to a very limited extent on game.

The former are to be found mainly in the neighbourhood of the Mau, but small parties of them are also met on the Uaso Nyiro, on the Lower Mara River, along the Sotik border, and in the Trans-Mara region. They live on tree rabbits and the smaller game animals, in rough shelters in the forests, or in the huts in some of the Masai villages.

The latter are to be found on the Uaso Nyiro, in the neighbourhood of Ol Alunga and Ol Doinyo-Lesha, on the western bank of the Mara River, and in the Sotik country. In all, they probably number about 1,000.

564 332 Il Kimono.

There exists in the reserve, a special tribe of smiths, somewhat similar to the Wandorobo, called Il-Kimono, who make iron weapons, but are treated as inferiors, and are not allowed to marry Masai women.

181 105 Temperament.

To conclude, the Masai are a listless, conservative, slothful people, inadequately governed by Councils of Elders, who admit themselves to be incompetent to deal with the die hard of warriors whose reason d'être has now disappeared, but who are still sufficiently insubordinate to render ineffective the commands of their seniors. They have been concentrated in one area, where they have amassed enormous herds of cattle of a poor quality, and countless sheep. No suitable means of employment has as yet been found for the males of the tribe as a whole, though they are experts in the care of stock, and once possessed fighting qualities of a savage nature, which spread the terror of their name far and wide. They have considerable latent powers of organization, shrewdness and ability, but these are largely discounted owing to their unreliability; they have always realized that it is in their best interests to be loyal to the British Government, and have never been responsible for any serious disturbance, being too proud to work, and rich enough to disregard fines, they are probably the most backward administered native tribe in the East African Protectorate.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Milking.—Milking is usually done by women and girls, but uninitiated boys may also milk. Milk is either drunk fresh or is curdled by mixing with blood, or is curdled alone by leaving for two or three days. 334 462 252

Raiding.—Frequent raids on neighbouring tribes are carried out by the warrior classes, and the cattle and sheep so obtained are some of them distributed to a warrior's parents and friends and some kept for himself. When cattle are raided from another clan or sub-clan in order to repay a murder (see Murder), all maimed, blind, and otherwise damaged cattle are returned immediately afterwards, for to keep them would certainly bring bad luck on the raiders. 721 [682] [997]

PART X.—MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Fire.—Fire for special occasions is made by means of the hand-drill method, and women may not make fire by this means. Normally, fire is obtained from the ashes of the previous day's fire or from a few live coals borrowed from a neighbouring hut. The first fire in all new huts must be made with fire-sticks. 372

Murder.—Should a man kill a member of his own sub-clan there is no punishment. "What would be the use of taking a fine from one's own sub-clan?" If, however, a man of another sub-clan is killed, then the sub-clan of the murdered man raid the murderer's sub-clan and try to seize cattle in compensation. Usually a free fight takes place and if, in the course of this, a man of the murderer's sub-clan is killed, the matter is considered all square, and any raided cattle are returned. In the course of such a raid all sorts of cattle are driven off, but all the blind and maimed ones are returned next morning (see Raiding, above). 682

Smiths.—Among the Masai smiths are considered "bad." There are smiths in each clan, and the business is purely a family one handed down from father to son. Young boys of smiths' families are initiated alone, and once initiated go straight to the business of smithing and may take no part in the life of the ordinary warriors or warriors. Smiths are considered to be considerably lower in the social scale than even the Wandorobo. A Dorobo can leave his hunting life and rank as a true Masai if he so chooses, but never a smith. 326 564 [823]

If a smith comes and sleeps at a village he is given a bed, but must sleep on the wrong side of the sleeping hide (i.e. the rough flesh side). Smiths may only marry with smiths' families. No Masai would dream of marrying or having any kind of sexual intercourse with a smith's daughter (Wandorobo girls may be married by Masai, but not vice versa), nor can a smith marry an ordinary Masai girl. Smiths make spears and small knives, cattle bells and iron ornaments, but never swords, which are always bought from the Kikuyu. Should a Masai buy the cattle or sheep of a smith he must dip them in the river before adding them to his flock. [594] [583] [563] [811] [412] [438] latter is of little economic significance, except that it is the duty of the warriors to get cattle by raiding. In the division of work, the people mainly concerned are the uncircumcised boys, the girls, and the women. The boys do most of the herding, assisted by the elders. Women and girls milk and act as servants to the warriors. The girls do household work till they are old enough to become lovers of the warriors, when they do very little work. The greater part of the work then falls on the older women, who besides doing or supervising the milking and other ordinary household tasks like fetching water and firewood, build the huts, load and drive the donkeys when moving, prepare skins for clothing, and trade with neighbouring tribes for food and other things. The warriors used to be occupied exclusively either with war or preparations for war, or with dancing, visiting, and making love. Their military activities have today been replaced by certain tasks connected with cattle, and by cattle-stealing and raids on neighbouring tribes. The senior elders are occupied with political matters, and some of them with the instruction and control of the initiates and younger warriors; they also help with the herding, and take part in trading with the neighbouring peoples.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

572
573

462

The only specialists in the economic sphere are the smiths, il-kunono, sing. el-kunono, who live segregated from the rest of the Masai, and marry among themselves. They have a distinctly inferior status, and are despised by the Masai, who all their hands before taking anything from a smith. At one time the smiths lived near deposits of iron ore, such as those in the Mataputo river; but nowadays the availability of trade-iron has given them greater freedom of domicile. They make the iron-work used by the Masai, including spears, swords, and ornaments.[1]

326
[36.5]
[364]

Though according to Hollis a few Masai women made pottery, the Masai as a rule buy their pots from the Ilaoita.

323
439

Food

Except among the agricultural Masai, no cereal or vegetable food at all is grown, nor was it eaten in the old days by warriors, whose diet consisted of meat, milk, and blood, the latter providing the necessary salt. The animals eaten included their own cattle, buffalo, el-murwana, and eland, o-ewu, which they considered to be related to cattle, and therefore fit to eat.[2] Warriors were not allowed to eat honey, to drink honey-wine, or to take tobacco, though some took snuff. Children and married people eat vegetable food, and the meat of cattle which die a natural death. Warriors when they want to eat meat, build a rough shelter called el-pul in the bush where, accompanied by a boy to do the work, small groups feast upon the meat of an ox supplied by the father of one of their number. The elder who supplies the ox is given some of the meat, and this is one of the regular sources of meat for married people, for meat eating is the regular practice of warriors. Men and women do not eat together, and fish, fowls, eggs, and game other than buffalo and eland are not eaten by any Masai.

262
[347]
[34.1]
[264]

Trade

Since the Masai are not self-supporting, they have to trade with the Ilaoita agriculturists, il-meek, whom they despise, in order to get what they want. Their chief suppliers are the Kikuyu, Chaga, and Taveta; and for certain things, notably ivory and honey, the Dorobo. The media of exchange are cattle (old, barren, and otherwise unsatisfactory cows), old and thin goats and sheep, donkeys, butter, and hides. The principal goods bought are food (beans, millet, maize) and tobacco, which they get from the Ilaoita; the chief suppliers of meat are Indian traders, often Sikhs, [1] Lenkey says that the Masai buy their swords from the Kikuyu (TRAI LX, p. 598); this may well be the case near the Kikuyu border, though it is perhaps a recent development.

[2] The Galla also consider the buffalo to be the equivalent of the ox. Bulcaen, Kamera Gumbo Galla, chap. XII, Gotth.

231	613	[For mythological accounts of the origin of
233	614	livestock and dogs	see category 539, p. 359
262	643	honey as a source of food	360
		board game	361
304	721	club carved of wood	362
411	754	blood as a source of food	363
		blacksmiths	364
524	759	clans and lineages	369-369
• 564	892	counting and number words	370
		7-day week	376
595	805	polygamy	377
		ol olkoni and chief	377
		circumcision	382
		double-edged knife	382
		sorcerers	382
		physicians	383
		mandate for war on non- Masai	383-383.]

/ut sunt/
by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age-class (1)

1. Cf. Chapter II of this part.

(ut hanu) or to his age-class associates (ut-ŋ). The bride may not be from an older age class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the elder sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the kraal are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey-ale appear. A marriage between same brother and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage; it is precisely in consistently in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man must be consanguineously related.

Moreover, a marriage between relatives of blacksmiths and those of medicine-men is not permitted.

Widows (ut ŋaŋa; ŋ ŋaŋa) or divorced women who have living sons may not marry again, but live with sons who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in wealth is in practice an obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor individuals not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man. The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

The wedding feast, allegedly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal to which the bride's parents live.

/111 cont./

192 When one so often sees how the warrior flirt with the girls and 932 how the latter act lovingly with the former, one would expect an abundance of expressions of tenderness. But here, too, this does not turn out to be true. The only pet name that the warrior gives the girl is pawere ~ ai = my darling, while the girl calls him ai ngare ia = my friend, or also says kapu aroha = I love you very much, to which the warrior replies Hui tia ai pawere = we shall see (literally tiaha wait /I shall see or wait/).

XIII.

060 The blacksmiths. -- Their own levels. -- Their social position. -- Attitude toward the blacksmiths. -- Workshop. -- Tools. -- Iron extraction. -- Technique. -- Blacksmiths' products; their prices. -- Wire drawing.

564 The levels of the blacksmiths lie isolated, apart from the true 562 Maori levels. It is not correct to designate these as a blacksmith [061] tribe, since there are blacksmiths (ai hanaui, ai hanaui) in all these [014] tribes and also in all lineages, except the Ei Kihoroa, and neither a [012] single tribe nor a single lineage consists exclusively of blacksmiths. They form a caste of their own and are the pariahs of the Maori, the despised and detested, the ancient, whom one would prefer not to tolerate if one did not need them so urgently. Poor ancient times the trade has been handed down from father to son, who only practices the calling after his marriage, therefore ai mahoe. One cannot detach oneself from the caste by not practicing the trade; rather, one who comes from a blacksmith family always remains ai hanaui, no matter whether he works as a blacksmith or not. If, on the other hand -- which happens only very exceptionally -- a Maori who does not belong to the blacksmith caste permanently or temporarily practices the blacksmith's trade, he will, no his own, also be regarded with scorn, but neither he himself nor his descendants will be despised as blacksmiths or counted to the blacksmith caste. A blacksmith Maori
[077] who is ai hanaui in the vicinity of other levels brings the latter bad lack and would cause their inhabitants illness and death for man and beast. Even in an emergency one never claims the hospitality of a blacksmith, any more than one ever grants him guest privileges. The warriors coming from blacksmith families do not live in the ordinary warrior kraals, but in the smaller blacksmith warrior-kraal (ul mangwe / ul ndlwa / ul hamani) and only with daughters of blacksmiths. They do not set out for the battlefield with the other warriors either, but alone, and naturally being slang, since they /111/ are few in number, only a little booty each time, which then often enough is simply taken away from them by the other warriors. Another kraal does not marry the daughter of an ul hamani, just as the latter's son does not desire to marriage the daughter of a man who does not belong to the despised blacksmith caste. Even the extra-marital association with a woman or girl belonging to the blacksmiths is regarded as disastrous for any other kraal. It is believed that he will sooner or later lose his mind, will never be able to become the father of a healthy child, or on the next field expedition he will be killed by the spear or arrow of an enemy. How despised the blacksmiths are is shown by the fact that a kraal does not dare to pronounce the word "ul hamani" after the sunset of darkness (?).

/111 cont./

1. Since then once the people, when in camp, in the evening, I wanted to speak with them about the ul hamani, begged me to abstain from this, because otherwise some misfortune would befall us. Nevertheless it happened from time to time, and this also on the evening of December 31, 1901, when I was camped near a Tonga settlement on the Sugar southeast of Inhoro. A lion then penetrated into my camp in the night and took a man, whom we, despite prompt pursuit of the lions, couldn't no longer rescue. The next morning the kraal heads are responsible for this incident. "It would not have happened if you had not spoken about the ul hamani last evening; we have so often told you this."

/110 cont./

[illegible] To decide a uniformer will be conjured up by [illegible] to found that a lion would get into the kraal or the camp at night so that the enemy would carry out an attack. To call someone "[illegible]" is regarded by the other kinsmen as a strongly insulting [illegible] expressing contempt.

[illegible] The contempt toward Mashenkile is based on the view that the Mashenkile are useless. God forbids honest beings the distilling of blood. By selling weapons, the chief product of the Mashenkile among primitive peoples, they induce transgression of the divine commandment, work against the laws. Hence they are condemned by God, and therefore they are regarded by their fellowmen as serious, corrupt[illegible], bringing misfortune. Daily observation also teaches — as the kinsmen say — that God does not love Mashenkile, for a Mashenkile actually never becomes prosperous: if he should happen to become wealthy, however, he would soon die, without being able to enjoy his property.

[illegible] It should expressly be brought out here that, despite all the efforts devoted to it, I have not been able to determine the slightest semantic difference between Mashenkile and non-Mashenkile and that all non-Mashenkile questioned by me (there were several hundred) described the Mashenkile as poor, outcast members of the kinsmen people, which the Mashenkile themselves also maintain without exception (3).

[illegible] 3. Obviously the kinsmen Mashenkile speak the kinsmen language and not another one of their own, as had been supposed from the statement by C. Stelle in his book, The kinsmen, their language and history, Oxford, 1905, p. 101. Stelle says there /the quotation is in English/: "The gentile have their own language, which, although a corruption of kinsmen, is not understood by the ordinary kinsmen. But all of /this humanity is continued on the next page in the original source/ does not speak this language; it is only a certain number of them who have it." This statement by Stelle is er-

/Gil cont./

/Surnam 5 cont./ plained by the fact that a few Ø human bimbenitte also live among the bimet bimbenitte. They speak their own dialect, which, of course, is unintelligible to the non-bimbenitte Ø meet ("ordinary bimet," as Halle designate them), who, indeed, scarcely come in contact with them.

The opinion of many a European, that the /Gil/ relative diligence of the bimbenitte might have brought to him the scorn of the type from the non-bimbenitte not inclined to work, is also a rule erroneous because acquainted with a large number of Ø humans who for about two decades have not had a hammer in their hands and very many who have not even made an attempt to learn the trade, but rather live entirely like other bimet. All them, however, were despised exactly the same as their forging bilaw caste members.

Like the bimbenitte themselves, the products of their art, the weapons and utensils made by them, are regarded as unclean. In order to take the uncleanness from them, the bimet rule will for every new object forged from the bimbenitte's drop, as well as his hands which have touched the still unclean object.

Even the opposition that a few women enjoy, on account of the excellence of their pottery changes nothing in their low social position. The most famous at the moment, old left-handed Bigaam from Ø brugga, on avoid to his fault, is just as despised as any other bimbenitte. The Ø brugga people, however, jealously see to it that he does not also work for vacuum of any other pottery or even for questions of another people.

While the other bimbenitte, due to the presence of good potters, are always moved with the disappearance of the latter, the bimbenitte bimbenitte remain for a long time in the same location. The ol humans have only very little livestock, but for their craft they need charcoal and ferruginous soil. They establish their homes where both are to be found nearby. The workshop (ol gugan) is built close to the bimet. It consists of a grass roof resting on six to eight posts. In the center lies the hearth (ol ambichang). The smith makes his tools as well as his

/[illegible] /
that" (1).

> 1. When, after receiving news of an ugly misdemeanor or crime, I spoke to one or another more trustworthy Masai about the unknown culprit, I often heard: It was surely not a Masai. A Masai would not do anything like that. Such things do not happen among the Masai.

Though he may know better, he accuses an of might just as unhesitatingly as he absolves a fellow tribesman (2).

> 2. It may be mentioned here that, according to my observation, the insincerity and dishonesty of the people belonging to the blacksmith caste are decidedly greater than that of the other Masai, so that it seems as if the contempt and bad treatment that the former experience from the latter have bred an inferiority of character in the course of the millennium.

The mental superiority of the European impresses him only in such cases where it has convinced him of some villainy, while his technical skills reek far too much of the despised "of [illegible]" to the Masai to seem worth notice. It is solely the gun of the Pumetoweze Troops that obtain for the white man respect and influence among the Masai and have made this master race of East Africa somewhat more modest.

The picture becomes more gratifying if one observes the Masai in intercourse with his own kind. [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] make a good mouth toward the Masai, that is, be good, friendly, discreet toward your fellow tribesman.

/214 cont./

628 682 672 593 revenge goes first against the murderer or, if he has fled and is not available, against his brother or any man of the family of the murderer. Usually blood revenge is commuted by composition (wergild), the amount of which the murderer negotiates with the avenger through a friend. As a rule it consists of 200-300 cattle -- 613 614 now fewer in many cases -- which the murderer, together with his people and his fellow lineage and tribal members living in the vicinity, that is, in the same district, gather together. The avenger is free to accept or reject the composition. /215/ Blood revenge is not carried out longer than one or two months after the murder; composition then takes its place.

598 The kraal of the ol oiboni is regarded as a place of refuge. If the murderer has confessed his deed here, blood revenge may no longer be carried out on him, though he remains obligated for the payment of the composition. Murder committed on a married man, a girl, or a woman is never expiated by blood revenge, but by a fine. Until the payment of the composition or fine the murderer is called 326 564 ol olkhani (pl. el olkhi). The murder of a blacksmith is unpunished. On the other hand, if a blacksmith murders or even only negligently kills a Masai, a band of Masai consisting of married men, warriors, and boys immediately sets out to kill several blacksmiths.

682 613 672 Negligent homicide is expiated only by fines. These are very minor if the perpetrator and the one killed belong to one lineage. If they belong to different lineages of the same tribe, every male member of the lineage (warrior, married man) and every married female member of the lineage must pay a cow. Of this livestock the brother of the one killed receives one half, while the other half 614 is distributed equally to his fellow lineage members. The fine is paid and distributed analogously if perpetrator and victim belong to different tribes. If a woman kills a man through negligence, she will also be killed in most districts. On the other hand, if a man has killed a woman, he either remains unpunished or is given a 682 634 beating by the brother of the woman killed. In a few districts no 184 distinction is made as to whether the perpetrator acted intentionally or negligently, for example, in Loita, where blood revenge is also 672 628 only very rarely used.

Dr Meier--Ms G-1 (1804-ca.1900) 1911 FLIS Mawi FLIS
Dorsie FLS
Ana

/110 cont./

XII.

Character of the Aná, compared with that of the Mawi.

In character the Aná in general greatly resemble the Mawi, except that the tribal arrogance seems to be considerably lessened as a result of their poverty, though it will also always appear in their contempt of the at mang[1] whom they call mando. It is not possible to give a general opinion about their attitude toward Europeans, since they have actually come into contact with them personally only in exceptional cases and otherwise are acquainted with them only from the accounts of the Mawi. On the whole, the Aná living independently stand out favorably from those who have joined the Mawi, in that the former seem to be more modest and less crafty, whereas the latter are a match for the Mawi in audaciousness. The relationship of the two tribes to each other rests on the complete subjugation of the Wandombe, who are in the Mawi their masters and, in major legal disputes, also their judges.

Exceptions to this are the Mawi Mariamitile, who stand as low in the estimation of the Wandombe as in that of the Mawi. The at bawai are also completely without rights before the at dambwai. The Wandombe appear peaceable toward passing caravans and sedentary Bagesu. When they came duet at the former with poisoned arrows, without having been attacked themselves, they were /110/ to have acted in premeditated self-defense; in any case one cannot accuse them of a lust either for war or for murder. With these reservations, what has been said above about the Mawi holds concerning their character traits, their solidarity against the outsiders of all foreign tribes, the position of their women, etc. Something new to be mentioned here is the custom that I found several times according to which a woman, just because of her inferior position, may not walk through a group of men.

In greeting, the Wandombe use the same words and formulas as the Mawi and accompany them with the same gestures.

The farewell of the one going runs ala mwitile. The answer to it, ati, is said to mean "go!" To the objection that this is not very courteous, an aged Aná replied: "We are poor people, when the visitor has gone we no longer need give him any of our food!"

1. [A Mawi word meaning "the unbelievers"--dzalyet.]

/361 cont./

is present at all. The basis of the vendetta is also liable. The giver is offended by a refusal to accept a gift. A counter-gift of apparently the same value follows gift-giving. The giver spits upon the gift when he hands it over. The Wandoobs never conclude into blood friendships among themselves, but only -- and, to be sure, very rarely -- with members of other tribes. The ceremony observed for this resembles the one described above among the Ibeni. If a stranger has bought ivory from him and paid only part of the price, the of debtor often likes to conclude blood friendship with him because he thinks that then the debtor must die if he does not repay the debt as quickly as possible (3).

1. This view is in general vogue; it was not originally peculiar to the Ani, but adopted.

As among the Ibeni, the legal view makes no distinction between murder and manslaughter, but indeed between the latter and negligent homicide. A murderer caught in the act is subject to blood revenge, for the execution of which every man belonging to the family of the man murdered and to some distance also any of his friends and companions are justified. If the avenger is not successful in capturing the murderer on the day of the murder, /362/ the latter is safe from blood revenge, for people are in the unsuccessful search for him a commandment of God to let him live. To atone for his deed, however, he must pay the principal heir of the deceased one large and two small ivory tusks. Negligent homicide is punished by the payment of a medium-sized ivory tusk. If the perpetrator and the man who was killed belong to the same lineage, the punishment is considerably less than if they are from different lineages of the same tribe. On the other hand, if the two belong to different tribes, the man entitled to blood revenge often hand over the execution of it to the Ibeni, who kill the perpetrator, even if they do not capture him until after several months. Up to the completed payment the perpetrator is regarded as post-mortem, corresponding to the of ainchent of the Ibeni. If an Ani kills a Ibeni blacksmith, the Ibeni return unmolested because the blacksmiths are too weak for revenge and the Ibeni would never have anything to do with taking their part. On the other hand, if an Ani is killed by a Mashenith, the blood immediately place themselves on the side of the one injured and avenge murder, manslaughter, or negligent homicide by murdering the perpetrator. The Wandoffles, to be sure, would themselves be in a position to exercise the revenge, but the blood do not permit this because they see in it an encroachment on their rights as owners of the land and in particular also of the ol bonnie.

/[illegible] cases./

Bodily injury with a fatal outcome, if caused intentionally, is regarded as murder; if negligently, as negligent homicide. Minor bodily injuries are atoned for with the payment of a specific number of bodkiros. For the destruction of a finger one bodkiro is paid, for one hand eight among some Wandoffles who live in close contact with the blood the atonement for the destruction of a finger or the whole hand amounts to a fat-tailed sheep. Bodily injury leading only to the loss of an index finger or an eye often results equivalent, or does indecent assault. Abortion is said to be unknown, and parricide not to occur. Kidnapping and sale are unknown.

A theft committed in the camp by an inhabitant or stranger is atoned for by the return of the stolen goods; that of a bodkiro hanging outside the camp, with the payment of one new one. Anyone who steals honey from a bodkiro pays five bodkiros. Force is said not to occur; one who in the case of the Ilsana of another through sorcery is not infrequently killed, also he has been persuaded to return the sick one back to health. The shooting of poisoned arrows in the camp is strictly forbidden, because of the danger connected with it. Anyone who transgresses this law must expect to be killed immediately by his companions.

Children are aggravated kinds of death, the principle of repaying like with like, compensation to the injuriate body part, symbolism, imprisonment, outlawry, public punishment, the right of parties.

For the inquiry concerning an unknown culprit, the injured one runs — /[illegible]/ as has already been mentioned — to a sorcerer, who is also called at [illegible] among the Wandoffles. Upon of the manipulations with the [illegible] grass, he throws a pair of sandals on the ground in front of him: right down, then pole them up and pole

[illegible] is a Bantu word also meaning [illegible]]

/[illegible] cont./

The Review of the Bible — the Sacrifice of the Island

[illegible] The Bible mentions as the first Martenitic Tubal-Kain /Tubal-Cain/, the son of Lamech by his second wife, Zillah /Zillah/ (Gen. 4, 22). The name is made up of two words, the latter of which shall be discussed first. Kain /Cain/ is mentioned in two places in the Jahvist /Yahwist/ source first Gen. 4, 1 as the eldest son of Adam and as the first tiller of the ground, and then in the more chapter, Verse 17, in the list of forefathers. In Gen. 5 the Priestly Document gives the table of the forefathers and to it calls Kain Kenan /Cainan/ (Verse 9), i.e., Martenitic. Now Kainan is the same word as [illegible] (pl. [illegible]) of the Island or Mondgebirtsen /[illegible]/ (pl. [illegible]) of the Temple, among both of whom it also means Martenitic. The other part of the name, Tubal, we find among the Semal in [illegible], among the Hyperbiten in [illegible], among the Celts in [illegible], everywhere with the meaning "Martenitic."

According to Gen. 4, Kain was a tiller of the ground and was separated from his people. Like the first Martenitic among the Island, Jabal was also a tiller of the soil. The Island despises the tiller of the soil so deeply that it is entirely in keeping with his way of thinking when God takes no notice of Kain and his thank-offering of the fruits of the earth, even though Kain may otherwise have been a good man and not — as the Jahvist Document reports in Gen. 4 — the first murderer.

The Jahvist /Yahwist/ calls the descendants of Kain /Cain/ Kainites (אין Ishim /Kainites/ 4a, 11, 23). We see from these passages in the Bible how the Kainites stand in Israel's estimation. In Gen. 4, 11 the Jahvist relates that the curse of God is upon them when he describes how God curses Kain. In Gen. 15, 19 (Jahvist) the Kainites are mentioned as the first of the tribes that are to be destroyed by Israel, and in 4Ms Ishim /Kainites/ 4a, 23 /Jerusalem 4a, 22/ (Jahvist) Ishim /Kainites/ stage "but nevertheless Kain must be destroyed." Thus, everywhere hatred and scorn against the Kainites, the very same feelings that the Island nourishes against the Martenitic, whether we use the latter positive term craft or are merely descendants of blacksmiths. The blacksmiths, because, through the making of knives and weapons, they lead to the transgression of the -- also existing in Israel -- divine command that prohibits bloodshed (1).

3Ar Marlar--KSS G-5 (1890-ca.1918) 1910 PL23 Manal PL23

/317 cont./

> 1. and also because they make plowshares.
> Ed. Deuteral.

were regarded by the original Kenites as not believed, but rather condemned by God, and therefore as contemptible, disease-causing, and unclean (2).

> 2. I see proof for the great age of this view in the use of the word spinner mentioned in the eighth commandment of the Ideals cf. further below /see p.316/.

Accordingly I suspect that the Biblical Kenites can not be regarded as a separate tribe, but that rather they are the descendants of the blacksmiths from the period when the Israelites were still nomadical nomads, and that at that time the blacksmiths in Israel had the same low social position as today among the Israel and the aforementioned as well as other Semitic peoples.

But now why does the Bible call the Kenites a separate tribe, why does it not call them a people of blacksmiths, and why does it nowhere say that the blacksmiths of Israel once occupied a low social position? Information on these questions is given in part by the Bible itself, in part by the observations that one can still make today among the Israel.

Let us first consider the first question. Like the Israel, the nomadic Israelites also had definite pastoral grounds within the boundaries of which they migrated alone. If the grass had been grazed off in one spot, /318/ the huts covered with cattle skins were dismantled and one moved to a place not far away. In contrast to this, the blacksmiths continue to live in one place for a longer time, often even permanently, as long as metals exists do not force them to flee. Their property is immovable in usually small, for, as soon as it becomes larger, the nomadic, by right and custom, take from the settle the principal part of it by force. The grazing in the vicinity of their kraals is not disputed with them, the diamond men, by anyone and therefore settlers throughout the year for their few head of livestock. But then the settle are also tied to certain places, namely, to such where foreigners need and want, the latter for the making of charcoal, are found. Since these requirements are present only in relatively few places, colonies of blackbeetle arise. Their usually small property in livestock soon makes them dependent on agriculturists, among whom they must buy vegetables (5).

/319 cont./

5. and where they in return supply with plowshares. Bl. Hermann.

Bl. however, such are not in reachable proximity or if their ever fellow citizenses prevent the selling of entity products to sedentary tribes, the blackbeetle perforce begin to plant the soil themselves to a limited extent and in this way also become agriculturists. This misinderstation detaches them from their own people even more than they were already separated by the aforementioned concepts. If then war or famine, for example, through drought or livestock epidemics, ensues in addition, the blackbeetle colony may be completely cut off from its own people. This it may have happened, when the Israelites were driven into Egypt as the result of famine, that the sedentary settle remained behind. Now the latter, through a close connection with the agriculturists, perhaps to southern Kassas /Cassas/, or through the fact that a foreign tribe forced them, through friendship or war, to settle among them, and as a consequence of the mixing through intermarriage made possible by this, may have developed into a separate people or have been given, in the eyes and minds of the Israelites coming into contact with them again after about 300 years, the physiognomy characteristic of such a people, which caused them to call them Hamites. This version, however, is justified only if one may assume that the Israelites were closely acquainted with the "Hamite people" upon their return from Egypt, and -- which leads to the same result

$121
$171
SEC
SEG
SGS

/114 cont./

here -- the former entity had been taken in by people who gave them, the Kierkenitis, their daughters as wives. I am inclined to doubt the latter on the basis of my observations of the African peoples streaming from Arabia. But the fact that the former assumption was in scarcely possible seems to follow from the strong anger of the jahvist /Yahwist/ against the Kenites, for they are the one whom he, above all heathens, especially condemns with eloquent words. One would then come to the assumption that the "Kenite people" may not have originated until later, and, to be sure, not long before the drawing up of the Jahve Document, and that furthermore the former /114/ Kierkenitis of the Israelites may have kept themselves quite free of mixture with foreign blood. Then one might suppose, in order to explain why the Bible describes the Kenites as another people, that the Israelites were already heavily mixed at the time of the origin of the Jahve Document. This conjecture would be in agreement with the Biblical accounts and would be further supported by the fact that the author spoke so forcibly against mixture with the daughters of the heathens and even cites this circumstance as the reason for the deluge. But we probably do not need this conjecture either, for the Bible speaks by an alien people, not another political community or a society of human beings formed differently anatomically, but primarily people whose cult was incompatible with that of the Israelites.

The second question, as to why the Bible does not designate the Kenites as a Kierkenitis people is explained in part by what has just been said, though their association they had partially in general exchanged the cult for agriculture, and in part it follows from the following.

Now why does the Bible nowhere directly state that the Kierkenitis were regarded as a low caste? Though, according to the above, it is not probable. (1)

1. This question however was more improbable because of the great intimacy of the insignificant Rude of Lou Gaugh-ner to ancient Egypt, even if in during the the Old and Middle Kingdom is meant.

/[illegible] cont./

that part of the Nuchemitis moved to Egypt with Israel, the possibility that this nevertheless might have been the case should not be excluded either. How have would these Nuchemitis have fared then? If we assume, with the Bible, that at that time the Israelites were a free people and were reduced to servitude by the Egyptians, either of these circumstances could then have sufficed, in the course of their long captivity, to remove in practice the ancient prejudice against the Nuchemitis and to unite freely the fellow believers as well as the fellow citizens. There will remain another possibility, however. If we assume that the latter did not happen and that at that time, just as, correspondingly, in the case even today among the Semite peoples of the Interior of Africa, marriage between relatives of castes and noncastes was not permitted, it would have become imperative for the castes, employed in various localities on account of their skill in making weapons and separated from one another for the harvesting of permanent subsistence in the land, to merge with the Egyptians through mixture with them. If there were through that a shortage of castes in the Israelites, this could have been remedied by having people from Israelites who did not originally belong to the Nuchemitis caste learn the craft in Egypt and practice it there as well as later on. By analogy with the Levei, such people would not stick to the public esteem by practicing the Nuchemitis's calling. But even if I assume that a part of the castes /[illegible]/ returned from Egypt with Israel, their social position even have became better, conditioned by the fleeing of the religious cult, in the service of which the castes placed its craft for the making of vessels and other implements. On whose duty was the outfitting of the temple could no longer have remained a despised, disused, useless man.

(71) II. Therefore, the Old Testament nowhere directly states that the Nuchemitis made up a tribe, a despised caste, in my opinion in no either part it nevertheless still contains mentioned of the fact that the Nuchemitis was also regarded as outlaws by the Israelites in antiquity.

/TEN cont./

If the Mashiach is serious, then so are the objects that he teaches, especially the ones that come from his hands as products of his skill. Now, since the Mashiach's products are indispensable in daily life, people help themselves by means of a purification ceremony. The Temple as well as the link now dips a new object fashioned from the Mashiach's workshop into the water of a clean bowl and as the same time washes his hands. The bowl never with for the things coming from the hand of the smith — spoon (blade and dent), mesh, bulb, inner-bulb, ax, sewing awl, pincers, snow pulsh, bending iron, cowbells, large and small leg-bulb, as well as various ornamental objects — and likewise their hands, which touch these things — in order to recover from them the uncleanness adhering to them from the Mashiach. I do not know whether the ancient Israelites had a similar custom, but I deem it likely.

What were adequate for secular life need not suffice for the religious rite; on the contrary, it may be assumed from the fact that people are more sensitive there. Thus, in place of the two bulb, the Israel used a real spinner for cutting the ambilical cord of the newborn child, in accordance with their eighth commandment. Now a number of Biblical passages that tell of the silent period of Israel, the time of the wanderings, also speak of the use of the more bulb and allude of the prohibition of the two bulb for cult purposes. Thus we read in the 4th chapter of the Sed Book of Moses /Shemot/ in the 24th verse: "Then Zipporo /Tzipporah/ took a sharp stone and cut off the foreskin of her son." And in the 6th chapter of the Book of Joses /Yehoshua/, Jakob /Yaakov/ commands the latter: "Make thee more knives and circumcise again the sons of Israel for the second time. Then Jesus /Yehoshua/ made him more knives and circumcised the sons of Israel at the hill Aralath." We find the invention for the use of the two bill in the 24th chapter of the Sed Book of Moses "And if thou with make me an altar of stone, then duth not build it of hewn stones for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, then hast polluted it (1)."

1. This rule has been interpreted that the natural, original character of the altar would

/Mi ness./

> /Sanaeen I continued/ make it particularly worthy of God. This assumption is untenable, however, in view of the specific order concerning the arrangement of the tabernacle and the temple, the ariste furnishings, the nonpriestly priest's clothing with the breast shield studded with precious gems, etc.

Here G is /Mi/ Hendrew Gamaly stated that the sense will become determined through being born with two tools. Circumcision and other, however, are the oldest and at the same time the most important arrangements of the Israelitish cult. Just as the sense of the other were not to be made sacrosanct with the object rendered sacrosanct by the Israelitish, so also the use of the two knife for circumcision, through which, indeed, the Israelite was precisely to be purified religiously, had to be forbidden. (5).

> 5. Even in ancient Egypt the Israelitish's product dispute -- traditionally, consciously or unconsciously -- to have been regarded as sacrosanct was opened the abdominal cavity of the deceased with a stone knife for the purpose of embalmment.

G is to be particularly noted here that, of the three Biblical passages known to, the first two belong to the Jahvist /Yahwist/, the last to an elaboration from Jahvist and Elohist. But the Jahvist -- as I have already mentioned above -- is the one source that alone knows Kain /Kain/ and the Kainites as well as the connection between the two and it also mentioned the oldest of the sons worked together into the Pentateuch. I believe one may conclude from this that the source upon which the Jahvist Document is based would have known about the sacrosanctity of the knife, which would furnish proof for the existence of this rite in ancient Israel.

/[illegible] cont./

[121] [171] [illegible] [illegible] [163]

That it was subsequently lost is sufficiently explained by the fact that the Israelites settled down among non-Semitic peoples by whom the blacksmiths were not regarded as sacrosanct and among Semitic ones who, through the influence of the others, probably likewise were no longer familiar with it, as well as further through the influencing that their psyche underwent through the immediate and subsequently permanent mixing with these peoples. With the loss of this view, there was also lost the fear of the use of the iron knife for circumcision, but, on the other hand, the other was erected out of unknown reasons even in the Maccabbee /Maccabees/ period (1st Makk. /Maccab./ 4, 47), but only because this was expressly commanded in Mosaic law (Ind Moses /Exodus/ 34, 33), whereas nothing is contained in it about the use of the stone knife for circumcision.

Now if the Kaites are the descendants of the blacksmiths of the Semites from the pre-Egyptian period, i.e., from the nomadic period of Israel, their dispersal at Gosi, in Kenaan /Canaan/, among the Amalekites and Midianites is explained by the fact that they, as among primitive peoples still today, as at that time also among civilized peoples, as makers of weapons, always are and were the most valuable prisoners of war. The Bible also gives the information that this prevailed in the wars against Israel. According to 2nd Kings 24, 14, all the smiths of Jerusalem were captured by Nebuchadnezzar, and, according to 1st Sam. 13, 19, all the smiths of Israel were laid off by the Philistines.

Since the other Pentateuch sources are no more familiar with Kain /Cain/, as a personality corresponding to him, as the first murderer than the myth of the blacksmith, /[illegible]/ and since Jehovah's fear not to the least fit to with the sense of thought of a primitive people to pierce the eldest son of the first human couple as the murderer of his brother and hence as an obstacle to the rapid increase of human beings on earth, I suspect that the Jahvist legend of Kain's murder of his brother did not originate until a later time. In the advanced Israel, with its more highly regarded smith, there could no longer be any place for the traditional contempt of the Kaites. One needed another reason in order to represent as contemptuous and wished the fellow villagers moved to headmen, who, through their tribal affiliation, were especially likely to introduce heathen influence and heathen view into Israel through intermarriage. In addition to secure survival of among a people that, even in the state of culture-poor nomadism, had a deeper religious feeling there was formed a legend that was suitable for interpreting the Kenites as descendants of a tribal ancestor cursed by God for the gamer crime. Such a legend could solve all the more easily since -- as I have already said above -- the smiths were regarded by the original Israelites as healers toward the transgression of the divine command against bloodshed, as set believed by God, and therefore as cursepeople and outlaws. In the early Israelite view the smiths were condemned as healers to avenge, in the Bible Cain /Kain/ is condemned as a murderer himself.

/1988 comp./

The Deception about the Right of the First-born

In the days of the El dwellers, the myth of the blessed reports, there lived a man named Nachiel. He had a son who was given the name Ishmael because he was born toward sunset. When Ishmael grew up, he married the woman Twilight, who was named after the hub o' twilight, because her mother, when she bore the child under her heart, wanted to see nothing but the sun of that hub. When Twilight became pregnant, she carried triplets, and when she gave birth, only two children came into the world at first, two sons. The one born first was already very hairy on his body and also already had a beard, which was why he was given the name Ti el nesipt (= the bearded one). The other son was called Ti en jegeg, because, soon after birth, his mother wrapped him in soft, unbleached calf-leather (en jegeg). Not until three months later was the third child born, also a boy. He was given the name Ishmael = the twelve, whereas the successive growth of hair of Ti el nesipt increased noticeably with age, Ti en jegeg had only a very sparse beard, and Ishmael remained completely beardless. One day, when the old father was very ill, the two older brothers went to a sacrificial feast that was being celebrated in the vicinity, in order to ask God the hunter's staff and the bow and instructed them about the use of these things. Then he commanded them to cover their eyes with their hands. When they had done this, God held aloft the hunter's staff and asked which of them wanted to have the thing held aloft. One of them passed through his fingers, recognized the hunter's staff, and quickly answered in the affirmative. He became a cattlehunter, while the other man, who had held his hands tight over his eyes and had seen nothing, became a poor hunter (5)."

/100 ccan./

5. At a later period, when the original reason for the score of the middle had fallen into oblivion among the Maori, this story was amplified so that the middle two were included. God then held three things in his hand: the hunter's staff, the bow, and the harrows. Upon the question of God, the man who later became the Maori chose the hunter's staff; the second, who here was passed through his fingers, but was older than the first, chose the bow, so that for the last man, who had seen nothing, only the harrows remained. Both this story and the one above were told by rote among the Maori today.

/Ohi/ I hardly believe that I shall go wrong if I assume that, in place of the one story canonized in the Bible, the Semitic tribe of myths originally have two, which, in their basic features, corresponded to those of the Maori, and one of which surely represents a reproduction of a historical episode, while the other have the character of a religious myth. That this character was preserved in the later joining together of the two accounts is shown by the Biblical interpretation, and, as he says, most clearly by that of the Jahvist /Yahwist/ (1).

1. Gen. 33, 27 is to belong to the Jahvist.

D: Bernardi II, 10-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Maori FL12

of an end on. When he replies to his name, he is told to go and make a goals. He answers "Hanis and Sudo". This is repeated four times, and the ceremony is over".

The ceremony is performed only once in a man's life, namely when he "wishes to have his eldest child circumcised". This particular circumstance shows that by "the passing of the hour" a man obtains a special elderly status which gives him a right to have all his children initiated.

Thus, there is a relationship between the father's social status and the initiation into the age-class of his son's. Four of these may be initiated unless the father has reached the proper status. The personal status of the father is reflected on his children. Therefore the "passing of the hour" is not in itself part of the age-system initiation, but a condition which must have been observed before a man is allowed to have his sons initiated.

Other authorities (Frit) have stressed the fact that class membership of a Maori is somehow dictated by the class to which his father belongs. "The passing of the hour" gives a special emphasis to this fact and shows how a Maori's initiation into a class is conditioned by the social status of his father. It shows how the structure of Maori society stands on the balance of status of its members.*

"The meeting of the ox" (Dedekent of Ziang).* Though this ceremony is performed by a single section or a group of sections, its performance has a far reaching value which is accepted throughout Maorland. The ceremony is performed by such sections as the Kakenyuka, the Dakidakuk and the Furka (all Kapit). According to Frit the Kiangu also perform it. But this is denied by Pomaneth, who qualifies Frit's statement by saying that the Kiangu acknowledge and respect the value of the ceremony performed by the Kakenyuka.

As a matter of fact special importance is attached to the ceremony performed by the Kakenyuka, who in any case must be the first to do it and who have the lead in the matter. All the sections which

* The social balance between the father and his son is only an expression of a wider and basic principle, which, in our opinion, is an essential principle of Maori social organization: the principle of the distribution of power. See Bernardi, I v., pp. 100 ff.

* Frit, Field on Kiangu Customs among the Maori, in J. R. A. I., [illegible] (1911), pp. 100 ff.; Lasaro, I v., p. [illegible]; [illegible] (1933), p. 9, n. 11; [illegible], p. 10, n. 10; Pomaneth, I v., p. 20.

6:Thomson K.-3 (1883-1884)1887
F122, Maori F122

expression; for the dancy cold is singularly bitter to the coast natives, who, under its influence, drop down paralysed, apparently utterly unable to make the slightest exertion to bestir themselves. On these occasions you may beat them with a stick till you are tired, but they will simply put their heads between their knees like an obstinate donkey, and whine out, "Ki wai," "Ki wai" (I am not able). On my return march at Waiau-ui, to the east of Rotorua, one of these storms came on, accompanied with thunder and lightening of appalling fury and violence. The hail fell continuously for hours, and when it ceased the country was actually white, and remained so all night. If we had been caught out in that storm, without tents, I question very much if ten men would have survived. As it was, so utterly paralysed were they that even in their tents they allowed their fires to go out, and they had literally to be compelled to bestir themselves. (33)

So much for Maori Land. Let us now take up the deeply interesting subject of the inhabitants.

In dealing with the manners and customs of this remarkable race, I think I shall best picture them to the reader not by describing them in catalogue fashion, but by setting forth the prominent facts in the life history of a male and female Maori, tracing their career in the various epochs of their savage existence, and trying to understand their views of men and nature, and their sociological relations. (34)

But first of all, let me say a few words more immediately descriptive of the Maori as a race. Learned philologists profess to have discovered from a study of the Maori language—and I suppose the theory may be accepted as correct—that it belongs to the Shemitic family, as does also the language spoken by the tribes of the Nile and North Africa. This seems to be the only clue to their family relationship, and it reveals very little. The reader, therefore, will clearly understand that the Maori are in no sense negroes, or allied to the Zantic tribes with which he is so familiar from the works of our most prominent later African travellers. In their mental development, as in their language, they are widely different from the natives of Central and South Africa, occupying in that respect a far higher position in the scale of humanity. (35) (36)

The Maori tribe is divided into about twelve principal clans or sub-tribes, with numerous smaller divisions. These have not all the same position in Maori society, some clans having more "blue" blood, and being endowed of power (37) (38)

G. Thomson No. 3 (1883-1884)[illegible]
FLL2 Masai FLL2

[illegible] bound then others. The most aristocratic of these clans are the Ngojo-Masai, Matilion, Lyonk, and Lelayo. These have the finest physical development, and are unfeatedly superior to the others in the shape of the head, the less depressed nose, and thinner lips. Indeed,—but for the prominence of the cheek-bones, a tendency to a Mongolian shape and upward slant of the eyes, the chocolate-coloured skin, and the hair with a tendency to become frizzy—they might pass another as very respectable and commonplace Europeans. The Ngojo-Masai are the purest breed, and are to be found chiefly around Kilimanjaro. The most degraded tribe physically is that which is known to the coast traders by the name of Wa-kwafi. They seem to have acquired a strain of negro blood, as will be perceived by an examination of the photograph of the Masai of Lykipia (p. 200). The higher development of the Ngojo-Masai is seen in the photo of an aristocratic woman of Njiro.

The country is divided into about ten principal districts, such as Sigirori, Njiro, Matumbaini, Kapti, Duplori, Lykipia, Great Ngulion, &c. The various sections of the race are generally designated by their native districts. Various clans may be found occupying the same district, but they usually keep in distinct bands. Hence they speak of the "El-Masai Matumbaini," or El-Masai Kapti. Each district also is further distinguished by having special bandolier devices on the shields of the warriors, painted with wonderful skill and taste in black, white, red, or yellow colours. Between the various sections of the tribe there is not the slightest cohesion. Were among themselves are of constant occurrence, though when a state of war is not declared, they are on the most friendly terms,—their feuds not being of that deep-seated character which distinguishes those of semi-civilized tribes.

Of these internal wars some have been so disastrous or so oft-repeated as that between the main mass of the Masai and the Wa-kwafi (I here use the name for convenience). The original home of the latter was the large district lying between Kilimanjaro, Ugono, and Pare on the west, and Teita and Umatiani on the east. This large region is known to the Masai as Mbaruni. Some fifty years ago the Wa-kwafi were numerous and strong, able to hold their own against all comers. About 1830—so far as I can gather—a series of misfortunes fell upon them. In a great war-raid against the Wagogo to the south they suffered a severe repulse, and great numbers were slaughtered. The survivors

[illegible]

9-Pankrake G-4 (1939-1948) 1948 PL.11 Masai PL.11
Kimeto

There are certain units, which may be termed sub-tribes, whom the "pure" Masai regard as inferior. By "pure" Masai is meant those who regard themselves as descendants of Maasinda. It is of interest that the word of Maasinda is frequently used in place of of Masai as the singular of il Masai. Such socially inferior sub-tribes are the Lekiyuk, Moto, Tatangaiko, and Kwavi, with the Lekiyuk as possibly a sub-tribe absorbed by the "pure" Masai. The nineteenth century witnessed the ascendancy of the Masai over the "inferior" sub-tribes, while in the fifty years which have elapsed since the Great Famine the rivalries of the sections within the Masai themselves have brought about many changes.

By section is meant a territorial unit of the Masai, the members of which regard themselves as owners of their waters and grazing grounds to the exclusion of other sections. Such a unit is called el ainu (pl. il ainu). Alone or in groups the sections function as units in war, in allegiance to a particular Laiboni, and in the performance of certain tribal ceremonies. In general they possess a sense of solidarity which expresses itself in regarding members of other sections to a certain extent as strangers.

The list of sections in Ngilai, divided into districts and sub-districts, is too exhaustive to be of practical value, and for this reason the "Administrative History of the Masai" is taken as a basis for the following list. Those sections which live entirely in Kenya are :—Moto (a sub-tribe?), il Damat, il Kakonyoike (see Age Grades), il Odo Kilani, Kiyeruma (Laikipia living north of Lake Baringo), il Dala Lekiyuk and Kapotei.

Of more immediate interest to Tanganyika is the Sighirari, apparently a section composed entirely of members of the Sighirari clan. The Administrative History refers to Sighirari of Ngong and of Loitokitok. The area between Kilimanjaro and Moru is also known as Sighirari, and is probably the original home of this section. When their lands were alienated by the Germans they returned to Kenya.

The Matapato are another purely Kenya section of interest to Tanganyika, since it appears that their original grazing grounds included Longido, Kimirian, Ngaro Pulian, and the numerous small rivers to the north thereof. First turned out by the Germans, they again penetrated south at the end of the War, and were again removed by the British, their country being occupied by the Kimangi.

Finally the Loitokitok are of particular interest to us, in that they are closely associated with the Kimangi, and acknowledge the Sendeu laiboni. This section appears to be composed of Loitai, Lekiyuk and Siklilan clansmen, here as in other areas the Lekiyuk do not fear with the other clans, but have independent ceremonies, perform separate fertility ceremonies, etc.

A number of sections are divided by the inter-territorial boundary. Of these the Purko clans have no pre-European claim to inhabit Tanganyika. On their eviction from the Rift-valley area a portion of the section moved to the area in the Kenya reserve immediately north of Loitokitok. By the end of the War they had penetrated as far south as Ngorongoro, whence they were evicted in 1928. (1) did not, however, return to Kenya, a number settled in the then unadministered area round Loitokitok, where (C38) they were found in 1898 by the Sonja Patrol, and allowed to stay on in terms of the agreement made with the "Kenya Masai."

The other two sections included in the terms of this agreement, the Loita and Lotiyoik, were not in fact Kenya Masai at all. For a division of the Loita, called il Ntanagora, had inhabited the highland area round Lolkindi, as far south as Lemuryani, since the Masai took possession of the country. The history of this section is bound up with that of Sendeyo, and is recorded below.

Likewise a division of the Lotiyoik possessed ancestral grazing grounds to the west of the area inhabited by the Loita, which, like those of the latter, were bisected by the inter-territorial boundary.

There are numerous other Masai found in many sections who call themselves Lotiyoik, and it is difficult to decide whether the name applies to a clan or to a section. From the recorded legend (see Early History) it would appear that they were not amongst the Masai who took part in the exodus, and even today a certain stigma attaches to them. When (C37) inhabiting the country of another section they usually dwell apart, as for example, amongst the Loitokitok or at Engasimon, Ngongongare on southwest Mery mountain is also regarded as a traditional Lotiyoik area. Frequently the name il Wirgana is used to distinguish the Lotiyoik from the "pure" Masai.

The probable explanation of their status is that they do in fact belong to a lower stratum; in some areas they have been absorbed by the section amongst whom they resided, and thus eventually came to be regarded as a clan; in other areas they were sufficiently numerous to enable them to retain their own grazing grounds, and so justify their holding tribal (C39) ceremonies of their own. An example of the latter is the Lolimodo group, who are rightly regarded as forming a separate section, or again the il Dala Lotiyoik is reported to be a section composed entirely of Lotiyoik.

Another section divided by the border is the Sasai or Salek who now inhabit the area immediately west of the Rift, from the Loita to the Ngorongoro Highlands. They are reported to have been in the past an important and numerous section, with the iron Salei living on the Sanjan Plain (known to the Masai as Salei, the Sanjan is a river) and various subsections, (as il Morik or il Dorya Gol, il Sebei on the Ongadia bil Dorea, and il Ngorongoro on the plain which their name signifies. Apparently they, together with the Sevengat, acknowledged Mako, brother of Mbatian, as Laiboni. They are recorded in the "Administration History" as following Sendeyo, their present nominal allegiance to Mondal is probably due to the sometimes efforts of the administration to bring all the Lolimodo Masai into the Kisongo Unit.

The Sevengat, as their name implies, live on the plains to the west of Ngorongoro, from Lake Eyasi to Engare Narooki. They were dispersed by Sotoro and Loita invasion between 1880 and 1900, and only reassembled during the post-war period. The strength of their allegiance to Mondal is also very doubtful.

The Engarukas are a section who perhaps took their name from having displaced themselves through the famine of 1890 by cultivation at

/KT.1001/
by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age class (1)

1. Cf. Chapter IX of this part.

(ul bana) or to his age-class association (ul ndi). The bride may not be from an older age class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the Masai are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between same brother and sister is not permitted: this is regarded as incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage: it is precisely in membership in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

Moreover, a marriage between relatives of blacksmiths and those of tanners/smiths is not permitted.

Widows (ul gulai, 3 gulai) or divorced women who have living sons may not marry again, but live with men who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man. The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

§§5 The wedding feast, elegantly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal in which the bride's parents live.

"The political and military organisation of the Masai has been so fully described by the various travellers, notably Mr. Thomson, who have made it their study, that it is unnecessary for me in this report to reproduce the information which, without his greater knowledge than I can pretend to possess, have already supplied on this subject. There seems, so far, but little hope that the wild people will, as a whole, be weaned from their predatory mode of life, and induced to become peaceful cultivators; though a few of them settled on Ngong Hills have recently begun to take to agriculture, under the supervision of the local officials.

"The total number of the Masai in the Kenia district, including the Wandorobbo, is estimated by Mr. Ainsworth at 18,000. There is one settlement at Ngong Hills, include 600 "Elmoran" or warriors, under 20, concubines or "Leparuses," and about 4,000 old men, women and children."

In another part of this report Sir Arthur Hardinge writing as follows:—

"Mr. Gibbons, who is in charge of Elkeyo, introduced the practice of employing Masai women to carry the mails, and they have proved, I believe, very satisfactory, covering the 100 miles of the third stage in five days. The average total time taken to transport the mails from Mombasa to the Elkeyo Fortes, a distance of 400 miles, is twenty days, or about 20 miles a day. The weight of each load of mails is 30 lbs."

In a subsequent passage, dealing with the slave-trade, Sir Arthur Hardinge writes:—

"The trade in Uganda is confined to the district of Kisii, ... and is chiefly in Masai women and children.

"Its origin is as follows: When the Masai of Mount Moru, near Kenia, were decimated about four years ago by an epidemic of small-pox, following upon a severe cattle plague, which obliged their warriors to go long distances to seek for cattle, and thus leave their kraals almost unfriended, the Kikuyu people, their hereditary foes, fell upon them in overwhelming numbers, massacring their old men and carrying off their women and children as slaves. These they are now selling at low rates, having more of them than they want, to local Arab or Swahili middlemen, who, driven by our anti-slavery laws from the coast, can only carry on their trade with safety in inland districts as yet unoccupied by us, and who retail the slaves thus purchased at a profit to the settlers throughout eastern Ukambani, these latter people being all Mohammedans too, and therefore requiring to be supplied with such slaves as they may need from other tribes.

"Some of the Masai girls are kept by their Swahili purchasers as concubines, and these, when they have learnt in a year or two enough Swahili to pass in the Swahili dress as coast women, will go down with their masters to the coast, where a few of them (not having borne children) may be secretly sold to other Arabs or Swahilis, but Mr. Sub-Commissioner Ainsworth, who knows Ukambani well, assures me that they usually all remain in Kisii, and doubts whether fifty of them in a year even leave it."

Referring again to the activities of Senkeyo, Sir Arthur Hardinge wrote:—

"Of late there have been symptoms of unrest among the Masai, which have made it necessary to keep a careful watch on them. Senkeyo, Chief of the Loita division of the race, who speaks sometimes in English and sometimes in German territory, has been endeavouring to persuade his brother Lenana, the Chief of the Masai of Naivasha, all of them on our side of the border, to join him in a general movement against the Germans in Kilimanjaro, who recently chastised a local tribe of Masai, the Wa-Arusha, for the murder of two German missionaries.

"In anticipation of trouble in this quarter, I sent reinforcements to Taveta, and the simultaneous arrival of troops from Uganda at Naivasha and at Ngong Hills from Mombasa seems to have induced Lenana to decline Senkeyo's proposals, which, though primarily directed against the Germans, really aimed at a general rising against all European control."

/[illegible]/

The earnings of the men who are growing up to become warriors consist of captured livestock and in the main passes into the father's hand. Actual separate goods for the individual members of the family are only clothing and ornaments, for the men also their weapons, and further for boys the livestock given to them by the father, for youths and warriors the dues of the captured cattle which they keep for themselves.

The family head is the father of the family. If an older man of his family also lives with him or in the same or a closely neighboring kraal, the two share in the office of the head in such a manner that in all decisions people listen to and heed the counsel of the older man. Legally the head can be deposed by his brethren for mismanagement and incompetence, but this seems to take place only very exceptionally. The head makes the decisions in all family matters. A right to kill and penalize the members does not belong to the father of the family; just as he is not responsible for their debts and misdeeds, neither may he sell or pledge them. The fact that during the famine caused by two cattle epidemics that followed each other in a short time around the year 1890 children and women were given into slavery by their relatives does not prove anything to the contrary. When the corpses of many thousands of the starved lay in the veldt and there was no food of any kind for the survivors, no escape remained for them other than to give themselves or their relatives as serfs to such people as could feed them.

Individual members may detach themselves on account of bad treatment. One who detaches himself flees to another of his lineage or to the one from which his mother stems and purchases his admission with a few cattle that he has stolen from his father's herd and taken along. If he found acceptance in the latter, he must return to his own as soon as he becomes a father.

If a girl is expelled, she may freely choose her future abode, irrespective of tribe or lineage. Wherever she finds abodemore /[illegible]/ she usually remains permanently, in that she marries a member of this lineage. That is, the men and girls taken in remain nonmembers of the lineage, despite their admission, so that they can enter into a legal marriage with members of the lineage concerned.

/[illegible]/ [illegible] Vlasy

[illegible] women and children to one. A is not out of composition, but [illegible] to order to make them useful or ornate, whereas the latest do not keep such. In general one cannot attribute to them a loving disinterested toward their own kind. The latest only to pet possess the courage ascribed to him. Their extraordinary impudence often makes them appear more courageous than they really are. Their sensuality equals that of most but [illegible] other. The wife is at the disposal of every man who belongs to the age class (both [illegible] and [illegible]) of her husband and desires her. It is obvious that, as a result of such conditions and in conjunction with the prevailing polygamy, there can be no question of a proper family life in the higher sense. For her own husband the woman is especially the latter force that he needs for household and livestock management and the means of fulfilling his wish for as many progeny as possible. Accordingly her treatment depends on how the [illegible] up to these tasks. Moderate beatings are not uncommon, but rough treatment almost never occurs. In contrast to the men being about lazily, the women are busy all day long. For the married women there are scarcely any amusements except dance and song; they had their dance of them before their marriage, when they could have their fling in the earlier hours. In public life, as well as with respect to her own husband, the wife has no rights. Of course the [illegible] woman does not regard her servile position as such. She knows nothing else, and fortunately she does not miss a comfort that she does not know. As man, however, as she is transplanted from her own tribe into a foreign one through kidnapping or sale, her willingness to work immediately comes to an end. The less appropriate her new position is, the lazier and at the same time more demanding she becomes. She suddenly regards herself as too good to work, and her desire for clothing and adornment often becomes immoderately. /[illegible]/ Accordingly, her interest in the household becomes low to the point of disappearing and her passion for ornament great. The cause for this phenomenon undoubtedly lies in the fact that she regards life among the hated and despised [illegible] as a disgrace and the work required of her by them as an insult inflicted on her.

[56] club — a gesture of resignation, — when it is presented to him, but is less likely to do so if taken by surprise.

[57]

The second favourite in the discussions usually becomes the owner of the chosen leipuwan, but there is no definite appointment or installation ceremony.

It appears that there is no leipuwan of the whole age until all sections and areas meet together for the annie ceremony. Even one man is singled out to be head leipuwan of the age in respect of all sections attending the ceremony. Thus at the time of writing Lemiko is centrally the head of all the Kiwaio of Mofin, Kiwaio, Lavukiwik, Ingaruka, Sabi and Sawagai sections. But except when all meet together, he carries little weight in any but his own section. He does not appear to keep in touch with his (nominal) subordinates in other sections, nor even with the leading leipuwanik of the Mofin of other areas, — Mondol, Ngaruagum and Pakawa — which are thus, in respect of the Kiwaio age, practically separate sections. Lemiko claims, however, that a deputation from the Lavuyuk of Lavukiwik came to consult him about their standing down, but he took no decision, and referred them to the kanum, the ceremonial head of the age, at Mondol.

The relations between the senior leipuwan of an area and his juniors are only important when all are concerned in a common matter. In most affairs, even a sub-area has a leipuwan of its own, it acts as an independent unit. It will send its own deputation to the lelum, and perform its own local ceremonies. But when an occasion arises when the whole area are to concert, e.g. payment of ngabum cattle or assembly to greet a visiting lelum, the senior man takes precedence. But the relations between the leipuwan, his concert, and the ingabir in any particular sub-area are much more close. The leipuwan should take no important decision except in the presence of his concert, whose duty it is to prevent him from taking any rash step. The ingabir also play a large part in local politics, for it is their duty to depose an unsatisfactory leipuwan, or to choose a successor to one who has resigned. But there is no definite office of ingabir. As Wilkinson says " . . . they are those who have shown ability and strength of character during the many debates . . . " For this reason they are not necessarily confined to the first batch of initiates in any age. For amongst those circumcised later, proofs of ability and strength of character are bound to emerge who will be taken into the confidence of their seniors and so come to rank as ingabir.

This process of strong characters emerging after the age has been formed continues during elderhood. In areas recently opened to settlement, as for instance Longido, elders will emerge as leaders who are in effect leipuwanik or ingabir, though lacking the title. It appears that once a leipuwan has reached elderhood he cannot thereafter be deposed. But a forceful character who is desirous of undertaking the work may in effect deprive the leipuwan of his position, and the Maasai are, in fact, glad to accept anyone who is willing to undertake by no means always popular duties.

S: Research E, 96-4 (no date) 1990 FLAS Mimeo FLAS

may be from 20 to 100, and the anonymous RE. 46, p. 5, records that in a wanyale there may be from 20 to 30 boys. The extension of the term is not clear. It may be applied alternatively to the whole group forming a wanyale, and to a subdivision of this. Thus, we find in RE. 46 that each siri is said to have its own 'portion' of the wanyale. Similarly, Fox says that each siri is commanded by a captain (il ajamoun lo siri), and that the wanyale is ruled by a special leader (il ajamoun 'l al pour = the leader of the age-unit), who is at the same time the captain of his own siri.[]

The fact that the numbers of the siri "as a rule quarrel pretty regularly with other siri of their wanyale" is emphasized by RE. 46, p. 5. There is no indication that the internal organization of the wanyale is based on the seniority of its members. We may, however, assume quite safely that that is the main principle which regulates the relationship of the wanyale's of the two age-units existing at the same period. No special information is available on this point, but it is obvious that members of the two age-units have their own wanyale's and we also know that they unite in time of war, the junior being trained by the senior.

Seemingly the siri division has a military function and serve to readily organize warriors for raids. Hanson,[] however, applies the term to a special partnership which two age-mates contract on their way to the battle-field. They pledge themselves to assist each other while fighting. They refer to each other as 'my comparison' (ne siri si), and if one of them falls, the other has to rescue his arms.[*] Ten or twelve such companions form a company.

The term siri is further applied to the grouping of initiates who come together for a meat festival (ne siri al bal). This group consists according to Hanson,[*] of five or six age-mates who go to a segregated place where they revel on ox-meat.

The meat festivals (al bal, pl. e bal) are held once or twice a month.

[] Very probably the leader of the wanyale is no other than the ajamoun lel bone siri, as indicated. The two different expressions may be taken as describing two different functions exercised by the same person. Ajamoun lel bone siri means lit. "the speaker with the black siri", and 'l ajamoun 'l al pour, "the speaker of the age-unit".

[] Hanson, l. c., p. 78.

[*] Hanson, l. c., p. 85: "Die Jungen der Gebiete bei uns, dem nahen in Kenyia beisammen sind, wenn es Zeit, seine Waffen in Sicherheit zu bringen". The spirit as a military company is also mentioned by RE 46.

[*] Hanson, l. c., p. 84.

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] A betrothal in earliest childhood is not infrequent among the Masai, though has not common by far. In such cases the father of the boy [illegible] shortly after the birth of a girl, who he has for his son. Only a betrothal is in no way binding; rather it seems to have only the value and purpose of strengthening a friendship between the two fathers and securing each other of mutual aid in case of [illegible]. It probably need scarcely be mentioned that in connection with a betrothal in early childhood it is only a matter of the betrothal of the boy to his lawe line, that is, principal, wife. Usually the betrothal to the lawe principal wife is not entered into until the boy is 10 or 12 and the girl might be ten years old. For the lawyer, the father makes the proposal to the mother of the girl, after the bridegroom himself has made sure of the girl's consent. As soon as the mother has then obtained the consent of her husband, she sends the head of the bride with honey as bait to, as a sign that the betrothal has been accepted and the girl is now betrothed. As such she is called [illegible]. During the period of betrothal the couple do not cohabit together; the bridegroom sends the head to which his bride lives, but, if he should send it, the girl hides from him. Thus the two live completely separated from each other, and, in fact, in two different worlds. The bridegroom, for as young warrior [illegible] of herds, does as actual warrior [illegible] of [illegible] from his companions and a corresponding number of young girls in the kraal, the bride, on the other hand, with other young girls and [illegible] to another, dances one. If the girl becomes pregnant during this time, it is regarded as a disgrace and usually leads to dissolving the betrothal. If the latter, by way of exception, is not the case, the betrothal goes every as soon as possible. Otherwise the girl sends her confessor to the hut of an old woman from among her relatives, and after the waiting period is over she goes to another, distant warrior kraal, in the hope of finding a husband there. Only when the warrior is tired of the military life, when his physical strength falls behind that of the majority of his companions, does he think of getting married. In order this long afterwards to exchange the military life

[illegible]

Fathers-in-law must return the bride price if the groom his daughter [illegible]. If the woman who has run away has had children, her husband keeps them. In this case the woman's parents do not pay back anything.

On the day the parents-in-law receive the bride price, the bridegroom gives the elder brother of the bride a pair-old heifer, each of her other brothers and each sister of the bride a male head of cattle. This is only a gift of friendship and has nothing to do with the bride price. Exchange of other across, but does not result in a valid marriage, any more than does wife stealing. On the other hand, it is not infrequent that the girl flees from her unwanted lot or more so she reaches marriageable age and runs to her lover. It often happens then that the girl's father sends a band of boys armed with sticks after her so that though the beating the will be induced to return. Since the boys act at the command of the old man, neither the bridegroom nor anyone else may hinder them. In order to prevent the girl from such violence, only one course remains to the bridegroom, to leave the band with her immediately and move into the forest for a few days. With this he makes it understood that he will appeal with weapons against anyone who might still venture to take his bride from him and at the same time it deprives the girl's father of any further right to object. As soon as the couple in the forest have consumed a row, they return to the kraal, where, without further ceremony, they are recognized as married. Only the girls of the [illegible] and [illegible] do not have this possibility of self-help, for both lineages believe that a girl who goes to her lover in order to remain with him as his wife without her father's consent will die in only a few days after the flight.

In olden times the bride was not supposed to belong to the wife of her bridegroom. The Governor's epidemics of the last 25 years, however, which resulted in the death of many thousands of women, have modified this law somewhat. Accordingly, [illegible] a man may marry a woman who belongs to his tribe, but not to his lineage, already in individual districts there is the further prescription that the girl came to him of her own free will and, after being sent back

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

The Ibans are motivated by a deep feeling of solidarity: they stand united against all foreigners. A dense structure and one that the individual members of the family: they run with one another in order to free a relative who has fallen into slavery. Thus, in 1890, the Ibans who returned from the Batik Expedition immediately used the greater part of their savings to buy back relatives who had become slaves during the great Iroquois epidemic around the year 1880. The tighten in the head between parents, especially the mother, and children, as well as between brothers and sisters, lasts between married people, where the body, opposite portion of the wife is of more importance.

The man owes any kind of work. Only helping one is worthy of a man. Large herds of livestock and many wives are his supreme happiness. One who has both enjoys respect and prestige. One lives down as a poor devil. Truly poor people, however, are exceptions, since relatives support one another to generous ways. One who does not have such quality finds inconvenientness as a rule with one who is well-to-do. He receives food and he has helps the women and children of his brotherhood with their work (livestock-tending, hunting, right work for the small livestock, etc.). The condition of /[illegible]/ poverty is also always only of brief duration: the poor man can acquire more property again through gifts from friends or a share of the spoils of war. Toward friends, one is just as generous as one is great-natured: the hospitality to countrymen, no matter where they come from (with the exception of the blacksmiths, of course), is unlimited. Everyone offers a place wherever he happens to have to feed and drink. Everything that the stranger needs or wishes is at his disposal. He reserves for himself a lot to the right by sticking his spear to the ground in front of it: the lot then each other reserve for the right and leaves home and wife to the guest. If a woman comes for a visit, the wife leaves the lot to the right, so that the stranger may take her place. Hospitality toward other peoples is known only if peace is concluded with them through the ceremony of blood exchange or through blood friendship. The cruelty of the Ibans is no greater than that of the other black peoples, for example, the Dayaks neighboring the Ibans. If they

[illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] | of grace, the ordeal of the bow. A bow is placed on the ground and a weight bow is set at either end of it. This is a gun bow that is filled with a medicine made by a sorcerer. As soon as the defendant has stepped over the bow, [illegible] he, if he is guilty, the punishment of God, that is, in this case death. The effect of the ordeal rests on the firm belief in force. The guilty man is convinced that the punishment of God will force to strike him. He imagines that he is ill and sees his salvation only in an open confession. He goes to the man ordeal, confesses his deed, pays the customary fine, and begs for forgiveness. Only by quitting the bow can he escape the consequences of the bow ordeal. The man ordeal man in this case — if he himself does not wish to invite the punishment of God on himself — goes the parties and does so through words and spittings, whereby at the same time a friendship is achieved between the two. Besides the aforementioned ordeals there are two others which are not accompanied by curses. The of [illegible] | of [illegible] | on [illegible] or of [illegible] | of [illegible] | of gun | the ordeal of the hard seats of earth. The defendant sits on hard on a specially prepared lump of earth. If this condition order him, he is regarded as guilty. The other one, the of [illegible] | of grace (of the gun), is used only if the defendant is a man [illegible]. The defendant, standing, takes a gun between his legs and runs as far off it. If the blood issuing from the [illegible] quarter him, he is guilty.

The majority of the assembly decides whether and which of [illegible] is to be used. The accused then submit to the ordeal, and, in the case, only he alone. He may not substitute a proxy. It is never used against witnesses and plaintiff. The ordeal always constitutes the conclusion of the session, which the leader then terminates with the same prayer with which he began it.

If the ordeal has done no harm to the defendant within ten to fourteen days, he is completely cleared of suspicion. The man ordeal came to a sorcerer (if he had already turned to such a man for the first proceedings, he now goes to another one), who again, through the [illegible] gifted, gives a description of the guilty man. As soon as the man described is found, there are proceedings against him.

D: Hollis G-S (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL.12 Maori FL.12

Kaite ai-mauri ahakki mag-anaiki, kiki mahe ahgiwa: "Ngati!"

Ten ahgawaki 'n-gawa hatiki anaki 'n-ngati kiharu 'n-hahgawaki kiwaki, anaikiahg 'ngi-wik, hahe ngawa ahgawaki ma 'n-hagkawy kiwaki. Ngi-mawaiha ngiya ka 'ngawaki ka 'n-hahgawaki kiwaki.

Ten ahgawaki a-hgawiyaki kiwaki ma-gawai kiki, ahwaki kawa ka 'ngi-mawa ngiya ai-gawa a-hgawiyaki, ngiya a-hgawiyaki: "Ngawaki."

A marriage night, however, may 596
"Ngati" be taken if she is quite young.

When small children or even big boys grant their elders, they do not take their hands, but they hold them with their hands, stroking the old people with their foreheads in the pit of the stomach.

If a woman kisses a small child, the latter touches her breast with its face. The woman then says: "Greeting!"

Re-glyngkgawa.

Tawaiwi-Hawaiwi 'ngi-ahgiha ma 'n-Hawaiwa, ma g' ngiyha mawiyya ma-gawy ngiya, hawaiya.

Ma-g' ahkiy ahawaiyaya, ngiya: "Ngiya kawa, mawa ahawa ahi!"

Ngiya 'n-ngawy mag-ahkg: "Ngiya kawa, mawa! Tawaiwi mag-ki! Tawaiya ahawa mawaiha! Tagawahawa 'n-mahkawk!"

Kawiki kiha ngiya: "Hahgawiki 'n-wiki ma hwiha?" Ngiya 'n-ngawy mag-ahkg: "Kawi."

Kaite ai-mauri ma-gawy ngiya.

Departure.

If a Maori has paid a visit to some friends, and wishes to return home, he ties up his things. 594 595

When he is ready, he says: "Well, I am about to go."

The owners of the kraal reply: "All right! Good-bye. Pray to God, sweet only the things which are safe, and meet entirely but blind people."

The guest then says: "Lie down with honey-wine and milk," to which the owners of the kraal reply: "So be it."

After this the stranger is at liberty to depart to his own country.

Ngiwaiyi.

Ten ahwiki-Hawaiwi 'ngi-ahgiha ma 'n-Hawaiwa, ma ga-ahgiya mag-ahkg, hawaiyiha mag-ahgi hawa ma-mayiha ahki-ahwa, ahwa hawa a ahi-

Hospitality.

When a Maori goes to other kraals to pay a visit, he does not on his arrival enter a hut unless he knows the owner, for if he belongs, for 594

[556] Kiwaré, nawajilig mag-aji na'l-Kiwaré, ano mawa na-a'l-gawa hanya.

Kaina ahilikawa, aja: "Kaina hag-ajijik na'l-Kiwaré?" Gna g' ahaikawi, najilig mag-aji naina.

Ona pa-ajilig nainajilika kinagawy mag-aji, naka ahigawa 'a-ginagawi. A-na-aji, naina ahawawi ahaikawa a-figawiyiki.

[551] Awiki ina naka a-ginagawy mag-aji 'figawiyiki kawaki, naka ainagawa, nailigawiki ahawawi hana-aji nainjilige mainaga.

Hailika ahailigawi kaw'l-Kiwaré ainaikiki ahawawi na-ginagawa, ano ikawa, kaw ahaik ahigawa hanya, aika.

Kiwaré, who is the chief of the Kiwaré tribe, he must not enter the hut of one of the Kiwaré tribe, as he does not belong to this tribe.

He will ask where the hats of the members of the Kiwaré tribe are, and when he has been shown them, he will enter one.

When he has entered, the owner of the hut leaves him and goes to search for a place to sleep in elsewhere, the stranger remaining with his wife[1].

Or if the owner of the hut has several wives, he goes to sleep with one of them, leaving the stranger in the hut he entered.

A Kiwaré cannot refuse hospitality to a stranger (of his own tribe) for he is afraid that the other members of his tribe will curse him, and he will die.

[552] 'E-gaika[2], na 'a-gajik, na kaika.

Hagwa a-Kiwaré 'a-gaika naiaig; nainagwajikiga 'a-gaika na-aika[3]. Kaia 'a-gaika gaika ingawa anga ana 'a-ingawaik.

Ahi a-wawi hanya aja:

[556] "Kainagwa na-gaiaig naka ahingawaga a'l-kaw."

Aja, kaw a-kana ahi-kaw na-

Cattle, grass, and milk.

The Kiwaré love their cattle very much, and consider that nothing in the world is of equal value. As with people, each one is known by name.

There is a saying which is as follows:

"One cow resembles a man's head."

They mean by this that if a man

[1] Vide note a, p. 272.
[2] The Kiwaré cattle are of the humped Zebu type.
[3] Sidwanichwili (The Heart of Africa, vol. i, p. 174) writes with regard to the Dinka and other Nilotic tribes: "The poor savages . . . pay almost a divine homage to their cattle which they hold dearer than wife or child." Kaufmann (Schilderungen, p. 100) adds that on the death of a cow a Dinka goes into mourning as he would if a relation had died.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

En-dōmōno[1].

Nājo en-dōki najo 'l-Masaae En-dōmōno.

Ten eini en-gerai, ore p' eaku en-neishori eng-arna, nāyeñgi ol-kiteñg ōji Ol-le-'n-dōmōno.

Neiñgoruni ol-kiteñg orok sinyati lemeata en-neibor araki en-nenyokye, nāyeñgi.

Neata 'ñgorōyok in-giri enye, neata 'l-mōruak ingunenye.

Ore pe eyeri 'n-giri, ore etaa en-nēōku, neinyōtōto eñgorōyōni nabo aipot in-gulye, nājo: 'Ēoto 'n-aishi, nabo; ōoto 'n-aishi, are; ōo en-aikuti[2] nabo; ōo en-aikuti, are.'

Nepwōnu 'ñgorōyok e-'ngaāg, ne'yakīni en-openy engerai kulle, neishori kunda naāstuo 'n-giri enye, nepwo.

Ore p' eaku teipa, nenap eñgorōyōni en-gerai, nelo alep in-gishu enapita.

Ore p' eidip, nepwōnu 'l-mōruak ōkuni oo menye engerai, metaa ooñgwan, neishori en-gerai eng-arna.

Ore kiteñg le-'n-dōmōno na kutuk-aji āyeñgyeki, nemeitu-

The feast called the offspring.

553
574

There is a feast known to the Masai as The offspring.

When a child is born, and the time has arrived for it to be given a name, a bullock is slaughtered which is called The (bullock) of the offspring.

A black bullock, and one without a blemish or a white or brown spot on it, is selected, and slaughtered.

The meat is then divided up between the women and men[3].

When the meat has been cooked and is nearly ready, one woman stands up and calls the others. She cries out as follows: 'The honey is ready, this is for the first time; the honey is ready, this is for the second time; the meat is ready, this is for the first time; the meat is ready, this is for the second time.'

The women of the kraal then carry milk to the child's mother, and after each has been given her share of the meat, they take their departure.

In the evening the mother carries her child to the cattle kraal, and milks the cows with the child on her back.

When she has finished, three old men and the child's father (which makes four) join her, and the child is named.

The so-called offspring bullock is always slaughtered at the door of [1] This word is now used to translate the Swahili Siku kuu, the big day or holiday.

[2] Meat cooked in a special manner.
[3] Men and women never eat their meals together.

553 574 raari el-lughunya, epiki kutukaji. Nemeduñgori ol-kidoñgoi to-'l-chōni, epali etii metabana nemuta illo-shōni.

the hut, and the skull, instead of being thrown away, is placed by the door. The tail is not separated from the hide as is usually the case: it is left on until the hide is worn out.

857 881 Ore ol-kiteñg le-'n-dōmōno mēji ēyeñgi inna-kata ake p' eīni en-gerai; kake eidimi aataanyu metaa bōtor oo metaa emurati. Memurati ol-tuñgani eitu eñgasi aayeñg ol-kiteñg le-'n-dōmōno.

Now the offspring bullock is not of necessity slaughtered when the child is born; it is permissible to wait until he is big and until he is about to be circumcised. No person is circumcised, however, until this bullock has been slaughtered.

E-murata.

881

Eisho 'l-Maasae:

Ore ol-móruo leitu ae-oloñg emurat en-gerai, nemeidim atumurata eitu epolos e-sita.

Ore en-dōki naji Em-bolosata e-sita, eisho ol-móruo p' eiyōu nemurat en-gerai enye naiteru, emuk en-aisho, neipot il-lewa le-'l-latya enye, neishori, eton emuka 'n-aishi.

Nepwei áitaki illo-oiyōu nemuratisho eng-añg ti-aulo, nelo aton openy te-inne, neirag inne, ne'yakīni en-daa, neton ing-oloñgi oñgwan.

Ore te-nenna-oloñgi elōtu ake añg aiñguraa 'n-gíshu ti-aulo.

The circumcision.

The following is a Masai custom:

A Masai child cannot be circumcised until the father has observed a custom called The passing of the fence.

The man who wishes to have his eldest child circumcised brews some honey-wine, and calls his neighbours together while it is being prepared.

A hut is then built for him outside the kraal, and he stays there for four days alone. He also sleeps there, and his food is taken to him.

During these four days he only approaches the kraal to look after his cattle when they are grazing outside.

881 892 [237] Neishopito 'n-dōkitin oo-'l-muran—ol-alem, o em-bere, o ol-kuma, o el-loñgo, o en-geranda, o e-aidai, o ol-mairutye,

He must don the clothes, ornaments, and weapons of a warrior—the sword, the spear, the club, and the shield, the cap made from the

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

881 Neaku ol-mōruo eidim atumurata 'n-gera enyena, aa 'n-doiye aa 'l-ayok.

After this any of his children, whether girls or boys, may be circumcised.

E-murata oo-'l-ayok.

Boys' circumcision.

881 574 Ten eiyōu 'l-ayok loo-'l-Maasae nemurati, etaiyōlōito 'njere etabana en-gata enye namuratyeki, nepwo áitururo 'l-loo-'l-oshon oonyika, nerōo 'n-gishu eng-añg o-'l-oiboni, ne'ya ɨii 'n-aishi.

When Masai boys wish to be circumcised—having previously ascertained that the time for circumcision has arrived—all those who live in neighbouring districts collect together, and, taking cattle and honey with them, go to the medicine-man's kraal.

Ore en-dōki naata 'l-ayok too-'ng-aik áitaa 'n-areta naa 'n-gusidin áke, me'ya 'remeta neme'ya 'l-alema: il-kuman ake eremōki 'musetani naatii 'm-bolosi.

The only weapons which they may carry in their hands are sticks; they have neither spears nor swords, and their clubs are stuck into their belts.

Ore 'l-ooiñgua 'n-gwapi naalakwa, anaa Kitēto, anaa Moipo, anaa kulye-kwapi naalakwa, neibuñgaa lello 'ng-ai, kake me'ya 'm-baa, neme'ya 'mootyani.

Those who come from countries afar off, such as Kiteto or Moipo, or other distant places, may take their bows, but they must leave their arrows and quivers behind.

Ore taa p' eishori e-murata, neipak, nesirare en-duroto.

When they have received permission to hold the circumcision festival, they enjoy themselves, and paint their bodies with chalk.

[302]

Nelilita too-'ng-añgite 'l-apaitin aare araki ōkuni, nepwo e-wēji nemuratyeki aa 'ng-añgite enye, netoni too-'ng-añgite enye metabana nemurati.

They then pay visits to different kraals during the next two or three months, after which they return home, where they remain until they are circumcised [1].

Ten emurati ol-ayōni

When a Masai boy is circumcised,

[1] It is at this time that the boys of each sub-district choose one of their number to be their ol-aigwenani, that is to say, their counsellor or spokesman, who is also their judge and their representative at the chief medicine-man's court.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Ore ŏji 'N-gaminīni ten ŏyeñg il-moñgi, neisho 'l-kulikae 'n-giri.

whilst the Gaminini are chosen if they frequently slaughter bullocks and give the meat to their comrades. 554

E-murata oo-'n-doiye.

The girls' circumcision.

Ten eiyōuni neiyami 'n-doiye oo-'l-Maasae, nemurati.

When Masai girls wish to marry, they are circumcised. 881 [582]

Ore eng-oloñg namurati, nŏyeñgi ol-kerr araki ol-kiteñg, ŏji Ol-oitupukunieki, anaa too-'l-ayok.

On the day that the operation is performed, a sheep or bullock is slaughtered, and as with the boys it is called The (animal) which has caused her to be taken out (from amongst the girls).

Nemurati ninje ti-atwa aji. Naa, ten eishir, nemeata en-netiu.

Women are operated upon indoors, and it is not considered a disgrace if they cry out. [304]

Mepika ninje 'l-ŏpir anaa 'l-ayok, ol-merisian ake epika.

Instead of the ostrich feathers which the boys wear, a wreath made from the leaves of the Hyphaene (or doum) palm, or of grass, is donned. [237] [297]

Ore ten eishiu, neiyami.

When they recover, they are married. [582]

E-unoto.

The feast called E-unoto or the selection of a chief[1].

622 574

Ten eiyōu 'l-muran nŏuni, nepwo aañgas áiñgoru Ol-aunōni, na ol-tuñgani ŏata menye oo ñgotonye eiñgoru, neata 'n-gishu, neitu ae-oloñg ŏar ol-tuñgani, nemedanya 'ng-onyek e-menye oo ñgotonye, nemeata 'ng-onyek ṗusi[2].

If the warriors wish to select a chief, who is called Ol-aunoni, they choose a man whose parents are still living, who owns cattle and has never killed anybody, whose parents are not blind, and who himself has not a discoloured eye.

Ore ṗe etum, nemiliki;

When they succeed in getting such

[1] A chief called Ol-aunōni is appointed for each sub-district. His duties are to keep the warriors of his sub-district together, and he is responsible to the chief medicine-man for their appearance in case of war. If a warrior disobeys the orders of his chief, he is flogged or maltreated by his companions.

[2] Ṗus (pl. ṗusi) means the colour of a corpse or blue.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

672 574 eisudorieki metebana nebau e-unoto.

a one, they do not inform him; it is kept hidden from him until the time for the celebration of the feast arrives.

Ore ten enyoru ol-oiboni, neripakīni ol-kila anaa ol-loo-'l-móruak oo 'surutya.

If the chief medicine-man approves of the selection, a cloth is made for the new chief like those worn by the old men, and surutya ear-rings are obtained.

Ore etaa en-nēuni, neitauni en-giti-añg ti-aulo e-manyata naji O-singira.

Just before the feast a small kraal, called O-singira, is built a short distance from the warriors' kraal.

Nepiki inna-kiti-añg 'n-gīshu naalepo ake.

Only milch cows are placed in this kraal.

Ore inna-oloñg nauni, neibuñgi ol-aunōni, amu ten ějōkīni: 'Ira ol-aunōni,' eitu eibuñgi, nekwet aisudori, araki ěar ol-tuñgani, pe meaku ol-aunōni, amu eiba ten eaku ol-móruo, amu meitōki alo en-jore.

[887]

On the day of the feast the chief is seized, for if he were told that he is to be chosen, he would run away and hide, or kill some one. The idea of becoming an old man is distasteful to him, since he will be unable to again go to the wars.

Ore p' eibuñgi, nepiki 'surutya, neishopōkīni ol-kila anaa ol-móruo; neidipayu en-gias e-inna-oloñg.

When he has been seized, the surutya ear-rings are put on him, and he is clothed like an old man. After this the work for the day is over.

Ore tadēkenya neiñgoruni ol-kiteñg arus, neibok il-muran aaman.

On the morrow a black bullock with a white neck and belly is sought out from the herds, and surrounded by the warriors.

Ore pe epwo 'n-gīshu shoo, neiñgoruni ol-tuñgani ōgol oibuñg ol-kiteñg e-mōuo ayu, neibuñg ol-likae o-sararua.

When the cattle go to the grazing ground, a strong man is chosen, who holds the bullock by the horn at arm's length, whilst another one seizes it by the navel.

Neremi illo-kiteñg em-bidiñg, nēyeñgi te-inne.

[231]

The bullock is stabbed in the nape of the neck [1], and skinned on the spot.

Neinok il-móruak en-gima kitok to-'l-osingo le-'manyata, nepik e-mōuo o-'l-osōwan.

The old men then light a big fire in the centre of the warriors' kraal, and throw a buffalo horn into it.

[113]

[1] All the Nilotic tribes butcher their cattle by stabbing them in the nape of the neck (Schweinfurth, The Heart of Africa, vol. i, p. 60).

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Ore p' eaku en-nëä en-gima, nějōkīni 'l-muran, amu eitashe pôkin ti-aulo: 'Eidipe.'

When the fire is dying down, the warriors standing outside are called, and told that, 'it is finished.' 622 574

Nekwet il-muran pôkin samurutōkīno idya-mōuo.

They all run towards the spot, racing to get the horn.

Ore ol-oitera abaïki, nepik eng-aina atwa en-gima, neitau e-mōuo, neitório eng-aina, neitadol il-kulikae idya-mōuo, nějo: 'Aidipa.'

The one who arrives first puts his hand in the fire, and, taking out the horn, stretches out his arm. He shows it to the others, and cries out: 'I have finished it.'

Ōnaa, neidipayu e-unoto.

With this the E-unoto feast terminates.

Nebarni ol-aunōni te-innaoloñg o ol-aigwenani ōatai opa ake eton eitu emurati.

The Aunoni, or chief, is shaved on the same day together with the Aigwenani, or Counsellor, who was elected before the feast of circumcision. 622 302

Nebarni si ninje 'l-kulikaemuran too-'n-gulye-oloñgi.

Afterwards the warriors may be shaved whenever they wish.

Ore p' eidipi aatuun, něyeñgisho 'l-muran, netoni 'l-apaïtin ooñgwan ana imyet, nepwo en-jore naji En-oo-'n-dorosi araki En-e-'unoto.

When the warriors have elected their chief, they slaughter cattle, and wait for four or five months, at the expiration of which they proceed on a raid. This is called The (fulfilment) of the vow or The (selection) of the chief. 721

Neishop 'l-karash ooji sii 'N-dorosi, nepik il-arash.

They wear cotton cloths[1], called The vow[2], on which are sewn the seeds of the ekirikiti tree[3]. [292] [824]

Nepik sii 'n-gäk e-'syaïti 'murto naaji 'mangäk, ne'ya 'l-kulikae 'l-kidoñgi lo-'l-kumbau araki 'l-lenyok le-menye.

They also wear necklaces made of twigs of the e-syaïti tree[4], and called Mangäk, and some carry their fathers' snuff-boxes or fans with them. [301] [824] [293]

[1] Before cotton cloths were introduced, dressed skins sewn together were worn. 'N-dorosi garments are worn like the Spanish poncho, a slit being made in the middle for the head to pass through.

[2] A raid undertaken after a long peace is also called en-oo-'n-dorosi. Any warrior who shirks his duties on an occasion of this sort can be put to death, and his murderer will not be punished. [686] [627]

[3] Erythrina tomentosa, R. Br.

[4] Acalypha fruticosa, Forsk.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

304 752 Naa, ten eata opa 'l-tuñganak pôkin in-jilalo oo-'l-ala le-keper mme ana'-'ata eiyōuni naleñg im-bwat. Ore taata etamooki em-bwata.

Ten edol il-Maasae ol-t[illegible]gani [626] lemebwa, nekwenikye aajo: 'Eñgárie 'sirkon en-daa.'

Had people formerly extracted the upper teeth, they would not have required the hole in the lower jaw. But now they have become accustomed to the latter.

When the Masai see a man who has not had the two middle incisors extracted, they laugh at him, and say: 'He eats his food like a donkey.'

Em-barnore.

302 Ebarn il-móruak oo' ñgorōyok oo 'n-gera oo-'l-Maasae 'l-lughuny oo 'l-papit loo-'ng-onyek le-keper, neput il-papit loo-'ng-onyek li-abori ten eirugo pe erim eng-oñgu.

Neput araki nebarn sii 'l-munyo oo 'n-gitikit oo 'n-goleshi; nepej kulikae 'l-papit loo-'l-oresheta, nepal kulikae.

Teni mepuroo il-muran, nemebarn il-lughuny metabana ●[574] nēuni, neitubulu 'l-taighan.

Ore ten eīu e-ñgorōyōni en-gerai, nemebarn ninye o en-gerai enye metabana nebulu

Shaving.

Masai elders, women[1], and children shave their heads and eyebrows, and pull out their eyelashes if they enter their eyes.

They also pull out or shave the hairs of the beard, armpits, and pubes, and some singe the hairs of their shins.

If warriors are not in mourning[2], they may not shave their heads until they have held the feast called e-unoto[3], and they grow pigtails.

When a woman gives birth to a child, neither she nor the child are shaved until the latter has four [113] [171] [174] Sir H. Johnston, in commenting upon this, says (The Uganda Protectorate, p. 803): 'It may be this explanation has been invented recently to explain a very ancient custom inherited by the Masai from the Nilotic stock, which was their origin; for amongst these people the removal of the lower incisor teeth is a very common practice.' Hinde's explanation, however, appears to be very widely spread.

[171] [1] This very uncommon practice for women to shave their heads is also followed by the Dinkas, Baris, and Latukas (Cummins, 'Sub-Tribes of the Bahr-el-Ghazal Dinkas,' Journal of the Anthropological Institute, June, 1904; and Baker, The Albert Nyanza, p. 90, &c.).

[2] Vide p. 306.

[3] Vide p. 299.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

monies are not performed by some selected individuals on behalf of others, as for Embolosat and Endungore-Engibata. Also from a territorial point of view all these ceremonies differ. A single performance of Embolosat, which opens the class-period, is valid for all Masailand; Endungore-Engibata, which opens the unit-period, is sectional; individual initiation is held at each village. The following diagram illustrates the correspondence.

A candidate's age for individual initiation is indicated by FOSBROOKE as 16-17 years. The principle for admission to initiation seems to be that the candidate must have passed his puberty, and his father must have performed "the passing of the fence" as described above. [67]

Circumcision is the central point of Masai individual initiation. The ceremony is performed in three stages, a) a testing of the past moral behaviour of the candidate; b) the ordeal of circumcision; c) a period of special segregation.

a) On the eve of circumcision day the candidate is completely shaved by his mother. The elders are entertained with meat and beer [68] at the house of the candidate's mother. [69] Then the elders

[67] Cases may occur of boys who have to be initiated at an earlier age for some special reason. FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 28 records the instance of a father's orphan having to be initiated in his early puberty in order to inherit.

[68] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 297, states that a bullock is slaughtered and called ol-oirupukiniek — the (animal) that has caused him to be taken out of the boys' ranks. FOX says that a number (5, 6 or 9) of gourds of beer are offered to the elders.

[69] There is no special meaning in the use of the mother's house. The custom is occasioned by the arrangement of a Masai polygynic village. Every

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

881 "ask the boy (candidate) various questions as to his past behaviour, and he is put on oath to answer truly".[70] Apparently no special ordeal such as we find among the Kipsigis is attached to this testing.

b) The operation may be performed "in the morning or the evening according to the particular custom of the family concerned" (Fox). Generally it takes place early in the morning. The operator [648] is said never to be a Masai. Generally he is a Dorobo, and sometimes a Kikuyu (Fox). This peculiarity is worth noting, especially if it is compared with the great care observed in selecting all other leaders or officers out of the pure Masai.[71]

881 Before the operation is performed, the candidates take a cold 304 bath in order to make their body insensible, or remain "shivering in a state of nudity until the sun rises" (Bagge).[72] Candidates are then operated upon, outside the village near the right-hand post of the gate. The patient must not betray any sign of suffering. That would disgrace him and all his family. A few elders assist and support the patient during the operation, and help him to his mother's house after the wound has been washed. Once inside he is given food (fresh blood) and a special beverage, called eng alipeta, after which he is allowed to speak.

881 The circumcised youth is presented by his mother's brother [491] with new sandals, and henceforth he is not supposed to make use of any garment worn before the ceremony. A procession by four girls (cfr. Fox), waving branches takes place to the entrance of the [574] boy's hut. The elders are again entertained with meat and beer;

[595] wife of a man has her independent house where she lives with her children and cattle. But the whole homestead belongs to the father, and it would be quite correct, though not as precise, to say: the house of the candidate's father.

[70] We may assume that these questions are connected with the candidate's moral and sexual behaviour. Fosbrooke states that "prior to circumcision [834] no youth may have intercourse with a circumcised woman. This is a rule most strictly adhered to". The same custom is observed among the Nandi-speaking peoples.

[71] Cfr. the election of the Ol Ol opolos at the Embolosat; of the ol amal boys, the aigwenani, and the mejengema at the Endungore-Engibata; of the ol aunoni at the unoto.

[72] Leakey states that it is "absolutely essential that the cattle shall be [231] in their enclosure during the whole of the ceremony". No further details are given nor are reasons offered for this fact which is not mentioned by any of our Massai authorities. However, it shows that circumcision is not related to the cattle aspect of Massai culture.

2: Bernardi E, N-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

the warriors with milk This seems to be the feast that MERKER refers to as " the feast of the circumcised boys – ol ogor lel aijok amerate ". The newly circumcised remain in his mother's house until the wound is healed. 881 [574]

c) At this stage all the newly circumcised assemble from the various villages; they form small bands and go around shooting at small birds with special small bows and arrows. They wear women's clothes, women's ear-decorations (used also by elders) and a special headdress to which they append the birds they kill. During this period they are caled es sibolio, pl. i-sibolio – the recluse, and are under strict regulations: At evening they must return home and enter the village before the cattle. They must not drink blood or cut meat or touch it with their hands. They must not wash. They must avoid girls. They must not fight with, or be struck by, any other: if this happens, milk must be put on their heads. They must not go out in the daytime without their special headdress.

The period of segregation may last for some months. At the end by order of the elders they are shaved by their mothers (hence they are called the shaved ones – ol barnoti pl. el barnot) and presented by their fathers with the arms of the warriors, a spear, a sword and a shield. It is a peculiar distinction of the initiates to let their hair grow and to twist it into a pigtail of which they are very proud. [73] At this later stage the initiates will be called ol morani, pl. el moran, i. e. those who have been circumcised. [302] [302]

It is generally stated, and apparently even by the Masai themselves, that as soon as a youth is circumcised he becomes a man. The evidence shows clearly that the expression " becomes a man " does not describe the real social status of a newly circumcised. Even if the statement is taken to mean that through circumcision a boy has attained the status of a man, and therefore is entitled to full participation in Masai social life, the statement is at variance with the evidence. As a matter of fact no Masai is allowed to marry soon after circumcision. In order to marry he must be at least a senior initiate, i. e. a member of the senior age-unit. [74] A newly circumcised (i. e. a junior, and to some extent also a senior initiate) may 884 881 [582] 561

[73] On this particular custom, cfr. MERKER, l. c., p. 143; ELLIOT, in T. N. and R., 1948, n. 26, pp. 80 ss.

[74] The seniority of the age units is discussed in the next paragraph. With reference to the text above we note that even when a senior initiate marries, he is not allowed to beget children, as this is the privilege of the elders. See below, where LEAKEY and FOX are cited.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 institution of Masai culture. We are much inclined to think on 79 different lines. The office of the prophet is essentially a ritual office.
[114] His true power derives from his ritual value. It seems evident from the preceding analysis that Masai political and social structure is primarily based on the age-system. We think that it is solely for this system that the laibon did not entirely succeed in invading the political field and usurping the authority of the elders.

That the function of the prophet is essentially foreign to the age system is a fact which the present analysis may also have helped to make evident. The conclusion arrived at by FOSBROOKE on " the incompatibility " of the laibon institution " with the original cul-
[114] ture " of the Masai is one that could only be properly reached after an historical and critical study of Masai ritual and religious institutions and not merely from a survey of their political and social institutions.

XII – THE RELATIONSHIP OF CLASS-MEMBERS [184]

561 A strong bond of solidarity is felt by all members of a class.
574 Such feeling is primarily due, as is natural, to the mere fact of belonging to the same social body. Other factors, such as a more or less equal age and the contemporaneous performance of essential initiation ceremonies give substantial cause for a feeling and bond of that kind. That such a bond is strong and effective is clearly shown by Masai hospitality customs. They show also what force of cohesion springs from the age-system structure. Any class-member has a right to stay and live at the house of any of his age-mates. While he is a stranger to the place, he is not a stranger to his age-mate for they are members of the same class. The latter cannot refuse him, otherwise he would be cursed by his own class. This [626] cursing power of the age-class is very significant to our present purpose. It shows the authority and power possessed by the class for keeping its structural cohesion and for defending itself from any disruptive attack. [185]

[184] MERKER, l. c., p. 47; HOLLIS, l. c., p. 480; FOX, l. c., p. 183.

[185] Masai hospitality customs are best described by HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 287 s. Translating, as he does, direct Masai accounts, he writes: " When a Masai goes to other kraals to pay a visit, he does not on his arrival enter a hut unless he knows the owner, for if he belongs, for instance, to the Aimer age, he must not enter the hut of one of the Kishumu age, as he does not belong to this age. He will ask where the huts of the members of the Aimere age are, and when he

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

It is possible to consider that solidarity as a kind of class identity. 561
This identity does not exclude the possible variations and differentiations of class-members arising from individual differentiations of talents and character, from leadership, seniority and social prestige attached to the possession of a great number of wives and a large herd of cattle. The main expressions of that identity are the use of a single name for the whole class and some special marriage regulations which apply to class members and, to some extent, to their children.

Thus, a man may not marry the daughter of a member of his [582] [684] own class. If he fornicates with her he is punished by his own age-mates. " His kraal is destroyed, he is severely beaten, and a number of his oxen are slaughtered ". Similarly, " if a warrior or boy commits adultery with a wife of a man belonging to his father's age-grade (or class), he is solemnly cursed by the members of that age-grade ". (HOLLIS). Furthermore, any class member when a guest [837] of any of his age-mates, has a right to cohabit with his host's wife. MERKER, says that a widow " must not re-marry but she must live [587] with the members of her deceased husband's class ". This " sexual communism ", as HOLLIS calls it, takes place only among members [837] of the same class. It is limited, of course, by clan and kinship exo- [582] gamy, which, even for class members, is strictly enforced.

At the performance of the Embolosat, Engibata, Unoto, Ngeherr 561
names are given to sets instituted. Names assumed at the Embolosat, 552
Engibata, and Unoto are temporary, for temporary is the nature of the set thus established. At the Ngeherr-proper all previous names are discarded for a single name which is final and applies to the age-class as a whole. It is this name which is handed down to the following generations. Age-class names are, as it were, the milestones by which Masai can order their past into a certain historical perspective. Class names are thus recalled when historical facts are recounted.

Lists of class-names have been recorded by our authorities. It may be of interest to reproduce here some of those lists collected by MERKER, FOX, and FOSBROOKE.[166] FOSBROOKE has attempted has been shown them, he will enter one. When he has entered, the owner of [574]

the hut leaves him and goes to search for a place to sleep in... A Masai cannot refuse hospitality to a stranger (of his own age) for he is afraid that the other [759] [626] members of his age will curse him, and he will die ".

[166] MERKER, l. c., p. 289; FOX, l. c., pp. 450, 462; FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 11 s.

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

abandoned, and, though meat and milk were still the main 885.
items of his eating, he could now vary it with vegetable food, [262] obtained by his wife from neighbouring agricultural tribes.
Luxuries, also, he might now indulge in. He sported a [276] fancy snuff-box and tobacco-box of ivory or rhinoceros' horn, and delighted to rap up its contents as he handed it to a friend. He chewed tobacco (mixed always with natron), though he never smoked. Then, as often as convenient, he [273] liked to foregather with his friends, and have a jolly carouse over beer or mead.

It is pleasant to know that with this change in his mode 157 of life there was a corresponding alteration (very much for 574 the better) in his views of things. He delighted to talk with 439 the traders whom before he had gloried in killing or annoy- 885 ing, and would in token of good-will cordially exchange the courtesies of life by spitting upon them and being spat upon.
In his conversation he showed an intelligence far superior to any specimen of the Bantu tribes. He had no suspicions, and was communicative about his affairs and beliefs. He would even at times exercise a friendly guardianship of passing traders, and was able to ward off many a disaster by judicious warning. He was not stinted in his presents, and generally gave far more than he got. He has been known even to protect strayed porters, and tend sick men left behind

The softening down of his ferocity reacted upon his face. 885
The habitual scowl gradually died away, and was replaced by 771 a more pleasing and genial expression. His thoughts turned 987 more to the strange mystery of life. He, alas! had little that was cheering to look forward to. He believed in the existence of a Supreme Being, and yet had not the faintest conception of an after-life. Unlike the men of the Bantu races, he did not believe in ghosts or spirits. He had no theory of dreams, and did not imagine like the negro that when he dreamed he was really experiencing all that was passing through his brain, and that his soul or spirit was actually knocking around somewhere, having a good time of it, unclogged by his body. Moran believed nothing of that; indeed, whether he had any idea on the subject, I have not 885 been able to determine. When the man died, he was 761 finished utterly, except so far as he might go piecemeal to build up the body of a hyena, a vulture, or a marabout stork.
The Masai believe in annihilation. To bury a corpse would, [764] they think, be to poison the soil: it must be thrown to the wild beasts without ceremony.

is called an ol amal. The boys may carry knives for defence but not spears, for it is said that a spear is a sign of force, and their quest is a peaceful one. Each boy must carry a bow, for the bow is a token of peace. Furthermore it ensures that any reasonable request the boys may make during the ol amal will be granted. No Masai may refuse the request of one who carries a bow in his hand. The boys take no arrows with them. They visit all the principal villages and in dance and song they announce the object of their visit. They then seek out all the bigger boys of the village and add them to their number. If they wish to spend a night at a village they beg an ox for food from the elder of their sponsor's age-group. Elders of other age-groups present them with milk to drink. In this way the news is spread far and wide and finally the boys, now of considerable numbers, return to the elders who despatched them, taking as a gift a large quantity of honey. Then a special village is erected in which only the boys' sponsors and their families may live. The boys borrow ostrich feathers and lion mane head-dresses from the warriors and on the appointed day they collect at the elders' village. [561] [411] [574] [431] [361] [237] [714]

The ceremony commences with a dance called engibata; for this, the boys form three files, one wearing ostrich feather head-dresses, the second wearing lion mane head-dresses, and a third, of boys who have decorated their bodies with broad stripes of white earth to resemble zebras. [535]

The latter must be quite nude; those who wish may wear thigh-bells. They may not carry weapons of any sort, but each carries a thin wand, the length of a spear. After much dancing, the boys form a procession and walk round inside the circle of huts following two leaders, one of whom blows a Kudu horn from time to time. The procession then halts and the leader prays aloud to Engai Narok —the Black God, to shower his blessings on the boys. This prayer has been taught them beforehand by the elders, some of whom stand by and prompt when necessary. When the prayers are over, the elders take the boys outside the village and spend some time instructing them in their duties to their sponsors and to the tribe. A return is then made to the village and the elders bring a fire-stick, the one called ol-piron, also a male circumcision knife and a small dead bird. This bird may be of any kind other than a dove. The elders break the fire-stick before the assembled boys. They then place a curse upon the circumcision knife and taking the dead bird they break one of its legs and pierce one of its eyes—presumably as an indication of the ill which will befall any boy who dares to be circumcised before the curse is taken off the knife. [291] [782]

In this way, the elders formally lay claim to the sponsorship of a new age-group. From that time the boys refer to their sponsors as Il-piron, whilst the elders refer to the boys as Il-piron.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

When the time for the ceremony arrives, a very big village is built called sunubu, and all the members of that age-grade which is to be transferred from the Junior to the Senior Warriorhood stage assemble here with their friends and relations. The warriors concerned all dress up in their very best finery, and lion skins especially are in great demand; and for nine days they dance a special dance called Kaiboch el morua. During the whole nine days of dancing a very great number of cattle are slaughtered, and there is great feasting and beer-drinking, but neither the dancing nor the feasting are the important part of the ceremony; they are merely incidentals, centred around the thingira. 56 [535] [574]

The Thingira.—Away from the main village an enormous hut has been built which will accommodate anything up to four hundred men at a time. It is said to be round in plan, to have a pointed roof, and to take very many days to build. There are no partitions inside it, but in the centre is dug a circular pit. Outside the hut is a thorn fence with only one entrance. This hut is called thingira (a word which has been borrowed by the neighbouring Kikuyu and applied to ordinary bachelor huts), and is the centre of the whole of the Eunutu ceremony. During the whole of the nine days of the ceremony this thingira is used as a "club-house" by the men of the age-group concerned with the ceremony, but there are certain restrictions, and it is these restrictions which give the key to the meaning of the whole ceremony. It is considered both ignoble and dishonourable for any man in the warrior groups—and more especially the junior warrior groups—to have any sexual relations with any but the uninitiated girls, but, of course, cases do occur either openly (see Forced Marriage) or in private. Now all members of the age-group concerned must be present at the Eunutu ceremony, but only those who have strictly observed the above regulation and have never had sexual relations with an initiated girl or married woman may enter the thingira. In order that no one may do so under false pretences the entrance to the thingira is bewitched by the elders, so that if anyone ineligible enters he will surely die. 56 34 [192] [834] [754]

The thingira is not big enough for all the warriors concerned to use it simultaneously, and each day for the nine days there is a public ceremony when the various individual territorial groups are expected to enter. For this ceremony all the friends and relations of those who are expected to enter collect round the entrance and each individual as he enters is greeted with applause, as he has shown by entering that he has not dishonoured himself or his family. Those warriors who dare not enter try to slink away unobserved, for they are disgraced. Inside the hut—as mentioned—is a large hole which is used as a cesspool, into which the men who enter the hut must urinate. This cesspool is also bewitched as an extra precaution, and anyone who has falsely entered and evaded the witchcraft of the entrance will certainly die upon urinating in the hole. All those who enter the thingira on any given day during the ceremony sleep there that night, and also have milk and meat brought them for food, and sit and talk for hours. During [514] [754]

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Milking.—Milking is usually done by women and girls, but uninitiated boys may also milk. Milk is either drunk fresh or is curdled by mixing with blood, or is curdled alone by leaving for two or three days. 234 462 252

Raiding.—Frequent raids on neighbouring tribes are carried out by the warrior classes, and the cattle and sheep so obtained are some of them distributed to a warrior's parents and friends and some kept for himself. When cattle are raided from another clan or sub-clan in order to repay a murder (see Murder), all maimed, blind, and otherwise damaged cattle are returned immediately afterwards, for to keep these would certainly bring bad luck on the raiders. 721 [682] [777]

PART X.—MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Fire.—Fire for special occasions is made by means of the hand-drill method, and women may not make fire by this means. Normally, fire is obtained from the ashes of the previous day's fire or from a few live coals borrowed from a neighbouring hut. The first fire in all new huts must be made with fire-sticks. 372

Murder.—Should a man kill a member of his own sub-clan there is no punishment. "What would be the use of taking a fine from one's own sub-clan?" If, however, a man of another sub-clan is killed, then the sub-clan of the murdered man raid the murderer's sub-clan and try to seize cattle in compensation. Usually a free fight takes place and if, in the course of this, a man of the murderer's sub-clan is killed, the matter is considered all square, and any raided cattle are returned. In the course of such a raid all sorts of cattle are driven off, but all the blind and maimed ones are returned next morning (see Raiding, above). 682

Smiths.—Among the Masai smiths are considered "bad." There are smiths in each clan, and the business is purely a family one handed down from father to son. Young boys of smiths' families are initiated alone, and once initiated go straight to the business of smithing and may take no part in the life of the ordinary novices or warriors. Smiths are considered to be considerably lower in the social scale than even the Wandorobo. A Dorobo can leave his hunting life and rank as a true Masai if he so chooses, but never a smith. 326 564 [563]

If a smith comes and sleeps at a village he is given a bed, but must sleep on the wrong side of the sleeping hide (i.e. the rough fleshy side). Smiths may only marry with smiths' families. No Masai would dream of marrying or having any kind of sexual intercourse with a smith's daughter (Wandorobo girls may be married by Masai, but not vice versa), nor can a smith marry an ordinary Masai girl. Smiths make spears and small knives, cattle bells and iron ornaments, but never swords, which are always bought from the Kikuyu. Should a Masai buy the cattle or sheep of a smith he must dip them in the river before adding them to his flock. [574] [582] [563] [411] [412] [438]

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 884

warriors may have sexual relations with initiated women. This is regarded as being the first stage in a warrior becoming an elder.

The warriors have their heads shaved—usually by their mothers—at the close of the E-Unoto ceremony, but they allow the hair to grow again, and plait it into a pig-tail when long enough. [302]

Milk Drinking by Warriors.—A warrior may not drink milk unless it is handed him by another of his age-group. They must therefore always go about in parties of two or more. The procedure on arrival at a village where they want some milk is as follows :— 561 574 272

The warriors enter the village and stand in the open space within the circle of the huts till one or more of the old men comes to greet them. They ask for a hut of their age-group, or, failing that, a hut of an elder of their Ol Piron. On being shown a hut to enter they go in and sit down on a bed or the stool, and wait till milk is handed to one of them (for description of hut see p. 463 ff.) He shakes up the milk, removes the cap of the gourd, and hands it to his companion, who drinks it. If only one gourd is brought they share it, handing it from one to the other. If a second gourd is brought the warrior to whom the first gourd was originally handed may open it and drink it himself provided that he has given the first gourd to his companion. Belching after a drink of milk is a sign of repletion and is good manners, showing the guest's appreciation of the hospitality of his host.

Ol-Ng'esher of Milk.—This ceremony is performed by each warrior individually. He is given milk by an elder in his mother's hut, and drinks it by himself. He shaves his head and does not grow a pigtail again. Thereafter he may drink milk by himself. He usually marries very soon after this ceremony, and is no more regarded as a warrior after it. The ceremony usually takes place nowadays a year or two after the E-Unoto owing to Government policy of reducing the period of warriorhood as much as possible. In the Purko, most of the Il-Salosh have already performed their milk Ol-Ng'esher, although there is as yet no left-hand age-group for their generation. 561 [272] [302] [148] [177]

I have heard it said that in some tribes there is a ceremony of handing over warriorhood from one generation to a junior one. Among the Masai there was no such ceremony. When the young warriors of a new generation became strong enough they fought and defeated the old ones, taking on the warriorhood by force.

Meat Feasts.—No man may eat meat which has been touched by an initiated woman until he has performed the second Ol-Ng'esher ceremony, called the Ol-Ng'esher of meat. After that he may eat meat which a woman has touched if he likes. The Il Meruturut and Il Kitoip age-groups of the Purko were said to be going to have their meat Ol-Ng'esher in June, 1930 ; but I left Africa before it was due, and therefore cannot describe the ceremony. [262]

A man of the generation immediately older than the warriors must not be seen eating or drinking milk by a warrior until one of the warrior age has given him a heifer.

16:Hamilton U-5 (1959) 1963

[P.109-A] FL12 Masai FL12
Loita

561 535 [386] [574] [262] warcry of old: 'I am the son of So-and-So,' and 'I am the Son of Such-and-Such' and drive their branding irons into the outcrop. They fill their gourds with it and then return home and are treated with great reverence at Masai villages en route, being fed on a hot mixture of milk and water, known as 'blue water.'

Once painted, the young men formed into two columns, some 50 yards apart, and marched to the village. Many wore ostrich headdresses and some the lion-mane caps. Around their necks and waists they wore gaily coloured lengths of calico and beaded thongs secured crescent-shaped bells to their thighs. The clashing of the bells was deafening. This return journey to the village is carefully planned so that the young men do not have to walk through or near any water or cross a stream. On nearing the village, the columns counter-marched, then joined together into double file and entered the arena. As they passed, their mothers called out: 'Endapok!'—'May you survive!'—but many of the women were busy attending to their throwing fire. There were a number of very violent ones as soon as the columns had passed within the circle of houses. Then the columns split up into groups and marched back and forth across the arena, each group led by an elder blowing a kudu horn (one of the very few Masai musical instruments). Now and then two groups would halt and, forming line, kneel and bow to one another; or to the O-Singwa hut. [534]

561 [302] [413] Late in the afternoon of this day the mothers of the 40 'pure ones' shave their sons' heads. All the hair, eyebrows included, is removed by means of a spendlier Masai razor. Milk is used in place of soap. Whilst being shaved, each young man squats in front of his hut on the ceremonial hide on which, as a boy, he had sat to be circumcised, and which, in future, will form the top layer of his mother's bed. A little of the hair from the Ol-Oiuwo and his lieutenant is also put in their mothers' beds, the remainder being thrown into the calf pens which form a part of their family home. Great care is taken that none is left lying about in the open in case birds should use it for their nests—a grave affront to the young men's sacred role. [825] [554]

During the course of the day the branches used as night barricades between the houses were replaced with new ones bearing green leaves. This is a symbolic act, meant to ensure that the morans may flourish as 'green bay trees.' [789]

The third day is called 'The Day of the Sacred Hut.' During the morning a heifer, a gift to the Ol-Oiuwo from his father, is driven into the bush and slaughtered. This animal, called 'The Cow of the Rings,' must be a first-calver, well built, and black with a white belly. All the morans gathered at the slaughtering place to receive their rings from 'The Center-up of the Hide,' while their families waited in the village in an atmosphere of great expectancy.

Late in the afternoon the first of the morans, naked and still whitened with discomfiture, came running back to his hut. There he received a deafening welcome from his family, whom he then led in a boisterous procession round and round the sacred hut. Soon, the whole arena was full of morans leading their families round the O-Singwa, everyone shouting and highly excited. Each young man wore, on the third finger of his left hand, a ring from the hide of the Ol-Oiuwo's heifer. These rings are really only strips of hide about four inches long with a hole near one end to take the wearer's finger. After a time, the 'pure' 40 arrived, their shaven heads gleaming, white circles of discomfiture like spectacles round their eyes and garlands of green leaves round their necks. They stood in a group near the O-Singwa whilst the Ol-Oiuwo was led to his hut. In front of his doorway we placed the hide on which he had sat to be shaved, and on this we set his three-legged stool, and into its concave seat was poured a mixture of water, milk and honey. The Ol-Oiuwo, who seemed all too conscious of his role of scapegoat, then sat on the stool. [351]

/73 cont./

561 634 [791] [787] After he has counted off the little stones of his oracle game for a while, he decides that N., the son of M., is to become ol aunoni. This session is secret, and the speakers also have a duty to keep its result secret for the time being. A man can only become ol [554] aunoni who is distinguished by physical beauty, faultless build, strength, and health. After the speakers have returned home again to their area, they call together all the ol borôr members there and, with these, again set out for the ol oiboni. Then a very large hut (os siñgira otunigi) is built there. When it is finished, the speakers take a number of warriors into their confidence and tell them who has been named ol aunoni. Then all gather in the hut, in the center of which stands a new, neatly carved wooden stool, toward which the one named is inconspicuously pushed by those who know. As soon as this has been accomplished, a few of those standing around him [301] [291] push him down onto the stool, others place a string of blue ring-beads (ó gonodgo) around his neck, tie the spiral ear ornament made of copper wire (e surudia), such as is worn by old men and women, into his ear lobes, remove his short, skin-apron (e megiti) of the warrior, and in its place drape around him the long one of the married (the ol gela i ol morusk). Finally all those present cheer the new ol aunoni and cry out tadarawá ó ifis ná giachon, that is, remain poor, [556] bring us luck. The Masai in general maintain that every ol aunoni has remained poor: if he were to put livestock in his kraal, he would soon die, his wives would bear him few children, wealth would remain denied him. But he does not need it, for every man under him is [431] obliged to give to the ol aunoni visiting him a fat ox and milk. Hence he is constantly on visiting trips, which explains why he has neither a large stock of cattle nor numerous progeny. In his kraal the lord who keeps the women at work is missing, and the latter in turn indeed have no incentive to work, for, by means of the gifts that fall to their husband, an excess of foodstuffs always prevails.

[574] [721] After the ol aunoni festival is over, the other ol borôr members wander back home and celebrate a long meat feast (ol bul), whereupon they /74/ usually set out on a war expedition, while the ol aunoni himself goes back to his kraal and remains there.

[Warrior Kraal]

/84 cont./

701 As long as the latter stays in the kraal, his girl is obliged to 836 remain faithful to him, but if he leaves it, even for only one day, she is entitled to console herself with another kraal companion, provided that between her and him -- as is also a condition for her relationship with her os sandja -- there is no obstacle such as the above-mentioned obstacles to marriage based on lineage affiliation.

233 The tending of the livestock falls to the boys. Even at night 857 they sleep outside in order to watch them and are assisted in the watch by the mothers, who take turns several times every night and frighten off wild animals by shouting.

361 Within the ring of huts there is a circular kraal of thorns for /85/ the cattle and near that a narrower one for goats and sheep, 233 while beside almost every hut there is a small lean-to for the young 417 calves and a barricade of branches for the older calves of the in-[343] dividual ones. Thus everyone remains responsible for the barricading [672] of his calves and, if at night they should find their way to the cows, has no excuse for starting a quarrel with others in the morning on ac-
701 count of the lack of milk. Milk is the only food that the Ol moani 262 takes in the kraal, and the lack of it is therefore especially grievous.
264 Outside of it, only meat serves the warriors as food, and, to be sure, only that from cattle, sheep, and goats. They do not take vegetable [273] food, honey beer, and tobacco. The meat meals are always held [276] outside the kraal: a slaughtered head of small livestock is consumed a few hundred meters from the kraal, behind a bush, whereas for the consumption of a head of cattle a more distant spot under a shade tree in the bush /Fig. 18 appears here/ or forest is chosen. For these 701 forest meals (ol bul, e bull) mess companies are formed in every 262 warrior kraal, which are designated sirit' ol bul and which consist of 264 five or six members, each of whom is called os sirit ol bul. Such • 574 banquets take place once or twice a month for each mess company and last three or four days each time, during which an ox is consumed. Besides the warriors, one to three girls also take part, and also a few boys as servants for fetching pots, water, and firewood, as well as for kitchen work. Prior to the slaughtering each mess company splits up into two equal-sized parts, each of which is called ooo ol gibet and prepares its own camp. Under a shade tree with thick

[Warrior Kraal]

701 578 682 [613] [614] [669]

/88 cont./ of the fight or until one party remains the victor two or more times in succession. The fight assumes greater dimensions if the two duelists belonged to different lineages or even different tribes. Then

701 535 291

C. G. Schillings phot.

Ill. 32. Dance in the warrior kraal I.

701 578 682 [613] [614] [669]

the two lineages or the two tribes make war on each other insofar as they live in one district; a conflict that is equivalent to a small civil war arises. Members of these lineages or tribes who live in a more distant district do not take part in the fight.

[192] [726]

A war in which Masai stand against Masai is called ol arabal (pl. el arabali), not en djóre (n djorín) as a war between Masai and foreign tribes is called.

701 • 574

/89/ In peacetime the warrior spends only the least time in his own kraal; for the most part he gads about on visits in neighboring ones, often several days' march away. Never may all leave the kraal together in peacetime; a guard of at least ten men always remains at home for the protection of the girls and the livestock, while the rest stop to visit at an ol bul (forest meal, see p.111 above) or with other people.

701 /104 cont./
182 a little while, will then lead them farther. Otherwise they leave it 222 the rest.
[825] When the warriors of an ol boror notice that their bones are 701 getting old and the el barnot surpass them in strength, they agree
561 that it is now time to think of marriage. After they have obtained 582 the permission of the speaker and then that of the chief, one after the other leaves the warrior association, each one shortly before his 701 wedding. He announces his retirement by means of a feast, the ol
561 geteñ l ol bāā, that is, ox slaughtering with a tournament. To this 574 all the inhabitants of the nearest kraals are invited and are shown hospitality with the meat of one or several head of cattle. As soon as these are killed, each warrior cuts off a piece of meat for himself and devours it behind a bush standing somewhat apart. Then each of those present receives his share, while the remainder is strung on sticks two meters high. For these the warriors fight with the girls and women in a game in which the latter vigorously swing the sticks, before which the former has more fear than the women, somewhat
[526] accustomed to beatings. Then the younger ones amuse themselves and play, for instance, tag (tosudja). Before there is thought of de-
[539] parture, about five o'clock in the afternoon, a married man and his principal wife go to the host and make the following speech: "adjogi megur' ira ol morŕni dada it' ol móruo, iñora ñ gischu inonu, ñ gera inonu, iñora naleñ, tabala 'mbaa el móran, idà tada ol móruo, tabala n dogitin bāgin el móran, ida tada ol móruo"; in translation: I say, you are no longer Ol morŕni, but Ol móruo, take care of your cattle and your goats and sheep and watch over them well, leave the occupation of the warriors, now you are ol móruo, refrain from all things of the warriors, now you are ol móruo.

701 After this feast it is up to the warrior whether he takes part more 561 or less regularly in the expeditions of war. As a rule he soon marries [582] and lives with his wife either in the father's kraal or in the warrior kraal until all his contemporaries are married. Only then are they [591] considered ol móruo: each one builds his own kraal and removes [145] clothing, ornaments, and braid of the warriors. He is now at the end of the twenties, his best strength has been spent. In general the Masai, just like all members of the black race, spend their lives very quickly, they age early, without ever attaining a really advanced age.

/108/

576 521 [203] A brief conversation in which news is exchanged is added to the greeting as a rule. This explains how even in the barren steppes any news spreads with great speed. If strangers meet, the older man first questions the younger one, or the man the woman, about name, origin, etc. The first question always runs: "Where do you come from?" To this is added the following: era enia 'ń gischomi = to what tribe, era enia ol gelata kitok = to what principal lineage, era enia ol gelat' ate = to what sublineage do you belong? It is further asked: eń ai menje = who is your father, eń ai notonji = who is your mother, and kędja eń garnaino = what is your name? The one asked readily gives an answer, but generally does not question the other one; on the contrary he goes on without knowing with whom he spoke. Good breeding demands this.

576 574 If a stranger comes to a kraal whose owner he does not know, as a rule he asks one of the children playing in front. The reply then runs: My father (baba), and to the question who that might be, the little one looks at him astonished and asks: "Do you not know my father then?" To the further question as to where he might be, the child points to a hut in which it surmises the father to be. Only small children may [201] point with the finger in the direction of a married man; older ones and adults indicate the direction by turning the heads toward it and at the same time slightly pushing out the lower jaw or the lips or even their tongues. If the stranger has sought out the hut of the old man, he squats in front of it and waits until its owner comes out of his own accord or is called out by one of his people. Now he first questions the guest in the same way as at an encounter and then calls one of his wives or one of his children to bring milk. The gourd bottle is first handed to the host so that he can make sure it is generously filled. He then hands it on to the guest. When the latter has emptied it he is asked whether he would like still more; to answer in the negative would be an offense against good breeding. Hospitality is discussed in another place; it is only to be mentioned that the guest need not express any request. Though it is expected of him that he will feel quite at home, one nevertheless still specially offers him everything available.

/111 cont./

564 326 [777] [574] [701] luck and would cause their inhabitants illness and death for man and beast. Even in an emergency one never claims the hospitality of a blacksmith, any more than one ever grants him guest privileges. The warriors coming from blacksmith families do not live in the ordinary warrior kraals, but in the smaller blacksmith warrior-kraal (ol manjata l el moran l el konono) and only with daughters of blacksmiths. They do not set out for the battlefield with the other warriors either, but alone, and naturally bring along, since they /112/ are few in number, only a little booty each time, which then often enough is simply taken away from them by the other warriors. An- [582] other Masai does not marry the daughter of an ol kononi, just as the latter's son dare not desire in marriage the daughter of a man who does not belong to the despised blacksmith caste. Even the extra- [837] marital association with a woman or girl belonging to the black-smiths is regarded as disastrous for any other Masai. It is believed that he will sooner or later lose his mind, will never be able to become the father of a healthy child, or on the next field expedition he will be killed by the spear or arrow of an enemy. How despised [784] the blacksmiths are is shown by the fact that a Masai does not dare [792] to pronounce the word "ol kononi" after the onset of darkness (1).

564 326 114 784 192

1. More than once the people, when in camp, in the evening, I wanted to speak with them about the el konono, begged me to abstain from this, because otherwise some misfortune would befall us. Nevertheless it happened from time to time, and thus also on the evening of December 31, 1901, when I was camped near a Tatoga settlement on the steppe southwest of Mburu. A lion then penetrated into my camp in the night and took a man, whom we, despite prompt pursuit of the lion, could no longer rescue. The next morning the Masai made me responsible for this incident, "it would not have happened if you had not spoken about the el konono last evening; we have so often told you this."

/119 cont./

593 The Masai are animated by a deep feeling of solidarity; they 181 stand united against all foreigners. A sincere attachment and love
[186] bind the individual members of the family; they vie with one another in order to free a relative who has fallen into slavery. Thus, in 1896, the Masai who returned from the Berlin Exposition immediately used the greater part of their savings to buy back relatives who had become slaves during the great livestock epidemics around the year 1890. The tightest is the bond between parents, especially the mother, and children, as well as between brothers and sisters, looser between married people, where the lowly, oppressed position of the wife is of some importance.

181 The men scorn any kind of work. Only waging war is worthy of a 461 man. Large herds of livestock and many wives are his supreme 554 happiness. One who has both enjoys respect and prestige. One looks down on a poor devil. Truly poor people, however, are exceptions,
735 since relatives support one another in generous ways. One who does 602 not have such quickly finds accommodations as a rule with one who is well-to-do. He receives food and for that helps the women and children of his benefactor with their work (livestock-tending, kraal-building, night watch for the small livestock, etc.). The condition of /120/ poverty is also always only of brief duration; the poor man soon acquires some prosperity again through gifts from friends or a
• 574 share of the spoils of war. Toward friends, one is just as generous
[572] as one is good-natured; the hospitality to countrymen, no matter where they come from (with the exception of the blacksmiths, of course), is unlimited. Everyone offers a visitor whatever he happens to have in food and drink. Everything that the stranger needs or wishes is at his disposal. He reserves for himself a hut for the night
[837] by sticking his spear in the ground in front of it; the host then seeks other quarters for the night and leaves home and wife to the guest. If a woman comes for a visit, the wife leaves the hut for the night, so that the stranger may take her place. Hospitality toward other peoples is known only if peace is concluded with them through the ceremony of infant exchange or through blood friendship. The 181 cruelty of the Masai is no greater than that of the other black peoples, for example, the Negroes neighboring the Masai. If they

/220 cont./

562 694 695 Women are also entitled to make a complaint. Evidence presented by witnesses is valid only to the extent that the persons assembled for the proceedings wish to be convinced by it.

683 [692] The crime of sorcery is only rarely dealt with in a judicial assembly. For the most part the one bewitched, after he has learned from an ol goiatiki the name of the bewitcher, prefers to induce the latter, through gifts, to bewitch him healthy again. Thereupon the two conclude friendship /221/ or, however -- and this not infrequently happens -- the bewitched one now kills his opponent, and, to be sure, without inviting blood revenge upon himself because of it.

681 648 [575] [787] There are no secret societies for the purpose of legal actualization or for other purposes. Bier tests or the belief that the dead person will reveal the murderer in a dream are unknown. The Masai do not live with other peoples in such a relationship that the latter could demand or request expiation for murder or some other crime or misdemeanor committed by a Masai on a non-Masai. In this case, therefore, the deed remains unexpiated, whereas the Masai as a rule practice retaliation if the deed was committed on one of their people. Whether or not the murder committed on an Asá or an ol Kuafi by a Masai is expiated depends in each case on the greater or lesser degree of friendly relations that exist between the communities of the murderer and the one murdered. In most cases expiation does not take place, whereas if the injured one is a Masai, his fellow tribesmen will answer with war.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

is no possessive pronoun, especially if the substantive is not the first word in the sentence: 193*

Aaōmon, eng-Ai! I pray to thee, O God!

In the word tito (ol-tito, the son; en-dito, the daughter, or the girl), the first t is dropped in the feminine vocative case:

Na-ito! O (the) girl!

In one or two rare instances, when the feminine article is eng, the vocative case is expressed by k:

K-ōgho! O (the) grandmother! (eng-ōgho, the grandmother).
K-onyek! O (the) eyes! ('ng-onyek, the eyes).

The commonest way of addressing an equal is by the use of the word E-iro in the masculine and Na-iro in the feminine. This can best be translated by Friend. 'L-oiye and Na-toiye, or Na-figorōyok, are used in the plural. 193* 576

A superior is addressed by the words Le-paiyan! O (the elder)! Le-móruo! O (the) old man! or Papa-i! Father-thou! if a man; and by Na-kitok! O (the) big woman! or Yēyo! mother! if a woman.

The Genitive.

There are three methods of forming the genitive case in Masai. 193*

The first is employed when the governed word is a substantive (not preceded by the article), a pronoun, or other part of speech; the other two are in connexion with the article.

1. In the first or regular form the word governed follows the governing substantive, being joined to it by the particle le, if the nominative is masculine (li before a and o), and e, if feminine. This particle does not vary in number. Examples:

Ol-alem le-papa, father's sword.
Eng-aji e-yēyo, mother's hut.
'L-alema le-papa, father's swords.
'Ng-ajijik e-yēyo, mother's huts.
Ol-chore le-pōkin, the friend of all.
E-mōti e-kulle, the milk-pot.
'L-omon li-opa, the news of formerly (i. e. of former times).
'L-omon li-akenya, the news of presently (i. e. of the future).

2. The possessive case in conjunction with the article is usually formed in the following manner:

The substantive in the genitive case follows the governing word, the article of the former drops its vowel, and a particle is interposed

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

301 554 'l-katari too-'ng-aik.

Metii ol-móruo loo-'l-Maasae oidim atipikayu 'surutya leme ol-ōata 'n-gera náidipikaki aatumurat, il-muran oo 'ñgorō-yok. Itadua, ol-ōata kunna pôkin eidim atipikayu 'surutya.

rings, called il-giso[1]. They also have chain bracelets.

No Masai elder may wear the earrings called 'surutya unless he has children who have been circumcised and become warriors and women; but he who has grown up children may wear 'surutya.

Etii sii en-dōki naji ol-masangus, naa 'mōwarak oo-'l-osōhwani oo 'l-ala loo-'l-chañgit sapuki egwetuni metaa sidan.

There is another thing, an arm-ring called ol-masangus, which is cut out of a buffalo horn or an elephant's tusk, and made to look beautiful.

Mepika ol-móruo lemeata 'n-gīshu kumok oo 'n-gera kumok.

No elder may wear this unless he has large herds of cattle and many children.

Ore ol-ōata 'n-gīshu kumok oo 'n-gera náiyōlo pôkituñgani, eidim atipikayu ol-masangus pe eitaduaya engitoo enye.

He who is well known to possess many head of cattle and also many children may wear this arm-ring as a sign of his wealth.

Etii en-dōki naji e-rap napika 'l-muran, kake epika te-'sidano ake.

There is also an arm-clamp called e-rap, which the warriors wear, but they only put this on as an ornament[2].

576 En-girorōkīno oo-'l-Maasae.

Ten etumore ol-murani o likae, nājōki: 'Sōpai.' Neirukisho ol-likae, nājo: 'Hēpa[3].' Ten etumo 'l-muran kumok, nājo: 'Endasōpai 'l-muran,' neirukisho 'l-kulikae, nājo: 'Hēpa.'

Masai salutations.

When one warrior meets another, he says: 'Sopai'; and when several warriors meet, one party says: 'Endasopai, O warriors!' The reply to these greetings is 'Hepa.'

[1] Il-giso (sing. ol-gisoi) is also the word used for rings which young men, women, and children wear. They are made of iron or brass wire, and are frequently worn on the thumb as well as on the four fingers.

[2] A list of the warriors' ornaments, &c., is given on p. 294.

[193] [3] The h is often omitted, and the word pronounced epa or eya.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Naa, ten eiyōuu neikilikwan il-omon le-'n-gop naiñgua, nějo: 'Endōwapu le-'seriani'; araki 'E'nosu le-'seriani.'

Nějo lekwa: ''L-ooleñg ake'; araki, 'E-seriani ake.'

Ten etumore 'l-muran loo-'l-Maasae 'l-paiyani, nemeiter áirorōki, 'l-paiyani ake ooiter áirorōki, nějo, ten aa kumok il-muran: ''L-oiye.'

Nějo 'l-muran: 'Oo.'

Nějo 'l-paiyani: 'Endasōpai.'

Nějo te-nabo-kata pôkin: 'Hēpa.'

Ten eiñgua 'l-muran en-gop nalakwa, pe edol il-paiyani tiaulo, nepwo 'l-muran áibuñg ing-aik, nēun im-berīa enye, nějo 'l-paiyani: 'Ñgasak.'

Ore p' eiñgwekīno, neirorōki 'l-paiyani 'l-muran, nějo; ''L-oiye.'

Nějo 'l-muran: 'Oo.'

Nějo 'l-paiyani: 'Endasōpai.'

Nějo 'l-muran: 'Hēpa.'

Kake etaa en-neirorōkīno taata te-kunna-olofigi amu ten edol il-muran il-paiyani, neirorōki aajo: 'Endasōpai loopapa-i'; kake 'l-Purko oojo nēja. Ějo 'l-Kisongo ten eirorōki 'l-paiyani: 'Endasōpai, 'l-paiyani kituak'; araki ějo: 'Endasōpai, le-tasati.'

Ten etumo oopeny, neiro-

Then, if it is desired to ask the news of the country from whence the people come, they are asked: 'Do you bring good tidings?' or 'Do you relate good news?' 576

They reply: 'Only the things which are good,' or simply, 'Good news only.'

When Masai warriors meet old men, the latter start the greetings. If there are many warriors, the old men call to them and say: 'Friends.'

To this the warriors reply: 'Yes.'

The elders then say: 'Endasopai.'

And the warriors answer all together: 'Hepa.'

When warriors come from a distant country and see some elders outside a kraal, they go up to them, and take their hands, at the same time thrusting their spears into the earth. The elders then say to them: 'Greeting.'

When they have dropped one another's hands, the elders say to the warriors: 'Friends,' and the warriors answer: 'Yes.' The elders then give the usual salutation: 'Endasopai,' to which the warriors reply all together: 'Hepa.'

Nowadays, however, the warriors do not wait to be greeted by the elders, and call out 'Endasopai, O ye fathers!' At any rate the so-called El-burgon Masai do this. When the warriors of the Kisongo Masai greet the elders first, they say: 'Endasopai, O elders!' or 'Endasopai, O old people!' [178]

When old people meet one an-

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

576

rōkīno aajo: 'Endasōpai kullo-ṗaiyani kituak'; araki ējo: 'Endasōpai kullo-móruak.'

Metii ol-murani araki ol-ayōni oitēu atējo: 'Endasō-ṗai le-móruak,' amu ējōkīni meata eng-anyit.

Ten eirorōki 'l-muran i-ñgorōyok, nējo: 'Endakwenya[1] na-tasati.' Neirukisho 'ñgorō-yok aajo: 'Īghó[2].'

Meitēu 'l-muran aatiaki 'ñgorōyok: 'Endakwenya, na-ñgorōyok,' amu ējōkīni meata eng-anyit.

Il-móruak ake oojōki 'ñgo-rōyok enye: 'Endakwenya, na-ñgorōyok.'

Ten eirorōki 'ñgorōyok il-muran araki 'l-ayok, nējo: 'Endakwenya, na-ghera.'

Neirukisho: 'Īghó.'

Ten eirorōki 'l-muran i-ñgo-rōyok o-'l-aji lenye, nējo: 'Endakwenya, na-kituak.'

Neirukisho: 'Īghó.'

Ten eirorōki 'l-muran 'n-doiye, nējo: 'Endasōpai, na-toiye.'

Neirukisho: 'Hēpa.'

Naa nēja ējo 'n-doiye ten eirorōki 'l-muran.

Mējōki en-dito ol-alashe: 'Sōpai,' nemējōki ol-murani eng-anashe: 'Sōpai'; kake ējōki: 'Takwenya.' Neñgututa sii kulikae.

other, they say: 'Endasopai, O ye elders!' or 'Endasopai, O ye husbands!'

No warrior or boy would dare to say: 'Endasopai, O husbands!' for he would be told he is wanting in respect.

When warriors meet married women, they say: 'Endakwenya, O old ladies!' to which the women reply, 'Igho.'

No warrior would dare to say to married women: 'Endakwenya, O wives!' for it would be said that he was wanting in respect.

It is only the old men who may say to their wives: 'Endakwenya, O wives!'

When married women greet warriors or boys, they say: 'Enda-kwenya, O children!' And the warrior or boy replies: 'Igho.'

When warriors greet married women of their own clan, they say: 'Endakwenya, O great ladies!'

To this the women reply: 'Igho.'

Warriors greet girls by saying: 'Endasopai, O girls!'

The girls reply, 'Hepa.'

The same words are spoken when girls greet warriors.

A girl does not say 'Sopai,' to her brother, nor does a warrior greet his sister in this fashion: they say 'Takwenya.' Some also kiss one another.

[1] It has been repeatedly stated that the greeting takwenya (pl. endakwenya) means laugh. Laugh is, however, strictly speaking, takwenia (pl. endakwani).

[2] Īghó is meaningless in Masai, but Igó in Bari means go away (imp.).

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Eidim ol-murani atiaki eng-anashe kiti neitu eñgēnu: 'Sōpai.'

Ten eñgasaki 'n-gera kutiti araki 'l-ayok bōtoro 'l-tuñganak kituak, meibuñg 'ng-aik, kake ẹpwo aañgasaki too-'l-lughuny áitoosh ing-omomite enye álo 'sararuani loo-'l-tuñganak kituak.

Ten eñgutut e-ñgorōyōni kitok en-gerai kiti, nēosh inna te-'ng-omom enye ol-goo e-'ñgorōyōni, nējo e-ñgorōyōni: 'Ñgasak.'

A warrior might, however, say 'Sopai' to his sister if she is quite young. 576

When small children or even big boys greet their elders, they do not take their hands, but they butt them with their heads, striking the old people with their foreheads in the pit of the stomach.

If a woman kisses a small child, the latter touches her breast with its face. The woman then says: 'Greeting.'

En-gipuñgoto.

Tenelool-Maasani 'ng-añgite oo-'l-Maasae, ore ẹ' eiyōu nerinyo en-goẹ enye, nenapa.

Ore ẹ' eidiẹ atanapayu, nējo: 'Aiya naa, amu etaa alo.'

Nējo 'l-ooẹeny eng-añg: 'Aiya naa, sere! Toomonoi eng-Ai! I'nepu ake naaserian! Tapaashare 'l-mōdook!'

Neitōki lido ōlo nējo: 'Endepetai 'n-aishi oo kulle!' Nejō 'l-ooẹeny eng-añg: 'Esai.'

Nelo ol-omoni en-goẹ enye.

Departure.

If a Masai has paid a visit to some friends, and wishes to return home, he ties up his things. 574 576

When he is ready, he says: 'Well, I am about to go.'

The owners of the kraal reply: 'All right! Good-bye. Pray to God, accost only the things which are safe, and meet nobody but blind people.'

The guest then says: 'Lie down with honey-wine and milk,' to which the owners of the kraal reply: 'So be it.'

After this the stranger is at liberty to depart to his own country.

'N-giragat.

Ten elool-Maasani 'ng-añgite oo-'l-Maasae, ore ẹe ebaya eng-añg, nemejiñg eng-aji neme en-naiyōlo ōshi-ake, amu ten a ol-

Hospitality.

When a Masai goes to other kraals to pay a visit, he does not on his arrival enter a hut unless he knows the owner, for if he belongs, for 574

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

514 576 201 Ten eñgasaki 'n-gera kutiti 'l-tuñganak tasati naleñg, nenotaki 'ng-amulak il-tasati, nějōki: 'Mikitajapa eng-Aï.'

Naa, ten eñgasaki 'l-muran il-tuñganak kituak, nenotaki kulikae-kituak ing-amulak ing-aik.

If small children salute very old men[1], the latter spit on them, and say: 'May God give you long life and grey hairs like mine[2].'

Then, when warriors greet old men[3], the latter frequently spit in their hands before allowing the young men to grasp them.

82 514 789 Naa, ten edol ol-Maasani en-dōki neitu ae-oloñg edol, anaa ol-akira ōdōyo, nenotaa 'ng-amulak, nějo: 'I'usho! imḃira 'l-mañgati!' nějo sii: 'Telekwaki.'

If a Masai sees something phenomenal, such as a shooting star, he spits several times and says: 'Be lost! go in the direction of the enemy!' after which he says: 'Stay away from me.'

514 789 [551] [763] Ore sii ten erikīno, neipot il-meneñga araki eng-arna o-'l-tuñgani ōtua, nenotaa 'ng-amulak. Ore sii ten eniñg il-omon torok injere etua ol-tuñgani ōje, nenotaa 'ng-amulak, nějo: 'I'usho, eng-Aï, mikiatá 'n-giyaa.'

Again, should he forget, and call somebody who is dead, or mention the name of a deceased person, he spits. Should he hear any bad news, such as the death of some person, he spits, and says: 'Be lost, O God, we have no ears.'

514 177 Ore ṗ' eiter aapwōnu 'l-Aisungun kunna-kwapi, ṗe edol il-Maasae, nenotaa 'ng-amulak, amu etějo: 'Eitu kidól il-tuñganak anaa kullo.' Něji sii: ''L-oibonok kituak kullo-tuñganak.' Ore ṗe ṗik ol-Aisungui ol-tuñgani ol-chani, nějōki ol-tuñgani: 'Tonotakaki 'ng-amulak ṗ' aishiu.' Něji eng-arna 'l-Ōjuju amu eata 'l-ṗaṗit kumok.

When the Europeans came to these countries and the Masai saw them for the first time, they used to spit, for they said: 'We have never seen people like these.' They also called them medicine-men, and if a European gave a Masai medicine, the latter asked him to spit on him to heal him. Europeans were formerly called 'L-Ojuju owing to their being hairy.

[1] Vide p. 287.

[2] It is customary amongst the Bari people for old men (fathers or grandfathers) to take children's heads between their knees and spit slightly on them to bless them (Mitterrutzner, Die Sprache der Bari, p. xvi). [171] [113]

[3] Vide p. 284.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

torono. Il-kunōno ooiyama oopeny.

Ten eibuñg ol-Maasani endōki naibuñga duo ol-kunōni, anaa em-ḃere, anaa ol-alem, nepik e-ilata eng-aina, amu ḃjo torono ten eibuñg te-'ngaina ake.

is not considered correct. The smiths marry amongst themselves. 326 564

If a Masai takes in his hand a spear or sword or other thing which a smith has held, he first of all oils his hand for it is considered improper for him to take it in his bare hand. [576]

Meata sii 'l-kunōno 'n-gīshu kumok anaa 'l-kulikae-Maasae; meinosare 'n-gīshu. Tin idol ol-kunōni ōata 'n-gīshu artam, naa kumok naleñg.

The smiths are not rich in cattle like other Masai. They have no luck with cattle. If you find one possessing forty head, it is a very large number. [233]

Eata 'l-kunōno o-rorei lenye ol-loo 'l-Maasae, kake eitawal; lemeniñg il-Maasae. Mme ṗokin ooata, e-matwa ake naata.

The smiths have their own language, which, although a corruption of Masai, is not understood by the ordinary Masai. Not all of them can speak this language: it is only a certain number of them who know it. [198]

'Mōtīo oo 'l-ṗukurto.

Earthenware pots and gourds.

Eidim i-ñgorōyok oo-'l-Maasae kulye áitobira 'mōtīo; nemeidim kulye, neinyañgu ake too-'l-meek.

Some Masai women are able to make earthenware pots; others who are unable to make them buy them from savages. 323 [439]

Einyañgu sii 'l-ṗukurto, araki etum too-'miñgan.

Gourds are also bought, or they are collected in the deserted kraals. [415]

Eidim aatimir en-gine áinosye e-mōti nabo.

One pot can be purchased for a goat. [435]

Ore ten eitobir il-Maasae 'mōtīo, neitobir in-gituak oo 'n-gutiti, nepik ṗokin ingumeshi ṗ' eibuñgye ten edōtu.

When the Masai make pots they make them in two sizes, big and small; these pots are also provided with handles[1] by which they can be picked up.

Ten eṗwo 'l-muran aayeñgisho, nepik en-gāne ṗe etum áibuñga.

When warriors go to the woods to slaughter cattle, they carry their cooking-pots by a strip of hide fastened to the handles[2]. [482] [237]

[1] Lit. nostrils. [2] For illustrations see Hinde, The Last of the Masai, p. 89.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Before dealing with the subsequent procedure, after a girl has promised to visit a warrior on a given night, it is necessary to outline the sleeping arrangements and accommodation in a manyatta hut. The hut is not divided off into rooms in any way, and at one end of the hut is the bed upon which the woman (mother of one of the warriors) to whom the hut belongs, sleeps with her younger children. At the other end of the hut, not screened off in any way, is the bed upon which the warriors and girls sleep. No warrior may ever sleep upon the married woman's bed, but the woman's husband can come down and visit her whenever he likes, and when he does so, no warriors or girls may sleep in the hut. Ordinarily, however, the woman's husband does not live at the manyatta, and she and her small children sleep on her bed at the one end of the hut, while the warriors sleep on the bed at the other end of the hut with the girls. No warrior ever sleeps in his own mother's hut, but always in one of the other huts if he has invited a girl to sleep the night with him. When, therefore, he has arranged for a girl to visit him at night he goes in the evening to one of the other huts and arranges to sleep on the young people's bed there. He then sends a message by the woman who owns the hut to tell the girl that he is sleeping there so that she may come to him. There is absolutely no objection to several men coming in this way to the same hut, and sleeping on the same big bed each accompanied by his girl. In fact, it is considered wrong for a warrior and a girl to have sexual intercourse unless there are also other couples sleeping on the same bed. Moreover, besides those men who have come to the hut and sent for their girls to join them there, there are usually several younger girls, daughters of the woman who owns the hut, sleeping on the bed too. These young girls, too young as yet to sleep with the men sexually, nevertheless, sleep on the same bed as the warriors and older girls, and thus grow up steeped in the customs of the manyatta.

It is exceptionally difficult for a European to understand all the full details and facts concerning native sex life, but the following facts have been noted and verified for the Masai. No girl may sleep with a man except she be absolutely nude, but on the other hand, although by tradition and by etiquette she may not refuse an invitation to sleep with a man (except for the two reasons already given above), she is not necessarily expected to allow him full sexual intercourse, and, in fact, often does not do so. Thus—strange as it may seem—Masai girls do sometimes go to their husbands as virgins in the physical sense of the word (see Marriage), although they may have slept with men in the manyattas countless times. Usually, however, Masai girls have no objection to full intercourse except during the first four or five days after each menstrual period (see Girlhood), for the Masai firmly believe that conception cannot occur unless intercourse takes place very soon after menstruation, and four to five days is considered an absolutely safe margin. Moreover, this belief seems to have a strong foundation in fact, and it thus raises a very interesting point for physiologists as to whether this is as true of primitive peoples as it

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

777 It is lucky to see a fish eagle (ol korpellia) sitting on a tree if it is facing the observer. It is unlucky to see a single wild pig, but lucky if a number of pigs cross the path from left to right in front of the traveller.

There are several other superstitions, but they seem to be held in little, if any, more importance than most of our own, e.g. seeing the new moon through glass, encountering magpies, spitting when a hare crosses one's path, etc.

514 576 Spitting is a greeting and brings good luck. One is asked to spit on a new-born baby. I have sometimes been spat on in a similar way by very old men and women—a somewhat trying ordeal which had to be patiently endured. Moreover, a Masai may spit on his palm before shaking hands in order to give an exceptionally warm greeting. It is then etiquette to follow his example.

173 History.—The Masai have little historical tradition. Some of it is given in Hollis, pp. 266–273. They are said to have come from a place in the North called by them Endigir a hundred generations (of 15 years each) ago. The generation names from the present time, working backwards as far as they are remembered, are:—Il Twati, Il Talala, 'L Aimer, Il Nyangusi, Il Twati, Il Kidotu, I Merishare, Il Tiegi, Il Salaash, and Il Meshopo. Those before this have been forgotten. When they left Endigir there were no Laibons, so the elders arranged about the ceremonies. The warrior and age-group system was already in being, having been instituted by Naiteru Kop (see Hollis, p. 266). The customs of group marriage and of free love between the warriors and the girls were also in existence.

There were four tribes in Endigir—the Masai, the Dorobo, the Kikuyu and the Il Kunono (smiths). God gave the cattle to the Masai and the wild beasts to the Dorobo. He told the Kikuyu to go to the mountains and the place of many rivers and to eat grass. He gave iron to the smiths and provided them with stones to beat it with. These four tribes were all friends together.

262 Restrictions as to Food.—Besides those mentioned above as applying to warriors and junior elders, the following apply to all Masai:—

They must not eat the flesh of wild animals.

They must not drink milk soon after eating meat.

Women must not be seen eating meat or drinking milk by men of their husband's generation.

805 Months and Days.—The Masai divide the year into the following months:—

Ol Adealo. Meaning unknown

Or'at = Grass in the hollows. (About February.)

O Ãnyi Oing'ok = When the bulls are tied up.

Ol o Doyoerie ol o Ingokwa = When the Pleiades are in the West.

Ol o Olepunyi Ingokwa = When the Pleiades are in the East.

Ol Guju Orok = The short black bristles. So called because it is the month of ceremonies, and therefore heads are shaved.

According to Hollis, p.275,
/xvi cont./ the Pleiades are only six stars among 821 the Masai, likewise in the pictorial representations of South Arabian 171 tomb inscriptions (in contrast to the seven circles of the Babylonian 174 Nergal symbol); the name of the bearers of the religious tradition
192 of the Masai, el-kiboron, coincides strikingly with the expression for priest, kahîn, in the old Minaean inscriptions of Yemen (2).

• [576] 2. Quite remarkable also is the correspondence of the Masai custom that when one is inside with her he plants his spear in front of the hut so that another will not enter (Merker, p. 109 and p. 158) with the similar custom among the southern Arabs (here only staff instead of spear) given by Strabo (Book 16). -- Also that the "speaker" stands at the head of the warriors is reminiscent of South Arabia (cf. kail, chief, actually speaker, as well as saijid, "master," probably has the same etymology, cf. Syrian sewîd, speech).

192 The specifically Ethiopian word dengel, "virgin" (originally prob-197 ably "young woman" in general), is the same as the Masai en-194 dangile, "young woman" (after the circumcision); tongs, el-garamet, is the Arabic el-kullîbat, and cowbell, eng-gurugur, the Arabic al-gulgul, en-abere, spear, perhaps the Arabic el-ibra, needle. The name of the liana species mogongora, from which the Masai take a fragrant wood for therapeutic purposes (Merker, p. 27 and cf. p. 196, ol-magirigirieni, a vanilla-scented perfume), is very reminiscent of the South Arabian name for frankincense, mugr, just as in general the reiteration of the second half of a word, popular among the Masai (for example, gadardar, a /xvii/ tree name, airaiarai, a shrub), is likewise in turn a peculiarity of Ethiopian, where it is used especially for the formation of color names (warakrik, gold-green = Hebrew jerakrak, hamalmîl, green, but also dabarbîr, backlike = hill, and the Tigre plant names gondefdafe, endufduf, amferfaro, and handugdug). All these [114] are definite traces that make Merker's naming of the Masai as an originally Semitic and then, more specifically, an Arabian people seem fully justified.

175 791
/21 cont./
[765]
[232]
[173]
[787]
[648] recovery from their pains. Mbatyan earned outstanding merit through the discovery of a protective vaccination against lung disease of cattle. According to the corresponding accounts of Zendeo and four old Masai, Mbatyan, several years before his death, had already prophesied the appearance of rinderpest that did not take place until after it and the subsequent subduing of the Masai by Europeans. In the outward appearance of this man nothing divulged his power. On a thin, average-sized figure sat an ugly head whose face was disfigured more particularly by the lack of one eye -- allegedly a birth defect. This latter circumstance led to the origin of the legend that the chief must always be one-eyed and that the father should destroy in childhood one eye of the son later following him. The face was even more repulsive because of a scanty, slightly gray full beard. That is, in contrast to the other men, neither the ol oiboni nor [826]
[302]
the el goiatek and el kiborón mentioned farther below may pluck out their beards, because they would lose their supernatural power through the removal of the beard hairs.

791
621
The chief's village consists of a large number of kraals lying close together, several of which serve as the dwelling of the ol oiboni with his numerous wives. Mbatyan had about 200
[361]
[595] wives; the still young Zendeo has only 20 of them. No strange man may enter these dwelling kraals of the chief and his wives or appear in their immediate vicinity. Close by are found the rest of the kraals, one of which is intended for conferences and receptions and in which a few older men close to the chief as helpers and advisers (el dunganak oirorié ol oiboni) live with their families, whereas the others are occupied by warriors who form the defense of the village and, on the marches of the chief, his bodyguard. In his last years of life, when Mbatyan was mentally disturbed, he often spent months on the open steppes in a small hut made of branches, around which the warriors accompanying 791 him camped in a large circle. The ceremony in the chief's • 576
[623]
609
camp is very simple. One of the men wandering about idly in the village leads the newcomer into the conference kraal, where he waits for the chief. As soon as the latter appears, the stranger

/21 cont./

791 • 576 609 rises, goes toward him, and, with the customary greeting, extends his hand to him, whereby, not this, but the wrist is grasped. After the concluded discussion, for which there are no particular formalities, he takes his leave with the ordinary farewell.

791 789 [262] [173] In the way of food, the ol oiboni takes only goat liver roasted on the fire, milk, and honey, for, through any other food, "he would suffer the loss of the capacity for prophecy and the preparation of efficacious magic charms." Of these arts very little is supposed to have been handed down to his son Lemana and still less to Zendeo, through which it is all the more explicable that the /22/ Masai today tell of hundreds of different kinds of miracles that Mbatyan allegedly performed. According to them, he could fell large trees by sheer will power, or he had the hut in which he was to be found set afire by his attendant, and, after it had burned down, he appeared, uninjured, out of the ashes.

756 [813] From the Ên gidoń lineage there are further supplied, as has already been mentioned, the sorcerers or medicine men (ol gotatiki, el gotatek), several of whom live in each district. Their office, too, is handed down from father to son, who, however, is usually initiated into the whole secret art only after his marriage. The [789] most important magic charm in the life of the Masai, the war medicine, the ol gotatiki does not know how to make. Rather, one turns to him only in cases of illness of human beings and livestock for which the well-known remedies fail, or which one traces back to the sorcery of evil neighbors, as well as to determine unknown wrongdoers (thieves, murderers, etc.).

613 [776] The lineage of the El kiborón of the El mílieljan tribe, who, according to the view of all the people, are especially favored by 'Ng ai, the god of the Masai, which has made them primarily the bearers of the religious traditions, require a special discussion.

613 157 Corresponding to their position with 'Ng ai, they are distinguished by a relative peaceableness. The young warriors, to be sure, also set out on raiding expeditions with the other lineages, but they thereby seem to avoid any unnecessary roughness or brutality, in which the others often compete. The passion for disputes, quarrels, and vituperation, a prominent trait in the character of the young

/41 cont./

601 The grandfather designates the grandson as ḷg ainja.

/42/ The grandmother designates the grandson as ṇ̀ gensi ṇ̀ gensi ai, that is, child of my child.

Father-in-law: ṇ̀ ainḍani lai.

Mother-in-law: ṇ̀ng ainḍani ai.

Brother of wife: ṇ̀ ainḍani or ṇ̀ ainche le 'ṇgenjoni.

Sister of wife: ṇ̀ ainḍani ai or ṇ̀ng ainche e 'ṇgenjoni ai.

Wife of own brother: e' 'ṇgenjoni ṇ̀ ainche lai.

Wife of the half brother: ṇ̀ ainḍani ai.

Different ones of these designations are terms of address among relatives, with the exception of the ones for father and mother, who 551 are addressed as baba or ṇ̀ja. Most terms of address by far are formed from names for animal species: if one has given the one concerned a gift of a bull, one calls him b-ainḍani, from ṇ̀ ainḍani, the bull: after the gift of an ox or a cow, ba-'gensi or ba-'ṇ̀ṇche (ṇ̀ gensi, the ox: ṇ̀ ṇ̀ṇche, the cow: 'ṇgenjo, the calf) of a heifer, ba-'n dawa (from ṇ̀ dawa) of a calf, ba-ache or ba-ba (from ṇ̀ or ṇ̀ng ache): for a donkey, ba-ṇ̀gira (ṇ̀ ṇ̀gira, the donkey), for a male calf, ba-ṇ̀ṇ̀ṇ̀, for a buck goat or sheep, ba-meregech, for a mother sheep, ba-gu, for a she-goat or sheep, ba-ndare: for a she-goat, ba-gine: for a female sheep or female goat that has not yet had young, ba-ahen: for a kid or lamb, ba-leio, for twin lambs or kids, ba-mao (1).

1. ṇ̀ mao, the twin.

551 With all these designations may be addressed: the brother by the
• 576 brother, the half brother by the half brother, and -- if the one
(601) addressing and the one addressed are the same age -- the father's brother, the son of the father's brother, the son of the father's sister, the son of the mother's brother, the son of the mother's sister, the son of the brother, the son of the sister. Male individuals who are close friends and the same age also use these terms of address, as soon as they have given each other the first head of livestock. The later gift of a head of livestock of another kind does not alter the form of address.

561 /ss/ to enjoy, to the end of his life, respect and esteem based on his life's experience and his father- or fatherlike-position, which he occupies in relation to his immediate and more extended sphere.

A female individual, until her circumcision, is regarded as a girl (en ɛ́ɛɛ, n ɛ́ɛje), is called es siboli (pl. es sibolio) during the circumcision, until the healing of the wound; after that she is first called e sílɔ́ŋiki (pl. sílɔ́ŋikin), after the beginning of the menopause 'n skinok (pl. n skirwa) or en dadgile (pl. n dadgilíɛ́n), the latter term also often used formerly instead of e' ɛ́ɛɛrojoni = married woman, whereas now one only rarely hears it with this meaning. As soon as her head hair turns gray, she is called Koko = old woman.

342
291
516

Ill. 21. Men and woman with child.

561
.576

The connections between age grade and social position are to be discussed later. Here there are to be discussed first of all the terms of address that are customary between members of the same age grade and of different age grades and -- if an injury or insult is not intended -- must be used.

/68 cont./

561
576

The terms of address between male individuals:

ol aijoni to ol móruo: ol bayan, ol barnoti to ol móruo: ol bayan, ol morāni to ol móruo: ol bayan,
ol móruo to ol móruo: ol móruo.

/69/

ol aijoni to ol morāni: lē morāni, ol barnoti to ol morāni: ērō,
ol morāni to ol morāni: ērō,
ol móruo to ol morāni: 'l aijoni.

342
291
137

Merker phot.

Ill. 22. Older men.

142
291
301 302

Merker phot.

Ill. 23. Masai girls from the child to the young woman.

/69 cont./

561
• 576

ol aijoni to ol barnoti: lé́ moráni.
ol barnoti to ol barnoti: ɛ́rɔ̄.
ol moráni to ol barnoti: ɛ́rɔ̄, if slight age difference.
ol moráni to ol barnoti: ol barnoti, if greater age difference.
ol móruo to ol barnoti: 'l aijoni.

/70/

ol aijoni to ol aijoni: ɛ́rɔ̄.
ol barnoti to ol aijoni: ɛ́rɔ̄.
ol moráni to ol aijoni: 'l aijoni.
ol móruo to ol aijoni: 'l aijoni.

Merker phot.

Ill. 24. Mother with children.

The terms of address between female individuals:

[291] →

en dítɔ́ to kokɔ: koko.
es siɛ̄ŋgiki to kokɔ: jɛ́jo (= mother) or koko.
koko to kokɔ: eng aini ai, which means that the husbands on both sides belong to the same ol borɔ̄r or ol adji.
en dítɔ́ to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: n akitok.
es siɛ̄ŋgiki to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: 'siɛ̄ŋgiki, if only slight age difference.
es siɛ̄ŋgiki to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: jɛ́jo, if greater age difference.
koko to es siɛ̄ŋgiki: na gerai (= child).

en dítɔ́ to en dítɔ́: nairo.
es siɛ̄ŋgiki to en dítɔ́: na gerai.
koko to en dítɔ́: na gerai or na gerai ai (= my child).

The terms of address between male and female individuals:

ol aijoni to kokɔ: koko or jɛ́jo.
ol barnoti to kokɔ: koko, jɛ́jo or 'n akitok.
ol moráni to kokɔ: koko, jɛ́jo or 'n akitok.
ol móruo to kokɔ: e' ŋgorojoni, if slight age difference.
ol móruo to kokɔ: koko or 'n akitok if greater age difference.

/70 cont./

561
576 ol aijoni to es siëñgiki: 'n akitok, ol barnoti to es siëñgiki: 'n akitok, ol morăni to es siëñgiki: 'n akitok, ol móruo to es siëñgiki: e' ñgorojoni.

ol aijoni to en dĭtŏ: nairo, if slight age difference, ol aijoni to en dĭtŏ: naito, if former is considerably younger,
ol barnoti to en dĭtŏ: nairo,
ol morăni to en dĭtŏ: nairo, ol móruo to en dĭtŏ: na gerai.

en dĭtŏ to ol aijoni: ĕrō, if only slight age difference, en dĭtŏ to ol aijoni: 'l aijoni, if greater age difference, in which case the girl usually calls mockingly 'n ăñguini = pygmy, little man, es siëñgiki to ol aijoni: ĕrō or 'l aijoni, if slight age difference, es siëñgiki to ol aijoni: na gerai, if the latter is considerably younger,
koko to ol aijoni: na gerai or na gerai ai.

/71/

en dĭtŏ to ol barnoti: ol barnoti, if slight age difference, en dĭtŏ to ol barnoti: lĕ morăni, if the latter is considerably older, es siëñgiki to ol barnoti: ol barnoti, if slight age difference, es siëñgiki to ol barnoti: na gerai, if the latter is considerably younger,
koko to ol barnoti: na gerai or na gerai ai.

en dĭtŏ to ol morăni: lĕ morăni, es siëñgiki to ol morăni: name, if slight age difference, es siëñgiki to ol morăni: na gerai, if the latter is considerably younger, koko to ol morăni: na gerai or na gerai ai.

/71 cont./

561
• 576

en dito to ol móruot bábă, es siẽngiki to ol móruot bábă, or ol móruo, if the latter is almost the same age as her husband, koko to ol móruot ol móruo.

[572] Friends often address each other with ol djore lai or ol jerai = my friend.

Instead of the address term 'n akitok, an ol barnoti or an ol morãni says to an es siẽngiki whom he has known from childhood 'siẽngiki or es siẽngiki, whereas an ol móruo in the same case uses the address term naito. The term of address "'n akitok" for an es siẽngiki is more polite than "siẽngiki," the latter used toward a strange es siẽngiki would be downright impertinent and rude (1).

1. In places the term es siẽngiki also has the meaning "married woman"; thus, at different times I heard a young woman call out coldly to one not entitled to use this designation when he used it: "I am not your es siẽngiki."

The obsolete term address en dagile, used for 'n akitok, is often regarded nowadays as affectedly polite.

[601]
[651]
[431]

The terms of address required by kinship or livestock-gift take precedence over the above.

/99 cont./

722 while he was imploring 'Ng ai that he might join together as securely
782 as this knot their body and soul. He prays in similar fashion every morning after leaving the hut. The mother likewise prays to God for protection for her son and each time offers him some milk, which she squirts on the ground either out of a gourd bottle or out of her 722 right breast. The girls are somewhat more cheerful about the affair, in that, instead of other prayers, they accompany their dances with litanies for the preservation of their lovers and the many other loved ones. Today the worrisome thoughts are again particularly intense; the warriors must soon be coming home, and then it will be definite as to whether the son or lover is among them.

727 From afar one already sees isolated little clouds of dust, which the cattle that are driven along stir up. The girls and young women hasten to meet the El móran and warmly welcome all who are approaching. But what is this? There, among the laughing women, stands a young woman who has just kissed her brother heartily on both cheeks; now comes her husband, who still wanted to take part in this one expedition before he remains at home permanently as an old ol móruo, and one would expect at least as hearty a welcome for him. But both act as though they did not see each other, indeed, they even turn away from each other. One might think she is angry with him because he staked his life unnecessarily. She is not angry with him, however; on the contrary, she is secretly happy that he has come back safely [576] and is bringing along rich booty. But the Masai too /100/ have their [593] "good breeding" and this requires that married people upon first seeing each other again after an expedition of war, cut each other completely.

From his share of the booty the warrior keeps only one or two milch cows, which he hands over to his loved one. The rest he presents to the mother, the father, the latter's other wives, the brothers, sisters, and one or another of his more distant relatives of whom he is particularly fond. A person who does not receive anything this [721] time will get his share after the next expedition. He need not wait long, wars follow one another quickly, the interval between two is seldom more than two or three months. Hence the Masai are a veritable scourge for the neighboring tribes, and the rumor, "The Masai are coming," in spite of its frequency, is often enough to disturb whole towns and villages for weeks.

/105/

XII.

000 Greeting. -- Form and manner of the greeting between individuals of different age and sex. -- Greeting formulas. -- Greeting for visitors. -- Farewells. -- Conversation. -- Invectives. -- Terms of endearment.

• 576 The greeting begins with a certain gesture, four of which are distinguished:

1. the simple extending of the hand, whereby the vertically held palms of the right hand of both touch (mutual);
2. the same, after one has previously spat in the palm or has at least made the gesture for it (mutual);
3. the head greeting, in which the greeter bends the head and with the crown touches the chest or abdomen of the person greeted (unilateral);
4. the embrace with kiss on both cheeks (unilateral).

Both the gestures and the following words of greeting differ according to the age and sex of the participants. We must therefore consider the individual possibilities of the series.

With participants of the same sex, the older one begins the greeting; with different sex, the man; with the encounter of a woman with a boy, the former. The simple hand-extending is customary among youths, warriors, married men and married women, both among themselves and among one another, further for young girls and children among themselves.

If the greeting is supposed to be particularly heartfelt, because the ones greeting each other are either very close friends or have not seen each other for a long time, there is spitting in the hand before the hand-extending.

At the moment of the hand-extending the man calls out ólélé, the woman ńǎsǎk.

If the man is carrying something in his right hand, he puts it into the left one before the hand-extending, even though he is already holding something else inthis one. Men are always carrying something in the right hand, the youth and warrior the spear, the married man bow or stick; the woman, on the other hand, only in a single case: when she delivers the honey to be paid as bride price -- we

/105 cont./

576 have seen that the bridegroom sends this by one of his wives, his mother, older sister, or wife of his brother -- she carries the vessel with the honey on her back in the apron and, in her right hand, a stick (of a married man), on which she leans, as though to show that the gift brought is large and heavy.

Children and young girls give the head greeting to all adults, as does a young married woman (es siĕngiki) to the warrior or married man who is older than she and related to her or a close friend. During the head greeting the greeter says nothing, while the one greeted answers the greeting with one word: a man says to a boy ŏlĕlĕ, to a girl ňăšăk; the woman to boy and girl, ňăšăk.

/106/ Since the head greeting is a declaration of respect that is made to an older individual or one of higher standing, here, of course, the younger person begins the greeting. A combination of head greeting and hand extending, say, in the manner that the one bent the head, the other extended the hand, does not occur.

The embrace with kiss on both cheeks is always found for twin brothers and sisters frequently also for brothers and sisters in general, often times for own brothers and sisters, more rarely for half brothers and sisters. Furthermore, grandparents embrace and kiss their grandchildren, aunts their nephews and nieces, more rarely mothers their children, but in these cases only as long as the ones embraced are still in childhood. The embrace itself is not accompanied by any word of greeting. If one of the persons embracing is obliged to give the head greeting, this follows the embrace. If aunt and niece, for example, greet each other, the former embraces and kisses the girl, whereupon the latter, with bowed head, touches the chest of her aunt, and the latter at the same time calls out ňăšăk.

The gesture is followed by an address. Acquaintances call out the name of the one greeted or, if they are closer to each other, refer to the father of the one greeted, for example, era Mtarin, which means son of Mtarin. Relatives use the term of address applying to them given above. For persons who do not know each other, the address is determined by the sex and age of the participants. For boys, youths, and married men the address is the same and runs, to one, ĕro or airo (contracted from arairo = friend), to several, loijé, which, as has 576 been said, the older one says. One warrior addresses another with ol morăni, several with el mŏran, whereby it also should be noted that this address is not placed before, but after the actual word of greeting, which is to be discussed later. Girls are addressed with natoje (sing. nairo, feminine form of ero or airo). A young woman is addressed by boys, youths, and warriors with n akitok (n akitwa), by married men, on the other hand, with es siĕngiki. For old women all use the term of address koko. Married men and women address children of both sexes with na gerá = children (sing. eṅ gerai = child).

/106 cont./

The address is followed by a reply, which, spoken by a man runs ĕ, by a woman ĕŏ.

Greeting word and return-greeting word form the conclusion. Male individuals greet each other with sŏwai, whereupon ĕwă follows as return-greeting, as is done by young girls who live in the warrior kraal and young women who have recently left it. Otherwise female individuals greet each other among themselves, as well as men with women, with tăkwĕnja, return-greeting ĭko. Just as also when a woman greets a boy, the greeting runs: she says tăkwĕnja, the boy replies ĭko. If the greeting is directed to several persons, one puts ĕnda before sŏwai and en before tăkwĕnja, thus ĕnda sŏwai and en tăkwĕnja. Finally it is still to be mentioned that the greeter, if he is faced with several persons, one of whom he greets in particular, he appends to the address, in case this /107/ does not contain either the name of the greeted or the name of his father or a kinship term of address, one of the following pronouns: ĕlde (sing., masc.), guldă (pl., masc.), endĭ (sing., fem.), gunĭ (pl., fem.), which mean roughly "you /sing./ there" or "you /pl./ there."

As a recapitulation of the preceding the following formulas result:

Greeter:	accompanying word, address handshake		greeting
Greeted:	accompanying word,	reply	return greeting
Greeter:	head greeting,	reply	return greeting
Greeted:	accompanying word, address		greeting

/107 cont./

576 Greeter: embrace, accompanying, address

Greeted: head greeting reply

Examples:

ol móruo: ŏlĕlĕ ĕrō sŏwai
to handshake
ol móruo: ŏlĕlĕ ā ĕwă

ol móruo: ŏlĕlĕ er 'ĕlde sŏwai
to handshake
ol móruo: ŏlĕlĕ ā ĕwă
(who stands with several others) en dĭtŏ: head greeting ā̆ō ĭko to ol morăni: ñăsăk nairo tăkwĕnja small boy: head greeting ā ĭko married woman: ñăsăk na gerai tăkwĕnja small nephew: head greeting ā ĭko aunt: embrace hasăk tăkwĕnja ol morăni: ŏlĕlĕ lĕ morăni sŏwai

to handshake
ol morăni: ŏlĕlĕ ā ĕwă ol morăni: to each: ŏlĕlĕ, to all: loijé guldā moran enda sŏwai to a few of many handshake el moran: each: ŏlĕlĕ all: ā ĕwă older woman: to each: ñăsăk, to all: na gera en tăkwĕnja to several small boys: each: head greeting ā ĭko

/108/

576 521 [203] A brief conversation in which news is exchanged is added to the greeting as a rule. This explains how even in the barren steppes any news spreads with great speed. If strangers meet, the older man first questions the younger one, or the man the woman, about name, origin, etc. The first question always runs: "Where do you come from?" To this is added the following: era enia 'n gischomi = to what tribe, era enia ol gelata kitok = to what principal lineage, era enia ol gelat' ate = to what sublineage do you belong? It is further asked: eñ ai menje = who is your father, eñ ai notonji = who is your mother, and kędja eñ garnaino = what is your name? The one asked readily gives an answer, but generally does not question the other one; on the contrary he goes on without knowing with whom he spoke. Good breeding demands this.

576 574 If a stranger comes to a kraal whose owner he does not know, as a rule he asks one of the children playing in front. The reply then runs: My father (baba), and to the question who that might be, the little one looks at him astonished and asks: "Do you not know my father then?" To the further question as to where he might be, the child points to a hut in which it surmises the father to be. Only small children may [201] point with the finger in the direction of a married man; older ones and adults indicate the direction by turning the heads toward it and at the same time slightly pushing out the lower jaw or the lips or even their tongues. If the stranger has sought out the hut of the old man, he squats in front of it and waits until its owner comes out of his own accord or is called out by one of his people. Now he first questions the guest in the same way as at an encounter and then calls one of his wives or one of his children to bring milk. The gourd bottle is first handed to the host so that he can make sure it is generously filled. He then hands it on to the guest. When the latter has emptied it he is asked whether he would like still more; to answer in the negative would be an offense against good breeding. Hospitality is discussed in another place; it is only to be mentioned that the guest need not express any request. Though it is expected of him that he will feel quite at home, one nevertheless still specially offers him everything available.

/108 cont./

• 576 When an acquaintance wants to enter the hut, he calls -- corresponding to our knock -- "eh opěn eňg adji" = female owner of the hut, whereupon from inside, like "Come in!" comes the answer, "ja na ijŏk" = "we are here." Thanks for a favor shown or a gift is hardly ever customary, only very rarely does one hear the [201] word ĭsché = thanks. A request is refused in that one "warns off" with the hand, the palm of which is turned toward the one making the request.

The farewell runs "aija amalo" if one person is going away, "aija amerda/109/kipo" if several take their leave, and means "I am going" or "we are going." It is used similarly by all people and only by uncircumcised children is not accompanied by the handshake. A friend taking his leave is requested to remain longer with "milo" = 521 "do not go." In conversation with their kind the Masai are very talkative. The warriors among themselves relate old and new war adventures, which are presented with lively gestures and in exaggerated embellishment. Usually a fellow tribesman or lineage member plays the leading role in it; the enemy is always cowardly or lets himself be outwitted. Together with the young girls, the conversation soon becomes unrestrained and launches into racy witticisms and bold jokes. In the kraal of the married, men and women sit in separate groups. The former speak quietly and often in subdued voices about memories of their youth, stock raising, etc.; the latter, on the other hand, laughing and with extraordinary glibness of tongue, converse about gossipy tales in which some slur is cast on Mr. or Mrs. So-and-So. But let it be said to the credit of the Masai that their gossip is childish and harmless. One does not find malicious scandalmongers of either sex among the Masai and probably not among the other so-called primitive peoples. They rather seem to be an attendant [157] phenomenon of a higher level of culture. In accordance with the lively, impulsive nature and especially also the abnormal irascibility of the younger men, one very often hears coarse and bantering invectives. Their coarseness probably sufficiently explains the peculiar [576] ethics of the Masai. Crude invectives may not be used by women toward men.

/152 cont./

304

Fig. 72e. Fig. 72f. Fig. 72g.

The two middle lower incisors of boys and girls are loosened by pressure with a knife and then removed with the hand, /153/ and, to be sure, either in childhood or also in connection with the change of teeth. Most often given as the reason for this was "so that in drinking milk and honey beer one can spit in a long stream through the gap in the teeth (em buátá), " which is part of good breeding. This is, of course, not the real reason, this rather seems to have fallen into oblivion. Fingernails are worn rather long and, if they become too long, are bitten off, not cut off. The pieces bitten off are thrown away. The toenails are not cut; they wear off sufficiently in walking, etc.

[514] [516]

Fig. 72h. Fig. 72i. Fig. 72k.

302

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

*539 No. 69. Narōito[1] e-ñgape anaa en-dingi
Who-is-treading the-post like the-outcast
oo-'l-oo-mbwai.
of-the-who-have-the-teeth-extracted.

She is treading against the post like one who is not allowed in the warriors' kraals.

[577] [626] [Unless a girl is well dressed, according to Masai ideas, and anoints her body from time to time with oil, she is not admitted into the warriors' kraals, and becomes a social outcast. She has nothing left her to do but lie on her back and put her feet up against a post. Unlike the old man who has many sons, however (vide proverb No. 64), this is considered an undignified position for a maiden.]

No. 70. O-sina liki'ya en-neado,
The-poorness (or trouble) which-takes-you where-it-is-long,
dorop ol-oikulu.
short the-breast-of-a-dead-ox (or happiness).

It is better to be poor and live long than rich and die young.

No. 71. Papa elde oiyēu en-giteñg oje
Father that who-wishes the-cow which-has-just-borne nemetum amu sumbati 'n-gejek o-'l-aahe and-he-does-not-get-it because weak the-legs of-the-calf le-'n-dito enye.
of-the-daughter his.

The old man cannot get milk from the cow that has recently borne, because his daughter has not looked after the calf whose legs are consequently weak.

[A saying applied by women to one of their number who is notoriously lazy.]

No. 72. Pashupashut anaa en-gerai natii eng-aji Pride like the-child who-is-there the-hut
e-ōghoi[2] enye.
of-the-grandmother his.

He is as proud as a child living at its grandmother's.

[603] [Grandmothers are apt to spoil their granchildren, and a naughty boy is not so likely to be whipped at his grandmother's as at home.]

[1] Old or poetical form for en-narorita.
[2] E-ōghoi is here used for eng-ōgho.

[Warrior Kraal]

/87 cont./

701 554 fighting, large leg bells (el duallan kitwa), the tinkling of which in the latter instance serves to prevent a going astray by the individual [714] [534] warriors and a scattering of the troops. Where the bell sounds is a rallying point.

A special position is also occupied by the ñ gǎminini = benefac- [556] tors. They are warriors who, themselves generous, also have a generous, well-to-do father. From him they often receive oxen for slaughtering and then distribute the meat among their comrades and all strangers, without distinction as to age and sex. If such a benefactor is wounded in battle or if he suffers an injury elsewhere on the march or at home, the others are concerned about him and compete with one another to help him to the best of their ability.

701 703 • 577 Accordingly, miserliness is sharply condemned, and a miserly warrior or one who has miserly parents is treated badly and, in case of illness or wounding on the way, is not infrequently left to lie helpless.

701 578 [554] Speaker and leader live like other warriors and are not surrounded by any special ceremonial. Off duty they are treated with respect, which is shown especially by the fact that people avoid coming too close to their girls or lightly seizing an excuse for a quarrel with them. Among the other warriors these two things almost daily lead to serious disputes and often enough to dueling, in which the opponents go after each other with sword and club, but only very rarely [683] wound each other seriously. If this should happen sometime, in a few districts the wounded one receives from the victor a fine con- [431] sisting of livestock; in other districts, only if a bone is broken. In general immediately after the duel /88/ sometimes only after the healing of the wound, reconciliation follows, the formality of which consists of the mutual exchange of sandal thongs and sometimes also 701 the exchange of the skin cape (e megiti). The matter becomes more 578 serious if one is killed in a duel. First the father of the victor is then 682 condemned to pay a larger number of cattle. If he hands them over, the affair is settled. If he refuses them, however, the friends of the man killed attack his kraal and rob him of his entire herd. But they have scarcely brought them home before the friends of the one robbed also try to rescue them again. This goes on until they have become tired

/121 cont./

201 152 In contentment the eyes sparkle, and there is a happy expression on the face.

The stubborn one often presses his lips together tightly. In lying, 201 152 especially in stiff-necked lying, the one concerned usually exhibits a well-played /122/ candor and the absence of any trace of consciousness of guilt, which often increases to the point of indignation, as • 577 181 though over an unjust suspicion. The Masai shows here a great talent for acting, which he probably has in common with most of the dark-skinned African races. Even when he sees himself convicted and has gained the impression that the judge or master is convinced of his guilt, he does not stop lying, but often persists for a long time in the behavior just described. More rarely his look gradually becomes uncertain, the eyes blink, the skin darkens somewhat, the voice becomes [147] husky and somewhat hoarse and his facial expression says approximately: "Now nothing more will help!"

As a sign of contempt one spits before the one held in contempt. 201 152 More rarely among men, but commonly among women, the same feeling is expressed by pushing out the lips and lower jaw and simultaneously extending the head forward.

The feeling of disgust is manifested by spitting.

An extreme degree of fear is shown by a blanching of the skin, [147] especially of the face, trembling of the hands, trembling in the voice, blinking of the eyes, which move unsteadily toward the sides, whereby the head either stays still or is turned in the direction of the eyeballs.

[522] Laughter often increases to a pitch that brings tears to the eyes.

In order to indicate that one is not in a position to do or to prevent something, or to protect oneself or a friend from a loss, to convince someone of the truth of one's words, one shrugs one's shoulders, turns the elbows inward, spreads the hands out, and opens the palms while raising the eyebrows.

Petulant children make a face as though they intended to start to cry.

*233
*136 Southern Asia by both Arab and Indian traders following 231 the Arab invasion of A.D. 669 and it is still spreading (Williamson and Payne, 1959).

The present cattle represent what the Masai have bought, traded, or stolen since the 1890's. Since these processes, especially the latter, are still going on, the cattle appear very mixed. One can even see an occasional Holstein among the mixed zebu in Masai herds.

*233
231
• 577
721 I should be pointed out, however, that stealing is a relative term. According to the Masai, all cattle in the world belong to them, or at least were created for them. It appears that in their way of looking at things, it is not wrong to steal if the object is a cow; they are merely rectifying an obvious administrative error. Doubtless also the excitement and danger involved in a raid appeals to bored moran who have been brought up on stories of the glories of warfare.

*136 Occasional prize steers will weigh over 1,000 pounds,
231
*233 but because of the animal husbandry practices the average weight of Masai range cattle is nearer 350 pounds. These animals require five to seven years to reach adult weight. The average liveweight gain per day is in the neighborhood of 0.3 pounds (Ledger, et. al., 1961). The cows will breed when about three and a half years old. These

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

The influence of the
791 medicine man is due to his supposed power of prophecy and
787 divination. No explanation is offered of this power, nor does it appear that the Laibons are believed to enjoy the acquaintance and assistance of definite spiritual beings; but they can foretell the future by such methods as throwing stones out of a horn, inspecting the entrails of slaughtered animals, interpreting dreams, and delivering oracles when intoxicated with honey wine. Great, however, as is their influence, it does not appear that either among the Masai or the Nandi, where similar institutions prevail, they have ever [171] attempted to assume a position like that of the various small sultans of the coast or the kings to the west of Lake Victoria.

791 The most celebrated of these medicine men was Mbatian, the father of the present holder of the office, Lenana, who died about 1890. He is celebrated for having prophesied outbreaks of cattle plague and small-pox, which duly came to pass; and also for having foretold the arrival of white people. It is generally said that he bade the Masai be friendly to them, but Mr. Hollis could not find any corroboration of this statement. His death was followed by 173 a disputed succession. There is considerable discrepancy as to 791 the details of the story, but, according to the versions taken down by Mr. Hollis (p. 327), Mbatian told his eldest son
662 Sendeyo that on the morrow he would invest him with the insignia of a Laibon, of which the principal is an iron club. Lenana, the younger son, overheard, and presented himself before his father very early the next morning. Mbatian, who was very aged and had only one eye, behaved much like Isaac in similar circumstances, and gave his younger son the insignia, saying 'Thou shalt be great among thy brothers and among all the people.' In any case, Lenana succeeded,
791 and was accepted as Laibon by all the Masai except the Loita.
578 This created a division in the tribe, and as it roughly 619 corresponded with the division between British and German territory, Sendeyo was long regarded as the chief of the German Masai and Lenana of the British. But in 1904 Sendeyo quarrelled with the German administration, made his peace with his brother, and came over to the British Protectorate.

776 The religious ideas of the Masai, as collected by Mr. Hollis, are vague and unformulated. The commonest word for God is Eng-ai, which it will be observed is a substantive with a feminine article. Eng-ai appears to be used either quite indefinitely and impersonally of remarkable natural phenomena

991 173 [23] Ore 'M-Batyany na ol-mirno kitok eata eng-ofigo naiso aka, nemekiai en-gorai enye, naiako 'n-dikitin o-'l-oiloni, na ol-kuna le-'ngkengai, o en-gidofg, o ol-tulet, o en-beee, o 'n-dote o-'n-ailoni,' ntje: 'Iye oitore 'l-alashere lintoo o ol-overe pikin.'

Ne'ye Ol-Ônana 'n-dikitin o-'l-oiloni, naio.

173 ●578 991 Ore y' oidip sakitoo, nejikg Sendeu eng-ajl e-menye, ntjikiai: 'Ol-alashe lino o'yawa 'n-dikitin o-'l-oiloni.' Negore naiakg Sendeu, ntje: 'Maitore ol-alashe lai, aerare ee metua.'

Ônana ntii 'M-Batyany, nemokori ta-'l-Doinyo Orok.

Ore y' oidip atua, ntje kulikae-tatgaook: 'Ol-Ônana ol-oiloni lafg, anu etiaka 'yook 'M-Batyany, "Aiako 'n-dikitin o-'l-oiloni en-gorai ai nare ol-oiloni lingi."' Netumi te-idye saloitare Ol-Ônana.

Kake tje kulikae: 'Muse ol-oiloni lafg ella, anu etiale-jiaka.' Nepwo ninje naaij Sendeu. [638]

New Mbatian was very aged and he had only one eye. He therefore did not see which of his sons was before him and gave to Lenana the insignia of the medicine-man (the iron club and the medicine horn, the gourd, the stones[1], and the bag), at the same time saying: 'Thou shalt be great amongst thy brothers and amongst all the people.'

Lenana took the medicine-man's insignia and went away.

Sendeyo then went to his father, but was told that his brother had already been there and been given the medicine-man's insignia. When he heard this, he was very angry and said: 'I will not be subject to my brother; I will fight with him till I kill him.'

Mbatian died and was buried near Donyo Erok.

When he was dead, some of the people proclaimed Lenana principal medicine-man, 'for,' they said, 'Mbatian told us that he would give the insignia of his office to whichever of his sons he wished should succeed him.' They therefore remained with Lenana.

But others said: 'We will not acknowledge this man for he is a chief,' and they threw in their lot with Sendeyo[2].

[1] It is possible that these stones, which according to tradition were brought many years ago from the north, may prove to be of some interest. It is asserted that no European has ever been allowed to behold them.

[2] This is the story as told by the Masai. The official version is that Lenana was chosen by the elders of most of the clans and districts on his father's death, but that Sendeyo refused to acknowledge him, and was [175]

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Ore kaido enaitare ealoitare Sendeu, nemweiyu, ntii 'l-kumuk, nemuta 'n-gisku enye, ntar ali 'l-Dashi. Ore kaido entotondo ealoitare Ol-Ounno, naiu emweiyu, netum in-gisku, nana en-nettje 'M-Ratyney.

Ntaru Ol-Ounno o Sendeu 'l-ntin kumuk, ntari Sendeu, naitta te-'lie-ari le-figule ami el-alashe, naishori ntem ealoitu, naiuyu o-ellwa.

Ore ten ntau en-nti Ol-Ounno, nagulu en-garai enye naiytibu en-ailuge.

Ore en-ditki kitok te-'l-ailuni nau el-kuma le-'ang-langai. Ore ten siriwua el-ailuni el-kilikwai pe ejiki 'l-nidgenuk ntiki, nairiwua el-kuma laupe pe enilg il-nidgenuk o-ruai laupe.

Nau, ten ituak el-ailuni el-nidgenai te-'l-kuma le-'ang-

Now disease broke out amongst Sendeye's people, many of whom died, their cattle all perished, and they were defeated by the Germans; whilst those people who remained with Lenana did not fall ill, and they obtained cattle, as Mbatian had predicted.

The two rivals waged war for many years, and eventually Sendeye was beaten. He came in 1902 to beg his brother to allow him to live with him, and peace was concluded between the two parties.

Before Lenana dies he will select whichever of his sons is acquainted with the work of the medicine-men to succeed him.

The principal badge of the medicine-man's office is the iron club[1]. If the medicine-man sends a messenger to tell his people anything, he also sends his club so that it may be known that the message comes from him.

Should a medicine-man strike anybody with the iron club, that supported by the 'l-ailuni (i.e. the Masai of the 'l-oitu sub-district, near Kilima Njaro), with whom he lived for many years. The warriors of the two parties frequently met in deadly strife, and raided each other's cattle. In 1902 Sendeye gave up the hopeless conflict, and agreed to acknowledge his brother as chief. He now lives not far from Naivasha. Lenana himself says that he and his three brothers Sendeye, Nailang, and Tolito were circumcised by their father a short time before the latter's death, and as he possessed a better knowledge of the work of the medicine-men than his brothers, he was given the iron club, &c., and chosen by the elders as Mbatian's successor.

[1] On one occasion the iron club was lost. A messenger was sent by Lenana to the Government authorities at Nairobi, and when crossing the Uganda Railway he was overtaken by a train. He jumped on one side and saved his life, but dropped the club, which was never found again. Its place was taken for some years by a small iron poker, but another club has now been made.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

824 283 Il-kik ooitaunyeki 'ng-opit:

1. Ol-mesera.
2. Ol-darpoi.
3. Ol-dōpai.
4. Ol-tepesi.
5. Ol-depe.
6. Ol-churai.
7. Ol-musalala.

The trees from which rope is made:

1. Adansonia digitata, L.
2. Kigelia africana, Bth.[1]
3. Sansevieria cylindrica, Boj.
4. Acacia Seyal, Delile.
5. Acacia Merkeri, Harms.
6. Acacia robusta, Burch.
7. Musa Ensete, J. F. Gmel.

Ol-chani ooitaunye 'l-muran 'ng-opit naashetye 'l-taighan:

The tree from which the warriors obtain the cord for binding their plaits with:

824 754 755 678 O-reteti.

Ore sii ten edek ol-tuñgani ol-likae, pe ebaiki en-diata, neipot ol-likae metu anotaki, nāiniki eng-opito o-'reteti, nepik 'n-guti-alle náirōua oo 'musetani oñgwan.

Ficus, near F. elastica, Miq.

If one man curses another, and the curse takes effect, the man who has been cursed calls the other and asks him to spit on him and to tie on his arm a strip of cord made from this fig-tree. The cord is first of all dipped in hot milk and then four beads are threaded on it.

824 Il-kik ooitaunye 'l-oibonok 'maabon:

1. Ol-oirien o-'l-tarakwai.

2. 'Ng-abōbok oo 'n-dana o-'l-mokongora.

3. O-eki. Ninye ol-chani aidai too-'l-Maasae; esta 'maabon enye naaji Ol-ekēra, neitau 'l-oibonok.

[789]

Esta sii 'l-ñgunaiyuk ooince [262] kn-gera nāji 'N-gulala o-'eki.

4. 'Ng-abobok o-'l-kinga.

5. 'N-dana o-'l-asaiai.

The trees used by the medicine-men in making their medicines:

1. The heart-wood of Juniperus procera, Hochst.

2. The roots and stalks of Lantana sp.

3. Cordia ovalis, R. Br. This tree is thought much of by the Masai, and a charm made from it, which the medicine-men use, is called Ol-ekera.

It has, too, an edible fruit, called The berries of the Cordia, which the children are fond of.

4. The bark of Croton sp.

5. The roots of Capparis tomentosa, Engl.

[1] Or Kigelia pinnata, DC.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

752 eito, n� 'ŋgonyo pe etum ŋitíríe inne-wéji netigile.

232 Neiyólóu sii 'l-abaak sategelem araki ŋidoŋgo 'l-oiŋgok, oo 'l-merigeshi, oo 'l-oroi. Ore ten egelem il-oiŋgok, negor te-'n-gine ol-goe, pe etum sataŋgor ten eitaabe e-ŋgoay, amu ŋjo ieni meŋgor, neijeyu 'mpo.

a ligature round the limb and amputate it.

The surgeons are also able to castrate bulls, rams, and he-goats by either removing or crushing the testicles. When bulls are castrated, a cord is fastened tightly round their necks and blood is extracted from the jugular veins to prevent inflammation of the injured parts[1].

195 Il-deketa loo-'l-Maasaa.

●578 Ol-akaishopo en-napyak!
Mikinjopo en-napyak!
Mikinjíríe eng-Ai!
Mikinoea ol-ówaru!
Injirtita!
Imbasu!

Mikinjoo eng-Ai oo ŋ-g-
'n-jóai!

Tanaŋga náisula!

Todorui!
Tanaŋga aŋgata!
Mikitaara 'l-kuliayi!
Ten edek il-Maasaa 'n-gura, nemedek naleŋg, eajo:

E-eit!
En-gumeto!

Masai curses.

May you be clothed with an incurable disease!
May God trouble you!
May a beast of prey devour you!
Slip on the road and fall!
May you become the colour of a corpse!
May God give you a pair of leather! (i.e. may your cattle die, in which case you will be forced to do manual labour.)
Die with those who have been conquered!
Die when the sun sets!
Die in the plain!
May your own people kill you!
When the Masai curse children, they do not call them very bad names. They say, for instance:
Stone!
Fit!

626 En-gitorojata oo-'l-Maasaa.

Ten ŋjo ol-ise oo-'l-Maasaa en-ditki, pe ŋji el-lejara, ere

Masai form of oath.

If a Masai man says something, and it is believed to be a lie, it is [113] [1] A description of the operation was given in The Fairbanian (Nairobi), October, 1900.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 554 from the senior moran". To these, according to MERKER, p. 82, should be added the formation of the initiates' segregated village (manyatta).[85]

561 578 The behaviour set up by seniority relationship is one of open rivalry between the two adjacent units. Members of the senior unit look down with contempt on those of the junior unit and the latter retaliate as best as they can. The conflicts and clashes which ensue seem to be accepted as a normal social institution and in fact they are looked upon with favour.

FOSBROOKE,[86] notes that initiates make no formal demand for the above mentioned privileges of seniority. "The juniors", he writes, "will assume one of the privileges, and when met by a band of seniors will promptly be beaten up and retract. This process continues till wounds become frequent in these affrays. When the seniors feel that they are on the point of losing their ascendancy, they graciously hand over these privileges to the juniors, who may then proceed to the Unoto ceremony". A detailed description of the same process is given by MERKER.[87]

561 The claim for the privileges of seniority and the Unoto ceremony mark the final stage of the official period for performing individual initiations and therefore for instituting the age-unit. There is a certain regular interval between these ceremonies, which our authorities try to estimate in terms of years. It seems, however, that the deciding factors are, the adjustment between the senior and junior initiates, the former handing over the privileges of seniority to the latter, and the agreement of the piron-elders that the proper time has come for closing the age-unit period.

VI – THE FINAL INSTITUTION OF THE AGE-UNIT[88]

88A 561 The final institution of the age-unit is brought about by the performance of the Unoto ceremony. This is described by FOSBROOKE,[89] as "the ceremony of promotion from junior to senior

[85] FOSBROOKE in his chart, p. 34, puts this immediately following the period of the individual initiation (circumcision) of each unit.

[86] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 29.

[87] MERKER, l. c., pp. 80 ss.

[88] MERKER, l. c., pp. 71 s.; BAGGE, l. c., p. 167; HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 299 ss.; SANDFORD, An Administrative and Political History of the Masai Reserve, London 1919, pp. 68 ss.; MS 48, p. 3; NAD, 1928, p. 21; LEAKEY, l. c., pp. 194 ss.; FOX, l. c., pp. 451 s.; WHITEHOUSE, l. c., pp. 180 ss.; NAD, 1936, pp. 22 s.; FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 29 s.

[89] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 29.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

601 431 Thus, a man gives his brother's wife or his paternal uncle's wife, or his paternal uncle's son's wife a cow, a calf, or a lamb, and the terms of address used by the two, instead of being par-sidan or yeiyo, as the case may be, are pa-kiteŋ, pa-ashe, or pa-supen; a father-in-law gives his daughter-in-law a calf, and the two call one another pa-ashe; and a paternal uncle gives his nephew's wife a she-goat and calls her pa-kine. Similarly a man's first wife usually presents each successive wife with [595] a calf on her marriage, and instead of using the term na-aïni when speaking to one another the two women say pa-ashe; a woman gives her husband's brother's wife a donkey as a wedding present, and the two women call one another pa-sighiria; and a mother-in-law selects a cow for her daughter-in-law some months after marriage, when she has learnt to keep house for her husband, and the form of address is pa-kiteŋ. This method of address is carried even further, and is used between men of the same family. A father, for instance, usually gives his son a bull when the boy is eight or nine years of age, and the two call one another pa-oiŋgöni instead of papa and li-ayöni; a paternal uncle makes a similar present to his nephew, and the same form of address is used; an elder brother gives his younger brother a heifer, and the two call one another pa-'n-dauwo; and paternal cousins often use the terms pa-oro or pa-meregesh when talking to each other.

The following terms are found: pa-kiteŋ, the bullock or the cow; pa-moŋgi, the bullock; pa-kishe, the cows; pa-oiŋgöni, the bull; pa-'n-dauwo, the heifer; pa-buŋgui, the bull calf; pa-ashe, the calf; pa-kuo, pa-oro, or pa-silima, the he-goat; pa-kine, the she-goat; pa-lalelo, the kid; pa-kerr, the ewe; pa-merregesh, the ram; pa-sighiria, the donkey; pa-supen, the ewe lamb; pa-mao, the twin kids.

With one exception, a present of this nature is not made, nor are these terms of address used, outside the father's family. Thus, a brother cannot give his sister a heifer so that the two might call one another pa-'n-dauwo, because if the sister marries she will leave the family; a maternal uncle cannot give his nephew a bull and call him pa-oiŋgöni, and maternal cousins may not address one another by the terms pa-oro, etc. The exception to this rule is made when a man marries. He then presents his father-in-law with a bullock and his mother-in-law with an ewe, and the terms of address are pa-kiteŋ and pa-kerr. These presents have nothing [583] to do with the cattle paid for the bride.

604 578 754 A maternal uncle (ol-apu) exercises great influence over his nephews, as it is believed that if he were to curse them they would die. He can at any time stop a fight in which one of his nephews is engaged by merely calling on his nephew to desist, as the nephew would be afraid of his right arm withering if he were to [593] disobey. This power is to a certain extent reciprocal, and if a man were to start beating his wife he would have to stop if his maternal nephew ordered him to do 593 so. A father and any old man of the family can also usually stop a fight by telling 626 754 the combatants to desist, but they are not necessarily listened to. A mother has more influence, and if her son refuses to obey her, she strikes her stomach and says, "You were born in this"; whereupon the son is said to sicken, and can only recover when his mother makes a rope of fibre which she hangs round his neck.

*648
179

discarded their old formations, adversities of various descriptions have introduced the necessity of undertaking manual labour in portions of each reserve and a succession of punitive expeditions or displays of force, the last of which occurred some ten years ago, has brought home to them a conception of the power of the Government, a realization which has tended towards a more progressive attitude owing to the diminution which it caused in their minds of the influence held by their medicine-men. No punitive expedition has ever been undertaken against the Masai, an omission which was very largely due to the authority and sagacity of Lenana, the chief medicine-man at the time when the European Government was first encountered, who survived long enough to keep his people in check until such a degree of administration had been effected as to render the despatch of a punitive expedition a measure that would only be resorted to in the last extremity. Further, the Masai now thoroughly realize how vulnerable they are if ever they come into armed conflict with the Government. Their enormous, immobile herds would immediately be lost and a sufficient degree of punishment could quickly be attained. For this reason, it is extremely improbable that they will, of their own initiative, so far forget what they consider to be their best interests as to cause a serious disturbance. The escape from punitive expeditions, however, has undoubtedly been a factor in the perpetuation in their original form of the Masai ideas and traditions.

101
184
578
628

The tribal formation of the Masai.

As will be seen in Chapter II., the Masai tribe originally consisted of both pastoral and agricultural sections, of which the latter was almost annihilated by the former and survives at present only in one or two scattered localities, mainly in areas reserved for other tribes. A small section of these agriculturalists, the Nguruman, is to be found at the north end of Lake Natron, but that is the only trace of them in the present Masai Reserve, and these people now show a tendency to assume the habits and customs of the pastoralists. The problem presented in the administration of the Masai is therefore almost exclusively concerned with the pastoral section. According to the social system of this section, the male sex is divided into boys, warriors and elders. The first stage continues until circumcision, which may be performed approximately between the ages of thirteen and seventeen. These boys are called "'L-Ayok." After circumcision, they become warriors, or "Muran," those who have been circumcised at about the same time being said to belong to the same age. The "Muran" remain on the fighting strength of the tribe for periods varying from seven to fourteen years, during which period they constitute a standing army. They are divided into Companies, or "Sirits," which live in separate villages, or "Manyattas," some of these containing as many as six or seven hundred fighting men. With few exceptions, the "Muran" of the present day perform no work of any kind. In days gone by, they were expected to carry out raids and preserve the armed prestige of the tribe, but the introduction of the "Pax Britannica" has deprived them of such employment, and they, having found no alternative occupation, are content to remain in idleness and to live in the state of free love with immature girls which tradition prescribed as the duty of the warrior in the days of tribal warfare.

561

Social system of the pastoral section. "'L-Ayok." "Muran."

The effect of the military organization.

This military organization of the Masai made them, in the past, a most effective body for destructive military operations, and explains not only the predominant position which they acquired in East Africa, but also the respect which they inspired and the extent to which their customs were imitated by other tribes. On the other hand, it probably also is the reason why they never founded any state or polity analogous to the Kingdoms of Uganda and Unyoro. The centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship and desirous only of military glory. Retirement from this band of warriors as a chief was honourable, but seems to have been regarded as a removal to an inferior sphere of activity. The chiefs arranged the details of the raids which the warriors wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight.*

561
642
622

* Sir Charles Eliot, November, 1904, Introduction to "The Masai: Language and Folklore," by A. C. Hollis.

*648
166
311

The Meeting of December 5th, 1912.

On December 5th, 1912, the Governor met the Masai chiefs at Nakuru. The remarks then made by Legalishu and his adherents were evasive, and no attempt was made to express their true feelings in the matter or to disclose their reasons for taking legal proceedings against the Government. The Governor was of opinion that only a minority of the tribal elders, headed by Legalishu and Masikondi, were responsible for this action, ostensibily on behalf of their tribe, and that the personal avidity and ambition of those two men were doubtless contributory causes of their organized opposition to the approved Government policy. Those who opposed the move had no valid ground for their objection as to the unsuitability of the new country to which they were being moved.

Completion of the move.

On the 9th of April, 1913, Sir Henry Belfield informed the Secretary of State that the Masai move was completed. With the exception of Il Dala Lekutuk division all the Laikipia Masai were located in the extended Reserve, while that division, after remaining for some months on the Uaso Nyiro, moved to the Kaputiei country and settled there. Reports showed that the losses suffered by the Masai on account of the move had been very small. Rinderpest was rife, both in Laikipia and the south, from which many hundreds of beasts died, but the veterinary officers who were in charge of both areas did all that was possible to prevent the spread of the disease. Sheep suffered on one or two occasions, but only a few succumbed. Two drifts were being used, each with an officer in control, and of the thousands of sheep at these drifts not one was lost. The death rate of the Masai themselves, directly attributable to the move, was probably nil. On the whole, the Masai behaved well throughout, and there was very little friction with settlers. Statistics show that the number of Masai moved between the 10th of June, 1912, and the 27th of March, 1913, was 462 warriors, 1,820 other males, 4,031 women and 3,751 children, a total of 10,064 souls, while nearly 200,000 head of cattle and 550,000 sheep were counted. The number of sheep is probably very greatly underestimated. The Secretary of State expressed his appreciation of the manner in which the delicate and difficult task had been performed.

Attitude of the Masai after the move.

On the completion of the move the Purko division evinced a considerable disinclination to cross the Mara River, but no steps were taken to induce them to do so and a large number of Masai, including all the Purko Muran, moved into the trans-Mara region in September, 1913.

The Masai did not, on the whole, settle down contentedly in their new surroundings and they showed a disposition to make the worst of everything. Complaints were incessant that the country was unsuitable for them and for their stock, and every device short of active resistance was employed to obstruct the Administration and to defeat the ends of justice. Information concerning crimes was withheld, and escaped prisoners were assisted and harboured. Chiefs and elders proved anything but helpful and were occasionally almost defiant. The "Masai Case" was undoubtedly responsible for much of this feeling, but it is also probable that the natives resented the closer administration which had been rendered possible by the amalgamation of the two reserves.

This discontented feeling began to disappear some six months after the completion of the move and raids, murders and stock thefts decreased in number. Two years after their arrival the Masai could be described as contented and happy in spite of their dissatisfied disposition.

Disputes with previous residents.

Prior to the arrival of the Masai from Laikipia, the country constituting the extended Southern Reserve had been occupied by members of the Loita, Damat, Kakonyukye and Siria tribal divisions as well as by about one-quarter of the Purko division. These sections had undertaken to move to Laikipia in 1904, but succeeded in evading the terms of their agreement with the Government and, while admitting that they had no claim to the land, occupied the area and came to regard it as their own. By these Masai the arrival of their fellows from Laikipia was resented, while the latter were displeased at finding the best grazing grounds already taken up. A considerable amount of friction ensued, more particularly between the Purko and Il Damat divisions.

[628
5718]

Relations between the Purko and Damat. 578 648

Some years previously the Damat division had been almost annihilated by the Purko and many of the survivors had been forced to throw in their lot with their conquerors owing to the loss of all their possessions. In subsequent successful wars waged by the Purko they had received their share of the booty, and had thus come once more to possess large herds of sheep and cattle. They now expressed a desire to rejoin their own tribal division, but the Purko maintained that if they did so they must hand back those possessions which they had acquired as a result of the Purko raids. This question was not settled until April, 1918, when, at the inaugural meeting of the Masai Council, Ole Kataign, President of the Damat Council, agreed that the Damat should continue as a part of the Purko division.

Relations with the Lumbwa 648*

Masai and Lumbwa at first regarded each other with suspicion and dislike. Thefts and counter-thefts were common and precautions had to be taken to preserve peace between the Muran of the two tribes. This ill-feeling nearly came to a head towards the end of 1912, when a party of Masai Muran made a raid on a Lumbwa village and murdered several people, but no actual trouble occurred, and the presence of the Masai on the Lumbwa borders has now ceased to give cause for anxiety, though occasional thefts still occur.

*648
579

The matter was discussed in Executive Council on the 21st of June, 1917, when Mr. Hemsted, who was present, stated that there could be no doubt that the members of those "Sirita" were well aware of the identity of the murderers and were deliberately shielding them from justice. Several murders of Kikuyu had recently occurred in or near the Masai Reserve, and an exemplary punishment was considered necessary. A fine of Rs. 20,000 was accordingly imposed on each of the three "Sirita," the total fine amounting to Rs. 60,000. The Secretary of State conveyed his sanction by despatch, on the 23rd of August, 1917. Some seventeen hundred head of cattle were seized in August as security for the payment of the fine, but, by October, no portion of the fine had been paid in cash. Instructions were, therefore, issued for the fine to be recovered by distress, by the sale of the cattle to realize the amount of the fine imposed. This sale was postponed owing to an outbreak of lung-disease among the herds.

*648 Permission to shoot lions, December, 1916.

52. Owing to complaints by the Masai of the damage done to their stock by lions, and on account of several incidents where natives had been killed by these beasts, permission was granted in December, 1916, to District Officers working in the Masai Reserve, to shoot lions in the Southern Game Reserve, in cases where there was good reason to believe that the animals were dangerous.

Move of the Kakonyukye Division to Ngong Hills, December, 1916.

53. Owing to the constant trespassing by the Kakonyukye Masai on the farms in the Kedong Valley, that division was moved in December, 1916, and was located in the vicinity of the Ngong Hills, an area which had, for some time past, been practically unused.

[231]

As the Kakonyukye cattle were highly susceptible to East Coast fever, it became necessary to erect a cattle dip for them, the dip already in existence at Ngong being insufficient for their requirements. The site selected for the new cattle dip was near the Kiserian Stream, ten miles south of Ngong, and its construction was approved on the 9th of January, 1917.

*648
579

Murders near Dagoretti, March, 1917.

54. In March, 1917, a young man and three boys were brutally murdered within a short distance of the Masai border, near Dagoretti. The circumstances of the crime pointed strongly to the fact that the Masai must have been the offenders, but there was no evidence of their complicity and no punishment was inflicted.

Murder of two Kikuyu boys, May, 1917.

55. In May, 1917, some Kikuyu were attacked while grazing their cattle in their reserve within one mile of the Masai boundary, and two boys were killed with spears. A witness, who saw the whole incident, escaped with his life, and subsequently gave evidence to the effect that the murderers were a band of Masai. In the judicial proceedings which ensued, the absence of any motive for such a deed on the part of the neighbouring Kikuyu was clearly established, while a motive was present in regard to the youths of the Masai tribe, as it was by native custom necessary in certain circumstances for such youths to have blooded their spears before admission to the forthcoming E-Unoto ceremony. It proved impossible to trace any of the individual criminals, but it was considered that sufficient grounds existed for holding five divisions of the Masai tribe, resident in the neighbourhood, responsible for the outrage. The perpetration of a number of murders of the same nature and in the same area a short time previous to this crime, in no one of which had sufficient evidence been obtainable to warrant the imposition of a collective punishment, influenced the Governor in determining the severity of the penalty to be inflicted in this case and, as it appeared that the belief was growing among the Masai that they would escape punishment for such deeds if they were performed outside the limits of their own reserve, he determined to make the punishment an exemplary one, and a fine of Rs. 20,000 was imposed under the Collective Punishments Ordinance on each of the Masai divisions implicated, namely, the Sighirari, L'Odo Kilani, Matapatu, Kaputiei and Il Dala Lekutuk divisions. It was decided that, from the proceeds of the fine, blood money should be paid to the relatives of the two Kikuyu victims.

*648
● 578
561
628

Unrest among the Purko Moran, June, 1917.

56. Early in June, 1917, unrest was reported among the Moran of the Purko and Loita tribes. On the evening of June 2nd, the Purko commenced operations for an attack on the Loita, and the District Commissioner, Narok, who followed them as far as Narosura on the following day, failed to get in touch with them, they having proceeded to Loita country. On the evening of the 4th of June, the Purko returned below the Osobugo, and on the night of the 5th proceeded to Endasegera, having refused to listen to the advice of certain elders who went to restrain them. On the 8th of June, the Purko returned home. No fight occurred, the intervention of certain Muran of the Il Merisho Sirit having prevented bloodshed, and the influence of the elders being then sufficient to turn the Muran back. Throughout the disturbance, the medicine-man, Sendeu, was protected by the Muran of the Il Merisho Sirit. 648* 561 578 628

In spite of the fact that this incident resulted in no serious trouble, recent events sufficiently indicated that the Purko Muran were a little out of hand, both as regards the Government and their own chiefs and headmen. Additional police were, therefore, procured for temporary duty in the Masai Reserve. The measures adopted to bring them under better administrative control included a visit by the District Commissioners of Narok and Mara to each of the Purko Muran villages, where all Muran from each village were interviewed. Legalishu, Masikondi, Ole Kotekosh, and the principal Aigwenak of the elders and Muran were present, and Seggi joined the party later. The ringleaders were arrested, all outstanding fines from the Muran were collected, and a number of bullocks and donkeys were procured for the Military Supply Corps. These measures were completed before the end of August. No opposition or obstruction to Government orders had been offered by the Muran, and although the relations between the Purko and Loita divisions continued to be somewhat strained, it appeared that they were convinced that Government would not tolerate a breach of the peace and, as Mr. Hemsted reported that he saw no reason to fear any recrudescence of the trouble, the additional police were withdrawn.

Mr. Morrison's case, August, 1917. 648*

57. In August, 1917, Mr. A. Morrison, the lawyer who had been appointed counsel for the Masai in the "Masai Case," brought a civil claim for some Rs. 26,000 against the chiefs and elders concerned in that case. The case was heard in the High Court, Nairobi, in January, 1918, and the action was dismissed with costs.

Chapter XI.

THE UASIN GISHU MASAI.

000

*648
101
578

The Uasin Gishu Masai Reserve—The extension of the reserve—Statistics of the Uasin Gishu Masai—Further extension of the reserve—Discussions between Lembore and Wali Kondi—Uasin Gishu Masai Reserve boundaries.

In 1860, the Uasin Gishu Masai inhabited the plateau named after them. They were defeated in battle by the other Masai, and were scattered to various parts of the country, some going to the ravine, others to Nandi, and others to Kavirondo. Those located in the ravine rendered considerable assistance to Government in the early days of administration, and acquired a certain amount of wealth.

*648

The Uasin Gishu Masai Reserve.

The attention of the Government was first called to the necessity of creating a reserve for the Uasin Gishu Masai by Mr. Foaker, District Commissioner at Eldama Ravine, in February, 1904, soon after Lord Delamere had been granted a lease of a large area in the neighbourhood. Mr. Foaker asked that 100,000 acres might be reserved for them, and that the salt licks on Lord Delamere's land might be included in the reserve. No attempt was made to form a native reserve, but Lord Delamere was informed by the Land Officer on February 22nd, 1904, that, as the Uasin Gishu Masai had rights over the salt licks on his land, they must be given uninterrupted access thereto at any time.

Further large grants of land were made to Europeans near the Ravine Station in 1904, and, on the arrival of a surveyor, in January, 1905, to survey other farms in the neighbourhood, Mr. Foaker pointed out that great injustice was being done to the Uasin Gishu Masai.

The Land Officer thereupon reserved the only land then available—some 10,000 acres—which was for the most part stony and barren and had consequently not been applied for by Europeans.

The extension of the Reserve.

After the Nandi Expedition in 1906 it was decided to move to the ravine those Uasin Gishu Masai who had gone to live with the Nandi. This was done, with the result that the reserve became very congested.

In October, 1906, Mr. Hobley wrote to the Commissioner of Lands asking that the area reserved for the Uasin Gishu Masai might be increased, as it was inadequate. He also asked that a right of way to the salt licks on Mr. Hotz's land and Captain Grogan's grazing farm should be reserved for them. In February, 1908, Colonel Montgomery, accompanied by Mr. Bagge, then Provincial Commissioner, Naivasha, proceeded to the ravine where he interviewed the Uasin Gishu Masai and visited their reserve. Colonel Montgomery was convinced that they had not enough land, and proposed the re-acquisition of some of the farms in the neighbourhood, a proposal which was agreed to by the Governor.

In 1909 and 1910 four farms on the Molo River, aggregating 21,972 acres, were re-acquired, and the Uasin Gishu Masai were informed that they might occupy those areas. A right of way from the Molo River to the salt lick on Mr. Hotz's farm was also reserved for them.

On February 6th, 1911, the Acting Governor interviewed the Uasin Gishu Masai Elders. The Masai complained that their reserve was still far too small for them and that they had not enough salt for their herds. They asked for permission to continue living on the unoccupied farms in the neighbourhood, paying rent in kind as heretofore to the various landlords who were, for the most part, absentees. They were informed that they must move into their reserve and that, if it was not large enough, they must sell their surplus stock. The Acting Governor agreed to their having a right of way to the salt lick on Captain Grogan's farm. The Masai were also informed that, in all probability, a cattle tax in lieu of hut tax would be imposed on pastoral tribes in the near future.

Prior to the meeting, Mr. Hollis visited the Uasin Gishu Native Reserve and several of the adjoining farms and obtained the following information. The Uasin Gishu Masai in this area numbered in all between 1,400 and 1,500 souls, and paid tax on 440 huts. They possessed 15,000 head of cattle and 25,000 sheep and goats. 4,000 head of these cattle were in the habit of grazing on land belonging to Captain Grogan, who received toll in bullocks at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum. There were 30 kraals on Lord Delamere's land, containing 3,000 head of cattle, which were allowed this privilege without payment. The remaining 7,000 or 8,000 cattle were for the most part in the Native Reserve.

Statistics of the Uasin Gishu Masai. 648* 231 [162] [651]

The two reserves occupied by the Uasin Gishu Masai in February, 1911, were separated by a strip of alienated land, and steps were taken to re-acquire parts of adjacent farms belonging to Captain Grogan which would join these two areas and form one native reserve having an area of some 40,000 acres. The Masai were informed that, when this reserve had been allotted to them, they must regard the question of boundaries as definitely settled. They were also given to understand that, in lieu of hut tax, they would be required to pay a cattle tax of R. 1 per head or a stock tax of one beast out of every herd of 100 cattle, sheep or goats.

Further extension of the reserve. 648* 311

In July, 1911, the Provincial Commissioner, Naivasha, reported that dissensions had occurred between Chief Lembere and the hereditary Laibon, Walikondi, leading men in the Masai Reserve. Lembere had been constituted Chief by Mr. (now Sir Frederick) Jackson when he was stationed at Ravine and had acquired a considerable following. Charges of witchcraft had been brought against Walikondi, with the result that he requested permission to move, with the other Masai, from Laikipia into the Southern Masai Reserve. His following expressed a desire to accompany him. It seemed, however, that such a movement would be the cause of friction between the Uasin Gishu and the other Masai, who have little in common, and it was decided to hold the matter over, at any rate until the Masai Move was an accomplished fact.

Dissensions between Lembere and Walikondi. 648* 578 754 791

In May, 1912, the sanction of the Secretary of State was requested to an exchange of land held by Captain Grogan in the Naivasha Province for an area on the Athi Plains. Captain Grogan was willing to exchange 16,638 acres, to be used for an extension of the Uasin Gishu Masai Reserve, for 30,000 acres on the Athi Plains. The Secretary of State approved this arrangement in June, 1912, and the Provincial Commissioner, Naivasha, was instructed to take steps to mark out the extended Uasin Gishu Masai Reserve. 648*

A description of the Uasin Gishu Masai Native Reserve was accordingly drawn up, and read as follows:— Uasin Gishu Masai Reserve boundaries. 648* 131

"The reserve is divided into three parts:

"No. 1. Commencing at the point where the Nakuru Eldama Ravine Road crosses the Enaresuro (or Nassour) River the boundary follows the right bank of this river down stream to its junction with the Esageri (or Sageri) River; thence along the left bank of the Esageri River up stream to the point where it is crossed by the Nakuru Eldama Ravine Road; thence along this road in the direction of Eldama Ravine to the point of commencement.

"No. 2. Commencing at the point where the Esageri River is crossed by the Nakuru Eldama Ravine Road the boundary follows that road in the direction of Nakuru to the most northerly corner or portion L.O. 487; thence in south-westerly direction along the western boundary of L.O. 487 to its intersection with the eastern boundary to L.O. 502; thence northerly and westerly along the eastern and northern boundaries of portion L.O. 502 to the Esageri River; thence along the right bank of the Esageri River down stream to the point of commencement.

"No. 3. Commencing at the most westerly corner of portion L.O. No. 486 on the Eldama Ravine Road the boundary follows the western boundaries of L.O. 485, 484, 483, 661 in a north-easterly direction to the most northerly corner of the latter (which is also the western corner of L.O. 662); thence in a south-easterly direction along the southern boundary of L.O. 662 to the Molo River;

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

arm. A beaded belt confines it round the waist, leaving only 291 one limb partly exposed. Frequently it is slipped off the shoulder, and depends entirely from the waist, leaving the bosom exposed. Their ornaments are of a very remarkable 301 nature. Round the legs from the ankles to the knees telegraph wire is coiled closely in spiral fashion. So awkward is this ornament that the wearer cannot walk properly, she cannot sit down or rise up like any other human being, and she cannot run. Round the arms she has wire similarly coiled both above and below the elbow. Round the neck more iron wire is coiled—in this case, however, horizontally—till the head seems to sit on an inverted iron salver. When the leg-ornaments are once on they must remain till finally taken off, as it requires many days of painful work to fit them into their places. They chafe the ankles excessively, and evidently give much pain. As they are put on when very young, the calf is not allowed to develop, and the consequence is, that when grown up the legs remain at a uniform thickness from ankle to knee—mere animated stilts, in fact. The weight of this armour varies according to the wealth of the parties, up to thirty pounds. Besides the iron wire, great quantities of beads and iron chains are disposed in various ways round the neck.

Such, then, were the people that now greeted Moran, who, 262 being a novice, had to suffer a good deal of chaff from both 884 sexes. He was, however, soon initiated into the mysteries of a warrior kraal, and had seen a bit of life. The strictest diet imaginable was the rule. He had to be content with absolutely nothing but meat and milk. Tobacco or snuff, beer or spirits, vegetable food of all kinds, even the flesh of all animals except cattle, sheep, and goats, were alike eschewed. To eat any of those articles was to be degraded [578] —to lose caste; to be offered them was to be insulted in the deepest manner. As if these rules were not strict enough, he must needs not be seen eating meat in the kraal, neither must he take it along with milk: So many days were devoted entirely to the drinking of new milk, and then, when carnivorous longings came over him, he had to retire with a bullock to a lonely place in the forest, accompanied by some of his comrades, and a Ditto to act as cook. Having scrupu- [757] lously made certain that there was no trace of milk left on [231] their stomachs by partaking of an extremely powerful purgative, they killed the bullock either with a blow from a rungu or by stabbing it in the back of the neck. They then

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

is that they receive no benefit from the cattle of their neighbours. "We get neither meat nor milk," they say; "why, therefore, should we fight for the preservation of your cattle?" With a consummate knowledge of the region, the Masai warriors threaded their way by special pathways, passing Taveta, and crossing the Nyika. Nearing the coast, they stowed themselves away in the bush, while a few of the bravest went forward to spy out the land, knowing, however, full well that the very sight of one of their number was quite sufficient to stampede a hundred Wa-nyika or Wa-digo. Sadi, indeed, told me that on one occasion he actually met some of these spies in the town of Mombasa at midnight. This is, I think, doubtful, but it shows what they are considered capable of; and there can be no doubt as to the astonishing hardihood of these scouts. Stories are continually heard to that effect, thus rendering the Masai a terror in the land; and it is a fact that they have even reached Bagamoyo, opposite Zanzibar. 726

The raid was, of course, successful, and our savage friends returned in great glee. On reaching their homes, however, matters had to be squared up, and the spoil divided. So many head of the captured cattle were set apart as the portion of the lybon Mbaratien, who had directed them so well, and whose medicines had been so potent. Then followed a sanguinary scene over the apportionment of the remainder. There was no attempt at a fair division. The braver men and bullies of the party, consulting only their own desires, took possession of such cattle as pleased them, and dared the rest to come and seize them. The understood rule was that if any warrior could hold his own in single combat against all comers for three days, the cattle were his. And thus began the real fighting of the expedition, revealing sickening sights of savage ferocity. There were more warriors killed over the division of the spoil than in the original capturing of it. To kill a man in this manner was considered all fair and above board. Blood feuds were unknown, a man not being considered worth avenging who could not hold his own life safe. If, however, a man was murdered treacherously, the criminal had to pay forty-nine bullocks. Our young warrior, as he was only as yet winning his spurs, had to be content with the honour and glory of the raid, and he had the modesty not to pit himself against abler and more ferocious fighters. It must be remembered that the cattle thus captured did not remain 727 [791] 727 578 [628] 727 [421]

6: Thomson K-3 (1883-1884) 1887
FL12 Masai FL12.
Wa-Kwafi

M 184 between the married and the unmarried people, very little work being expected of the latter, and the sweetheart system being preserved. They all, however, occupy the same village, 262 and of course the young men cannot afford to live on meat, 184 though they always come in for the lion's share when any of it is going. When parties go off on war-raids, they also contrive to eat a bullock by way of getting up their courage.

578 They lead upon the whole a very miserable life, ever threatened with destruction by the Masai, who have swept off several villages and all their cattle. The soil being the 132 very richest loam, brought down from the mountains and 134 spread over a comparatively level plain to the south of the lake, it is capable of producing anything; only the extreme dryness of the air and the very small annual rainfall, confined to a couple of months, keeps it sterile and barren. 312 To ameliorate this unhappy condition of things the Wa-kwafi have developed a wonderfully ingenious system of irrigation by artificial canals of (for them) great magnitude. They construct dams across the deep channel of the Guaso Tigirish and thus raise the level of the water to that of the plain, and then, by an intricate network of channels, they spread 262 the precious fluid over a large area, and raise their millet 241 and melons. These products form almost their sole food, eked out by what they are able to kill in the chase and by fish from the river, though when meat is scarce they are not 136 disdainful even of rats. Of these there were simply 123 myriads. They swarmed everywhere, and nothing was too sacred for them. Need it be wondered if "oft in the stilly night" were heard imprecations loud and deep upon the wretched pests when I have been wakened up by my nose being bitten or the sanctity of my toe invaded. My books were devoured, and even the bullets in my cartridges were not too indigestible. Everything, indeed, had to be kept under iron or hung up under sheds as represented on page 313.

157 As in the case of the Wa-taveta, the Wa-njempe are singularly honest and reliable, so much so that valuable 123 goods and equally valuable food are left in their charge with the utmost confidence, and I have heard of no case of this being violated. To me, one of the most remarkable features in the character of the young women and girls was their absolute unconsciousness of fear in my presence, and the complete confidence they seemed to have in me. They indeed took 789 another sale! Sometimes circumstances prevent the immediate use 791 of medicines obtained: a drought for instance might make it impossible to collect people for the ceremony; in such a case the charm might get old and lose its efficiency; or perhaps the object of its use may be forgotten. If this happens the medicine is conveniently mislaid or is thrown away, but if so a report must be made to the medicine man, for he will have seen what happened to his medicine and will be angry, if its fate is concealed from him.

561 After some years the boys are circumcised, and become moran warriors. As soon as most of them are circumcised the ingopior plan to form into separate companies in readiness for residence in warrior
[361] villages called imanyab. Messages are sent and the warriors of all clans are called together by means of an ol-amal just as the boys did before the endungore ceremony. The number of companies, called i'sirit, to be formed, also the names to be given to them are decided on beforehand by the ingopiri warriors. After discussion a division is decided upon. One warrior representing each company to be formed leaves the assembly, goes a little way and striking the haft of his [201] spear with his club to attract attention, he calls: "En alo Il Mirisho" or " En alo Il Tetiauri "—" This way the Merisho, this way the Tetiuri." The warriors then rise and join the man calling the name of the company they wish to join.

Groups of five will go together, to join the same company. A company may include warriors of more than one clan though as a rule the majority are of the same clan.

If the warriors of one clan are too few to form a separate unit they join the unit of another clan. If the clan is a very big one, the warriors may form two or even more sirits. Having joined a sirit a [578 warrior may retract at any time before that sirit forms the first warrior
627] village. Once the warrior villages are formed, any warrior who leaves his sirit to join another, incurs the bitter resentment of the others. In some cases a fine of cattle is inflicted.

The sirits once formed, the warriors now approach the il-piron elders with a view to holding the ceremony of drilling—without which the first warrior village or manyata of new age-group may not be erected.

The enthurgori ceremony or the breaking of the fire stick, though it effectively holds up the circumcising ceremonies, is not finally bind-[791] ing. It sometimes happens that the medicine man decides that a left-hand circumcision shall be held, in which case all the boys, the Il piron planned to make their special care, will be lost to them, for the boys will be circumcised to form one age with the ——— or right-hand circumcision moran.

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

After going through the ceremony, the new elders can drink milk alone, eat meat that married women have seen, carry about short bladed spears (embere sero) in place of the long polished warrior's spear; in fact all the customs of warriorhood are abandoned. 561

On return to their homes those who are not yet married do so at the earliest opportunity. Those who are married, if their fathers are still alive, move off from the paternal boma; for they are now in complete control of their cattle, and if they stayed with their fathers there would be constant bickering on animal husbandry matters. [591] [578]

From the foregoing it may be concluded that the average Masai male spends at least 10 years of his life as a moran. What are his economic duties and privileges during this period? In olden times his primary duty was to defend the country and, by raiding other tribes, to maintain and increase the cattle population. But European intervention has deprived him of his main occupation, and the only duties which the moran by custom seem bound to perform to-day are (a) drawing water from wells for his father's cattle or superintending their watering at flowing streams, (b) cutting the thorn tree branches which form the fence of the boma, and (c) escorting home night-bound cattle or searching for lost beasts. It was natural that few everyday tasks should be imposed on the standing army, but although the military duties are now in abeyance, the moran have retained the privilege of freedom from responsibility together with many other perquisites. These include access to the unmarried girls and the right to demand milk in any boma. In the matter of bullocks for slaughter in ol pul, the camp at which the moran may alone eat meat, the warriors seem to have a fairly free hand; if an elder withholds his consent, his moran son (with friends) will frequently help himself. It is not improbable that with the prohibition of raiding the moran exert these privileges in greater degree than they used to. If the elders are to be believed they spent a considerable portion of their time as warriors absent from home on raids, living in the bush on stolen cattle preparatory to stealing more. Consequently the time which they spent wandering round the bomas making their demands must have been considerably curtailed. [648] [178]

Another duty, or rather, restriction placed on the moran was abstinence from tobacco and beer. The former is largely breaking down, but fortunately the latter still holds to a considerable extent. This is not so with the Arusha, amongst whom drunken brawls between groups of moran are not infrequent. [273] [276] [184]

The above largely refers to the unmarried moran; once they settle down, even before the ngeherr ceremony, their mode of life is practically indistinguishable from that of a newly made elder.

Elderhood is in itself marked by different stages, each of which has its own privileges and responsibilities. The members of the generation immediately above that of the moran are mostly concerned in family matters, establishing their own gates, marrying and performing ceremonies to ensure the fertility of their wives. The generation next above the most junior elders, as explained earlier in this chapter, is responsible for the

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

422 husbandry side, deciding which beasts shall be castrated, etc. He may 593 also take bullocks and exchange them for heifers, or sell them at auctions and buy heifers. He is however expected to use his own reserve (ongishu le boo) for tax payments, and if he uses his wife's bullock he should later replace it with a heifer. When however the son takes over responsibility for his mother, the tax payable on their hut will be met by a bullock from the mother's herd.

When relations come to beg cattle, if they are clansmen of the husband, he should try to find cattle for them out of his own reserve, but may beg on their behalf from his wives. If a relation of one of his wives comes begging, the request should be met from that wife's herd, but the elder may also help from his own cattle. But wife B is not expected to assist the relations of wife A, and would in fact be very insulted if asked.

In the matter of milk and beer, the wife is in control. The husband should not go into the partitioned-off, private bed-chamber of the wife, where such drinks are kept. If the wife says the milk or beer is finished, the husband should accept her word, but if it is obviously untrue, he
● [579] will at times look for himself. If he finds any, the wife is in the wrong; if he does not, he himself is: so in either case a quarrel starts.

Concerning cash realised by the sale of bullocks, the husband will grudgingly give it out to his wives for purchase of beads, wire, etc., but one sees no great display of generosity at auctions. When a man pays another's tax — the most frequent occasion on which one sees cash changing hands — the matter is always remembered and set off later, even in the case of a son.

Though these notes are only superficial, certain aspects of them must be regarded as important. In some cases the wives doubtless follow the advice of their husbands concerning the sale of stock, but they do possess rights of their own, on which — if strong-minded — they can insist. Thus if, for example, stock limitation were made compulsory, many an elder would be placed in an awkward position; if he refused to cull his stock, he would be prosecuted, if he arbitrarily sold his wives' beasts, he would have to face their wrath.

000 The introduction of economic schemes should, therefore, be preceded by consideration of their social aspects, so that the co-operation of the right person can be enlisted. It has been mentioned for instance that the women have complete control of the distribution of milk; it would appear, therefore, that the women should be consulted and agree to the establishment of any creamery or ghee manufacturing project, and that they should also directly enjoy its profits.

CONCLUSION.

114 In place of the administrative proposals with which this paper originally concluded, perhaps the writer may be permitted to substitute a few general reflections. These are based on 17 years' experience of purely District Administration in country ranging from the most unspoilt to the most heavily eroded, from the thickest of fly bush to the broadest

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL.12 Masai FL.12
Kenya

Marriage.—The warriors may not marry till after the E-Unate, and do not usually do so till after their first Ol-Ng'ober. The case stated by Mr. Leakey,[1] in which a warrior cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice. 561 [584] [585] [586]

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be reclaimed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where lives a man of his generation he may choose in which hut belonging to his generation he will sleep. When it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to vacate it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 202) are observed. It is said that if a woman is persistently unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle. 583 561 937 [584]

On the other hand, the members of one generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of one generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women. [978]

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his eldest son is old enough, and then sends him to fetch her back. 586

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (mother's son), but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister. 935

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names. 551 [593]

Father-in-law
Mother-in-law
Son-in-law
Daughter-in-law
} Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Ol Mani. Relationship is not recognized beyond first cousin. The Masai take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Masai descent, Ol Masinei ainati, he is proud of the fact. 600

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the hyænas, except for those of Laibons or very influential old men. These are buried under cairns of stones. 764 [765]

[1] See p. 200 of this volume.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

the laibons into three categories: (1) the private practitioner, who works in a small way as a diviner and doctor among a limited circle of clients; (2) the private practitioner who has gained a wider reputation and is consulted by several districts, and includes rain-making among his activities; and (3) the senior laibons, of whom there is one to each tribal group; these all belong to the Ir-Kidogi sub-clan of the Il-Aiser clan, and the different tribal laibons were all fellow-clansmen, if not actually related. Thus, in addition to the laibons of the Kayutia at Ngong (now living among the Lotuko), the Kisonko, Il-Aikipiak, Il-Wuasin-Kishu and Isiuloi also had their own; though it is possible that the Ngong laibon had a higher standing throughout Masailand than the others. In pre-European days the functions of a head laibon were:* (1) to mention war and to provide protective medicine for those taking part in it; (2) to authorize the ceremonies connected with the age-sets and circumcision; (3) to ensure the fertility and well-being of his people; (4) to make rain. In the exercise of these duties he is both an intermediary between man and the other world, and a mystical focus for tribal activities. Many laibons also practise witchcraft (as defined above, p. 30). But the laibon is not a chief, and his authority depends on his mystical powers.

War Organization

When the warriors of a unit wanted to raid, they approached their el-oigwenani, who planned the attack and arranged for the co-operation of other companies if a big raid (el-ewore) was intended. The el-oigwenani concerned then went to the laibon to get his mention and protective war medicine. Before agreeing, however, the laibon consulted the omens to see if the circumstances were propitious; and having done so, he gave his consent, sometimes in very after getting drunk. The warriors then went to their il-pul and hunted on meat to prepare them for the raid; patrols were also sent out, and when all was ready the party set out by the shortest route to their destination. Raids were made on most of the tribes round them, and extended to the coast, the Nyika being a frequent objective. Thomson was told that a Masai patrol was once seen in Mombasa itself. On their return, the raided cattle were divided. First, a number were set aside for the laibon; then some were given to those who had distinguished themselves; the rest were divided among the warriors, who gave one or two to their lovers in the manyata, but handed the rest of their shares to their families. If there were not enough cattle to divide fairly, the warriors separated into two groups, il-ua-ruk-kiang and il-ua-do-ewupi, "the black ox" and "the red ox," and fought for the spoil. Small raids, el-ewumpa, carried out locally by one ainil, were not referred to the laibon, who received no share of the spoil.

Wars between Masai tribal groups were frequent, and formed one of the factors in the disintegration of the Kenya Masai at the end of the 19th century. In such wars, large numbers of men were collected in camps, such as Thomson saw in 1883 near Elmenteita, where two large collections of warriors (he put the number at about 3,000 on each side) were camped a short distance from each other, one camp being that of the Kayutia, the other of the Il-Aikipiak. A detachment of picked men from each side would come out and fight a pitched battle, cheered on by their women-folk, the winning side taking the cattle of the vanquished. The basis of military discipline was pride, strengthened by fear and respect of the laibon, and fear of public disapproval. The Masai also had some idea of drill and of acting in unison. Compared with meat, and in the panoply of ostrich-feather head-dress, caps, glittering spear, shield, sword, club, painted face and leg ornaments, the Masai warrior left himself more than a match for anyone.

Prisoners were not often taken, though sometimes a man would capture a woman whom he would make his wife, or a child whom he would adopt. Men were killed, women seldom. Peace was made by a formal ceremony at which warring authorities

* Fadiman, pp. 14-15.

/74 cont./

561 634 578 The principal activity of the ol nanai consists in keeping the people of his district together and preventing them from splitting up, which could be more or less disastrous for the tribe. Occasion for this is furnished by both the constant petty jealousies and friction between the warriors of the various areas, who, for example, not infrequently plan two war expeditions at the same time, instead of concentrating on one, and the short-sighted willfulness of many old men, who are inclined, in the selection of new pastoring places, to think only of the quality of the pasture, instead of also considering whether the warriors are in a position to protect the desired place from hostile attacks. An enemy's success affects not only the one who loses all his property in connection with it, but is a disgrace for the whole people. In such cases the ol nanai asserts his authority. To [561] one who does not obey him, the authority of the ol nanai is, as a rule, made clear to the others by means of a beating. Besides this 561 634 activity, the ol nanai, if necessary, acts as an intermediary between [561] the people of his district and the ol ohana, and sometimes his de- [578] cision is requested in legal disputes, but since in this case he is guided very little by legal principles, but rather by political considerations, one cannot actually designate him as a judicial personage. The conjecture that the ol nanai might have something to say in matters pertaining to the cult or might make magic amulets is obvious, but does not prove to be true.

561 791 We have seen above that every two age classes form an association. If the members of this association have all been married a long time, the ol ohana binds them even closer in that he bestows upon the two age classes, each of which — which is to be said beforehand — has its own name, a common name. This takes place at 561 791 the ol kaiki festival. For this all the men of the association gather 567 near the ol ohana and build a large kraal in the vicinity of his village. Everyone brings honey for beermaking or a head of cattle for the feast. The latter is then killed by sufferation, as at the ol galiku festival. The festival consists of the consumption of these things, whose climax is formed by the declaration of the ol ohana that those associated henceforth belong to one association (ol ohana), which only now actually exists and are to bear a common association-name.

/92 cont./

black, the youths then paint their shields. The red color may appear in the ornamental band only with the carrying of the large red emblem. They carry the black emblem and the ornamental band until they have become the equals of the warriors and are able, by their ability, to obtain the red emblem by obstinacy or force, for the warriors, of their own accord, will not let a younger age class carry these emblems. Therefore, when the youths feel strong enough, they complete their shield ornatenessn in the aforesaid way and then carry it /93/ ceremoniously for show. The warriors see it, become angry, and scold. The ai hemat, for whom the warriors have until then been persons of respect, answer saucyishly and impudently and scoff that the warriors have now become old and weak and neither need nor deserve the red emblem any longer. No one likes to be reminded of his worthlessness, and a usual issue of all concerns the reproach -- for that is what it is for the one still in the warrior association -- of incompetence in war, especially if it is hurled at him in street-urchin fashion out of the taunting mouth of a younger person. At the same time the youths build a circular barricade of branches and move in, possibly even before it is filled with hats -- a further provocation of the warriors, for with that the ai hemat declare that they too now have a right to their own warrior lenal and are no longer to be regarded as recruits, but as full-fledged soldiers. The consequence of this is that during one of the following nights the warriors attack the growing lenal in order to make the point clear to the ai hemat with force. If the latter are defeated, nothing remains for them for the time being but to scratch the red emblem from their shields again with all haste. They give vent to their anger over their defeat by scolding and by one or two small raids against Negro tribes. Sometimes the warriors then acknowledge them as equals, especially if the raids have brought rich spoils, but often too they must force their recognition as before. If this succeeds, they may now also carry the red emblem and are henceforth regarded as true warriors. They continue to build the lenal that was started and live beside the other warriors, but go to war with them. Usually, however, this situation does not last long; rather, the old warriors soon quit the service and marry. It is therefore an exception if there are two warrior lenals in one region at the same time.

[Warrior Kraal]

/87 cont./

701 554 [714] [534] fighting, large leg bells (el dualian kiwa), the tinkling of which in the latter instance serves to prevent a going astray by the individual warriors and a scattering of the troops. Where the bell sounds is a rallying point.

A special position is also occupied by the ɛ gɛmisisi a benefac-[556] tor. They are warriors who, themselves generous, also have a generous, well-to-do father. From him they often receive oxen for slaughtering and then distribute the meat among their comrades and all strangers, without distinction as to age and sex. If such a benefactor is wounded in battle or if he suffers an injury elsewhere on the march or at home, the others are concerned about him and compete with one another to help him to the best of their ability.

701 703 577 Accordingly, miserliness is sharply condemned, and a miserly warrior or one who has miserly parents is treated badly and, in case of illness or wounding on the way, is not infrequently left to lie helpless.

701 578 [554] Speaker and leader live like other warriors and are not surrounded by any special ceremonial. Off duty they are treated with respect, which is shown especially by the fact that people avoid coming too close to their girls or lightly seizing an excuse for a quarrel with them. Among the other warriors these two things almost daily lead to serious disputes and often enough to dueling, in which the opponents go after each other with sword and club, but only very rarely [683] wound each other seriously. If this should happen sometime, in a few districts the wounded one receives from the victor a fine con-
[431] sisting of livestock: in other districts, only if a bone is broken. In general immediately after the duel /88/ sometimes only after the healing of the wound, reconciliation follows, the formality of which consists of the mutual exchange of sandal thongs and sometimes also 701 578 682 the exchange of the skin cape (e mɛgɛi). The matter becomes more serious if one is killed in a duel. Then the father of the victor is then condemned to pay a larger number of cattle. If he hands them over, the affair is settled. If he refuses them, however, the friends of the man killed attack his kraal and rob him of his entire herd. But they have scarcely brought them home before the friends of the one robbed also try to rescue them again. This goes on until they have become tired of the fight, or until one party remains the victor two or more times in succession. The fight assumes greater dimensions if the two dualities belonged to different lineages or even different tribes. Then the two lineages or the two tribes make war on each other insofar as they live in one district: a conflict that is equivalent to a small civil war arises. Members of these lineages or tribes who live in a more distant district do not take part in the fight.

[Warrior kraal]

/98 cont./

Ill. 32. Dance in the warrior kraal I.

A war in which Masai stand against Masai is called el arbai (pl. el arbaiji), not en díjoo (e díjoki) as a war between Masai and foreign tribes is called.

/99/ In peacetime the warrior spends only the least time in his own kraal: for the most part he gads about on visits in neighboring ones, often several days' march away. Never may all leave the kraal together in peacetime: a guard of at least ten men always remains at home for the protection of the girls and the livestock, while the rest stop to visit at an el kul (beer meal, see p.111 above) or with other people.

[Warrior Kraal]

224 701 /91 cont./ A few intrepid warriors also leave the kraal, spear in hand, in order to attack the lion, but as a rule soon return unsuccessful.

721 If peace has lasted for a couple of months, the warriors long for war and, becoming more and more violent, express their wish to the speaker (oi aigwenani). The warriors of a few neighboring kraals have already /92/ promised their participation and have also pressed their speakers, who then all together go to the oi aunoni with whose consent the war becomes a settled matter, for the waging of which only the permission of the oi olboni is still lacking. The consultations and decisions for undertaking a war expedition, however, do not always proceed so smoothly, and they are most heated when they have for a subject the repetition of an expedition that has already ended one or several times with a defeat for the Masai. Naturally then the opinions about the success of the expedition are greatly divided, and the speakers and leaders often have great difficulty gaining a majority for the undertaking (1).

[526] 1. In an extreme case -- if, for example, the war is urgent on economic-political grounds, because the opponent threatens to become so powerful that he will be a serious danger to the Masai themselves or a competitor to them in the plundering of other tribes -- the oi aunoni or one of the speakers lets himself be carried away to secure a majority for the war by calling the vacillating ones oi kenono, that is, blacksmiths. He always achieves the desired result with this, but in the following days may leave his hut only under the protection of influential warriors, in order to avoid assaults on the part of the reviled ones.

[578]

721 726 714 If they have finally succeeded, however, the leaders of the majority make an end to further debate by invoking the en dorosi, a sort of Rütli oath. /Rütli, a meadow in Switzerland where the first league of the three cantons was formed in 1307./ Then every warrior of the kraals concerned has to put on immediately the visible sign of the

/109 cont./

861 A father reprimands his disobedient child with the words eñ gulugoni eñ gob, that is, you are like a piece of earth or dirt, or eñ dian eñ gob, dirty fellow, or os soid eñ gob, dirty stone.

578 192 Invectives and curses are:

ol meneñani (or eñ meneñani) = skeleton, as remains of a decayed corpse:

ol ag' ischobo (Eñg ai eñ sbiak, which means: may God give you the serious sickness "sbiak":

es sûti = dirt, dust, that is, if only one could sweep you out of the hut like the dirt:

ol agaescherteta = fall down:

ol agana 'Ng ai, that is, may 'Ng ai take you away:

ol agatoñóro ol assurai = may the snake bite you:

ol againassa ol ugaru = may the lion devour you:

ol agatadoijirit eñg olon = go away along with the sun:

ol agoimisso or redji = may your footprints be lost, that is, may you disappear entirely.

Bantering expressions that may sometimes be meant rudely are used by boys and youths to one another:

/110/

ol orobó ñ otonji = accumbens matri /one who lies with his mother/:

ol orobó eñg arnasche = accumbens sorori /one who lies with his sister/:

hai, eñg inobi = hi, amus (neutrius generis) /these old fogies (neutral in gender)/:

hai, ol goroon = nates /buttocks/.

The last two are used teasingly both by young girls to the warriors and the latter among themselves. Furthermore warriors insult one another with ol kiregen = accumbens uxori alienae /one who lies with another's wife/: and os sinoni = scorned by the girls, ol orobó eñg ikau éñje = accumbens filiae maximae natu /one who lies with his oldest daughter/, ol orobó 'ñg abudani = accumbens matri uxoris /one who lies with his wife's mother/. If a married man were to use toward his wife such vulgar invectives that had reference to her parents, the latter -- according to the assurances of the people -- would immediately take their daughter back and return the bride price to the man.

[593] [586]

/110 cont./

578 192 man. From young girls among themselves one hears: eñ orobó menje = accumbens patri /one who lies with her father/, eñ orobó 'l alabe = accumbens fratri /one who lies with her brother/.

Used by warriors toward young girls: hai em ballsch = you, vulva; hai, e mówo = you, clitoris.

Younger children insult one another:

hotonji eñ gomos = vagina matris;

ol agambai Eńg ai = hated by 'Ng ai;

tababuś = stumble;

ol agaischiri Eńg ai = cry to God (when you get a beating);

e mai = stupid fellow;

hai ol madai (or e madai) = you stupid fellow (stupid girl);

id' ol airirua, you are a blockhead;

id ol bua, you are a rowdy;

id' ol dillo endoi, that is, you are indeed mad. The term ol [136] dillo, which here means madman, is formed from the like-named bird, the red-headed Anaplectes melanotis, one of the many species of the weaver birds native to East Africa. If one en route hears it call- [777] ing on the steppe from the left side, it means good luck, but if it [825] calls to the right of the traveler the latter will soon encounter a misfortune.

Ol agatar' em baie, that is, die by an arrow, ol agawa ol gollug = die of fever; ol bebedo = of the upele sickness; ol minjaloi = of smallpox; eñ gobogge = of stomach or intestinal sickness; ol agataremo el gigaret = may the thorns prick you; ol agatarigi ol mairon = may your belly burst from eating; ol agairokischo = become black; ol agoibarra = rogue, brawler; g ar' ol marenge = slanderer, gossiper; ol duñgani serseri = bad fellow; ol duñgani guret = coward.

201 To express contempt one spits before the person concerned or at him.

192 593 The large number of invectives stands in contrast to a striking poverty in terms of endearment.

/111/ The mother designates her child as 'l aischa 'Ng ai = child given me by God, as eñ gutok e ńjo = mouth of the mother, or as ol oib e ńjo = resting place of the mother. The father calls it ara ńgotonji = child of the wife. Older brothers and sisters talk fondly to younger ones with the term ara e ńjo = child of mother.

/112 cont./

564 326 [192] [784] [578] because he thinks a misfortune will be conjured up by it; it is feared that a lion would get into the kraal or the camp at night or that the enemy would carry out an attack. To call someone "ol kononi" is regarded by the other Masai as a strongly insulting invective expressing contempt.

564 326 709 829 [783] The contempt toward blacksmiths is based on the view that the blacksmiths are unclean. God forbade human beings the shedding of blood. By making weapons, the chief product of the blacksmiths among primitive peoples, they induce transgression of the divine commandment, work against the latter. Hence they are condemned by God, and therefore they are regarded by their fellowmen as unclean, contemptible, bringing misfortune. Daily observation also teaches -- so the Masai say -- that God does not love blacksmiths, for a blacksmith actually never becomes prosperous; if he should happen to become wealthy, however, he would soon die, without being able to enjoy his property.

564 326 142 It should expressly be brought out here that, despite all the efforts devoted to it, I have not been able to determine the slightest somatic difference between blacksmiths and non-blacksmiths and that all non-blacksmiths questioned by me (there were several hundred) described the blacksmiths as pure, unmixed members of the Masai people, which the blacksmiths themselves also maintain without exception (2).

564 326 197 198 114 2. Obviously the Masai blacksmiths speak the Masai Language and not another one of their own, as had been supposed from the statement by C. Hollis in his book, The Masai, their language and folklore, Oxford, 1905, p. 331. Hollis says there /the quotation is in English/: "The smiths have their own language, which, although a corruption of Masai, is not understood by the ordinary Masai. Not all of /this footnote is continued on the next page in the original source/ them can speak this language: it is only a certain number of them [563] who know it." This statement by Hollis is ex-

/160 cont./

805 The months of the ol airodjerod are: 1. le logunja airodjerod, 821 also called oiẽni oiñok, that is, the tied-up bulls. As a result of the 132 rich fodder of the recent months, they have become wild; in the pasture they would be constantly fighting with one another, hence they are separated. 2. bolos (= middle) airodjerod, or also, but more rarely, called ol dãt. 3. kudjorok, that is, cold; cool weather distinguishes this month.

805 The ol amẽli starts with the month kibẽr, that is, noise and 821 strife. The pasture is sparse and as a consequence the cows give too 132 little milk to satisfy all the people. Everyone tries to appropriate 261 for himself some of the milk from the livestock of others, through 262 which strife and brawls arise. Finally the milk no longer extends [578] to necessitous satiation, and the majority of the warriors with a few cattle move into the forest for meat eating, which usually lasts not only through the entire month, but also even over the next month of ol doñgos or ol doños or ol doñgosch, since even then the milk is still very scant. The name seems to be formed from the word eh guschusch = food scarcity. Not until the beginning of the third month, of the boschogge, do they return to the kraals. From the [276] abundant meat meals they feel very strong, and the heavy use of nerve-stimulating roots has affected their nerves to a high degree, and almost daily one or another has a fit of rage (1).

1. Cf. XIX, Nerve Ailments.

805 The Masai do not count years. Rather, they designate the year after the event seeming to them the most important one that happened during it, for example, after a livestock epidemic, a drought, the death of the high chief, a war expedition especially rich in spoils, etc. (2).

[171] 2. Just as the Babylonians, even in the 3rd millennium B.C., did not count the years, but gave each year a name after an outstanding event in it, especially after the deeds of the king. One proceeded similarly

*648 Turkana raid on Masai, June, 1912.

2. A large party of Turkana raided Kune, about forty miles north of Rumuruti, in June, 1912, and carried off cattle estimated by the District Commissioner to number 158 head. One Masai elder was killed. Fifty-eight of the cattle were recovered by the District Commissioner, Turkana. A patrol which toured Turkana at the beginning of 1913 captured from them a number of cattle, and one hundred head of the captured stock was reserved as compensation for the Masai. Owing, however, to an outbreak of disease, it became necessary to sell the remainder, and eventually, at the end of 1915, Rs. 3,621 were paid to the Masai, a further Rs. 1,500 being subsequently added in compensation for loss and as blood money.

*648 579 721 Raids on Samburu, June, 1912, October, 1912.

3. In June, 1912, the Samburu of the Embarta plains were raided by a small party of Masai. On the 28th of October, the Samburu in the same place were again raided by similar people. No trace of the stolen cattle was found, though it was reported on reliable information that they had been taken into the Southern Masai Reserve.

*648 563 Forcible removal of Masai into German territory, July, 1912.

4. In July, 1912, a number of Masai Wandorobo living near the border were raided by German patrols and were forcibly removed with their stock across the border into German territory. A meeting was arranged between Herr Altmann, Imperial Secretary of Schirati District, and the District Commissioner, South Kavirondo District, when the affair was investigated on the spot where the outrage was supposed to have been committed, but with no good results.

Further enquiries were made and the assistance of the German Governor was solicited, but the evidence obtained was inconclusive, and as it was stated that the Wandorobo in question had, until shortly before the incident, lived in German territory the matter was allowed to drop.

*648 579 [921] Raids on Meru and Kikuyu in Nyeri District, August and September, 1912.

5. On August 1st, 1912, the sub-district of Siganis in the Nyeri District was raided, five men were killed and ninety head of cattle taken.

On September 5th, a trading party of Kikuyu were attacked at the Siki River on the Nyeri-Meru road. One Kikuyu youth was killed.

On September 20th and 22nd raids were attempted on Kikuyu kraals close to Nyeri.

Murder of two Kikuyu, September, 1912.

6. In September, 1912, two Kikuyu natives were murdered by the Masai near Lenana's old kraal some fifteen miles from Nairobi. Two Masai were arrested, convicted, and hung for the offence.

Friction with the Lumbwa, October, 1912.

7. In October, 1912, while the Masai move was in progress, a certain amount of friction was noticeable between the Masai and the natives from Lumbwa and Sotik and raids were reported from Ol-Orokuti and Nengumono. A patrol under Captain W. B. Brook operated in Sotik country along the Mara River to keep such raids in check.

Raids and murders towards the end of 1912.

8. Several isolated raids and murders which took place during the last few months of 1912 were traced to parties of unidentified warriors, believed to belong to the Purko and Loita divisions of the Masai who were then settled on the western boundary of the Southern Masai Reserve. Five such incidents were reported, namely:—

(1) The murder of two Lumbwa men and one woman on the south side of the Mara River close to Lemek Valley.

[921] (2) An attempted theft, on the 16th of December, of forty head of cattle from Mr. Johnson's farm, during which attempt three Lumbwa were killed.

(3) An attempted theft in Uregi, a location in the South Kavirondo District, in the course of which one native of that location was killed. One of the natives implicated in this affair was a Purko, who alleged he had been accompanied by a Loita.

[921] (4) A raid into German territory among natives known as Ngwokoni, in the course of which fifty head of cattle were stolen and a woman and child were killed.

(5) An alleged theft of ten head of cattle from natives in German territory. This was probably the work of some other tribe.

698*
579

As it proved impossible to discover the identity of the offenders in these cases, the probability of the guilt of the Muran of the Purko and Loita divisions, enhanced by their refusal to render assistance in locating the criminals, was considered sufficient to warrant the imposition of a fine under the Collective Punishments Ordinance, 1909, and the Secretary of State approved the collection of a fine of one hundred head of cattle on each village of the two sections. There were, in all, one Loita and four Purko villages,* and after the payment of compensatory blood money to the relatives of the deceased, it was decided to devote the remainder of the fine collected to the undertaking of works for the improvement of the reserve.

[628]

The imposition of this fine served largely as an object lesson to the Masai indicating that raids must cease. A military patrol then operating in the Sotik and Masai country and in the Chepalungu Forest was detained in the area with a view to ensuring the collection of the fine. Some slight trouble was caused by the younger Muran, but the full number of cattle was obtained by the end of February, 1913, and about one hundred head were disposed of as blood money. This is the first occasion on which a fine under the Collective Punishments Ordinance was imposed on the Masai.

Raid into German territory, December, 1912.

[721]

9. In December, 1912, a raid was made into German territory by some Masai, in the course of which 62 head of cattle and three donkeys belonging to a German planter named Koenig were stolen and an Arab and two Wanyamwezi were killed. Very little evidence in connection with the matter was adduced by the German Authorities, and it was not until February, 1914, that any witnesses were forthcoming who could identify the stolen stock. The Masai chiefs and elders took no steps to discover the identity of the perpetrators of the raid, and there was no direct evidence to connect any individuals with the offences committed. Fines were therefore inflicted in May, 1914, to the extent of 150 head of cattle on the Salei division; 50 head of cattle on the L'Otayok Muran; 50 head of cattle on the Kisaruni "Sirit" of the Purko Muran.

Herr Koenig was to be awarded the sum of Rs. 2,500 as compensation from the proceeds of the sale of the cattle, but the outbreak of hostilities prevented this payment and the money so reserved was devoted to the reimbursement of certain Masai for loss incurred at the hands of German natives, vide Incident No. 21. The balance of the fine was utilised in the demarcation of the reserve and in the irrigation of Narok Station.

Murders near Rumuruti, January, 1913.

10. Two porters belonging to a shooting party were murdered on the Gilgil-Rumuruti road about four miles from Rumuruti on the 1st of January, 1913, by Muran from the extended Southern Reserve who had returned to Laikipia to assist their relatives with the movement of cattle. The murderers in this case were captured and convicted, but, in order to prevent further similar outrages, steps were taken to restrict the movement of Masai from the Southern Reserve.

Iron bolts on Magadi Railway, January, 1913.

11. Complaints made by the Railway Magistrate, Magadi Railway, that on five occasions iron bolts and similar heavy pieces of metal had been placed on the rails led to suspicion falling on the neighbouring Masai who were thought to have wished to flatten the bolts for spear heads and knife blades. One slight accident was caused, and as the practice continued, two Masai villages near the Railway were removed.

Murder of Lembwa and Kavirondo, January, 1913.

12. About January, 1913, two murders were committed on different dates but in the same locality. The victims were a Lembwa and a Kavirondo respectively who were returning to their homes by a track passing through a portion of the Masai Reserve. About this time, considerable ill-feeling and mutual suspicion existed between the Masai and Lembwa tribes, more especially among the Muran, and the Masai are known to have been responsible for the murders of some six Lembwa between August and December, 1912. (Vide Incident No. 8).

No great hostility existed between the Kavirondo and the Masai, but the desire of the Muran of the latter tribe to blood their spears is so keen that they would have no scruples on that account.

[103]

* Loita village called Kimwarak. Purko villages called Ilpurai, Kimwarak, Il Moriaba and Il Kipelpurai.

*648
579

The only natives of the warrior class who lived within thirty miles of the locality where the murders were committed were the Muran of the Kisaruni "Sirit" of the Purko division and the officer-in-charge of the Masai Reserve was convinced that the outrages in question had been perpetrated by this division, that the murderers were perfectly well-known to the Masai in general and, in fact, that they openly boasted of their prowess. All attempts to identify the culprits were, however, unavailing.

A fine of 150 heifers under the Collective Punishments Ordinance was accordingly inflicted on the Muran of that "Sirit," who numbered about four hundred and fifty souls. Fifty head of cattle from the proceeds of the fine were utilized in the construction of a road from Mara Bridge to Gelegele Hill, connection being thus effected between the Mara River and Kisii Stations.

[921] Raid on the Moshi District, February, 1912.

13. Two members of the Laitokitok division were suspected of being the perpetrators of a raid on the farm of a Boer named Malan, residing on the Kagare Naiobi in the Moshi district, which was carried out on the 10th of February, 1912. Fourteen head of cattle stolen from the farm were traced into British territory near Longido but no evidence was adduced and the cattle were not identified.

Raid on Suk, February, 1912.

14. A series of thefts occurred in the neighbourhood of Laikipia towards the end of 1912 and in the early part of 1913, and an unsuccessful raid on the Suk was carried out at a place eight miles from Baringo on the 16th of February, 1913. Seven Muran took part, one of whom was killed, and although no definite evidence was forthcoming, it was thought that the culprits belonged to the Laikipia Masai Wanderobo. Arrangements were made for a military patrol to drive the bush country near Lake Hannington. (Vide Incident No. 16).

Raids on Kisumu, April, 1913.

15. In spite of police efforts to prevent such a movement, certain Masai owners of Manyattas broke back on lands adjacent to farms in the vicinity of Kisumu and Nakuru in April, 1913. In several cases such Masai were convicted, and in particular, sixteen Elders and ten Muran were fined five bullocks each for each of two offences, namely, the contravention of the Native Passes Regulations as applied to the Masai Reserve and of the Diseases of Animals Ordinance, 1906.

*648
579
921

Cattle thefts on Laikipia, April, 1913.

16. A large number of undetected cattle thefts occured on Laikipia during the first half of the year 1913, while the exodus to the Southern Reserve was in progress and at a time when the Masai were moving freely between the reserves. Details of each case are not obtainable but the following particulars have been recorded :—

On April 17th, eighty-three trade cows were stolen from near Rumuruti by a band of fifteen natives suspected of being Masai or Masai Wanderobo from a Manyatta some twenty miles north-east of Baringo. Of the four Somalis herding the cattle, two were injured.

Twenty-six cows were stolen from a herd of seventy-seven belonging to Murray Brothers which was under the supervision of the veterinary authorities at Rumuruti. In this case the raiders were said to be Masai living near Archer's Post.

Sixty-nine head of cattle were stolen in broad daylight on the 24th of April. The thieves were said to be Mazuyi Masai from near Mara, and the tracks of the stolen cattle were traced to the junction of the Northern Uaso Narok and Uaso Nyiro.

Seventy-one head of cattle were driven off from near Rumuruti when in charge of a Somali named Ali Hassan.

Three similar incidents occurred in May when one hundred and thirty-four head were lost.

Laikipia patrol, May, 1913.

In May, 1913, a patrol of the King's African Rifles, which had been operating in Marakwet country, was relieved by police and was recalled to Gilgil. Immediately on arrival, the Officer in Command, Lieutenant E. A. R. Orr, was instructed to tour the Laikipia country with the object of recovering the cattle that had been stolen—which amounted in all to some two hundred and ninety head—and of removing from the area any Wanderobo who might be found on Laikipia.

Mr. Popplewell accompanied the patrol, which left Rumuruti on June 18th, and moved west and north-west of that place. A few old and deserted kraals were found, but there was no trace of the raiders, and the patrol returned to Rumuruti on June 22nd. Information was then received of the presence of mobs of cattle forty miles west of Archer's Post, and the patrol proceeded towards the Loroghi Mountains on June 29th. Travelling by the Sugota Marmor and Lake Kisima, the patrol entered the Samburu country at the beginning of July, having found only one village of Masai, which was taken to Rumuruti for transfer to the Southern Masai Reserve. Proceeding along the Uaso Nyiro and then in a southerly direction, the patrol reached Meru without further incident on the 18th of July, and thence returned by way of the Lokiaiks Hills to Rumuruti, arriving eight days later. All cattle belonging to the Samburu living on the Uaso Nyiro, as well as those of the Mosonyat Masai, were examined without result. 648* 579 921

Sufficient information was forthcoming, however, to establish the fact that the Masai were the real perpetrators of the thefts, and that the stolen cattle had been taken to the Southern Reserve, and certain animals, identified as having been among those stolen at various times, were subsequently recovered from that reserve. The evidence was not sufficient to warrant the conviction of any individuals, but served to prove the complicity of the Il Merisho Sirit of the Purko Maasai, who withheld all information which might have incriminated the guilty parties, and offered no help in the tracing of the offenders. On this consideration, and also in view of their having made no effort to assist in the recapture of certain thieves who had escaped from custody into their country, a fine of one thousand head of cattle was, in January, 1914, imposed on that Sirit, under the Collective Punishments Ordinance. This fine had been collected in full by June, 1914, and, compensation having been paid in respect of claims for stolen stock, the remainder of the proceeds were devoted to the construction of a wagon road from Kijabe to Mara Bridge, to join up with the road in process of construction from Mara to Kisii.

17. In June and July, 1912, His Excellency, Sir Henry Belfield, made an extended tour through the western half of the Masai Reserve, accompanied by the Provincial Commissioner, Naivasha, the Game Warden and Dr. J. Owen-Prichard. Starting from Nairobi on June 27th, he held a meeting at Ngong on June 28th, when local affairs were discussed with the Laibon, Seggi, and the principal local Elders. Leaving Ngong on June 29th, His Excellency travelled via Kolong to the Uaso Nyiro, which he crossed at Van de Weyer's Drift, and thence southward to the Narosura. He left that camp on July 8th, entered the Loita Plains at Engare Ento, and proceeded northwards to select a site for the administrative centre of the reserve. (Vide Incident No. 20). From Narok he moved west across the northern portion of the Loita Plains, and reached Kaitong on July 24th. There he met Mr. G. K. Watts, who was carrying out a scheme of water conservation in the Lemek Valley, and on the next day he proceeded to the Mara River Post. On July 30th, he held a meeting at Mara Bridge with the Masai chiefs from the western part of the reserve, among whom was Legalishu. The "Masai Case" was at that time before the Courts and Legalishu proved somewhat truculent, but he appeared to have only a small following among the other chiefs in his attitude of passive resistance. Leaving the Mara River, Sir Henry Belfield skirted the southern edge of the Chepalungu Forest, and reached the boundary of the reserve at Gelegele on August 1st. Sir Henry Belfield's tour in the reserve, June-July, 1912. 648*

18. In the course of his meeting with the Masai Elders at Ngong, on the 28th of June, the Governor was approached with a request that a cattle dip might be provided at that place for the use of the Masai cattle. His Excellency replied that he was disposed to approve the construction of such a dip, but he made it clear to the Masai that, although the Government was prepared to bear the cost of certain works of improvement in order to render the reserve suitable to their needs, they were not to expect that such work would always be carried out free of cost to the people. The cattle dip, constructed in response to this request, was opened at Ngong in April, 1914, by the Chief Veterinary Officer, who explained the process to Seggi, Ngatoya and a number of Masai who were present. One hundred and fifty cattle were dipped that day. The construction of the dip, Cattle dip at Ngong. 648* 231

648*

German territory. Investigations were instituted by the District Commissioners of Voi and Moschi and these officers agreed that the stock taken on each side should be returned with the exception of a number of cattle belonging to the Wachagga which were to be retained as blood money. Representations were made to the German Government who took steps to punish the raiders.

Delimitation of the Anglo-German boundary.

23. As a result of the affair described in Incident No. 22, the German Governor suggested, in May, 1914, that the Anglo-German boundary should be more clearly defined from the Usseri-Gazeni District to Lake Chala. The matter was discussed by Mr. Hobley with Herr Lorr, the Imperial German District Commissioner of Moschi, at Taveta in that month, and these two officers proceeded along the border visiting the salt-licks which had been the source of the dispute. An arrangement was reached whereby the Warombo, a German tribe, would be permitted to use under supervision, a salt-lick situated half a mile within British territory, on one day in each month. It was also decided that the unmarked stretch of fifteen miles from Lake Chala to the source of the Rombo River should be defined by prominent marks.

Captain Kraut, a German surveyor, visited Lake Natron towards the end of July and was there met by Mr. Hemsted. These officers decided that the best method of defining the boundary between beacons 18 and 23 would be by means of a trench and by the erection of additional beacons at prominent points. The German Government agreed to undertake the work between beacons 18 and 27, but the outbreak of war prevented the performance of this undertaking.

Raid on Athi River store, February, 1914.

24. On the night of the 13th of February, 1914, a raid took place on an Indian store at the Athi River. One Indian was killed, his son and an Indian signalman were seriously wounded, and another young Indian received a slight wound. This raid was at first thought to be the work of four Masai. Mr. Beech, the Acting District Commissioner, Ngong, proceeded to investigate, in company with the Regent, Ngenya and examined without satisfactory result all the young men of the Kapatei division who occupy the neighbouring district. Finally the Regent imposed a fine of seventy head of cattle on this division which would be returned if the culprits were handed in. No further evidence was forthcoming, and as it could not be proved that this division was in any way concerned with the raid the cattle were returned to their owners in April, 1914.

Additional police posts in Gilgil area, April, 1914.

[579]

25. In April, 1914, an application was received from farmers living near Gilgil that their boys and servants might be permitted to carry firearms. Their request was based on the frequency of raids on their farms by the Masai and other tribes and they cited five instances in the previous three years in which cattle had been stolen and the thieves undetected. The Government was unable to accede to their request but an additional police post was established among the northern Gilgil farms.

Raid on a Masai farm, April, 1914.

[579]

26. Five Murran of the L'Otayok division living in the Kesemperaba Hills successfully raided a German farm near Moschi in April, 1914. They were fired on by the owner, leaving one dead, and were subsequently apprehended with their property.

Permission to kill game, August, 1914.

27. In August, 1914, the Governor approved a recommendation made by the Officer-in-Charge that the Masai Wanderobo and other natives in the reserve who were accustomed to live by hunting, might be permitted to kill zebra, hartebeest and wildebeest provided that no hunting took place within the Game Reserve. Conditions were imposed that the Wanderobo should not be allowed to sell the skins or trophies of any of these animals, and they were forbidden to kill any other more valuable species, particularly rhinoceros.

Tendency to move northwards, August and September, 1914.

[146]

28. A tendency on the part of the Masai to drift northwards was noticed in August, 1914, and a detachment under Mr. Hodge was despatched in September to patrol the farm borders from Naivasha towards Njoro with a view to causing all Masai found out of their reserve to be returned thereto.

Grazing concessions to the Masai, September, 1914.

29. On the outbreak of hostilities a military camp was established at Kajiado on the Magadi Railway, and in order that they might not impede active operations the Masai were instructed to move all their cattle from the grazing grounds lying within five miles on either side of the Kajiado-Longido road, and thus make way for the military transport animals. The Masai had taken no steps to comply with these instructions by the middle of January and the Officer-in-Charge of the Transport asked that they might be enforced. The rendering of this large area unavailable for the Masai occurred inopportunely as, owing to the fact that the long rains of 1914 had terminated unusually early while the small rains had failed completely, a serious drought took place during the early part of 1915, and the grazing throughout the reserve became inadequate. Application was accordingly made for permission for the Masai to graze their herds on alienated farms near the railway, on the Kenani Fibre Estates, by payment of rent and on certain Crown lands. This permission was granted in March, 1915, and the Masai were also allowed access to an area on the Mau Narok as well as to the Kedong River by arrangement with the Manager of the Kedong Valley Syndicate. These concessions remained in force until Feb[illegible]916, when the grazing in the reserve was considered sufficient to support t[illegible] herds.

*648

*648 579 721

Raid into German territory.

20. The Laitokitok Masai [illegible] whom were armed with rifles, made a raid into German territory d[illegible] when their country was in the occupation of the military forces and ar[illegible] to have looted a number of cattle some of which were the property of certain Greeks. It is possible that the raid may have been carried out as a retaliatory measure for the raid made on them by the Germans and Wachagga. (Vide Incident No. 22.)

Raid into German territory, February, 1915.

21. In February, 1915, a party of five Moran of whom three were from German and two of the L'Odo Kilani division from British territory, raided a cattle boma belonging to a German planter at Ngotiek on the Ongongo L'oal Tatua. Fifty-five head of cattle were captured and it is believed that one German and several natives were killed. The cattle were taken to the head Moran of the L'Odo Kilani division who delivered them over to the Government. They were eventually confiscated and the proceeds of sale were credited to Miscellaneous Revenue.

Raid on the Ngorongoro, April, 1915.

22. Early in April, 1915, some two hundred Moran of the Polyani section of the Purko Moran crossed the border on a raiding expedition against the Ngorongoro of German East Africa. They succeeded in capturing about one hundred head of cattle, but lost eighteen killed and fifteen wounded at the hands of two German askaris. Though all Masai Moran had been constantly warned against making raids on their own account, and though it had been explained to them that the Germans would probably retaliate, it appears that the prospect of military glory and of looting cattle was irresistible. In this case the offence of these Moran was aggravated by their adoption of a most hostile attitude towards the individual who reported the raid, and it was the firm opinion of Legalishu and Mashonali that a caution would not be sufficient deterrent from similar action in future. A fine of 100 bullocks was accordingly imposed upon the Polyani section this being estimated to represent approximately the value of the cattle looted.

*648 German raid south of Lake Magadi, June, 1915.

23. About the beginning of June, 1915, the Germans carried out a raid on the Masai residing near Ol Shombole and the German boundary south of Lake Magadi. Nine mounted Europeans took part guided by an Arusha native; two Masai kraals were attacked and about five hundred head of cattle were taken. An attempt was made by the Moran to recover the cattle, but this resulted in four Masai being killed and two wounded. It is possible that this raid may have been undertaken in retaliation for raids by the British Masai into German territory. The counter-raid which was organised by the Masai forms the subject of Incident No. 46.

Proposed water conveyance along the Magadi Railway.

24. As a result of the German raid described in Incident No. 23, the Masai living in the vicinity of Ol Shombole, who were mostly of the Salei division, moved northwards towards the Magadi Railway and it became necessary to make arrangements for the provision of an adequate supply of water for them. A few Masai camped near Lake Magadi and obtained water from the Magadi Soda Company for which they paid five rupees daily. Mr. E. D. Browne, the Political Officer at Kajiado, approached the Company with a view to the provision of water troughs at suitable points along the Magadi Water Supply Line from the Ngong Hills, and in September the erection of certain water troughs was sanctioned, the work to be undertaken by the Company. An agreement was signed on November 3rd, 1915, providing for the erection of four troughs at various points of the Magadi Railway at which the Masai were to be allowed to water their herds on payment of five rupees per thousand head per day. By December nothing had been done and the country became very dry; by January the short rains having failed, the water supply was regarded as insufficient to support the maintenance of troughs and the work was held over.

C48*

33. Early in June, 1918, a determined attempt was made by some of the Purko Maasai to return to Laikipia with their stock in defiance of Government orders. Mr. Hemsted threatened to take active measures to stop the movement if persisted in, and with the help of Legpolion, Mankooli and some of the principal Maasai, he persuaded them to abandon their intention before they had arrived within thirty miles of the boundary.

Attempt to return to Laikipia, June, 1918.

Rumours to the effect that such a movement was projected reached Naivasha on June 17th, and steps were immediately taken to garrison the railway line. A double company of 3rd Kashmiri Rifles was despatched to Gilgil on June 21st, and Mr. E. D. Browne accompanied them as Political Officer. As no renewed attempt appeared probable, orders for the return of these troops were given on the 1st of July.

34. In July, 1918, the Purko Maasai of the Il Meirishi, L'Aimer, Kisuwai and Mojonli sections and some Maasai of the Kaboyokye division made an invasion into German East Africa and captured from seven hundred to one thousand head of cattle and a number of sheep from the neighbouring tribes. They lost about 120 men killed.

Raid into German East Africa, July, 1918.

C48* 5/8 [B21]

This raid was undertaken as a reprisal for a raid made by a German party in the previous month in the course of which some 800 head of cattle were looted and six Maasai of the Dorasi division killed.

Some of the Purko and Loita Maasai were called in by the Intelligence Officer-in-Charge of that part of the border with the object of recovering the cattle raided by the enemy. These were joined by the rest of the Purko and some of the Kaboyokye. They entered German territory with the ostensible purpose of recovering their stock but actually to raid when favourable opportunities offered. In view of the provocation received, His Excellency decided that no action should be taken against the Maasai concerned.

35. In August, 1918, some Masai Maasai who were searching the country in the neighbourhood of the Lemie Kwanyamai in an endeavour to trace the origin of some Germans recently found near Salali, attacked the Uregi location of the South Kavirondo district. One Masai was killed.

Attack on Uregi location, 1918.

36. In September, 1918, a party of about two hundred mounted men including fifty Kamayanis crossed the border from German East Africa near Lemiogio and proceeded northwards as far as Naivasha. They remained in the Loita country for a week and then returned towards Kamayani. They committed no acts of aggression and it would appear that the object of their visit was a political one.

Raiders, September, 1918.

37. In December, 1918, a party of Germans with a large number of native levies raided the villages of Ole Pusu (Purko) and Ole Lemiogio (Dorasi) near Il Kaje Tabak. They killed three Masai and wounded one, and captured about 4,000 sheep and 800 head of cattle. On their return from the raid they fell in with Mr. Hemsted's safari and captured most of his boys, killing a tribal retainer. They were fired upon and retired hastily abandoning about half the stock they had captured.

Raiders, December, 1918.

40. Towards the end of 1918, four Kaboyokye and three Kaputiei Masai, armed with rifles conducted a raid against German natives and looted some 800 head of cattle. The culprits were tried at Ngong in January, 1921, and a fine of Rs. 172,000 was imposed upon them under the Stock and Produce Theft Ordinance, but the case was quashed by the High Court.

Raid into German East Africa.

*C48 Grazing arrangements, December, 1916.

41. In December, 1916, the Masai reported that their grazing in the reserve between Magadi Junction and Ulu Station was finished and that their cattle were dying from want of grass. The areas round Kiu and Kajiado were required for military purposes and permission was accordingly given to the Masai to graze their cattle across the Uganda Railway between these two stations on unoccupied Government ground on condition that the cattle watered and fed in the reserve.

*C48 Raid by Nyaranga and the Kisumu Authorities, January, 1916.

42. In January, 1916, the Kakwenkyen Murran of the Il Mojanji "Siria," some of whom are said to have carried rifles, without provocation, crossed the Anglo-German border with the object of raiding the Nyaranga natives of German East Africa living to the north of the Mara River. They killed about fourteen of the Nyaranga, mostly women and children, and captured a considerable quantity of livestock. The Nyaranga had previously been of great assistance to Intelligence Officers posted to the Eastern Lake Area and this raid had a bad effect on their attitude towards the British. The Officer-in-Charge reported this matter to the Governor and recommended a fine of not less than 2,000 head of cattle for the reasons that the Murran had been repeatedly warned against taking such action on their own account, and that the section in question had always been troublesome and was practically the only one that had failed to give any assistance in guarding the border. As the Masai Reserve was at that time a military area the facts of the case were reported to the military authorities who approved the imposition of a fine of 2,000 head of cattle with a further 1,000 head if a number of rifles which had been handed to members of the tribe by an Intelligence Officer were not returned by the end of February. The Governor subsequently discussed the matter with the military authorities, and the fine was reduced to 1,000 head of cattle plus 500 head in respect of the rifles which had not been returned within the specified time. An attempt to collect the fine was only successful in obtaining payment of a small portion, and by June 15th some 600 cattle and 200 sheep had been brought in. The fine had been paid in full before the end of 1916, and it was decided that compensation to the extent of 600 head of cattle and 600 sheep should be paid to the Nyaranga on account of the damage they had suffered. All the rifles were eventually returned and the cattle seized in respect thereof were handed back to their owners. The proceeds of the fine in this case were credited to Masai funds.

*C48 Wireless Rest Camp at the Kisumu Station, 1916.

43. In January, 1916, a telegraph line was erected by the military authorities between Narok and Shirwanda station to assist in the rapid transmission of intelligence reports. In June, 1917, the military authorities having expressed their desire to remove the line, the Governor-in-Council decided that it should be maintained as far as possible as a civil line by the Officer-in-Charge of the Reserve.

Fine imposed on Kipkoret Rest Camp, January, 1916.

44. In January, 1916, the Kipkoret Kwan were fined three hundred bullocks by the military authorities for failing to report the presence of an enemy bombing party near their village.

Application for a collective fine on the Ilchamus Division, March, 1916, but fine not imposed.

45. In March, 1916, a recommendation was made that a fine should be levied under the Collective Punishments Ordinance on the members of the I.Chamus division on the grounds that they had harboured a criminal. No fine was imposed owing to the lack of definite evidence.

*C48 Raid on Sabei Division, Early, 1916.

46. Early in 1916 a joint raid instigated by the Sabei division was carried out against the Sabei Poro in German East Africa by Murran from the Siginoi, Sabei, Il Dalo Lekurak and Kamparo divisions. Some ninety-nine of the Murran were armed with rifles and in the course of the raid thirteen were killed and eighteen wounded. This raid was instigated partly as a reprisal for the German raid described in Incident No. 35, the cattle taken on that raid being supposed to be at Sabei Poro. Between three hundred and three hundred and fifty head of cattle were recovered. The Officer-in-Charge applied for a fine to be imposed on these divisions to the extent of Rs. 20,000, but the Governor-in-Council ruled that, in view of the great punishment suffered by these divisions no action should be taken until their claims (otherwise) had been adjusted.

Expedition to Sabei Division, May, 1916.

47. In April and May, 1916, about two hundred Masai, of the Sabei division, moved from the Sotta of [illegible] German social disturbance, in the neighbourhood of Longonot, in German E[illegible] and took up their residence in Loita country under the eaves of the machine-room floodes, with their stock, numbering some 2,000 head of cattle, and ten to twelve thousand sheep. These Masai were subsequently found to be in the possession of seven rifles, the property of Herr Schlichtegroll, which were recovered and destroyed by the Assistant District Commissioner, Narok.

Cattle stolen by the Masai from the Kikuyu.

48. In June, 1918, a series of eleven cattle thefts from the Kikuyu were reported as having taken place, presumably by Masai, between June, 1918, and April, 1919. In three of these instances, the persons implicated were arrested and convicted, but, in the majority, the looted stock was traced to the Masai Reserve and not recovered. Sixty-nine head of cattle had been taken altogether, but only six head had been returned, and the Provincial Commissioner of the Ukamba Province considered that compensation should be paid to the Kikuyu in consideration of their losses. As the information regarding these alleged thefts was too scanty to admit of any fine being imposed on the Masai without further investigation, Mr. Hobley was instructed to hold an enquiry into the circumstances of each case. As a result of his investigations, he considered the case against the Masai to be strong enough to warrant the imposition of a fine under the Collective Punishments Ordinance, and in this opinion the Attorney-General concurred, adding that, in view of the large number of stock stolen from the Kikuyu, the fine might be of an exemplary character. He suggested that the amount and the incidence of the fine might be decided after consultation with the Officer-in-Charge.

Mr. Hemsted, however, thought that insufficient evidence had been forthcoming to prove the complicity of the Masai tribe as a whole, and recommended that a fine of Rs. 1,000 be imposed on the village of Kitheuka, and of Rs. [illegible] on the village of Lokorio, to which villages, situated in the Kedong Valley, stolen cattle had actually been traced. He also suggested that the proceeds should be distributed to the Kikuyu in compensation for lost cattle. This course received the support and approval of the Governor-in-Council on the 11th of September, 1919.

Murder on the road, July, 1919.

49. Two persons were killed on a road between Kisii and the Masai Reserve, in July, 1919, and some cattle were stolen. An application for the imposition of a collective fine on the Kisumai "Siele" of the Purko Masai, based on the ground that these Masai were the only warriors near the scene of the outrage, was disallowed on account of the fact that the road in question was much frequented, and that there was nothing to show that any members of the Masai tribe were responsible for the murders.

Murders by Wandorobo.

50. In September, 1919, it was ascertained that the Wandorobo had committed a number of stock thefts in the Naivasha district, after the Intelligence Officers had left the border. Several Wandorobo were killed in an attempted raid. The Wandorobo concerned were arrested and punished by the District Commissioner, Naivasha.

Murder of two Indian traders, Nov. 1919.

51. On the 19th of November, 1919, two Indian traders, travelling on the main road some seven miles from Narok, found two bodies of Kikuyu natives lying near the road. These Kikuyu had been murdered and were quite dead when found. They had several wounds on their persons, evidently inflicted by spears and knives. One of the murdered Kikuyu was recognized immediately as the servant of an Indian trader, at Narok, and both had been carrying loads when they met their death. Investigations were immediately instituted by the District Commissioner, Narok, but nothing definite was discovered. In February, 1917, evidence was brought against two Masai, who had been wandering in the vicinity at the time of the crime, but this was insufficient to justify further proceedings being taken against them.

At the end of April, the headmen of the Masai living in the neighbourhood were called on to explain what steps they had taken to find the murderers. The name of the murder was greatly suspected by the Masai of the three Purko "Siele," namely Kimonol, L'Aiser and Sajeali, and, as no evidence was brought by any members of these "Siele," supporting the murders, the District Commissioner recommended the imposition of a fine under the Collective Punishments Ordinance on all these companies.

The matter was discussed in Executive Council on the 21st of June, 1917, when Mr. Hemsted, who was present, stated that there could be no doubt that the members of these "Moles" were well aware of the identity of the murderers and were deliberately shielding them from justice. Several murders of Kikuyu had recently occurred in or near the Masai Reserve, and an exemplary punishment was considered necessary. A fine of Rs. 20,000 was accordingly imposed on each of the three "Moles," the total fine amounting to Rs. 60,000. The Secretary of State conveyed his sanction by despatch, on the 23rd of August, 1917. Three seventeen hundred head of cattle were seized in August as security for the payment of the fine, but, by October, no portion of the fine had been paid in cash. Instructions were, therefore, issued for the fine to be recovered by distress, by the sale of the cattle to realize the amount of the fine imposed. This sale was postponed owing to an outbreak of lung-disease among the herds.

Permission to shoot Masai, October, 1918.

46. Owing to complaints by the Masai of the damage done to their stock by lions, and on account of several incidents where natives had been killed by these beasts, permission was granted in December, 1918, to District Officers working in the Masai Reserve, to shoot lions in the Northern Game Reserve, in cases where there was good reason to believe that the animals were dangerous.

Raid of the Kakamega Section of Masai, Kikuyu, October, 1918.

47. Owing to the constant trespassing by the Kakamega Masai on the farms in the Kedong Valley, that division was moved in December, 1918, and was located in the vicinity of the Ngong Hills, an area which had, for many years past, been practically unused.

[931]

As the Kakamega cattle were highly susceptible to East Coast fever, it became necessary to erect a cattle dip for them, the dip always in existence at Ngong being insufficient for their requirements. The site selected for the new cattle dip was near the Kiambu Forest, ten miles south of Ngong, and the construction was approved on the 8th of January, 1917.

Murders near Kiambu, March, 1917.

48. In March, 1917, a young man and three boys were brutally murdered within a short distance of the Masai border, near Dagoretti. The circumstances of the crime pointed strongly to the fact that the Masai were here here the offenders, but there was no evidence of their complicity and no punishment was inflicted.

Murder of Kikuyu near Kiambu, May, 1917.

49. In May, 1917, some Kikuyu were attacked while grazing their cattle in their reserve within one mile of the Masai boundary, and two boys were killed with spears. A witness, who saw the whole incident, escaped with his life, and subsequently gave evidence to the effect that the murderers were a band of Masai. In the judicial proceedings which ensued, the absence of any motive for such a deed on the part of the neighbouring Kikuyu was clearly established, while a motive was present in regard to the position of the Masai tribe, as it was by native custom necessary in certain circumstances for such people to have blooded their spears before admission to the herdmanship Ol-Oiboni ceremony. It proved impossible to trace any of the individual criminals, but it was considered that sufficient grounds existed for holding five divisions of the Masai tribe, resident in the neighbourhood, responsible for the outrage. The perpetration of a number of murders of the same nature and in the same area a short time previous to this crime, in no one of which had sufficient evidence been obtainable to warrant the imposition of a collective punishment, influenced the Governor in determining the severity of the penalty to be inflicted in this case and, as it appeared that the belief was growing among the Masai that they would escape punishment for such deeds if they were performed outside the limits of their own reserve, he determined to make the punishment an exemplary one, and a fine of Rs. 20,000 was imposed under the Collective Punishment Ordinance on each of the Masai divisions implicated, namely, the Kaputiei, L'Oiti L'Kisii, Matapato, Kaputei and L'Oiti L'Kisii divisions. It was decided that, from the proceeds of the fine, Masai money should be paid to the relatives of the two Kikuyu victims.

Masai raids on Kikuyu, Kisii, Kipsigis, Nandi, June, 1918.

50. Early in June, 1918, alarm was reported among the Masai of the Pokot and Lake tribes. On the evening of June 2nd, the Pokot commenced operations for an attack on the Lake, and the District Commissioner, Baringo, who followed

When the whole of one age has been circumcised, and the enkipore ceremony performed, the members of the completed age feel it is about time to claim some privileges from the prior age. Whether the age immediately above is of the same or a different generation does not appear to affect the rule that these privileges are only granted when the senior age begins to doubt its capacity to retain them by force. The chief privileges are (a) the marking on the shield known as sarat enpiki (most important), (b) the spear handle of black wood called enjata narok, and (c) the right to hold a dance without seeking permission from the senior moran. [57]

No formal demand is made. The juniors will assume one of the privileges, and when met by a band of seniors will be promptly beaten up and retreat. This process continues till wounds become frequent in these affrays. When the seniors feel that they are on the point of losing their ascendancy they gradually hand over these privileges to the juniors, who may then proceed to the Uasin ceremony. [58]

In the first few years subsequent to circumcision, the new moran have been kept in a position of subjection by the moran of the preceding age or generation. But these latter have now handed over the marks of seniority and entered into elderhood through the eghwer ceremony. What does this change of status mean to the moran concerned?

Fundamentally it means that having shown their worth in the fights for the coveted insignia, the junior moran are now deemed capable of guarding the country. Their seniors can retire to the more peaceful occupations of marriage and animal husbandry, in the knowledge that their juniors are worthy successors. But their period of junior service has done more than make them efficient warriors; it has moulded them in ways which are to-day more important than the purely military aspect. Both as individuals and as a group they have been taught respect for authority. If as individuals they are found associating with the moran girls who are the perquisite of the seniors, they are beaten; if as individuals they quarrel with a member of the senior grade, the wrath of the whole of that age falls upon them. An example of this is the case of a Moruko of Kihaya who at Kihaya quarrelled with a Kisele of Mukeni. The Kihaya Kisele promptly gave the Moruko a good beating. A few days later, having got news of the quarrel, a party of Mukeni Kisele appeared on the scene to beat the Moruko. But having heard that the Kihaya Kisele had done the job for them they went home forthwith. [59]

The ceremony of promotion from junior to senior warriorhood, called eunoto, is probably the best known and most concentrated ceremony in the Masai age grade system. Hollis, Merker and Storm Fox all regard it as the step between warriorhood and elderhood, and only Leakey and Hemsted (the latter somewhat vaguely) regard it as a ceremony of promotion. [60]

It is performed by sections or groups of sections. The Kisonko traditionally perform the ceremony at Magadal near Mosa, i.e. on the eastern slopes of Mondul mountain, actually in the Arusha district. As many as possible of the age attend, but by no means all. The Arusha tribe

/[illegible]/

[illegible] [illegible] In shares as equal as possible; one warrior receives as much as the other, but believe that a few head of cattle are distributed as a special reward and first to those warriors who killed as many in battle, then to the bowlarmen (if possible), then to the one who captured the first head of cattle and to the spear who were slowed (or significantly) and finally to the wounded, each of whom is entitled to the head of cattle that he marked with the blood gushing out of the wound. The number of cattle that the individual of the now mentioned receives, except for the last who is entitled to only one head of cattle, is determined by the size of the booty and the proportion of the size of the booty's parts according to the above order of succession. /[illegible]/ Every warrior strives as quickly as possible to drive off from the others his share of the booty, but each one also tries to take along with it one or more head not belonging to him. This, of course, gives rise to another brawl, in which there are almost always several wounded men. [illegible] [illegible] If the booty is too small for an equal division, the warriors form two parties, on the one side the Ki ambiljau, on the other the 'i ainu and Ki mulgana. The former have an slaughtering cry the term pin mulgi = the red cattle, the latter the term ainu gauji = the black cattle, after which they are also sometimes named (for example, I heard it in magi). A fight decides which one of the two parties receives the entire booty.

[illegible] [illegible] At home in the lowals it was very quiet during the warriors' absence. After the farewell, those remaining behind went home, each somewhat heavy-hearted in the anxiety about a son or lover, which, however, was soon more or less pushed into the background by the expectation of the spoils that they would bring back. Soon after the farewell the old man was again squatting in quiet contemplation in front of his hut and chasing away from his face and head, also as before, with a fly switch (of [illegible] of [illegible]) (Fig. [illegible]) consisting of a goat's tail, the fine constituting a veritable plague in the lower lowals. Then he took a hair from the switch and made a knot in it for each of his sons who had gone to war.

Fig. [illegible]

/711 cont./

671 Unknown in penal law are an aggravated death penalty, for example, death by fire, the principle of an eye for an eye, the view that the perpetrator must pay with the body part with which he has sinned, as well as symbolism, imprisonment, enslavement, a public monetary fine besides the compulsion, public monetary fines in general, a right of pardon.

683 There still remains to be pointed out one penal decree, which, 679 however, exists only for warriors. That the calling and way of life of the warriors, who are impowered primarily by brute strength and force, are not suitable for preventing rowdiness is obvious and is shown by the frequent, more or less rough brawls among them. Insofar as they seem useful for promoting personal courage, they are not punished; for those connected with bodily injury what was said above applies. For the brawl a stick or a club is used as a weapon and the shield for display. In order to force the opponent to leave himself open, one directs a blow on the left lower arm holding the shield, and, to be sure, not infrequently so violently that it fractured. Now, if a warrior has already inflicted broken bones on the opponent several times, especially in the manner just described, all the warriors, under the leadership of their ol ajewenani, gather together and announce to him that he will be outlawed if he once more /712/ engages in a brawl; if the one warned violates this prohibition, every warrior of the kraal is justified in killing him.

672 The legal proceedings are the same in civil and penal cases; 673 in both there is only one court for the people of a district. For the 674 warriors this is the speaker (ol ajewenani) for the older married men 675 an elder, respected, i.e., wealthy, man chosen each time by the 676 persons concerned to settle the particular case presented. In con- 677 troversial matters between warriors of different kraals or, which is usually the same thing, of different areas, the speakers concerned jointly resolve and decide, either alone or, if they do not reach a definite decision, with the advice of an ol aunoi, whose voice is then decisive. In disputes among married men of different areas a mixed council of elders decides. The ol alkani may be regarded as a court of review, who, however, is called upon only in those 672 cases which concern the commonwealth. There are civil proceedings is a man of wealth and importance he may be elected chief[1], in which case he is responsible for the discipline of the warriors and their appearance when summoned to fight, though he does not go to the wars himself. As with most East African tribes an elder's ideal of existence seems to be ease, not unmixed with drunkenness. Proverb No. 64 (p. 149), 'Don't lie with your feet against a post like the father of many sons,' meaning 'Don't give yourself airs,' is a vivid picture of the Masai pater familias taking his ease in the primitive posture of lying on his back with his feet against a post, while his family do all the work for him.

1:Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Masai women, unlike the men, are carefully dressed in leather garments, but a rare, and according to our ideas most unbecoming, custom forces them to shave their heads. Before marriage they are circumcised, and signalize their change of state by wearing large circular earrings and necklaces of brass and iron wire. Both girls and women have their legs and arms encased in iron ornaments, so that they can sometimes hardly walk.

This military organization of the Masai made them a most effective body for destructive military operations, and explains not only the predominant position which they acquired in East Africa, but also the respect which they inspired and the extent to which their customs were imitated by other tribes. On the other hand, it probably also is the reason why they never founded any state or polity analogous to the kingdoms of Uganda and Unyoro. The centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship and desirous only of military glory. Retirement from this band of warriors as a chief was honourable, but seems to have been recognized as a removal to an inferior sphere of activity. The chiefs arranged the details of the raids which the warriors wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight.

The nearest approach to a central and superior authority among the Masai is the medicine man or Laibon (more correctly Ol-oiboni; see p. 214, fn.). They all belong to the Kidongi family of the Aiser clan, and are said to be descended from a personage called Ol-le-Mwiya, who came down from heaven and was found by the Aiser sitting on the way of Mount Ol-gonjo. While [illegible] the genealogy having been preserved. The influence of the

[1] The chief is elected from the warriors, but leaves their ranks at [illegible] becomes an elder.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL.12 Masai FL.12

83 ewuthanet (e-ongiri) a girl of the same sub-class as himself, or one who is more nearly related to him than third cousin, and only then if the terms of address used are ol-le'ittoo and ong-'ittoo; and no traveller may cohabit with the wife of a member of his own age-grade if that man is married to one of his near relatives, or to a daughter of his sub-class.[1]

531 583 837 The payment of the bridal price authorises a Masai to reckon the children which his wives bear as his own; it further gives him a full measure of control over both his wives and children, and they do all the household work and tend and look after his herds and flocks. But though individual marriage is recognised, [934 895] sexual communion or something very like it prevails between all the men of one age-grade and the women of the corresponding age-grade, subject to the rules of exogamy and relationship, which forbid a man to marry or have sexual intercourse with a woman of his own class or with a near relative. In other words the Masai may be said to live in a state of group marriage, based on the organisation of the whole community in age-grades, and restricted by the exogamy of the sub-class and the rules regarding incest.

684 If a man is knowingly guilty of incest, or has sexual intercourse with a daughter of his own sub-class, he is punished by his relatives, who flog him and slaughter some of his cattle. If he fornicates or commits adultery with a daughter of a member of his own age-grade, he is punished by the members of his age-grade. His kraal is destroyed, he is severely beaten, and a number of his cows are lengthened. If a warrior or boy commits adultery with a wife of a man belonging to his father's age-grade, he is solemnly cursed by the members of that age-grade. Unless he pays the elders two cows, one for them to eat and the other to enable them to buy honey wine, and prays them to remove the curse, it is supposed he will die.

835 684 If a man unintentionally commits incest—and it is quite conceivable that a man might not know his fourth or fifth cousin, for instance, should the two live in different districts—he has to present a cow to the girl's relations in order to "kill the relationship" (e-or ong-ongiri).

813 633 [896] A man must abstain from having sexual intercourse with his wife as soon as she becomes pregnant, and he may not again have connection with her until the child cuts the two middle lower teeth of its upper and lower jaws. Should this rule be broken it is believed that the child will never be strong. In the event of

682 684 a man having intercourse with a pregnant woman, and thereby causing her to abort, he must submit to a punishment which is called el-kidowuto. All the women of the neighbourhood collect together and, having stripped, seize the guilty

833 person and flog him, after which they slaughter as many of his cattle as they can, smearing and suffocating the animals with their garments.

634 Other occasions when the sexes may not have sexual intercourse are when

[1] For the rules regarding hospitality see The Masai, p. 307. An age-grade meeting of all those men who are descended at one of the four festivals held during every 7½ years. See The Masai, p. 302.

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL.12 Masai FL.12
Kisonko

233
592

Cattle per Gate.

Number of cattle.		Gates.		Percentage.
Under 50	—	52	—	10.1%
50 — 100	—	92	—	17.9%
101 — 200	—	193	—	37.5%
201 — 300	—	115	—	22.4%
301 — 400	—	34	—	6.6%
401 — 500	—	11	—	2.1%
501 — 600	—	9	—	1.7%
601 — 700	—	3
701 — 800	—	2
801 — 900	—	1	—	1.9%
901 —1000	—	1
Over 1000	—	1
		Total 514

As 156,508 cattle were owned by these 514 gates it follows that the average number per gate is just over three hundred, but this figure is misleading, for two-thirds of the gates possess less than two hundred head.*

531
606

The advantages of marriage not only include the acquisition of a woman to bear one's children and to tend one's cattle. For marriage sets up a new relationship with one's wife's family, whereby each party is expected to help the other. If a father-in-law loses his cattle by drought or disease, the son-in-law is expected to contribute towards a new herd; if a son-in-law strikes hard times, the father-in-law — if only for the sake of his daughter — will transfer cattle to him.

At times, also, a daughter will, by amicable arrangement with the son-in-law, return to live with her father for considerable periods, being visited from time to time by her husband, or again a grandson will be sent from home to help herd his grandfather's cattle.

484
[584]

The fulfilment of these various obligations leads to much travelling and consequent contact, almost as much as the actual betrothal and marriage does. This latter is a lengthy process. Early betrothal is the rule and involves a long engagement, during which the man is expected to maintain contact with his future in-laws. Frequent travelling is also necessary in other connections; for example a man goes himself or sends a son to examine the water and pasture of the area to which he proposes to move, and as we have seen the moran are always on the move, visiting friends, begging bullocks for meat-feasts, etc. So in spite of the size of the area which they inhabit, and of their scattered settlements, the Masai maintain very close contact amongst themselves.

597

Another point of considerable importance in Masai family affairs is the adoption of children, frequently practised both in respect of Masai

* The mean number of cattle per gate lies between 100 and 200 or between 25 and 50 head per adult male taxpayer—Ed.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Summary of Warriorhood.

From boyhood upwards to the Elders' stage there are the following recognized steps, each with appropriate "rites de passage," except in the last stage. 561

(1) Candidate Stage.—After the boys have attained puberty, as shown by the first signs of hair growth on the face, they form bands who wander about the country receiving presents, and finally there is the horn-seizing ceremony, after which the candidates are circumcised and enter the novice stage. [881]

(2) Novice Stage.—No sex life is permitted to novices, who during their novitiate wander about with bows and arrows shooting birds for head-dresses. This stage is concluded by a head-shaving ceremony, after which the novices enter full warriorhood.

(3) Junior Warrior Stage.—This is a period of roughly nine years from the end of the novitiate. During this time—with certain exceptions—no warrior may shave the hair off his head. Life is in the manyattas. This period is concluded by the Eunoto ceremony and a general head-shaving which marks the entry into the senior warrior stage.

(4) Senior Warrior Stage.—Warriors remain in this class until there are two age-groups in it, and then transfer to the Elders' group. Transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage cannot take place unless there are two age-groups ready to move up together.

PART IV.—GIRLHOOD.

Work.—As soon as girls are old enough to do so, at the age of about seven, they start helping their mothers and sisters in the general work of the village, sweeping out the huts, milking the cows, nursing the children, drawing water and sewing skins. There is, however, one sort of work which is never done by any uninitiated girl, and that is getting firewood. This work is specially reserved for married women. The girls' work may either be in the home village or else in a warrior's manyatta, should they have brothers living in a manyatta. 857 [313] [581]

Sex Life.—From a very early age indeed the young girls imbibe the general atmosphere of Masai sex life. As already mentioned, those of them who have brothers living in the manyattas sleep from a very early age—long before puberty—on the same beds as couples indulging in sexual intercourse; and even those girls who live in the home villages learn all about such matters at a very early age owing to the fact that they always sleep on their mother's bed. As soon as ever the first signs of puberty are noticeable, girls may be asked by the warriors to sleep with them, and the question of whether there is complete intercourse or not rests then entirely with the girls. Moreover, the uninitiated boys, and especially those who tour the villages as candidates for initiation, expect any young girls who are not already 844 887 826

/43 cont./

601 605 [131] The designations abula, en gijo, arabá, and 'n gîba are used only as long as the above-mentioned terms of address are not affected by gifts of livestock. This explains why they are used only among children. This does not apply to the address ol aischa 'Ng ai, because the girl is not in a position to make the necessary gift of livestock.

601 The son and daughter of the brother or of the sister are addressed, as long as they remain in childhood, with na gerai ai = my child. The address for the grandfather runs ng akuja, for the grandmother koko. The grandfather calls the grandson ng akuj'ai; [131] the grandmother, koko ai. Brother-in-law and sister-in-law are [151] called by name or the terms of address derived from livestock designations.

IV.

600 Conjugal relations. -- Betrothal. -- State of being betrothed. -- Bride price. -- Evasion of the bride price. -- Obstacles to marriage. -- Wedding. -- Beginning of the marriage. -- Dissolution of the marriage.

• 581 The conjugal relationships are very loose, and in some views about them the Masai stand in unfavorable contrast to their sedentary Negro neighbors. As among the latter -- and, to be sure, with- 595 [171] out exception (1) --

> 1. The so-called monogamy of the Wambugwe is in practice the holdest polygyny.

polygyny prevails among the Masai. The number of wives of a man is limited neither by law nor custom, but depends only on his means. If a man has but one wife, poverty is always the reason. 581 There are no temporary or trial marriages; rather, marriage is a [583] more stable relationship. The woman through the marriage passes [618] into the family of her /44/ husband, but not into his lineage; rather she retains membership in her own lineage.

/213 cont./

439 designate the first one as en ahga en djore, i.e., war cloth, because the warriors like to dress up in it; the konguru they call en ahga bos, i.e., colored cloth, and the gamti, ol garascha.

43 The demand for the individual trade articles varies a great deal. At times the need for one kind is so well supplied that it is either not taken at all or far below its value. Correspondingly, the value of another kind often rises disproportionately high through the heightened demand. A lengthy discussion back and forth precedes every exchange or purchase transaction. As a sign of a settlement, the seller spits [452] on the object. The exchange follows at once; only trustworthy acquaintances are granted credit. The risk in the matter, for cattle, does not pass to the buyer until the day after purchase, otherwise immediately.

426 686 The creditor proceeds against a nonpaying debtor first by complaint, and if this remains without effect, he helps himself to his property by force, provided that the debtor can comfortably pay, but for some reason, usually one that has nothing to do with the debt, does not want to pay: a road that is also often taken as the only one. Only upon his impoverishment will the creditor become earnestly pressing. [572] Then, if the debtor is incapable of paying, his brothers and half brothers, or if such are not present or are unavailable, his paternal cousins must pay. Whether the former or the latter pay, the repayment of the debt is always arranged so that no great economic hardship arises for the one paying. The creditor, if he does not voluntarily [626] enter upon the arrangement, is forced into it by the public opinion, which is often expressed in violence. An inconsiderate collection of an outstanding debt actually never occurs; rather, the creditor almost always displays an extraordinary kind-heartedness and forbearance about it and often lets himself be put off for years or waits patiently until the debtor or his heir is in such a good position that the repayment of the debt will be easy for them. It may also happen that the [581] creditor takes a daughter of the debtor and, after she has reached marriageable age in the service of one of his wives, marries her. [583] Since the creditor, even in this case, /214/ pays his father-in-law the bride price, the debt remains standing in full and the kinship [572] bond only makes its repayment more certain. The heir is liable for

*539 /331 cont./
*773 purity (1).
*171
*121
304
[186]

1. That circumcision among the Israelites -- as is assumed -- attained religious significance only during the Exile is refuted, it seems to me, by the use of the stone knife in earliest times.

as the Bible often designates it.

Circumcision certainly does not owe its origin to considerations of cleanliness -- as one so often hears -- since the desire for cleanliness could be satisfied more simply in other ways and without an operation not always entirely safe. Furthermore, we also find this custom preferred precisely among those peoples who certainly do not attach any particular value to cleanliness. Moreover, however, I also doubt that /332/ the utility of circumcision in the matter of cleanliness is actually so great, for among the only very scantily clad primitive peoples the part in question is so much more exposed to the effect of dust, etc. and injury by thorns, spiny leaves, blossoms, and grasses than it would be otherwise.

[581] The circumcision of girls among primitive peoples may also be interpreted as a preparation for marriage. Among the Masai, besides the point in time at which it is undertaken, the way of life of the girls before and after the operation argues in favor of this. Clitoride excisa libido diminuitur et cohabitandi cupiditas retinetur. /Clitoridean excision lessens desire and, in cohabiting, restrains passion./ This [843] has, in the opinion of the people, great advantages for the growing [853] and suckling child, as is also shown by the continence rules of the Masai during pregnancy and the suckling period.

As we know, the Bible knows of no circumcision of the girls. That such was customary in Egypt, however, even during the oldest Biblical period, is taught by the 15th of the British papyri, in which there is mention of the circumcision of the girl Tatemi, the daughter of Neket of Memphis. Here, too, the girls were circumcised at the age of puberty (1).

1. Fiam, "Das Kind in Brauch und Sitte der

4: Kenyatta I-5 (no date) 1953
FL10 Kikuyu FL10
Masai FL12

perished by starvation, thus feeding vultures and hungry hyenas. In places where there were no such natural barriers, and where the two tribes came into contact frequently, peace treaties were signed and friendly relations established. In this case intermarriages were one form of peace-making.

To take a concrete case, my grandmother, on my father's side, was a Masai woman called Mosana, and in reciprocity for this friendly feeling, my aunt (i.e. elder sister of my father) was married to a Masai chief called Sendeu, and was treated as the head-wife. Exchange visits were made on both sides, and I had the opportunity of visiting her and stayed there for some months as a member of the family.

In territories where this friendly relationship was established, especially between the Kaptei Masai and the Southern Gikuyu, the warriors of the two tribes joined together to invade another section of Masai, like Loita or a section of Gikuyu, like Mbere or Tharaka. This information was given to me by my grandfather, Kongo wa Magana, who led several of these attacks as a fighting warrior and later as a magician of war.

It can be said that the relation between one tribe and another was no more or less than the relations existing in the present day between various tribes of Europe and America. The only difference is that the relations between European countries involve great suffering for the majority of the people, either through economic fights, tariff barriers and distribution of wealth, etc., or through actual fights in battle-fields. The case of the Spanish Civil War, where one tribe is fighting between itself, or the case of Japan and China, where a strong tribe is trying to dominate a weaker one, are illustrations.

The raids in the tribal warfare affected only a few villages,

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Ore ejj 'E-gamisini tentyeng E-mukgi, nelabo 'l-kilikae 'n-giri.

whilst the Gamisini are chosen if they frequently slaughter bullocks and give the meat to their comrades. 554

E-murata oo-'n-doye.

The girls' circumcision.

Ten eiyteni neiyani 'n-doiye oo-'l-Masaea, oemurati.

When Masai girls wish to marry, they are circumcised. 88 [382]

Ore eng-ainig eamurati, eiyengi ol-kuri arabi ol-iseng, ejj Ol-eimpukunieki, ana too-'l-eyok.

On the day that the operation is performed, a sheep or bullock is slaughtered, and as with the boys it is called The (animal) which has caused her to be taken out (from amongst the girls).

Nemurati ninje ti-ata ejj. Ana, ten eishir, nemuat ee-nelin.

Women are operated upon indoors, and it is not considered a disgrace if they cry out. [304]

Nepike ninje 'l-tyir-anaa 'l-eyok, ol-mariaan ake eika.

Instead of the ostrich feathers which the boys wear, a wreath made from the leaves of the Hyphaene (or doum) palm, or of grass, is donned. [231] [298]

Ore ten eishin, neiyan.

When they recover, they are married. [368]

E-unoto.

The feast called E-unoto or the selection of a chief[1]. 622 574

Ten eiyte 'l-unoto nai, neiyeo enkgna ainkgana Ol-eunini, na ol-tuikgani lata naeyo na kgatonyo ainore, naata 'n-gishu, naina na-ang lae ol-tuikgani, nemolanyingenyok a-nanyo na kgatoyo, nemanta 'ng-eyok gani[2].

If the warriors wish to select a chief, who is called Ol-eunoni, they choose a man whose parents are still living, who owns cattle and has never killed anybody, whose parents are not blind, and who himself has not a discoloured eye.

Ore ge eium, nemiki;

When they succeed in getting such

[1] A senior warrior Ol-eunoni is appointed for each sub-district. His duties are to keep the warriors of his sub-district together, and he is responsible to the chief medicine-man for their appearance in case of war. If a warrior displeases the wishes of his chief, he is flogged or maltreated by his companions.

[2] Gani (pl. gani) means the colour of a corpse or blue.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Neili 'l-kilani le-'lgurtytni, naishop, naishori en-ḷukuri naripakino 'aghera 'matwan pikin. Naitanapi eng-uriág, nariki eng-aág o-'l-mdrno lenya, nerishare el-mdrno, oo 'l-tuñgunak nare 'l-eberuata lenyana, oo 'a-gitunk are o-'ag-aág o-'lgurtytni.

Nemenitye, erikitoi ale akiti ne metabai. Ore pe ebaiki, naishori en-gerai, naiitti.

Ten eiyam el-mdrno o-'lgurtytni, nemeipot eng-arna enye, anna tarum. Ediñgtiki ne-arna. Enyor naiaág eipotye eng-arna o-'l-purur lenye, anna 'E-ne-'Ekure.

Ten eata el-tuñgani en-'l-Masaai 'a-gitku kumok, naidim eiyana 'lgurtyok kumok. Eiii kulikae eeiyam 'lgurtyok are, ana uni, ana ebgwan; kake eiyam il-kurial, ten eiyte, tonom ana tigitkin.

Ten eiyam el-Masaai kat'-are arabi kat'-uni, naisha en-gitok enye eng-aini el-naka, ten ainye ainaiye eng-aini ejo Paaka.

Naidim il-Masaai eiyana 'lgurtyok o-'ag-ají enye ten eimi ta-'l-naka tha, kake eidim eiyana 'lgurtyok o-'a-gidatani enye, naidim eiyana 'lgurtyok o-'ag-an-kiakitani.

After the bride's wedding-garments have been oiled, she puts them on, and is given a gourd which has been ornamented with cowries. This is put on her back, and she is taken by her husband, who is accompanied by two of his friends and two of the old women from his bride's kraal, to her future home. 585

She does not hurry but walks very slowly until she reaches her husband's kraal, where a child is given her to feed.

When a man marries, it is considered unlucky if he calls his wife by her name. He must give her another name. A favourite method is to call her by the age to which she belongs, thus, The (woman) of the Sauro age. 551 573 977 [561]

If a Masai owns large herds of cattle he is able to marry many wives. Some have two wives, others three, and others four; whilst if rich men wish, they may have as many as ten or twenty. 595

When a Masai marries for the second or third time, his first wife gives the new wife a calf, after which they call one another Paaka, i.e. the giver and receiver of a calf. 595 451

No Masai may marry a woman belonging to the same sub-division as himself if both families live in the same district, but he may marry a woman of his own clan or one belonging to another clan. 589

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

the warriors with milk. This seems to be the feast that MERKER refers to as "the feast of the circumcised boys – el ogor ld eiljek emurale". The newly circumcised remain in his mother's house until the wound is healed.

e) At this stage all the newly circumcised assemble from the various villages; they form small bands and go around shooting at small birds with special small bows and arrows. They wear women's clothes, women's ear-decorations (used also by elders) and a special headdress to which they append the birds they kill. During this period they are called ee eiholio, pl. i-eiholio – the recluse, and are under strict regulations: At evening they must return home and enter the village before the cattle. They must not drink blood or eat meat or touch it with their hands. They must not wash. They must avoid girls. They must not fight with, or be struck by, any other: if this happens, milk must be put on their heads. They must not go out in the daytime without their special headdress.

The period of segregation may last for some months. At the end by order of the elders they are shaved by their mothers (hence they are called the shaved ones – el barnati pl. il barnat) and presented by their fathers with the arms of the warriors, a spear, a sword and a shield. It is a peculiar distinction of the initiates to let their hair grow and to twist it into a pigtail of which they are very proud. [92] At this later stage the initiates will be called el morani, pl. il moran, i. e. those who have been circumcised.

It is generally stated, and apparently even by the Masai themselves, that as soon as a youth is circumcised he becomes a man. The evidence shows clearly that the expression "becomes a man" does not describe the real social status of a newly circumcised. Even if the statement is taken to mean that through circumcision a boy has attained the status of a man, and therefore is entitled to full participation in Masai social life, the statement is at variance with the evidence. As a matter of fact no Masai is allowed to marry soon after circumcision. In order to marry he must be at least a senior initiate, i. e. a member of the senior age-unit. [93] A newly circumcised (i. e. a junior, and to some extent also a senior initiate) may [92] On this particular custom, cfr. MERKER, l. c., p. 148; BRAUER, in P. P. und R., 1908, n. 38, pp. 89 ss.

[93] The seniority of the age-units is discussed in the next paragraph. With reference to the text above we note that even when a senior initiate marries, he is not allowed to beget children, as this is the privilege of the elders. See below, where LEAKEY and FOX are cited.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 [539] "I say, thou art no longer of moran (a circumcised, a warrior), but of morow (an elder). Take care of thy cattle, goats and sheep, and have regard for them. Give up the occupations of the warriors thou art now an elder".

"After this feast", remarks MERKER, "it all depends on the warrior whether he chooses to take a greater or lesser part in raids. Usually he gets married at once and lives with his wife either in [541] his father's kraal or in the warriors' kraal (manyatta) until all his age-mates have married. Only then he is recognized as of morow; 561 [554] each one builds his own kraal and lays aside the clothes, decorations and the pigtail of the warriors".

[560] It is evident that the effect of the ceremony is rather limited. It allows an initiate to take a wife, but, even after that, the initiate is not yet "recognized" as an elder. It is as if he were given the elder's status in anticipation of the time when all his age-mates are married. At which time only the status of elder becomes for all purposes official.

561 A very detailed description of "the spikere of milk" is given by J. V. DAWSON, but the ceremony is mentioned also by other authorities. FOX,[100] states that "this ceremony is performed by each warrior individually",[101] and DAWSON tells us that it occurs at the village of the initiate's father and that four piron-elders take a special part in it.

[576] [542] [561] The ceremony is preceded by a dance. The candidate is clothed in women's clothes and the first two of the elders place women earrings (earwipe) on him.[102]

A test follows, in which the candidate is expected to confess [583] how many times he has "stolen milk", i. e. taken milk by himself or with people other than his age mates. Two heads of cattle are [585] usually paid as a fine by a guilty candidate. He is then solemnly instructed by one of the elders, apparently the most senior, about "what he must and must not do after he has drunk and become an elder". He now drinks the milk, "very little however" as this

[100] FOX, l. c., p. 468.

[101] He says also that "the ceremony usually takes place nowadays a year or two after the B wants owing to the Government policy of reducing the period of warriorhood as much as possible".

[102] These ear-rings, earwipe, are also worn by elders. For this reason some of our authorities describe the earrings put on by candidates as the elder's ear-rings or decorations. But the whole attire of candidates is undoubtedly of a feminine type.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

It is possible to consider that solidarity as a kind of class identity. This identity does not exclude the possible variations and differentiations of class-members arising from individual differentiations of talents and character, from leadership, seniority and social prestige attached to the possession of a great number of wives and a large herd of cattle. The main expressions of that identity are the use of a single name for the whole class and some special marriage regulations which apply to class members and, to some extent, to their children.

Thus, a man may not marry the daughter of a member of his own class. If he fornicates with her he is punished by his own age-mates. " His kraal is destroyed, he is severely beaten, and a number of his cows are slaughtered ". Similarly, " if a warrior or boy commits adultery with a wife of a man belonging to his father's age-grade (or class), he is solemnly cursed by the members of that age-grade ". (HOLLIS). Furthermore, any class member when a guest of any of his age-mates, has a right to cohabit with his host's wife. WERNER, says that a widow " must not re-marry but she must live with the members of her deceased husband's class ". This " sexual communism ", as HOLLIS calls it, takes place only among members of the same class. It is limited, of course, by clan and kinship exogamy, which, even for class members, is strictly enforced.

At the performance of the Enkolomi, Enpiate, Unto, Ngakoi names are given to sets instituted. Names assumed at the Enkolomi, Enpiate, and Unto are temporary, for temporary is the nature of the set thus established. At the Ngakoi proper all previous names are discarded for a single name which is final and applies to the age-class as a whole. It is this name which is handed down to the following generations. Age-class names are, as it were, the milestones by which Masai can order their past into a certain historical perspective. Class names are thus recalled when historical facts are remembered.

Lists of class-names have been recorded by our collaborators. It may be of interest to reproduce here some of those lists collected by WERNER, FOX, and FOSBROOKE.[100] FOSBROOKE has attempted has been shown them, he will enter one. When he has entered, the owner of the hut leaves him and goes to search for a place to sleep in... A Masai manifests other hospitality to a stranger (of his own age) for he is afraid that the other relatives of his age will come him, and he will die ".

[100] WERNER, l. c., p. 300; FOX, l. c., pp. 106, 108; FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 10 n.

Z: Hollis G-S (ca. 1896-1964) 1910 F'L12 Maasai F'L12

Besides the power of a maternal uncle to stop a fight, he has also the right to take anything which belongs to his nephew. If the uncle finds anything that is the property of his nephew's father, the nephew must buy it from his father, who will at once give it up when he knows for whom it is required. This power of taking property is reciprocal, and in fact applies to all persons who address one another as ol-ngon, of the Ing-ngon class. A nephew, for instance, may go to his maternal uncle's kraal, and if his uncle is absent, he may slaughter a goat, or drink his uncle's milk, and nothing would be said. He cannot, however, drive off a cow without his uncle's sanction, but permission would not be refused. Other relatives have likewise some power of taking property. A boy or man may go to his father's or paternal uncle's kraal and take or demand a goat or milk, and in all probability nothing would be said, but if it were done repeatedly the father or uncle would express dissatisfaction or refuse slaughter. A man may also go to his sister's husband or wife's brother (ol-ngwenak) and take anything but an account is kept and the debt has to be returned. If a man is poor it is customary for him to live with one of his brothers-in-law (ol-ngwenak) and help to look after the stock. He is fed by his relative, and no payment receives less one of many pair of twin goats born.

Free women and married women may not marry, but there is no objection to their uncles marrying if the relationship is so remote that ol-ngwenak (or ol-ngwenak). Thus, a man's uncle's uncle may not marry the man's brother's uncle's uncle's daughter, nor may a man's uncle's uncle marry his sister's uncle's uncle's daughter, but there would be no objection to a man's uncle's uncle's uncle marrying the brother's daughter's daughter's daughter or the sister's daughter's daughter's daughter. Likewise though a man's uncle's uncle may not marry the man's maternal uncle's uncle's daughter, he may marry the maternal uncle's uncle's daughter's daughter. These rules are always contingent on the two parties not belonging to the same sub-class.[1] The rules of consanguinity and affinity which regulate marriage also apply to the sexual intercourse of warriors with unmarried girls before marriage and to the rights of hospitality after marriage. No man may admit as his

[1] The Maasai are divided into five clans: Il-Purko, Il-Kisongo, Il-Kaputei, Il-Matapato, and Il-Purkeni. Each clan is again divided into sub-clans, e.g. the Il-Purko clan contains amongst others the following: Il-ganjaki and Il-Purkeni. The men belonging to the Il-ganjaki sub-clan may take as wife the daughter of a man of the same sub-clan, but he may marry the daughter of the Il-Purkeni or he may marry a daughter of the Il-Kisongo, Il-Kaputei, Il-Matapato, or Il-Purkeni sub-clans. Members of the various sub-clans are scattered in the kraals in no two districts and sub-districts. Marriages are not affected by geographical considerations, and a man has the same (with) marital relations to all the sub-districts as he has to his own home sub-district.

In his recent book, The Marriage of the Il-Kaputei and other Ilm-Purko Maasai (Oxford University Press, 1935), Dr. Hobley states (p. 10) that the restrictions governing marriage amongst the Maasai are far from simple, and he gives a number of complicated instances. As a matter of fact the rules are quite simple if one remembers (1) that though the clans are not exogamous, the sub-clans are; (2) that the clans are divided into exogamous; and (3) that no man may marry a cousin relative (but a third cousin, and then only if the terms of relation such are different and remote).

Sc Maguire G-5 (no date) 1928
FL12 Masai FL12
Kisongo

[482] remain before the gates, every ox, cow and calf of the murderer is forfeit.

(d) If the deceased has very few relatives, they sometimes try to surprise the murderer's cattle when out grazing. They hastily run them to their own kraal and brand one or two with their own brand.[1] If they succeed in branding a few before the relatives of the murderer arrive, the latter may only remove the bull-oxen and herd-leaders. All the remainder are forfeit.

[482] Until the matter of the murder has been settled in any of the above ways, or by the killing of the murderer without trial, no man from the murderer's kraal may be married to a girl from the kraal of the deceased and vice versa. This applies to all Masai, irrespective of class or families. Donkeys, sheep and goats are never included in the property forfeited except by mutual agreement.

En-gooki: Parricide or Fratricide

[484] If a son kills his father, or a brother his brother, he forfeits all rights to inheritance. The property goes to his brothers, their wives or (if he is an only son) to his uncles. If married, he forfeits his wife and children. If unmarried, he will never be given a Masai woman to wed. He is generally hunted from his kraal, and with his mother (to whom the blame for his crime also attaches) becomes an outcast.

Murder by unusual means—such as poisoning—is a very rare offence. The penalty would be the same as in murder by any ordinary method. Should the poisoned individual [483] recover, the penalty would be the same as in the case of a serious injury. In some of the very few cases of murder by poisoning that have occurred in the past the culprit has been executed by the Masai.

Homicide is dealt with according to the gravity of the matter, the degree of provocation caused and the element of chance or accident existing. It is generally settled by the payment of twenty cattle and nine cattle, or forty cattle and nine cattle.

[1] For a comprehensive illustrated list of Masai cattle brands, see The Masai by M. Merker. (Berlin, 1910. Dietrich Reimer.)

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1968) 1948 FL-12 Masai FL-12
Elmoko

also by traditions just in the Kimwaga ceremony. The Laitayok of Loitokitok are believed to perform the ceremony by themselves. The Loita and Purko of that area do not apparently attend the ceremony performed by the remainder of these sections living in Kenya. They are sent a bit of the hide of the ceremonially slaughtered ox, and certain charms, and hold what one might call a "sub-ceremony" of their own.

Not all members of the age attend, some are doubtless detained by family matters; others are perhaps deterred by a magical test designed to discover whether they have had intercourse with a married woman. However, a very large number do attend and perform various ceremonies. They compete in seating an ox by the horns, ceremonial fire is kindled, pigtails are cut off but are subsequently grown again, the leaves or elders, the ceremonial and spiritual head of the age, is chosen and installed. (The details of the ceremonial are described by Whitehouse under the term "fire drilling ceremony", which must in fact be the crux; the exact procedure is however unimportant). The change in status which the ceremony gives is discussed earlier in this chapter.

C. Senior Warriorhood and the passage to elderhood — the Ngabore ceremony — ceremonial status of Warriors — elderhood — the distribution of population between the ages — advantages and disadvantages of the system.

It is obvious from the chart that the right hand age of any generation must go through a longer period of senior warriorhood than the left hand age. That women may not marry is a rule so frequently repeated that one is almost compelled to believe that in pre-European times they did not marry. But there are many indications to the contrary. Aged informants will sometimes admit that they were married whilst still morans, though they often did not set up house on their own, but left the wife with her mother or mother-in-law. Again there is a special ceremony by which a moran is permitted to drink the milk from his wife's cattle. He leaves beer for his age mates, calls them to his house and receives the ceremony permission and blessing. This does not, however, permit him to drink milk by himself; this must always be done in company with his age mates until such time as all go through the Ngabore ceremony. It is improbable that this ceremony is of recent origin; one therefore feels justified in concluding that towards the end of the period of senior warriorhood the morans were beginning to marry and settle down.

The final step between warrior and elderhood is taken at the Ngabore or Ongabore ceremony. Just as the Kaberyoike ceremony of enrolment starts off the age for the whole tribe, it appears that the Kimwaga Ngabore closes it throughout Maasiland. It is traditionally held at Olkenyo ene Imurusik (the hill of the Elders), Upper Narok, Masai District. Here again details are only of interest in so far as they show the purpose of the ceremony. Pigtails are cut off and are not allowed to grow again, showing entrance to elderhood. A single effigial, elder-marriage, is chosen as the head of the whole generation, thus emphasizing the union of the two ages which have up to now been independent, each with its own leaders or ceremonial leader.

§33 attached to the warriors to sleep with them. In fact, we may say that for the girls
§34 sex life starts before puberty and continues (with no such period of sexual prohibition as the boys have during the novice stage) until they are initiated. There is one important restriction, however, as far as the girls are concerned, and that is that §34 sexual intercourse with married men is entirely prohibited before initiation, and is considered a very serious offence.

§41 Menstruation.—Menstruation is not looked upon as causing uncleanness, and there are no special rules and regulations attached to this condition, but, on the other hand, during the actual menstrual period a girl should refuse all invitations to sleep with men or boys. There is no restriction of work during the menstrual §41 period as there is among some Bantu tribes, but a girl or woman must wash her hands before milking if she is menstruating.

§42 Conception.—There is a general belief (as already mentioned) that conception can only take place if there has been full sexual intercourse during the five or six days immediately following the menstrual period, and although there is no special teaching about this, girls grow up with this knowledge and take care not to allow full intercourse during the few days immediately following menstruation. Occasionally, of course, a girl does allow sexual intercourse at this time, either because she is carried away by sexual desire, or because she deliberately wishes to conceive for some reason or another (see Wantabwori). In the former case she will try to bring about abortion.

§47 Abortion.—If a girl finds that she has conceived and wishes to induce abortion she sends for the man whom she considers responsible and tells him about it, and he is bound to help her.

As long as her condition has not been discovered by her parents she may try to induce abortion, but as soon as her condition is known to her parents she must no longer try to do so. Abortion is brought about by means of a stick of special wood which can only be obtained from a medicine man. This stick is inserted into the vaginal passage and is said to be an absolutely certain abortifacient. This is the only method used.

§47 Penalty for Conception.—If an uninitiated girl conceives and her condition becomes known she must immediately be initiated. In the normal way (see below)
§48 her initiation would take place at her mother's home and the necessary arrangements §49 would be made by her father, but if she is to be initiated because she is with child the news of all the arrangements is shifted on to the man who is responsible for the girl's condition, and the ceremony must take place at the man's village. This does not, however, mean that the man will have to marry her because of this, but he may do so should both parties desire it. Not only must the man arrange for her initiation and pay all the costs of the ceremony, but he must also give one bullock and a quantity of beer to the girl's father. [1] Lessons he has prevented the father from having the honour of the best of her initiation." Should the man decide to marry the girl, this letter is counted as one of those which must be handed over for the marriage transaction (see Marriage). [FL.4] [FL.5] [FL.4]

Girls' Initiation.—Among the Wawai girls are initiated singly and not in groups, nor are they initiated until a good many years after puberty, for as soon as a girl is initiated she must be married, and ceases to have any intercourse with the women or boys. Except under the circumstances described above, a girl is not initiated until her breasts begin to droop to a marked extent. As soon as this is noticeable, her mother informs the father, who makes the necessary arrangements. If the girl's mother is living at the time at a compound with one of her sons, then the girl's initiation will take place at the compound, otherwise it will take place at the home village. The essential point is that initiation must take place in the mother's hut (or in the hut of another of her father's wives, should her own mother be dead). The father comes to the place where the day of the ceremony has been fixed and beer is prepared. A cow called chikhipuka is slaughtered either before the actual operation or just after it. This is the "cow for chikhwaning," and is supposed to insure fertility. This cow is eaten by all those present at the ceremony. The actual operation is performed by an old woman, who is a skilled operator (she may be either a Wawai or a Dorobo), and the girl sits on a skin inside the hut during the operation. The operation is said to be the same as that used by the Kikuyu on their girls, and this is a form of circumcisionary, but exact details cannot be obtained from the men. As soon as the operation is over the operator washes the girl in "cleanse her of the blood right," and a cow is then slaughtered and given to the operator. This cow is called chingwat. Next a cow is killed called chikhwat to provide meat and fat for the girl during convalescence. [FL.7] [FL.8] [FL.9]

Shaving Ceremony.—Finally after the girl is healed and before she can go to her husband's village, a cow is killed called chwam, which is the "cow for the shaving," and at the same time the girl's head is shaved by her mother. [FL.10]

Part V.—Marriage.

Exogamy.—Marriage is always exogamous as far as sub-clans are concerned, but marriage within the main clan is allowed. This rule not only applies to marriage but to all forms of sexual intercourse. No man, whether an adult, married man, or a married woman, may at any time ever have sexual intercourse with any woman, girl or child of his own sub-clan. This is the strictest rule of all Wawai sex regulations, and the penalty for any breach of this rule is very severe indeed (see below). [FL.11] [FL.12]

A woman remains a member of her own sub-clan even after marriage, but her children belong to the sub-clan of her husband. [FL.13] [FL.14]

Betrothal.—Amongst the Wawai there are two usual methods of betrothal:— [FL.15]

(1) Betrothal of unborn children.
(2) Betrothal of infant girls.

Milking.—Milking is usually done by women and girls, but uninitiated boys may also milk. Milk is either drunk fresh or is curdled by mixing with blood, or is curdled alone by leaving for two or three days. 234 462 252

Raiding.—Frequent raids on neighbouring tribes are carried out by the warrior classes, and the cattle and sheep so obtained are some of them distributed to a warrior's parents and friends and some kept for himself. When cattle are raided from another clan or sub-clan in order to repay a murder (see Murder), all maimed, blind, and otherwise damaged cattle are returned immediately afterwards, for to keep them would certainly bring bad luck on the raiders. 721 [682] [997]

Part X.—Miscellaneous Notes.

Fire.—Fire for special occasions is made by means of the hand-drill method, and women may not make fire by this means. Normally, fire is obtained from the ashes of the previous day's fire or from a few live coals borrowed from a neighbouring hut. The first fire in all new huts must be made with fire-sticks. 372

Murder.—Should a man kill a member of his own sub-clan there is no punishment. "What would be the use of taking a fine from one's own sub-clan?" If, however, a man of another sub-clan is killed, then the sub-clan of the murdered man raid the murderer's sub-clan and try to seize cattle in compensation. Usually a free fight takes place and if, in the course of this, a man of the murderer's sub-clan is killed, the matter is considered all square, and any raided cattle are returned. In the course of such a raid all sorts of cattle are driven off, but all the blind and maimed ones are returned next morning (see Raiding, above). 682

Smiths.—Among the Masai smiths are considered "bad." There are smiths in each clan, and the business is purely a family one handed down from father to son. Young boys of smiths' families are initiated alone, and once initiated go straight to the business of smithing and may take no part in the life of the ordinary warriors or warriors. Smiths are considered to be considerably lower in the social scale than even the Wandorobo. A Dorobo can leave his hunting life and rank as a true Masai if he so chooses, but never a smith. 326 564 [523]

If a smith owns and shops at a village he is given a hut, but must sleep on the wrong side of the sleeping hide (i.e. the rough fleshy side). Smiths may only marry with smiths' families. No Masai would dream of marrying or having any kind of sexual intercourse with a smith's daughter (Wandorobo girls may be married by Masai, but not also sexual), nor can a smith marry an ordinary Masai girl. Smiths make spears and small knives, cattle bells and iron ornaments, but never swords, which are always bought from the Kikuyu. Should a Masai buy the cattle or sheep of a smith he must dip them in the river before adding them to his flock. [594] [582] [563] [911] [912] [438]

Marriage.—The warriors may not marry till after the E-Unate, and do not usually do so till after their first Ol-Ng'onker. The case stated by Mr. Leakey,[1] in which a warrior cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice.

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be reclaimed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where lives a man of his generation he may choose in which hut belonging to his generation he will sleep. When it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to vacate it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 202) are observed. It is said that if a woman is persistently unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle.

On the other hand, the members of one generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of one generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women.

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his eldest son is old enough, and then sends him to fetch her back.

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (mother's son), but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister.

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names.

Father-in-law
Mother-in-law
Son-in-law
Daughter-in-law
} Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Ol Mawi. Relationship is not recognized beyond first cousin. The Masai take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Masai descent, Ol Masinai ainati, he is proud of the fact.

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the kyanna, except for those of Laibons or very influential old men. These are buried under cairns of stones.

[1] See p. 200 of this volume.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Mssa: FL12

Betrothal

583 A man usually chooses his wife himself and, after obtaining the girl's consent, asks his father to approach her parents; if they agree the girl's head is smeared with fat, and she may no longer live in the same hut as her betrothed. According to Hollis, a man makes the first approach to the girl's father himself, giving him fat tobacco, and later on when the girl is older, more tobacco and honey. It is considered wrong for a girl to become pregnant during the betrothal period, and the engagement may be broken off, a custom of which advantage is taken by girls who are betrothed to a man they do not wish to marry, since betrothals are sometimes arranged without the girl's consent. Futhers, for instance, sometimes arrange betrothals between their young sons and daughters in order to strengthen the bonds of friendship between them (as also among the Pandi); and betrothals may take place between warriors and babies, and even unborn girls.

Regulation of Marriage

583 614 This depends on three things: clan, age-set, and kinship. (a) According to Hollis, marriage between clans is allowed, but sub-clans are exogamous groups (see below, p. 110); a man may marry a woman of another sub-clan of his own clan. Mother says he may not marry a woman of his mother's sub-clan. Tamba ole Mbori, however, says that, though intermarriage between clans is allowed, each clan is an exogamous group. Fadiman agrees that the clan is the exogamous group (see p. 120). (b) A man may not marry a woman who is by custom considered as belonging to the age-set (ol-porror) senior to his own, to his own age-set, or (if he belongs to the Right-hand Circumcision) to a woman of the Left-hand Circumcision. "But he may marry one of the same generation" (ol-ayil). See below, p. 115, for details of the age-set system. (c) A man may not marry a woman whose relationship to him is closer than that of third cousin, and then only if they call each other e-le-ninu and ee-e-ninu.

Bridewealth

583 Payment of bride-cattle establishes the husband's rights to his wife's procreative faculties and over the children she bears him. The numbers of stock paid seem to vary slightly. Mother gives as three cows and one ox to the girl's father (the ox being eaten at the marriage feast), and a cow and ram to her mother (the ram also being eaten). Hollis says the bride's father is given two heifers and two rams, one of which is slaughtered "at the door of the hut"; on account of the other ox the man and his father-in-law call each other pa-ding, "giver and receiver of an ox." To the bride's mother are given two rams, which are slaughtered, and a cow, on account of which he and his mother-in-law call each other pa-ter (sheep). Fadiman gives the number as two cows and three cows or heifers, including the "pa-ding" ox.

Marriage

585 There appears to be little ceremonial at a wedding. The chief ceremony is a feast at the bride's home, of which the bride and bridegroom do not partake. This is followed by a ceremonial journey of the bride to her husband's home; she wears a freshly oiled garment, carries a gourd ornamented with cowries, and is accompanied by two men and two old women; on her arrival, she is given a child to feed. [584] Thomson says that on the day of marriage and for a month afterwards (if I understand him aright) the husband wears female dress.[] If the husband is still a warrior he may not have sexual intercourse with his wife, though they may live together at [] Hollis, p. 48.

[*] Intercourse between unfaithful wives may sometimes be due to dislocation of life, and not always to material advantage or mere misunderstanding.

/17 cont./

In connection with the somatic view of the down Masai branches, the following is to be considered. The band that immigrated last, the true Masai, have kept themselves quite pure as a race. They practically never submitted to the kidnapping of women and children in war, otherwise customary everywhere in Africa, they did not marry Dogororo and did not take Dogororo into their community.

Photo & Zi photo.

Ill. 1. Three Masai women.

Therefore they more closely show the racial characteristics peculiar to the Masai people. The same was true of the Wakuafi until the time when they became sedentary. Then, however, they needed not only replacements for their lost cattle, but also many hands trained in the cultivation of the soil. For this reason on our expeditions they dragged off, not only the livestock of the enemy, as before, but also the women and children. The degree of mixture between Wakuafi and Dogororo is very different in the individual [illegible] the Masai, Wakuafi and the Wanderororo --dimi;yet.]

/44 cont./

[illegible] A betrothal in earliest childhood is not infrequent among the Ainos, though also not common by far. In such cases the father of the boy, several months after the birth of a girl, asks for her for his son. Such a betrothal is in no way binding; rather it seems to have only the value and purpose of strengthening a friendship between the two fathers and assuring each other of mutual aid in case of impoverishment. It probably need scarcely be mentioned that in connection with a betrothal in early childhood it is only a matter of the betrothal of the boy to his later first, that is, principal, wife. Usually the betrothal to the later principal wife is not entered into until the boy is 20 or 22 and the girl eight to ten years old. For the former, his father makes the proposal to the mother of the girl, after the bridegroom himself has made sure of the girl's consent. As soon as the mother has then obtained the consent of her husband, she sentens the head of the bride with butter or beef fat, as a sign that the betrothal has been accepted and the girl is now betrothed. As such she is called [illegible]. During the period of betrothal the couple do not venue together; the bridegroom avoids the house in which his bride lives, but, if he should enter it, the girl hides from him. Thus the two live completely separated from each other, and, as he sees, in two different worlds. The bridegroom, for as young worker (of [illegible]), of [illegible]), then as actual worker (of [illegible]), of [illegible]. Even with his companions and a corresponding number of young girls in one house, the bride, on the other hand, with other young girls and workers in another, distant room. If the girl becomes pregnant during this time, it is regarded as a disgrace and usually leads to dissolving the betrothal. If the latter, by way of exception, is not the case, the betrothal was every as soon as possible. Otherwise the girl would be confinement in the hut of an old woman from among her relatives, and after the nursing period is over she goes to another, distant worker house, in the hope of finding a husband there. Only when the worker is tired of the military life, when his physical strength falls behind that of the majority of his companions, does he think of getting married, in order not long afterwards to exchange the military life for the contemplative idioms of the married man. But before the marriage takes place the bride price is to be paid first.

/ya cow./

As bride price (ya daghin o the dingo, each part of them, ya dogi o the dingi) he first pays the bride's father five pots of honey from which beer will be brewed, furthermore three cows and so on. The bride's mother receives a male and a female sheep. The ox and the male sheep will be eaten at the feast taking place on the wedding day. Around that day, more often afterwards than before, the /ya/ bridegroom further brings the father-in-law a cow and the mother-in-law a female sheep that has not yet had young, whereupon the former call each other ba-gamli (1).

1. Cf. Second Part, 55, sense of address for relatives.

while the bridegroom and the mother-in-law call each other ba-gan from now on. Every wife married later receives at the wedding from the principal wife of her husband a year-old heifer, whereupon the two call each other ti'-ancha. From the eldest child of her husband two goats or sheep, hence the address ba-ndaya, and from the another children of four to six years old and upward a goat or a sheep each, through which the address ba-gian, ba-mdaya, or ba-ndaya is brought about. During the period immediately after the wedding, the mother-in-law receives from the son-in-law several more pots of honey, skins for clothing, and less wire for making ring and arm ornaments. In the family of Chief Jandes he receives, as he told me, only a cow as bride price for one of his daughters, while the mother of the girl gets two donkeys, a bull and a cow with calf. Since the last bridegroom is has happened not infrequently that a man is not in a position to pay the customary bride price. He then gives the father-in-law only one cow and binds her to him on a rope twisted out of grass. Whenever the bridegroom or young married man delivers the gifts of (ruma-i-)ismeli, he always sends the honey by a woman. She is either a wife married permanently, his mother, his elder sister, or a wife of his brother. Only when the distance is very great does he deliver the honey himself,

/at cont./

[5.4] father-in-law must return the bride price if he grants his daughter admission. If the woman who has run away has had children, her husband keeps them; in this case the woman's parents do not pay back anything.

[5.5] On the day the parents-in-law receive the bride price, the bridegroom gives the eldest brother of the bride a year-old heifer, each of her other brothers and each sister of the bride a male head of cattle. This is only a gift of friendship and has nothing to do with the bride price. Exchange of wives occurs, but does not result in a valid marriage, any more than does wife stealing. On the other hand, it is not infrequent that the girl flees from her maternal hut as soon as she reaches marriageable age and runs to her lover. It often happens then that the girl's father sends a band of boys armed with sticks after her so that through the beating she will be induced to return. Since the boys act at the command of the old man, neither the bridegroom nor anyone else may hinder them. In order to protect the girl from such violence, only one course remains to the bridegroom, to leave the kraal with her immediately and move into the forest for a few days. With this he makes it understood that he will appear with weapons against anyone who might still venture to take his bride from him and at the same time it deprives the girl's father of any further right to object. As soon as the couple in the forest have consumed a cow, they return to the kraal, where, without further ceremony, [5.6] they are recognized as married. Only the girls of the Ki congoma and Ki ndembo do not have this possibility of self-help, for both lineages believe that a girl who goes to her lover in order to remain with him as his wife without her father's consent will die in only a few days after the flight.

[5.7] In olden times the bride was not supposed to belong to the tribe of her bridegroom. The Ovambo's epidemics of the last 50 years, however, which resulted in the death of many thousands of them, have modified this law somewhat. Accordingly, /at/ a man may marry a woman who belongs to his tribe, but not to his lineage, whereby in individual instances there is the further prerequisite that the girl came to him of her own free will and, after being sent back

/47 cont./
by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age class (1)

1. Cf. Chapter IX of this part.

(of home) or to his age-class associates (of age). The bride may not be from an older age class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, where the blacks are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between father brother and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage: it is precisely in consideration to the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

Moreover, a marriage between relatives of Machinetlie and those of mahlatlanchibi is not permitted.

Widows (of guilds, 3 guilds) or divorced women who have living sons may not marry again, but live with sons who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an obstacle to marriage (such as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man. The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

The wedding feast, elegantly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal to which the bride's parents live.

/136 cont./

a little while, will then lead them farther. Otherwise they leave it the sun.

When the warriors of an ol hanar notice that their hanar are getting old and the ol hanar sayan them in strength, they agree that it is now time to think of marriage. After they have obtained the permission of the speaker and then that of the chief, one after the other leaves the warrior association, each one shortly before his wedding. He announces his retirement by means of a feast, the ol gendi i ol bil, that is, an slaughtering with a tournament. To this all the inhabitants of the neaves towns are invited and are shown hospitality with the meat of one or several head of cattle. As soon as these are killed, each warrior cuts off a piece of meat for himself and devours it behind a hub standing somewhat apart. Then each of these present receives his share, while the remainder is hung on sticks two meters high. For these the warriors fight with the girls and women in a game in which the latter vigorously swing the sticks, before which the former has more fear than the women, somewhat accustomed to beatings. Then the younger men amuse themselves and play, for instance, rag (ensoigi). Before there is thought of departure, about five o'clock in the afternoon, a married man and his principal wife go to the hut and make the following speech: "ndiyai ensoir' ina ol mondki dada k' ol nalaran. Ahere i gielio inana, i gerr inana, ahere naiek, ndiyai 'ndiwa ol nalaran, ndi ndia ol nalaran, ndiyai i dogiio ndia ol nalaran, ndi ndia ol nalaran'. In translation I say, you are no longer Ol mondki, but Ol nalaran, take care of your cattle and your goats and sheep and watch over them well, leave the occupation of the warriors, now you are ol nalaran, refrain from all things of the warriors, now you are ol nalaran.

After this feast it is up to the warrior whether he takes part more or less regularly in the expeditions of war. As a rule he sees warrior and lives with his wife either in the father's kraal or in the warrior kraal until all his contemporaries are married. Only then are they considered ol nalaran: each one builds his own kraal and removes clothing, ornaments, and beard of the warriors. He is now at the end of the transition, his best strength has been spent. In general the Masai, just like all members of the black race, spend their lives very quickly, they age early, without ever attaining a really advanced age.

/111 cont./

lark and would cause their inheritance (land and death for men and beast. Even in an emergency one never claims the hospitality of a Blackmith, any more than one ever grants him guest privileges. The warriors coming from Blackmith families do not live in the ordinary warrior houses, but in the smaller Blackmith warrior-lead (ul nangka | ul mahua | ul hanum) and only with daughters of Blackmiths. They do not go out for the battlefield with the other warriors either, but alone, and naturally being slaug, since they /111/ are few in number, only a little booty each time, which does often enough is simply taken away from them by the other warriors. An other Wawai does not marry the daughter of an ul hanum, just as the latter's are does not desire to marriage the daughter of a man who does not belong to the despised Blackmith caste. Even the extra-marital association with a woman or girl belonging to the Blackmiths is regarded as disastrous for any other Wawai. It is believed that he will woman or have lost his mind, will never be able to become the father of a healthy child, or on the next head expedition he will be killed by the spear or arrow of an enemy. Also despised the Blackmiths are is shown by the fact that a Wawai does not dare to pronounce the word "ul hanum" after the coun of darkness (1).

1. More than once the people, when in camp, in the evening, I wanted to speak with them about the ul hanum, begged me to abstain from this, because otherwise some misfortune would befall us. Nevertheless it happened from time to time, and that also on the evening of December 31, 1901, when I was camped near a Tonga settlement on the major southeast of Wawai. A few Dan powerhead into my camp in the night and took a man, whom we, despite people pursuit of the loss, could no longer rescue. The next morning the Wawai made me responsible for this accident. "It would not have happened if you had not spoken about the ul hanum last evening; we have so often told you this."

[VIP reels.]

911 as practicable and useful to end of itself, but unfortunately few doing more harm than good with it because of the impossibility of observing the necessary conditions. Despite, however, manual and operative intervention to facilitate or to make possible the child's emergence does not seem to be practiced anywhere. Support of the perineum to prevent tears does not take place, but the opening of the vulva is not infrequently enlarged by a small incision above or by one above and below, in order to prevent tearing of the outer perineum.

DIC 184 One needs helpless when confronted by a pelvic assessment obstructing the birth. Mother and child succumb to it. Although this situation practically never occur among the Mbaci living in the cities, it was often observed among those living in the European settlements, and, as he says, the pelvic assessment was always because the woman was too young. These last Mbaci, in the manner of the coastal people, and in contrast to the farmers, marry very young, and since the women must always be considerably younger than the men and, on the other hand, the choice of girls is limited, it not infrequently happens that the latter, upon entering marriage, though sexually mature, nevertheless do not yet have a fully adult skeleton. This phenomenon, not infrequent among primitive peoples, must perhaps be granted, and in this instance in particular, be traced back to premature sexual intercourse and, because of this, premature construction.

911 During the birth act the woman giving birth adopts either a position "on all fours," similar to the knee-elbow position, or a sitting one, in the latter of which she places her feet high against her pelvis and leans herself against a low pole, which she grasps with her hands above her head. The first position is probably the most widespread. Two women standing beside the woman giving birth, on the right and left, holding her by the shoulders, seem to be trying to hold her suspended. In front of this group, with her head under the woman giving birth, crouches the midwife, in order to receive the child.

"We were on the hand and one shoulder are here," an old participant expressed herself. "We can follow by itself; only rarely is it necessary

/[illegible]/
dangerous to the child's health. On the other hand, are the poor huts, which are always /[illegible]/ filled with dense smoke, and furthermore the lack of cleanliness and the faulty diet. The belief, widespread among all African primitive peoples, that fat gives strength and health leads to the stuffing of the baby, despite all its struggles and screams, with whole-milk quantities of butter. Sun, as well as smoke and intestinal affections, and ailments of the respiratory organs are therefore also the principal illnesses that carry off the infants. If one compares the high mortality among children with the very low one in later life, and if one further considers that, in supporting the heavy loads, one finds almost only healthy people full of energy, one cannot enter the thought that the treatment of the children, especially the infants, conveniently slow or rolling are all the weak elements at an early age and preserving for the people only the most vigorous ones that are equal to the demands of life. Seen from this standpoint, that of natural selection, the high child mortality seems less unfortunate. Finally, the late age at which the men enter their first marriage is unfavorable for population increase. Until about the 15th or 16th year of life the blood belongs to the warrior standing, and he may marry only after leaving it. This circumstance is very unlike from here, such as exists in the warrior health, an unfavorable social institution. One must judge this arrangement on the soil in which it grows, in order to remain objective. From the same standpoint we shall have to judge more leniently the low love existing among the married, which, despite numerous exceptions, appears to us like a continuous punishment of the woman. One can do this all the more since though that professional prostitution is excluded here, and consequently the possibility of infection is greatly reduced; this law circumstance is undoubtedly to be regarded as people-preserving. Actually the blood moments that is farther close (before the great livestock epidemics) reserved disease only very rarely occurred. Immorality is rightly regarded as a people-destroying factor, and history teaches us by many examples how luxurious and refined sensuality was one of the grounds for caused the decline of higher peoples. Here among the blacks, however, it is not a matter of this unnatural kind of to others. Hated as fetishes and despised as agriculturists, the nomadic ones are constantly plagued by raids that not only cause them great loss in human lives, but also take away any possibility for them to arrive at any improvement to their way of life by keeping livestock for the sustenance of the meat and milk that is necessary for them. Moreover, the frequent intercourse with sedentary Negroes and caravan people leads to an increase in the cases of venereal diseases. Premature marriages of girls, which can not happen among the Maasai still living as nomads, is not rare among the sedentary ones and often enough ends in the death of the young woman who is scarcely more than a child and whose body structure, despite her sexual capability to conceiving,is not yet developed. Finally, it must will be mentioned that no doubt the longing for the formerly free life in the broad steppes and the feeling of humiliation over having become a so deeply despised cultivator of the soil cause2 two factors that have a wasting effect. The latter circumstance also brings with it a decrease of national pride. The barrier that kept Negroes out of the community of the Maasai has fallen. A destructive-Negroes race mixture hunting the people is slowly taking place. Among the Wakuafi this process was more rapid in their period. At that time no European administration prevented their raiding expeditions to Negro regions, from which they brought home livestock and women experienced in agriculture.

/001 cont./

In frequent -- almost daily -- intercourse that soon springs up and then continues to exist between the Maasai who have become sedentary and the settled Negroes, the Maasai naturally also down to the disadvantages that /001/ come to the Negroes through the encounter of their lower culture with an higher one.

We have seen how many difficulties sedentarism brings to the Maasai, and it is therefore not surprising that a part of those who have already become sedentary give up their fixed residence again after repeated failures. These then often join the Wandorobo, to live by hunting, and call themselves this.

[illegible] do may marry also he is a member married. When he believes [illegible] an elder to may take his mother (if he wants) and her share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given share of cattle) and move off to join others in a village (Peterson, 1968).

[illegible] The unmarried girls of the kraal live in the warrior's compound and normally each warrior has one favorite girl who becomes his sweetheart. They hold so that usually that girl becomes the warrior's first wife.

[illegible] [illegible] Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called [illegible] or (Maasai-wise) [illegible]. Each boma consists of an outer circular thorn fence with a series of gates, one for each Masai clan. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Within around the huts are small thorn fences to which young livestock are kept. The centre of the village are normally temporarily the space in the center of the boma each night for protection from lion and from hogged predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

[illegible] When a Masai marries, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left, the Basin. Griffiths (1968) gives a more complete description of the Basin and their history.

6.2 Sources

In parts of Western Beaufort where cultivation is possible, especially on the higher slopes, squatters from other tribes are moving in and establishing small [282] stations or cultivated fields. The Basin take some of their wives from surrounding tribes. Most of the squatters are relatives of these wives and are therefore allowed to stay by the Basin. The problem is particularly acute in the Bab Tunnel region, where most of the squatters are Kibaya.

13 Some cultivation could be carried on in appropriate places with no detrimental effect to the lower grades. However, the system as now practised results in considerable erosion and substantial vegetation clearance through cutting and burning. Such cultivation, especially in the Bab area, is carried out in the lower margins of the Basin which are sub-marginal for cultivation. During the high rainfall years the squatters move in, clear and farm. Yet as these years tailed a dry year forces them to abandon the area. Rainfall is low enough that regrowth is slow while erosion is considerable.

21-Huxley G.T.-5 (no date) 1960 FL11 Lon
Musc. FL12

A NEW EARTH

Moss is the source of all the streams watering the western half of Mossland, Kipsigis and part of the Rift Valley. The birthplace of innumerable streams, it is, in theory, protected by its status as a forest reserve.

Looking out from the small yellow aircraft expertly handled by June Wright, one of the best commercial pilots in East Africa, one could quickly see how different theory was from practice, here as elsewhere. In a forest reserve no one is allowed to fell trees, cultivate, start fires or graze livestock. In less than half an hour, I counted seventeen active fires and saw the disaster caused by innumerable others. Whole cliffsides of the mountain, sticking up like black spikes, were no longer as dog-hairy and already cancelled and crossed by gully erosion. Other fires were still smoking in some of these devastated areas; one could see the forest being eaten into like a great fur pelt attacked by moths.

As sure as fate, one day there will be no more water for cattle in the streams below. 'God is punishing us,' will say the Masai: but it will not be God, it will be themselves. The streams are already dwindling and the Masai are driving their herds further into the hills to find grazing. They cannot take cattle into forest and so they burn a way in. They are creeping upwards, spreading destruction as they go in order to escape the consequences of destruction they have already caused.

Other fires are started by honey-hunters who burn down trees to smoke out the bees. Often, in the forest, you can see blackened hollow cedars and olives killed by fires rushed into the roots. If the foliage is dry and the wind right, the fire will spread and get out of hand.

And then there are 'encroachers': a chance were given to some of other tribes who are settling in Mossland, family by family, with the permission of Masai elders. They are numerous but it is very unlikely that they will ever go.

In South Nyanza and in Kipsigis it is reckoned that upwards of two thousand families a year are crossing the southern border into Mossland and Tanganyika. In recent years a good many Masai have married Kikuyu or Kamba wives because so many of their own women are sterile; at one time there was quite a trade in Kikuyu girl-children, exchanged for cattle.

MASAI PROVERBS AND SAYINGS

p. 539

No. 10. Eyeu 'a-ium pilala la-gilikgat.
They go to the-witness all the-ends.

Everything has an end.

No. 11. Eyeiua 'l-iauat ooua 'ua-ishigi
They-cross the-events like the-days.

Events follow one another like days.

No. 12. Eyeiua 'a-ium ium 'ium'ambilia,
They-cross the-witness (or the-arrows) by-the-kind-legs

This has a double meaning. Arrows cross by the use of the legs, and if arrows cross, there are legs behind them.

[Long rumours are inevitable before a raid can be successfully accomplished; and arrows are not fired without a person being there to fire them.]

No. 13. Eyiduaua ooua ua-gila
He-separates-himself like the-sickness (or death)

o 'ngiloria. Ole. of-the-donkey one.

He separates himself from his friends like a sick (or dead) donkey.

[A sick donkey stands apart from his fellow animals, and a dead donkey is thrown away. This saying is used when referring to a man who stands aloof from his companions.]

No. 14. Eiuyu 'ndiria o Ede.
They-are-similar defeats and death.

Being defeated and dying are the same.

No. 15. Eiuyuua ua-gilalig ualo ol-ngiduaua o 'l-ion.
It-resembles the-cow one the-head of-the-man.

A cow is as good as a man.

[If a man has a cow, and looks after it, he obtains riches, for the cow bears, and with the calves he is able to purchase a wife.]

No. 16. E'ualal 'ngulal.
Elder-ye the-unutterable-of-food.

[One should not disclose one's secret thoughts any more than one discloses the food one is eating.]

No. 17. Eiua ooua-ilim o 'l-ngoiua.
He-has-become the-shave of-the-lion.

He is like a lioness's shave.

[A man who refuses to admit himself beaten is likened to a lioness's shave, which is said to be tougher than that of any other animal.]

1: Hollis C-5 (ca. 1894-1914) 1915
FL12 Masai FL12

Engagement.

[illegible] Ene olpenindet 'l-Masaai, enkiyan ungwesi nanir ne-dito [illegible] ene'n kitil, ne'ye el-kanikan.

One ol-nabo ne-dito kitian, nainkiki ekiyo ne-nabo e el-kanikan. Ketum kito olpenindet.

One ol-nabo ennemiti ne-dito, nainkiki ekiyo ne-nabo, nemenemiti.

One pe-nabiko, nanto 'n-gidoo e'ng-ayanti, 'n-dunum ual, e el-kitabig ketim 'n-dunum, e el-kitabig ln-kanak-ejl. Ne'ye el ang-ennabo enyo ne-nabo, nemiliaro.

One kito-kitabig ketim 'n-dunum nun ekiyo elenaiyo el-ayanani ejo Pakitabig.

One ol-nabo ekitu with e-ilgwenyiani enyo, nanto 'n-dunum ual (2-dunum nun e e-ungwan e'n-gwen), enkenaiyo ang-ayanani ejo Pakuan.

Ilkiyabig kitum-kanak pakitumu ne kitilian nun ln-nanyo e'n-dito.

Marriage[1].

When a Masai wishes to marry, he commences his courtship by making love to a girl while she is still young, and by presenting other tokens to her father.

He then waits until the girl grows up, when he again offers presents of honey and tobacco.

More honey is given to the father at his daughter's circumcision.

On the young woman's marriage the man presents to his future father-in-law's kraal, and takes with him the dowry, viz. three heifers and two bullocks, one of the latter being sold to buy the heifers company, whilst the other is slaughtered at the door of the hut. His sister also takes a pot of honey and accompanies him.

The bullock which accompanies the heifers is given to the bride's father in order that the two men may call one another Pakitang, i.e. the giver and receiver of a bullock, or father and son-in-law.

When the time arrives for the husband to fetch his wife, he takes with him three sheep (two rams and a young ewe). The ewe he presents to the mother to enable them to call one another Pakuan, i.e. the giver and receiver of a sheep, or mother and son-in-law.

The two rams are slaughtered together with two others, which the girl's father provides.

[illegible] [1] Formerly no Masai was able to marry until he had been an warrior, only that nowadays they have the ranks of the warriors (2-warriors) and [illegible] down as married men (2-warriors), or a comparatively early age.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1915
FL12 Masai FL12

Ogok: Wounds.

GEG

Ten ngorldor O-Masaai, ge ejo kolle, ewiki 'e-gisi, ewiki 'e-gejje-ebiitia kolki, ewiki-kiiko.

Kolo 'ee ndolig ngorldor O-Masaai kiook; E-ngok ake ngorldor ndolig ngoo kolle, ee 'e-gisi, ee 'e-gejje-ebiitia.

Kiee teeee ee-ipoore ee-O-Masaai ee ngorldor 'e-ebiitia kolki. Ebe O-Masaai ee ngorldor 'e-gisia.

Ee ngoore O-masaai ee-gisiig ene g' ebolig el-ngoog, ewiki; ene, ee ee Masai O-ntilgonok enkoon, enkiboyo gisia ee-ilooee ene.

Ore ee ang el-ngoog ge ele ekoyo nyelgisi, ge ebiki el-ooneni ele el-ngoog ebee, enkee ejo kiir-ooneni ilodoo, "Moro"; enkiokki ile ndolig. Ekiboyo O-kiilkee kiito ejo "Moro" 'e-ilooee; ee kiio ntoje "Moro," enkiboyo el-kolgoo. Kiee, ee el-kaaoki gisia ooje, "Moro" enkiboyo O-ntilgonok gisia.

Ko-gisiegoro.

GEG
GEG

Ee ebiig el-ooneni ee-ilio, ee ooje ejoee.

Ee ngoore el-ooneni ee-ilio ndolig, ewiki ebiig, ge ilooee ejoee.

Orioee: Theft.

If a Masai steals milk, or meat, or other small things, he is not fined.

Grown up people, however, rarely steal, it is the boys who take the milk and meat, etc.

Whilst the Masai do not consider it wrong to steal tribes of the nations, they dislike immensely having their cattle stolen.

Should any warriors steal an ox and be caught by the owner, they would have to pay; and if three men took part in the theft, each would have to pay three kolleen.

In the event of the owner following up the thieves and catching them in the act of slaughtering the stolen animal, one of the warriors might see him and call out "Gulley" in which case he would not be fined heavily. Whilst the others would be fined ten kolleen, he who had cried "Gulley" would only have to pay a young bull. Were all of them to cry "Gulley" they would all be fined in young bulls.

Enkoitoo.

If a warrior causes a woman to conceive, he marries her.

When a warrior loves a woman very much, he generally asks her to enable him to take her as wife.

* Ele kiook-ing.

Thus, a man gives his brother's wife or his paternal uncle's wife, or his paternal uncle's uncle's wife a ceve, a celi, or a lauli, and the terms of address used by the two, instead of being pa-ceive or pa-pa, as the case may be, are pa-lilidy, pa-celi, or pa-uncle; a father-in-law gives his daughter-in-law a celi, and the two call one another pa-celi; and a paternal uncle gives his nephew's wife a cha-gual and calls her pa-ceive. Similarly a man's first wife usually presents each successive wife with a celi on her marriage, and instead of using the term ne-ceive when speaking to one another the two women say pa-celi; a woman gives her husband's brother's wife a lauli as a wedding present, and the two women call one another pa-sighiro; and a mother-in-law adopts a ceve for her daughter-in-law some months after marriage, when she has learnt to love her for her husband, and the form of address is pa-lilidy. This method of address is carried even further, and in such instances none of the same family. A father, for instance, usually gives his son a celi when the boy is eight or nine years of age, and the two call one another pa-sighiro instead of papa and lauglio; a paternal uncle makes a similar present to his nephew, and the same form of address is used; an elder brother gives his younger brother a lauli, and the two call one another pa-lilidy; and paternal uncles often use the terms pa-ceive or pa-uncle when talking to each other.

The following terms are found: pa-lilidy, the lauli or the ceve; pa-uncle, the lauli; pa-ceive, the ceve; pa-sighiro, the celi; pa-lauli, the lauli; pa-lauglio, the celi celi; pa-celi, the celi; pa-ceve, pa-cevi, or pa-ceive, the lauglio; pa-ceve, the cha-gual; pa-lilidy, the celi; pa-ceve, the ceve; pa-uncle, the ceve; pa-sighiro, the lauli; pa-papa, the ceve lauli; pa-ceve, the ceve lauli.

With one exception, a preserve of this nature is not made, nor are these terms of address used, outside the father's family. Thus, a brother cannot give his sister a lauli so that the two might call one another pa-lilidy, because if the sister marries she will leave the family; a maternal uncle cannot give his nephew a celi and call him pa-sighiro, and maternal cousins may not address one another by the terms pa-ceve, etc. The exception to this rule is made when a man marries. He then presents his father-in-law with a lauli and his mother-in-law with a ceve, and the terms of address are pa-lilidy and pa-ceve. These presents have nothing to do with the cattle paid for the bride.

A maternal uncle (chapa) exercises great influence over his nephews, as it is believed that if he were to curse them they would die. He can at any time stop a fight to which one of his nephews is engaged by merely calling on his nephew to desist, as the nephew would be afraid of his right arm withering if he were to disobey. This power is to a certain extent conjectural, and if a man were to start beating his wife he would have to stop if his maternal nephew ordered him to do so. A father and any old man of the family can also usually stop a fight by telling the combatants to desist, but they are not necessarily listened to. A mother has more influence, and if her son refuses to obey her, she catches her stomach and says, "You were born in this"; whereupon the son is said to relent, and can only recover when his mother makes a rope of flax which she hangs round his neck.

3: Hollis C-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

93 ewuilomet (e-ongiri) a girl of the same sub-class as himself, or one who is more nearly related to him than third cousin, and only then if the terms of address used are ol-do'latoo and ee-e'latoo; and no traveller may cohabit with the wife of a member of his own age-grade if that man is married to one of his near relations, or to a daughter of his sub-class.[1]

581 The payment of the bridal price authorises a Masai to reckon the children
583 which his wives bear as his own; it further gives him a full measure of control 937 over both his wives and children, and they do all the household work and tend and look after his herds and flocks. But though individual marriage is recognised,
934 sexual promiscuity or something very like it prevails between all the men of one
935 age-grade and the women of the corresponding age-grade, subject to the rules of exogamy and relationship, which forbid a man to marry or have sexual intercourse with a woman of his own class or with a near relative. In other words the Masai may be said to live in a state of group marriage, based on the organisation of the whole community in age-grades, and restricted by the exogamy of the sub-class and the rules regarding incest.

634 If a man is knowingly guilty of incest, or has sexual intercourse with a daughter of his own sub-class, he is punished by his relations, who flog him and slaughter some of his cattle. If he fornicates or commits adultery with a daughter of a member of his own age-grade, he is punished by the members of his age-grade. His kraal is destroyed, he is severely beaten, and a number of his cows are lengthened. If a warrior or boy commits adultery with a wife of a man belonging to his father's age-grade, he is solemnly cursed by the members of that age-grade. Unless he pays the elders two cows, one for them to eat and the other to enable them to buy honey wine, and prays them to remove the curse, it is supposed he will die.

936 If a man unintentionally commits incest—and it is quite conceivable that a 634 man might not know his fourth or fifth cousin, for instance, should the two live in different districts—he has to present a cow to the girl's relations in order to "kill the relationship" (e-ur eng-angiri).

613 A man must abstain from having sexual intercourse with his wife as soon as 635 she becomes pregnant, and he may not again have connection with her until the [936] child cuts the two middle incisor teeth of its upper and lower jaws. Should this rule be broken it is believed that the child will never be strong. In the event of 682, a man having intercourse with a pregnant woman, and thereby causing her to 684 abort, he must submit to a punishment which is called ol-kishwata. All the women of the neighbourhood collect together and, having stripped, seize the guilty 833 person and flog him, after which they slaughter as many of his cattle as they can, smearing and suffocating the animals with their garments.

634 Other occasions when the sexes may not have sexual intercourse are when 676

[1] For the rules regarding hospitality see The Masai, p. 397. An age-grade consists of all those men who are circumcised at one of the four festivals held during every 7½ years. See The Masai, p. 302.

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

885 becoming bald or developing grey hairs, but that he could not take the regulation dose of purgative as formerly. From this, coupled with the fact that he could not take such liberties with his stomach, he gathered that he was not quite so strong as formerly. We can imagine how he would curse his luck and look foolish on discovering this unpalatable truth. There was nothing for it but to marry, and become a staid and respectable member of society. He had sown his wild oats.

583 885 [304] [302] [301] 585 885 Casting about, he fixed upon a damsel after his heart. The preliminaries having been arranged—the number of bullocks to be paid, &c.—she was sealed to him. Then an operation was performed on the damsel. Recovered from its effects, she had to wait till the calving season, as abundance of milk is an indispensable requisite in the honeymoon. Meanwhile, she allowed her hair to grow till it assumed the appearance of an old shoe-brush clotted up with blacking. Round the head she wore a band of cowries from which depended a number of strings, forming in fact the bridal veil. At last the happy day arrived, and the final seal was put upon the marriage by both parties disposing of their chain earrings, and substituting a double disc of copper wire arranged spirally. The lady also shaved her head, laid aside the garment of the ditto, and clothed herself with two skins, one suspended from the waist the other from the shoulder. Strangest of all, however, and strikingly indicative of the fact that he had exchanged the spear for the distaff, Moran had actually to wear the garment of a ditto for one month. Just imagine what fun it would be in this staid and dignified country of ours, if a young man had to spend his honeymoon in a cast-off suit of his wife's maiden clothes. What our friend's feelings were in this guise, I do not know, and this veracious chronicle does not admit of conjecture.

837 885 [842] And now Moran's sole idea was to rear a brood of young cattle-lifters, and so that he got them, he was not very particular as to the manner of it. He was not jealous, asked no awkward questions, and employed no spies. If a friend should visit him, he was hospitable in a degree not consistent with a high level of morality. We shall here prudently follow his example of non-inquisitiveness; for we might find that the domestic affairs of our friend's household will not bear a too curious scrutiny.

885 262 He was now wholly a changed being—as indeed who is not when he gets married! His strict rules of diet were

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1968) 1948 FL12 Maasai FL12
Kisonko

995 number of women available; at times a poor relation will join in a gaie with a richer one; aged, mothers and mothers-in-law and deceased brothers' wives are frequently included; and nowadays married women are found staying on with their fathers. Thus a symmetrically arranged 'gaie' is seldom found in practice.

The practical effect of this system is that a Maasai elder attempts to make a constant succession of wives, marrying new ones to replace those who depart with their sons. As there are no unmarried adult women amongst the Maasai, this means that senile old men take to wife girls only just past the age of puberty. As such girls have previously been accustomed to the companionship, both sexual and social, of the morans, it is little to be wondered at that they frequently run away, or attempt to run away, with their erstwhile companions. The elders have no idea of preventing this by making the girls' married life more attractive than their previous one; their only remedy is force.

The two primary motives for polygamy are the desire for children, and the necessity to have women to tend the cattle. There is little sexual jealousy amongst the Maasai; within the age-set the wives are communal to all age-mates, and an age-mate known to be the father of one's child is regarded as a special friend. Intercourse between men of one age and the wives of another is nominally prohibited, but its extensive practice is acknowledged by the Maasai, and in fact receives general connivance. Concerning the economic motive for polygamy, increasing herds necessitate more women to tend them, and at the same time offer the means of obtaining such women. Not that the actual dowry is heavy — usually three heifers and a bullock — but a man prefers to marry off his daughters to a rich elder, rather than to a poor moran. Thus economics and sociology are closely linked, and action in one sphere will have repercussions in the other.

162 995 The extent to which polygyny is practised can be judged from the following table :—

Distribution of Wives amongst Adult Male Population.

	Kibaya		Sawetoto		Engonu-mut		Longido		Total
	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives
Total unmarried	102	—	139	—	53	—	151	—	441	—
One wife	65	65	62	62	50	50	134	134	311	311
Two wives	46	92	46	92	15	30	46	92	153	306
Three wives	13	39	12	36	11	33	10	30	46	138
Four wives	5	22	6	24	5	20	1	4	20	80
Five wives	1	5	2	10	1	5	—	—	4	20
Over five wives	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	25	4	25
Total polygamists	68	—	68	—	32	—	61	—	227	—
Total of men and women	235	233	283	244	135	128	346	285	999	900

Breach of No. 4.—A married man who breaks this regulation and is found out is very severely punished, the punishment being left to the women of the village, who have the right to beaten and mutilate all his cattle.

Breach of No. 6.—The punishment for this is as for a breach of No. 4 as far as the women is concerned, and likewise the man must take leave to the aggrieved husband to avoid a scene.

Breach of No. 7.—A man who breaks this regulation is held to be solely responsible, no guilt whatever attaching to the woman. In this offence (intercourse with a member of man's own sub-clan) is the worst possible, the penalty is very severe indeed. Every animal the man possesses—cattle and sheep alike—is heavily and otherwise maimed and left to die, and if the man can be caught he is so severely beaten and maltreated that he is almost certain to die too.

The Marriage Ceremonies.—The usual number of animals transferred on marriage settlement are :—

3 Bullocks.
1 Ox.
1 Ewe yearling.
1 Ram.
Also honey beer in large quantities.

Of these, the ram is slaughtered by the mother of the bride, who is anointed with its fat.

When a girl who has conceived before initiation is being married by a man other than the lover who was responsible for her condition, only one bullock is given (instead of the three mentioned above) at the time of the marriage, but the other two bullocks must be handed over at each time as the first of her children is initiated.

Part VI.—Family Life.

The Relation of Parents to Children.—As already indicated, a man's legal children among the Kamé are—as often as not—only his by virtue of his being the husband of their mother, and quite irrespective of physical parentage. Nevertheless, fathers are very proud of their children, and take considerable interest in their welfare. They must always be present at the initiation of a son or daughter, and feel very hurt if for any reason they are prevented from doing so. When a son grows up and eventually forms a village of his own, his father and the other men of the village who belong to his father's generation may not come and feed at the new village until one of them has been presented with a bullock called ndawa by the young man.

3. Hawaii Pao.—Further Notes on the Hawaii of Kenya Valley.

Marriage.—The women may not marry till after the B-I rite, and he not usually do so till after their first Gi-Ngi'ulu. The case stated by Mr. Lindsay,* in which a married man had sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice.

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be redeemed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where from a man of his generation he may choose to which but belonging to his generation he will sleep. Where it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to remain it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 300) are observed. It is said that if a woman is positively unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle.

On the other hand, the members of our generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of our generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women.

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his child can do all enough, and then sends him to fetch her back.

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (another's way, but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister.

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names.

Father-in-law
Mother-in-law
Son-in-law
Daughter-in-law
} Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Gi Mawi. Relationship is not recognized beyond first cousin. The Wawi take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Wawi descent, Gi Mawiini stand, he is proud of the fact.

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the kyanza, except for those of Lalana or very influential old men. These are buried under mirra of stones.

* See p. 300 of this volume.

Betrothal

[illegible] A man usually chooses his wife himself and, after obtaining the girl's consent, asks her father to approach her parents. If they agree the girl's hand is pledged with [illegible], and she may no longer live in the same house as her betrothed. According to Hollis, a man makes the first approach to the girl's father himself, giving him full details and how on where the girl is also, does relatives and family. It is considered wrong for a girl to become pregnant during the betrothal period, and the engagement may be broken off, a custom of which advantage is taken by girls who are betrothed to a man they do not wish to marry, since betrothals are sometimes arranged without the girl's consent. Tribes, for instance, sometimes arrange betrothals between their young men and daughters in order to strengthen the bonds of friendship between them (or also among the Bonda), and betrothals may also place between women and babies, and even between girls.

Regulation of Marriage

[illegible] This depends on three things: clan, age-set, and kinship. (a) According to Hollis, marriage between clans is allowed, but exclusive with exogamous groups (see below, p. 148); a man may marry a woman of another subclan of his own clan. Bonda says he may not marry a woman of the mother's subclan. Tuesday on Bhaiti, however, says that (based) intermarriage between clans is allowed, each clan is an exogamous group. Federicks agrees that the clan is the exogamous group (see p. 124). (b) A man may not marry a woman who is by custom considered as belonging to the age-set (ad-jamm) prior to his own, to his own age-set, or (if he belongs to the Right-hand Divisions) to a woman of the Left-hand Divisions, but he may marry one of the same generation* (ib.). See below, p. 117, for details of the age-set system. (c) A man may not marry a woman whose kinship to him is closer than that of third cousin, and then only if they will each other's brother and sister.

Betrothals

[illegible] Payment of bride-wealth establishes the husband's rights to his wife's generative faculties and over the children she bears him. The condition of each paid varies in very slightly. Hollis gives four as five cows and one ox to the girl's father (the ox being taken at the marriage feast), and a cow and ox to her mother (the last also being eaten). Bonda says the bride's father is given three bullocks and two cows, one of which is designated "[illegible]" on the eve of the feast, "[illegible]" on account of the other on the day and the father-in-law will each other [illegible] "[illegible]" given and another of an ox." To the bride's mother are given two goats, which are designated, and a cow, on account of which he and the mother-in-law will each other [illegible]. Federicks gives the mother as two cows and three cows or bullock, including the "[illegible]" ox.

Marriage

[illegible] There appears to be little ceremonial or a wedding. The chief ceremony is a feast at the bride's home, of which the bride and bridegroom do not partake. This is followed by a ceremonial journey of the bride to her husband's home; she wears a freshly dried garment, carries a gourd ornamented with cowries, and is accompanied by two men and two old women; on her arrival, she is given a child to look. [illegible] Thomson says that on the day of marriage and for a month afterwards (I understand him aright) the husband wears female dress.* If the husband is still a student he may not have sexual intercourse with his wife, though they may live together at

* Hollis, p. 45.

* Unexplained; [illegible] attributes this [illegible] to fear to offenders of wife, and not always to [illegible] or [illegible] misunderstanding.

/42 cont./

The designations ekela, ko gila, ewiki, and ko gila are used only as long as the above-mentioned words of address are not affected by gifts of livestock. This explains why they are used only among children. This does not apply to the address of ewiki ko ki, because the girl is not in a position to make the customary gift of livestock.

The son and daughter of the brother or of the sister are addressed, as long as they remain in childhood, with no gender of - ny ekila. The address for the grandfather runs ko ekela, for the grandmother kuku. The grandfather calls the grandson ko ekela; the grandmother, kuku ki. Brother-in-law and sister-in-law are called by some or the terms of address derived from livestock designations.

99.

Conjugal relations. -- Betrothal. -- Gifts of betrothal. -- Bride price. -- Freedom of the bride price. -- Obstacles to marriage. -- Wedding. -- Beginning of the marriage. -- Dissolution of the marriage.

The conjugal relationships are very loose, and in some views about them the Masai stand in unfavorable contrast to their unfriendly Negro neighbors. As among the latter -- and, to be sure, without exception (1) -- > 1. The so-called monogamy of the Wandrobo is in practice the hidden polygamy.

polygamy prevails among the Masai. The number of wives of a man is limited neither by law nor custom, but depends only on his means. If a man has but one wife, poverty is always the reason. There are no temporary or trial marriages; rather, marriage is a more stable relationship. The woman through the marriage passes into the family of her /44/ husband, but not into his lineage; rather she retains membership in her own lineage.

Pay cows.

[1]
[2]
[3]
[4]
[5]
[6]
[7]
[8] [9]
[10]

for the contemplative idleness of the married man. But before the marriage takes place the bride price is to be paid first.

As bride price (na ingiliza = the things, each part of them, na ingi = the thing) he first pays the bride's father five pots of honey from which beer will be brewed, furthermore three cows and so on. The bride's mother receives a male and a female sheep. The so and the male sheep will be eaten on the feast taking place on the wedding day. Around that day, more often afterwards than before, the /[illegible]/ bridegroom further brings the father-in-law a cow and the mother-in-law a female sheep that has not yet had young, whereupon the former call each other ba-gwali (1).

1. Cf. Second Part, [illegible], verse of address for relatives.

while the bridegroom and the mother-in-law call each other ba-gwa. Even now, every wife married later receives at the wedding from the principal wife of her husband a year-old heifer, whereupon the two call each other ti-wa-ba. From the eldest child of her husband two goats or sheep, hence the address ba-mkwa, and from the another children of her to six years old and upward a goat or a sheep each, through which the address ba-gwa, ba-mkwa, or ba-kwa is brought about. During the period immediately after the wedding, the mother-in-law receives from the son-in-law several more pots of honey, skins for clothing, and iron wire for making leg and arm ornaments. In the family of Chief Zondwa he received, as he told me, only a cow as bride price for one of his daughters, while the mother of the girl gets two donkeys, a bull and a cow with calf. Since the last clockpoint it has happened not infrequently that a man is not in a position to pay the customary bride price. He then gives the father-in-law only one cow and leads her to him on a rope twisted out of grass. Whenever the bridegroom or young married man delivers the gifts of lwanzo himself, he always sends the honey by a woman. She is either a wife married previously, his mother, his older sister, or a wife of his brother. Only when the distance is very great does he deliver the honey himself,

/[illegible]/

[illegible] not clean, however, but with the support of a friend. The honey pot is hung on a horizontal pole, one of them grasping each end. It is not the weight of the pot that makes this method of carrying necessary, but an ancient custom, about whose meaning I have discovered nothing. Wealthy people often also pay up to five cows more than usual, which is then regarded as the highest price that may be demanded. Sometimes, as well as daughters of distinguished people, that is, of wealthy and influential people, often need above the average price. The price for childless widows and for children, divorced women is the same as for young girls. For a widow who bore daughters, on the other hand, only a male and a female head of cattle are paid. In order that her father does not receive bride price twice, however, he gives back from the first one as much as the second one amounts to. For the second, third, etc. wife, just as much is paid as for the first. If the bride price is to part delivered for the bridegroom, the women nevertheless never lose possession permanently, and likewise the children born before the final settlement of the bride price belong to him. If, however, he does obviously refuse to pay the rest, the father-in-law or the mother-in-law has the right to take back the daughter with her children in exchange for the return of what has already been paid. The cattle paid as bride price must be plain black or white. With the payment of the bride price, the bride withdraws from her family. In /[illegible]/ some lineages, however, there still prevails a — as it means — formerly general custom, according to which the father-in-law does not have the right to interfere in the domestic relations of the young couple until the son-in-law has further given him a bull. The relatives of the bridegroom need not contribute the payment of the bride price, but usually do so if it is necessary. The bride does not get a dowry, just as the bridegroom does not receive a gift from his parents or parents-in-law. If one of the betrothed dies before the marriage or dissolves the betrothal, the portion of the bride price that was paid is returned. If the husband takes the wife out of the marriage remains fruitless, this has no influence on the bride price paid, while a possible remainder not yet paid remains unpaid. On the other hand, if a childless woman leaves her husband, the

[illegible]

[illegible] /

• [illegible] Before he has ever seen the bride price if he grants his daughter [illegible]. If the woman who has no [illegible] children, her husband keeps them. In this case the woman's parents do not pay back anything.

[illegible] On the day the parents-in-law receive the bride price, the bridegroom gives his elder brother of the bride a year-old heifer, each of his other brothers and each sister of the bride a male head of cattle. This is only a gift of friendship and has nothing to do with the bride price. Exchange of other presents, but does not result in a valid marriage, may seem from there onwards. On the other hand, it is not infrequent that the girl flees from her [illegible] but as soon as she reaches [illegible] age and runs to her lover. It often happens then that the girl's father sends a band of boys armed with sticks after her so that through the beating she will be induced to return. Since the boys act at the [illegible] of the old men, neither the bridegroom nor anyone else may hinder them. In order to protect the girl from such violence, only one [illegible] remains to the bridegroom, to leave the band with her immediately and move into the forest for a few days. With this he makes it understood that he will appease with weapons anyone who might still venture to take his bride from him and at the same time he deprives the girl's father of any further right to object. As soon as the couple in the forest have consumed a cow, they return to the band, where, without further ceremony, they are recognized as married. Only the girls of the [illegible] and [illegible] tribes do not have this possibility of self-help. The both lineages believe that a girl who goes to her lover in order to remain with him as his wife without her father's consent will die in only a few days after the flight.

[illegible] In olden times the bride was not supposed to belong to the tribe of her bridegroom. The Governor's epidemics of the last 30 years, however, which resulted in the death of many thousands of men, have modified this law somewhat. Accordingly, [illegible] a man may marry a woman who belongs to his tribe, but not to his lineage, whereby in individual districts there is the further prerequisite that the girl came to him of her own free will and, after being sent back by one one or more times, remained in this agnatic. Although such a legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age-class (1)

[illegible]

1. Cf. Chapter III of this part.

[illegible] or to his age-class exclusive [illegible]. The bride may not be from an older age-class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can be permitted for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the latest are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between later brother and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage; it is precisely in membership in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

Moreover, a marriage between relatives of the-bride and those of mother-bride is not permitted.

Widows [illegible] or divorced women who have living men may not marry again, but live with men who belong to the age-class of their deceased husband. If there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man. The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

The wedding feast, originally in accordance with an earlier custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the hamlet in which the bride's parents live.

[illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] of great [illegible]. Into the hour of which the male [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] [illegible] face with white clay. On the circumcision day the women of the local [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible], for which the girl's father has given a herd of cattle [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] in the night. Their captives are not taken. The men from the enemy who can be taken are killed, but not mutilated; the women, on the contrary, are usually spared and freed. It also happens, however, that these warriors who are undertaking their first expedition also strike down women, in order not to return as [illegible]. But even in this case pregnant women are spared, for it is believed that God punishes the murderer of a pregnant woman by the death of his own children. Only very exceptionally does one take along a few women or children. The latter, however, do not become slaves; rather, the captured woman very soon becomes the lawful wife of the man who captured her, just as he also regards the kidnapped child exactly like his own. A ceremony of adoption does not exist; the man simply hands the child over to his wife, who treats it like her own. The next day they march on toward the home lands. In the evening a there fence is again built, and at the same time the share of the booty destined for the [illegible] is set apart. The total booty of every war expedition is given a name. This is determined on the second evening, while the men sit eating. It is called for example, [illegible], because men fell on both sides. Other names are [illegible] of the provisions to bring. Usemark's rulers along on the expedition did not last, and the warriors, out of hunger and contrary to the existing custom, had to sell one fruit [illegible] of the [illegible] soldiers suffered on the way because of a shortage of water [illegible]. Derived from the call [illegible], that is, approximately "only courage, if it is not possible, what does it matter," a frequent saying if one believes oneself inferior to the opponent in strength. The next morning, early, before the departure, the leaders distribute the booty

Fig. 45. On picket duty.

[2311 cont.]

[4.37] designers for fast use or so edge on [illegible], i.e., war cloth, because the warriors like to dress up in it; the lawyers they sell so edge but, i.e., colored cloth, and the gamers, of course.

[4.3] The demand for the individual trade articles varies a great deal. At times the need for one kind is so well supplied that it is either not taken at all or far below its value. Correspondingly, the value of another kind often rises disproportionately high through the heightened demand. A lengthy discussion back and forth precedes every exchange or purchase transaction. As a sign of a settlement, the seller spits

[2.15] on the object. The exchange failures or mere only extremely accustomed are granted credit. The risk is the seller, for certain, does not pass to the buyer until the day after purchase, otherwise immediately.

[4.37, 4.38] The creditor proceeds against a recalcitrant debtor first by complaint, and if the occasion without effect, he helps himself to his property by force, provided that the debtor can comfortably pay, but for some reason, usually one that has nothing to do with the debt, does not want to pay a need that is also often taken as the only one. Only upon his impoverishment will the creditor become severely pushing.

[2.22] Then, if the debtor is incapable of paying, his brothers and half brothers, or if such are not present or are unavailable, his personal creditor must pay. Whether the former or the latter pay, the repayment of the debt is always arranged so that no great economic hardship arises for the one paying. The creditor, if he does not voluntarily

[2.26] enter upon the arrangement, is forced into it by the public opinion, which is often expressed in violence. As inconsiderate collection of an outstanding debt actually never occurs rather, the creditor almost always displays an extraordinary kind heartedness and forbearance about it and often too himself he put off for years or waits patiently until the debtor or his heir is in such a good position that the repay-

[3.01] ment of the debt will be easy for them. It may also happen that the creditor takes a daughter of the debtor and, after she has reached marriageable age in the service of one of his wives, marries her.

[3.6] Since the creditor, even in this case, [illegible] pays his father-in-law the bride price, the debt remains standing in full and the kinship

[2.72] bond only makes its repayment more certain. The heir is liable for [illegible] he may marry when he is a certain age. When he becomes an elder he may take his brother (if he wants) and two sharp of the family cattle (two male with a given sharp of cattle) and move off to join others in a village (Chakwadha, 1942).

[illegible] The associated girls of the tribe live in the senior's compound and normally each man has one favorite girl who becomes his associate. They hold an that usually that girl becomes the senior's first wife.

[illegible] Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called [illegible] or (Chamwenda) [illegible]. Each kraal consists of an outer circular stock fence with a series of gates, and two such kraal sides. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Often around the huts are small stone fences in which young livestock are kept. The cattle of the village are normally herded into the space in the center of the kraal each night for protection from lion and from leopard predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

[illegible] When a kraal matures, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left.

Dr Shelton Collection (1896-1904) 1905
P1.12 Manai P1.12

The giyaama.

The giyaama, Ubaama, religious organ, made an-Ebo, gives a bull, ni'ya ni-bambara.

One of ndire an-Ebo bitaa, ndirbbi ni'ya an-ndire a ni-bambara. Ebaa bibi giyaamaba.

One of ndire ancestral an-Ebo, ndirbbi ni'ya an-ndire, ancestral.

One go-ndire, ndirbbi 'n-gidaa a 'n-ga-ngaaba, 'n-dawaa ndi, a ni-bibidig ndire 'n-dawaa, a ni-bibidig 'n-bamb-ngi. Ni'ya ni ngi-ngaaba ngi'ya an-ndire, ancestral.

One bibi-bibidig ndire 'n-dawaa ngaa ngi'ya ni-ndire ni-ngaaba ngi Pabidig.

One of ndire ndire ndi a-figaaba'ngi ngi, ndirbbi 'n-dawaa ndi (2-bawa ngaa a a-ngaaba a 'n-gaa'), ni-ndire ngi-ngaaba ngi Pabaa.

Bigidig bibaa-bawa gaaba'ngaa ngi bambaa ngaa 'n-ngaaba a 'n-dawaa.

Marriage[1].

When a Manai wishes to marry, he announces his courting by making love to a girl while she is still young, and by presenting some tobacco to her father.

He then waits until the girl grows up, when he again offers presents of honey and tobacco.

More honey is given to the father of his daughter's sweetheart.

On the young woman's marriage day she presents to his future father-in-law's house, and takes with her the dowry, viz. three bullocks and two bullocks, one of the latter being sold to keep the bullock company, which the other is slaughtered at the door of the hut. The sister also takes a pot of honey and accompanies him.

The bullock which accompanies the bullock is given to the bride's father in order that the two men may call one another Pabidig, i.e. the giver and receiver of a bullock, or father and son-in-law.

When the time arrives for the husband to fetch his wife, he takes with him three sheep (two rams and a young ewe). The ewe he presents to the mother to enable them to call one another Pabaa, i.e. the giver and receiver of a sheep, or mother and son-in-law.

The two rams are slaughtered together with two others, which the girl's father provides.

[illegible] * Hymenal an Manai non-able to marry until he had been on several raids, but nowadays they have the ranks of the warriors (2-bawa) and with them an married men (2-ndirbbi) at a comparatively early age.

Cattle per Gate.

Number of cattle.		Gates		Percentage.
Under 50	=	50	=	[illegible]
50 — 100	=	40	=	[illegible]
101 — 200	=	100	=	[illegible]
201 — 300	=	111	=	[illegible]
301 — 400	=	36	=	[illegible]
401 — 500	=	11	=	[illegible]
501 — 600	=	6	=	[illegible]
601 — 700	=	0
701 — 800	=	0
801 — 900	=	1	=	[illegible]
901 —1000	=	1
Over 1000	=	1
		Total 314

As 100,000 cattle were owned by these 314 gates it follows that the average number per gate is just over three hundred, but this figure is misleading, for two-thirds of the gates possess less than two hundred head.*

The advantages of marriage not only include the acquisition of a wives to bear one's children and to tend one's cattle. For marriage sets up a new relationship with one's wife's family, whereby each party is expected to help the other. If a father-in-law loses his cattle by drought or disease, the son-in-law is expected to contribute towards a new herd. If a son-in-law strikes hard times, the father-in-law — if only for the sake of his daughter — will consider cattle to him.

At times, also, a daughter will, by amicable arrangement with the son-in-law, return to live with her father for considerable periods, being visited from time to time by her husband, or again a grandson will be sent from home to help herd his grandfather's cattle.

The fulfilment of these various obligations leads to much travelling and consequent contact, almost as much as the actual betrothal and marriage does. This latter is a lengthy process. Early betrothal is the rule and involves a long engagement, during which the man is expected to maintain contact with his future in-laws. Frequent travelling is also necessary in other connections; for example a man goes himself or sends a son to examine the water and pasture of the area to which he proposes to move, and as we have seen the moran are always on the move, visiting friends, begging bullocks for meat-feasts, etc. So in spite of the size of the area which they inhabit, and of their scattered settlements, the Maasai maintain very close contact amongst themselves.

Another point of considerable importance in Maasai family affairs is the adoption of children, frequently practised both in respect of Maasai

* The mean number of cattle per gate lies between 100 and 200 or between 25 and 50 head per adult male taxpayer—Ed.

[illegible] to of animals. It is apparently this fact which explains why there are so few cases of unmarried girls conceiving despite the Bunyoko sexual organization. My informants insist that cases of conception only occur when a girl has been persuaded by a man to have full intercourse just after her menstruation. It is quite easy for a girl to see to it that she does not have full intercourse if she does not want it, since there are always at least two other couples sleeping on the same bed, and there is also always a married woman in the same hut to see to it that no harm is used by the men.

(For details of procedure should an unmarried girl conceive, see Gidhood.)

[illegible] Permanent Lovers.—Besides the usual day-to-day lovers described above, a girl may also have a more permanent lover in the mangate in which she lives, chosen from among the ranks of those who have been her usual lovers. The actual choosing ceremony takes place in public, but the choice is usually made privately beforehand. This permanent lover is some man who will eventually be the girl's husband, but this is not usual, as usually every Mosi girl is betrothed during childhood (see Marriage), and usually girls are quite content to marry those to whom they were first betrothed. Should a girl be unwilling to marry the man to whom she is betrothed she usually continues to become pregnant by her "permanent lover" and to persuade him to marry her (see Gidhood).

[illegible] The actual ceremony of selecting a "permanent lover" takes place as a public affair. A group of the warriors, including the man, collect together and one of the man's friends then summons the girl and hands her a spear, and she is told to go and give it to the man she chooses as "permanent lover." Having thus been publicly accepted, the warrior from then on becomes responsible for supplying the girl with such ornaments and necklaces as she may need from time to time, and he also gives her a special necklace to be worn as a token. After this ceremony she continues as before to sleep with any of the warriors who may ask her to do so in the way detailed above (see Sex Life). Equally the men may sleep with any of the other girls, but the girl and her "permanent lover" can arrange to sleep together without adopting the usual formula and procedure.

[illegible] The Rumbu Ceremony.—After nine years of Junior Warriorhood a big ceremony called Rumbu takes place, at which all the members of a given group from the whole of the Mosi country, north, south, east, and west, are required to be present. This ceremony marks their rise from Junior to Senior Warriorhood. During the whole of the nine years of Junior Warriorhood they have not been allowed to shave their heads at all, but their hair has been gradually tied and twisted into a long pigtail at the back of the head, which is the sign of Junior Warriorhood. (The only exception to this rule of not shaving the head during Junior Warriorhood is in case of severe illness, when the head may be shaved if so desired.)

[illegible]

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

from having the honour of the feast of her initiation." Should the man decide to marry the girl, this heifer is counted as one of those which must be handed over for the marriage transaction (see Marriage). 848 582 884

Girls' Initiation.—Among the Masai girls are initiated singly and not in groups, nor are they initiated until a good many years after puberty, for as soon as a girl is initiated she must be married, and cease to have any intercourse with the warriors or boys. Except under the circumstances described above, a girl is not initiated until her breasts begin to droop to a marked extent. As soon as this is noticeable, her mother informs the father, who makes the necessary arrangements. If the girl's mother is living at the time at a manyatta with one of her sons, then the girl's initiation will take place at the manyatta, otherwise it will take place at the home village. The essential point is that initiation must take place in the mother's hut (or in the hut of another of her father's wives, should her own mother be dead). The father comes to the place when the day of the ceremony has been fixed and beer is prepared. A ram called olekelnjatha is slaughtered either before the actual operation or just after it. This is the "ram for childbearing," and is supposed to insure fertility. This ram is eaten by all those present at the ceremony. The actual operation is performed by an old woman, who is a skilled operator (she may be either a Masai or a Dorobo), and the girl sits on a skin inside the hut during the operation. The operation is said to be the same as that used by the Kikuyu on their girls, and this is a form of clitoridectomy, but exact details cannot be obtained from the men. As soon as the operation is over the operator washes the girl to "cleanse her of the blood spilt" and a ram is then slaughtered and given to the operator. This ram is called oletuguet. Next a ram is killed called olkelelartat to provide meat and fat for the girl during convalescence. 884 582 [825] [304] [171]

Shaving Ceremony.—Finally after the girl is healed and before she can go to her husband's village, a ram is killed called olbarnet, which is the "ram for the shaving," and at the same time the girl's head is shaved by her mother. [302]

PART V.—MARRIAGE.

Exogamy.—Marriage is always exogamous as far as sub-clans are concerned, but marriage within the main clan is allowed. This rule not only applies to marriage but to all forms of sexual intercourse. No one, whether as a boy, warrior, or a married may, may at any time ever have sexual intercourse with any woman, girl or child of his own sub-clan. This is the strictest rule of all Masai sex regulations, and the penalty for any breach of this rule is very severe indeed (see below). 582 614 834

A woman remains a member of her own sub-clan even after marriage, but her children belong to the sub-clan of her husband. 614 585 851

Betrothal.—Amongst the Masai there are two usual methods of betrothal:— 584

(1) Betrothal of unborn children.

(2) Betrothal of infant girls.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

584 The method of betrothing an unborn child is as follows :—A man or boy wishing to do so seeks a pregnant woman (provided, of course, that her husband is not of his own sub-clan), and goes to her and anoints her on the stomach either with fat or with red ochre mixed with castor oil. By so doing he pledges that if the child born is a girl he will eventually marry her. Should the child be a boy he is bound to it in friendship for life. In the event of the child being a girl he must, from birth onwards, present the child with small gifts from time to time, and as the girl grows up supply her with such necklaces or ornaments as she may demand from him. A man or boy wishing to betroth himself to an infant girl does so simply by giving the child a necklace, and from then on he must supply her with such ornaments as she may require. Of course, a man must first of all ascertain that the child —whether unborn or an infant—is not already betrothed. A man may cancel a betrothal if he wishes to do so (but he cannot break his pledge of friendship with a boy in the case of a boy being born to a woman whom he anointed when she was pregnant), and the father of a girl may cancel betrothal by refusing to drink any more of the suitor's beer. If a girl, as she grows up, decides that she does not wish to marry the man to whom she is betrothed, she can easily avoid doing so by arranging with one of her lovers to have intercourse with her just after menstruation, and thereby conceiving. She then has the option of marrying this lover should he be willing.

584 884 Normal Marriage (as a First Wife).—It is clear from the above description of betrothal that it is unlikely that a girl will reach her time for initiation unbetrothed. Should she do so by any chance, her father would at once make every effort to find her a husband, probably from among the older men who already have several wives. Nor would the girl object in any way, for to be initiated and not be married directly afterwards would make her the laughing stock of all the neighbourhood. When a 585 girl is to be the first wife of a man, it usually means that her husband-to-be is still a member of a warrior group. This, of course, means that he cannot in the normal way live with his wife for some time. This fact, however, in no way interferes with the marriage ceremony and transaction, the presence of the husband not being considered in any way necessary.

[591] The respective fathers of the girl and of the man make all the arrangements and transactions when the girl is initiated (see below), and as soon as these have been concluded, and the girl has recovered from the operation and been through the shaving ceremony, she goes to the village of her husband's family, where she has already built herself a hut (or had it built for her by her friends).

As a married woman her main duty in life now is to bear children, just as it was her duty before initiation to avoid conception. If her husband is still in the warrior class and may, therefore, not have any sexual intercourse with her, this is no hindrance [837] to her in performing this duty, as she may now have intercourse with any married men of sub-clans other than her own.

Betrothal

584 A man usually chooses his wife himself and, after obtaining the girl's consent, asks his father to approach her parents; if they agree the girl's head is smeared with fat, and she may no longer live in the same kraal as her betrothed. According to Hollis, a man makes the first approach to the girl's father himself, giving him first tobacco, and later on when the girl is older, more tobacco and honey. It is considered wrong for a girl to become pregnant during the betrothal period, and the engagement may be broken off, a custom of which advantage is taken by girls who are betrothed to a man they do not wish to marry, since betrothals are sometimes arranged without the girl's consent. Fathers, for instance, sometimes arrange betrothals between their young sons and daughters in order to strengthen the bonds of friendship between them (as also among the Nandi); and betrothals may take place between warriors and babies, and even unborn girls.

Regulation of Marriage

582 614 This depends on three things: clan, age-set, and kinship. (a) According to Hollis, marriage between clans is allowed, but sub-clans are exogamous groups (see below, p. 119); a man may marry a woman of another sub-clan of his own clan. Merker says he may not marry a woman of his mother's sub-clan. Tombo ole Mbaei, however, says that though intermarriage between clans is allowed, each clan is an exogamous group; Fosbrooke agrees that the clan is the exogamous group (see p. 120). (b) A man may not marry a woman who is by custom considered as belonging to the age-set (ol-porror) senior to his own, to his own age-set, or (if he belongs to the Right-hand Circumcision) to a woman of the Left-hand Circumcision. But he may marry one of the same generation[19] (ol-aji). See below, p. 117, for details of the age-set system. (c) A man may not marry a woman whose relationship to him is closer than that of third cousin, and then only if they call each other o-le-sotua and en-e-sotua.

Bridewealth

583 Payment of bride-cattle establishes the husband's rights in his wife's procreative faculties and over the children she bears him. The numbers of stock paid seem to vary slightly. Merker gives them as three cows and one ox to the girl's father (the ox being eaten at the marriage feast), and a ewe and ram to her mother (the ram also being eaten). Hollis says the bride's father is given three heifers and two oxen, one of which is slaughtered "at the door of the hut"; on account of the other ox the man and his father-in-law call each other pa-kiteg, "giver and receiver of an ox." To the bride's mother are given two rams, which are slaughtered, and a ewe, on account of which he and his mother-in-law call each other pa-ker (sheep). Fosbrooke gives the number as two oxen and three cows or heifers, including the "pa-kiteg" ox.

Marriage

585 There appears to be little ceremonial at a wedding. The chief occurrence is a feast at the bride's home, of which the bride and bridegroom do not partake. This is followed by a ceremonial journey of the bride to her husband's home; she wears a freshly oiled garment, carries a gourd ornamented with cowries, and is accompanied by two men and two old women; on her arrival, she is given a child to feed. [391] Thomson says that on the day of marriage and for a month afterwards (if I understand him aright) the husband wears female dress.[20] If the husband is still a warrior he may not have sexual intercourse with his wife, though they may live together at

[19] Merker, p. 47.

[20] Discrepancies between authorities may sometimes be due to difference of tribe, and not always to incorrect information or mere misunderstanding.

/44 cont./

584 A betrothal in earliest childhood is not infrequent among the Masai, though also not common by far. In such cases the father of the boy, several months after the birth of a girl, asks for her [572] for his son. Such a betrothal is in no way binding; rather it seems to have only the value and purpose of strengthening a friendship between the two fathers and assuring each other of mutual aid in case of impoverishment. It probably need scarcely be mentioned that in connection with a betrothal in early childhood it is only a matter of the betrothal of the boy to his later first, that is, principal, wife. Usually the betrothal to the later principal wife is not entered into until the boy is 20 or 22 and the girl eight to ten years old. For the former, his father makes the proposal to the mother of the girl, after the bridegroom himself has made sure of the girl's consent. As soon as the mother has then obtained the consent of her husband, she anoints the head of the bride with butter or beef fat, as a sign that the betrothal has been accepted and the girl is now betrothed. As such she is called ateséra. During the period of betrothal the couple do not come together; the bridegroom avoids the kraal in which his bride lives, but, if he should enter it, the girl hides from him. Thus the two live completely separated from each other, and, to be sure, in two different warrior kraals. The bridegroom, first as young warrior [591] (ol barnóti, el barnót), then as actual warrior (ol morāni, el móran), lives with his companions and a corresponding number of young girls in one kraal, the bride, on the other hand, with other 584 young girls and warriors in another, distant one. If the girl be- 848 comes pregnant during this time, it is regarded as a disgrace and usually leads to dissolving the betrothal. If the latter, by way of exception, is not the case, the betrothed ones marry as soon as possible. Otherwise the girl awaits her confinement in the hut of an old woman from among her relatives, and after the nursing period is over she goes to another, distant warrior kraal, in the 582 hope of finding a husband there. Only when the warrior is tired of the military life, when his physical strength falls behind that of the majority of his companions, does he think of getting married, in order not long afterwards to exchange the military life

[P. 282]

'N-DĪUN OO-'L-MAASAE
MASAI CUSTOMS

301 Seghenge oo-'murto oo 'surutya oo-'ñgorōyok, oo 'n-gulye-tōkitin.

Nēji pe eata 'ñgorōyok i-seghenge oo-'murto oo 'surutya [585] [554] ēji p' eiyōlōuni 'njere 'ñgorōyok kunda.

[881] Amu itadua, 'l-Maasae emurat in-doiye etaa bōtoro, nēji p'ēori en-dito o e-ñgorōyōni.

Amu ten epali 'ñgorōyok meata 'seghenge oo-'murto araki 'surutya, nemeiyōlōuni e-ñgorōyōni o en-dito.

881 561 Itadua, en-dito namurati too-'l-Maasae mēji en-dito ēji e-ñgorōyōni: kake ēji e-siangiki oo metōīsho.

Ten a kiti naleñg, naa e-ñgorōyōni ake etiu nēja.

301 554 Eiyōlōuni e-ñgorōyōni too-'n-dōkitin uni, 'surutya, oo 'seghenge oo-'murto, oo 'l-okesena. Nemeata 'n-doiye kunna pōkin.

'Musetani epika 'n-doiye oo 'n-gutiti-seghenge náirina, naaji 'seengani, o ol-gilishōni, oo 'n-gulye-kutiti-tōkitin naapik i-murto, 'l-pisya loo-'n-giyaa, oo 'seghenge oo-'ng-aik, oo 'n-oo-'n-gejek.

Women's iron necklaces and ear-rings, and other matters.

The reason why women wear necklaces of iron and ear-rings (called 'surutya) is in order that it shall be known that they are married.

The Masai circumcise girls when they grow up, and these ornaments are worn to make a distinction between girls and women.

For if the women were left without the iron necklaces or the ear-rings, it could not be ascertained whether they were women or girls.

A Masai girl who has been circumcised is not called girl but woman. That is to say, she is called young woman until she gives birth to a child.

Even if she is very young, she is considered to be grown up as soon as she has been circumcised.

A woman is recognizable by three things, the ear-rings, the iron-necklace, and the big garment, none of which girls possess.

Girls wear beads, small pieces of iron wire (called 'seengani), and other trifles round their necks, and a small cloth. They also have chains in their ears, and armlets and anklets of iron.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

PLATE XIII

[585]

[Facing P. 283]

1. Married woman's ear with e-surutyai ear-ring and ear ornaments [$\frac{1}{3}$].
2. Stone ear-ring weighing 2 lb. 14 oz.; used for extending the lobe of the ear [$\frac{1}{3}$].

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Neishop ol-kila ōbo o e-musetai nabo te-'m-ḍolos anaa 'l-muran.

They wear one garment and a belt round their waists similar to the warriors. 291 554

Nemepik ninje 'ñgorōyok tōki 'm-ḍolosi enye, 'n-gitatin ake naañye 'l-kilani lenye too-'m-ḍolosi.

Women wear nothing round their waists except a broad belt with which they fasten their garments.

Neishop i-ñgorōyok il-kilani aare, ōbo ōji ol-okesena o likae ōji ol-lekishopo.

They also wear two cloths, one called ol-okesena, and the other ol-lekishopo.

Ore aii 'surutya, naa endōki kitok too-'l-Maasae, amu meitōu 'ñgorōyok aatuñgai 'surutya enye ḍesho ake ten eishu ol-móruo lenye.

Now with regard to the women's ear-rings, they are of great consequence amongst the Masai, for no woman ventures to leave them off during her husband's lifetime. 301 585 554

Naa, ten eitau e-ñgorōyōni 'surutya aigh eitobirita en-gias, ore pe eniñgu ol-móruo lenye, nekwet aji alo aṗika 'surutya enyena, ṗe medol ol-móruo meata.

Were a woman to take off her ear-rings and hang them up while doing her work, she would run into her hut on hearing her husband approach, and put them on again, so that he should not see her without them.

Ore ten elo ol-móruo 'n-gwaṗi, nemeitōu e-ñgorōyōni enye aitau 'surutya, amu ten edol kulikae-móruak meata, nājo eiba ol-móruo lenye.

If a man goes away from home, his wife does not dare to take off her ear-rings, for were the other men to see her without them, they would tell her that her husband will hate her.

'Surutya o ol-masangus loo-'l-móruak oo 'n-gulye-tōkitin.

The ear-rings and arm-rings of old men, and other matters. 301 554

'L-ayok oo 'n-doiye oopika 'n-gulalen. Epika 'l-muran oo 'l-móruak il-giso 'n-giyaa, neata

Boys and girls put blocks of wood into their ears, called 'n-gulalen[1], and warriors and old-men wear chain ear-

[1] These blocks are gradually increased in size as the lobe stretches. The proper length is attained if the lobes meet at the top of the head. Perhaps the largest Masai ear-ring in existence is one of stone weighing 2 lb. 14 oz., which the author recently presented to the British Museum. [304]

1: Hollis G-5 (ca 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Neeli 'l-kilani le-'ñgorōyōn, neishop, neishori em-ḃukui naripakīno 'seghera 'matwai pōkin. Neitanapi eng-orioñg, neriki eng-añg o-'l-móruo lenye, nerubare ol-móruo, o 'l-tuñganak aare 'l-choruet lenyeng, oo 'n-gituak ar e-'ng-añg e-'ñgorōyōni.

Nemesiōyo, erikitoi elo akit oo metabai. Ore pe ebaīki, neishori en-gerai, neitōti.

After the bride's wedding-garments have been oiled, she puts them on, and is given a gourd which has been ornamented with cowries. This is put on her back, and she is taken by her husband, who is accompanied by two of his friends and two of the old women from his bride's kraal, to her future home. 585

She does not hurry but walks very slowly until she reaches her husband's kraal, where a child is given her to feed.

Ten eiyam ol-móruo e ñgorōyōni, nemeipot eng-arn enye, amu torono. Eduñgōk ae-arna. Enyor naleñg aipoty eng-arna o-'l-poror lenye, anas 'N-oo-'Sēure.

When a man marries, it is considered unlucky if he calls his wife by her name. He must give her another name. A favourite method is to call her by the age to which she belongs, thus, The (woman) of the Seure age. 551 593 777 [561]

Ten eata ol-tuñgani oo-'l Maasae 'n-gīshu kumok, neidin aiyama 'ñgorōyok kumok Etii kulikae ooiyam 'ñgorōyok are, ana uni, ana oñgwan kake eiyam il-karsisi, ter eiyōu, tomon ana tigitām.

If a Masai owns large herds of cattle he is able to marry many wives. Some have two wives, others three, and others four; whilst if rich men wish, they may have as many as ten or twenty. 595

Ten eiyam ol-Maasani kat'- are araki kat'-uni, neisho en-gitok enye eng-aīni ol-ashe naa ninye eimalye eng-aīni ajo Paashe.

When a Masai marries for the second or third time, his first wife gives the new wife a calf, after which they call one another Paashe, i. e. the giver and receiver of a calf. 595 431

Meidim il-Maasae áiyama 'ñgorōyok e-'ng-aji enye ten etoni to-'l-osho ōbo, kake eidim áiyama 'ñgorōyok e-'n-gishōmi enye, neidim áiyama 'ñgorōyok e-'ng-ae-kishōmi.

No Masai may marry a woman belonging to the same sub-division as himself if both families live in the same district, but he may marry a woman of his own clan or one belonging to another clan. 582

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

601

	Spoken of indirectly.	Addressed directly.	Remarks.
Husband's sister Husband's half-sister	e-sindani	par-sindan or e-sindani ai.
Husband's brother's wife	e-sindani	par-sindan or e-sindani ai.
Son's wife ...	en-gerai	na-kerai.
Daughter's husband	ol-aputani (man); eng-aputani (woman).	ol-aputani lai (man); eng-aputani ai (woman).
Brother's wife ...	e-sindani e-anyit (man); e-sindani (woman).	par-sindan or e-sindani ai.
Half-brother's wife	e-sindani	par-sindan or e-sindani ai.
Sister's husband ...	ol-aputani (man or boy); e-sindani le-anyit (girl or woman).	ol-aputani lai; par-sindan or e-sindani lai.
Brother's son Half-brother's son	ol-ayöni, en-gerai ...	see son.
Brother's daughter Half-brother's daughter	en-dito, en-gerai ...	see daughter.
Sister's son ... Half-sister's son	ol-ayöni, en-gerai ...	see son.
Sister's daughter Half-sister's daughter	en-dito, en-gerai ...	see daughter.

When listening to Masai talking to one another it would often appear as if many of the terms of relationship used were the same as names of cattle, sheep, goats, and donkeys, etc. This is chiefly due to the fact that whenever a woman is brought into the family by marriage it is customary for her husband's relations and their wives to give her an animal to show that she is recognized as a member of the family. The giver and the recipient ever afterwards call one another after the animal which has been given, to which the particle pa- is prefixed.

601 431 [585]

6: Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

885 becoming bald or developing grey hairs, but that he could not take the regulation dose of purgative as formerly. From this, coupled with the fact that he could not take such liberties with his stomach, he gathered that he was not quite so strong as formerly. We can imagine how he would curse his luck and look fiendish on discovering this unpalatable truth. There was nothing for it but to marry, and become a staid and respectable member of society. He had sown his wild oats.

583 Casting about, he fixed upon a damsel after his heart.
885 The preliminaries having been arranged—the number of bullocks to be paid, &c.—she was sealed to him. Then an [304] operation was performed on the damsel. Recovered from its effects, she had to wait till the calving season, as abundance [302] of milk is an indispensable requisite in the honeymoon. Meanwhile, she allowed her hair to grow till it assumed the [301] appearance of an old shoe-brush clotted up with blacking. Round the head she wore a band of cowries from which depended a number of strings, forming in fact the bridal 585 veil. At last the happy day arrived, and the final seal was 885 put upon the marriage by both parties disposing of their chain earrings, and substituting a double disc of copper wire arranged spirally. The lady also shaved her head, laid aside the garment of the ditto, and clothed herself with two skins, one suspended from the waist the other from the shoulder. Strangest of all, however, and strikingly indicative of the fact that he had exchanged the spear for the distaff, Moran had actually to wear the garment of a ditto for one month. Just imagine what fun it would be in this staid and dignified country of ours, if a young man had to spend his honeymoon in a cast-off suit of his wife's maiden clothes. What our friend's feelings were in this guise, I do not know, and this veracious chronicle does not admit of conjecture.

837 And now Moran's sole idea was to rear a brood of young 885 cattle-lifters, and so that he got them, he was not very [842] particular as to the manner of it. He was not jealous, asked no awkward questions, and employed no spies. If a friend should visit him, he was hospitable in a degree not consistent with a high level of morality. We shall here prudently follow his example of non-inquisitiveness; for we might find that the domestic affairs of our friend's household will not bear a too curious scrutiny.

885 He was now wholly a changed being—as indeed who is 262 not when he gets married! His strict rules of diet were

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Before dealing with the subsequent procedure, after a girl has promised to visit a warrior on a given night, it is necessary to outline the sleeping arrangements and accommodation in a manyatta hut. The hut is not divided off into rooms in any way, and at one end of the hut is the bed upon which the woman (mother of one of the warriors) to whom the hut belongs, sleeps with her younger children. At the other end of the hut, not screened off in any way, is the bed upon which the warriors and girls sleep. No warrior may ever sleep upon the married woman's bed, but the woman's husband can come down and visit her whenever he likes, and when he does so, no warriors or girls may sleep in the hut. Ordinarily, however, the woman's husband does not live at the manyatta, and she and her small children sleep on her bed at the one end of the hut, while the warriors sleep on the bed at the other end of the hut with the girls. No warrior ever sleeps in his own mother's hut, but always in one of the other huts if he has invited a girl to sleep the night with him. When, therefore, he has arranged for a girl to visit him at night he goes in the evening to one of the other huts and arranges to sleep on the young people's bed there. He then sends a message by the woman who owns the hut to tell the girl that he is sleeping there so that she may come to him. There is absolutely no objection to several men coming in this way to the same hut, and sleeping on the same big bed each accompanied by his girl. In fact, it is considered wrong for a warrior and a girl to have sexual intercourse unless there are also other couples sleeping on the same bed. Moreover, besides those men who have come to the hut and sent for their girls to join them there, there are usually several younger girls, daughters of the woman who owns the hut, sleeping on the bed too. These young girls, too young as yet to sleep with the men sexually, nevertheless, sleep on the same bed as the warriors and older girls, and thus grow up steeped in the customs of the manyatta.

It is exceptionally difficult for a European to understand all the full details and facts concerning native sex life, but the following facts have been noted and verified for the Masai. No girl may sleep with a man except she be absolutely nude, but on the other hand, although by tradition and by etiquette she may not refuse an invitation to sleep with a man (except for the two reasons already given above), she is not necessarily expected to allow him full sexual intercourse, and, in fact, often does not do so. Thus—strange as it may seem—Masai girls do sometimes go to their husbands as virgins in the physical sense of the word (see Marriage), although they may have slept with men in the manyattas countless times. Usually, however, Masai girls have no objection to full intercourse except during the first four or five days after each menstrual period (see Girlhood), for the Masai firmly believe that conception cannot occur unless intercourse takes place very soon after menstruation, and four to five days is considered an absolutely safe margin. Moreover, this belief seems to have a strong foundation in fact, and it thus raises a very interesting point for physiologists as to whether this is as true of primitive peoples as it from having the honour of the feast of her initiation." Should the man decide to marry the girl, this heifer is counted as one of those which must be handed over for the marriage transaction (see Marriage). 848 582 884

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Girls' Initiation.—Among the Masai girls are initiated singly and not in groups, nor are they initiated until a good many years after puberty, for as soon as a girl is initiated she must be married, and cease to have any intercourse with the warriors or boys. Except under the circumstances described above, a girl is not initiated until her breasts begin to droop to a marked extent. As soon as this is noticeable, her mother informs the father, who makes the necessary arrangements. If the girl's mother is living at the time at a manyatta with one of her sons, then the girl's initiation will take place at the manyatta, otherwise it will take place at the home village. The essential point is that initiation must take place in the mother's hut (or in the hut of another of her father's wives, should her own mother be dead). The father comes to the place when the day of the ceremony has been fixed and beer is prepared. A ram called olekelnjatha is slaughtered either before the actual operation or just after it. This is the "ram for childbearing," and is supposed to insure fertility. [825] This ram is eaten by all those present at the ceremony. The actual operation is performed by an old woman, who is a skilled operator (she may be either a Masai or a Dorobo), and the girl sits on a skin inside the hut during the operation. The operation is said to be the same as that used by the Kikuyu on their girls, and this is a form of clitoridectomy, but exact details cannot be obtained from the men. As soon as the operation is over the operator washes the girl to "cleanse her of the blood spilt" and a ram is then slaughtered and given to the operator. This ram is called oletuguet. Next a ram is killed called olkelelartat to provide meat and fat for the girl during convalescence. 884 582 [304] [171]

Shaving Ceremony.—Finally after the girl is healed and before she can go to her husband's village, a ram is killed called olbarnet, which is the "ram for the shaving," and at the same time the girl's head is shaved by her mother. [302]

PART V.—MARRIAGE.

Exogamy.—Marriage is always exogamous as far as sub-clans are concerned, but marriage within the main clan is allowed. This rule not only applies to marriage but to all forms of sexual intercourse. No one, whether as a boy, warrior, or a married may, may at any time ever have sexual intercourse with any woman, girl or child of his own sub-clan. This is the strictest rule of all Masai sex regulations, and the penalty for any breach of this rule is very severe indeed (see below). 582 614 834

A woman remains a member of her own sub-clan even after marriage, but her children belong to the sub-clan of her husband. 614 585 851

Betrothal.—Amongst the Masai there are two usual methods of betrothal :— 584

(1) Betrothal of unborn children.

(2) Betrothal of infant girls.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

584 The method of betrothing an unborn child is as follows :—A man or boy wishing to do so seeks a pregnant woman (provided, of course, that her husband is not of his own sub-clan), and goes to her and anoints her on the stomach either with fat or with red ochre mixed with castor oil. By so doing he pledges that if the child born is a girl he will eventually marry her. Should the child be a boy he is bound to it in friendship for life. In the event of the child being a girl he must, from birth onwards, present the child with small gifts from time to time, and as the girl grows up supply her with such necklaces or ornaments as she may demand from him. A man or boy wishing to betroth himself to an infant girl does so simply by giving the child a necklace, and from then on he must supply her with such ornaments as she may require. Of course, a man must first of all ascertain that the child —whether unborn or an infant—is not already betrothed. A man may cancel a betrothal if he wishes to do so (but he cannot break his pledge of friendship with a boy in the case of a boy being born to a woman whom he anointed when she was pregnant), and the father of a girl may cancel betrothal by refusing to drink any more of the suitor's beer. If a girl, as she grows up, decides that she does not wish to marry the man to whom she is betrothed, she can easily avoid doing so by arranging with one of her lovers to have intercourse with her just after menstruation, and thereby conceiving. She then has the option of marrying this lover should he be willing.

584 884 Normal Marriage (as a First Wife).—It is clear from the above description of betrothal that it is unlikely that a girl will reach her time for initiation unbetrothed. Should she do so by any chance, her father would at once make every effort to find her a husband, probably from among the older men who already have several wives. Nor would the girl object in any way, for to be initiated and not be married directly afterwards would make her the laughing stock of all the neighbourhood. When a 585 girl is to be the first wife of a man, it usually means that her husband-to-be is still a member of a warrior group. This, of course, means that he cannot in the normal way live with his wife for some time. This fact, however, in no way interferes with the marriage ceremony and transaction, the presence of the husband not being considered in any way necessary.

[591] The respective fathers of the girl and of the man make all the arrangements and transactions when the girl is initiated (see below), and as soon as these have been concluded, and the girl has recovered from the operation and been through the shaving ceremony, she goes to the village of her husband's family, where she has already built herself a hut (or had it built for her by her friends).

As a married woman her main duty in life now is to bear children, just as it was her duty before initiation to avoid conception. If her husband is still in the warrior class and may, therefore, not have any sexual intercourse with her, this is no hindrance [839] to her in performing this duty, as she may now have intercourse with any married men of sub-clans other than her own.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Moreover, there will be no lack of married men willing to be the physical father of her children, since no married men may have intercourse with uninitiated girls, nor yet with their own wife or wives if with child. 585 830 843

Married women make a point of having intercourse immediately after menstruation in order to "get a child." All children born to a woman who is married are considered to be the children of her husband, no matter who their actual father may be. Owing to this system it may happen that by the time a man leaves the warrior stage and passes into the Elders' stage, and goes to live with his wife, he may find that she already has one or more children. 585 842 [561]

Normal Marriage (of a subsequent Wife).—In the case of a girl marrying a man who already has one or more wives, she simply goes to his village—where she has either already built a hut or had it built for her—as soon as the shaving ceremony is over after her initiation. She then lives with him in the normal way and he will probably be the physical father of her children, although not necessarily so, as she is permitted to have lovers if she wishes it, provided they are married men. 595 [837]

Forced Marriage.—It occasionally happens that the father of a man who is still in the warrior class decides for some reason or another that he wishes to have his son at home—wishes, in fact, that his son should leave the warrior stage before the age-group to which he belongs is due to move up to the Elders' stage en masse. In such a case he waits until the girl to whom his son is betrothed has been initiated and is ready for marriage (or even arranges for her initiation to be hastened) and then proceeds as follows. The marriage transaction having been completed and the girl's new hut built in the village, he sends for the girl and secludes her in the hut. He then arranges with some of the young men of the same age-group as his son to bring the youth to the village on some pretext or other. The usual pretext is that of going to the village to ask for a bullock for a meat feast (see Part IX). As soon as the village is reached these young men together with some older men seize the man and carry him forcibly to the girl's hut. The girl is alone in the hut; not even her mother may be present when the man is brought in. The two—man and girl—are forcibly held together so that their bodies touch. Once his body has touched hers (an initiated girl) in the presence of witnesses he cannot go back to the warrior group, and so has to remain and reconcile himself to premature married life with its restrictions. 585 561

Marriage of a Virgin.—There is a very curious custom connected with the marriage of a girl who is a virgin in the physical sense of the word, i.e. of a girl whose hymen has never been penetrated. Should a girl's husband find that his wife has come to him in this condition, he must send her back to her father's village the next morning carrying on her back a milk gourd without its stopper. This is a sign to her father that she went to her husband as a virgin, and her father must send her back to her husband with a gift in the form of a heifer as compensation to the husband. The husband may not himself perforate the hymen until this heifer has been received. 585

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

585 837 Married Sex Life.—Among the Masai (as already stated) a married woman's first duty to her husband is to bear him children, and husbands do not mind if their wives have intercourse with other men, provided that they do not do so actually at a time when their husbands want them themselves. Even in such a case—apart from private measures which a husband might take—there is no recognised punishment for the woman, or any legal claim against the man, provided, of course, he is a married man of a sub-clan other than the woman's own. [684]

834 Sex Restrictions.—There are, of course, certain definite regulations which must be observed, the chief of which are :—

(1) No woman may have intercourse while she is with child (not even with her husband).
(2) No woman may have intercourse during the actual period of menstruation.
(3) No married woman may have intercourse with an uninitiated boy.
(4) No man in the warrior class may have intercourse with a married woman.
(5) No married man may have intercourse with an uninitiated girl.
(6) No woman may have intercourse with a man who is the son of any member of her husband's own age-group ("They are as his own sons, whatever their clan may be").
(7) As already mentioned, the rule of sub-clan exogamy applies as much to general sex life as it does to marriage and, therefore, a woman must avoid all men of her own sub-clan.

684 PENALTIES FOR BREACHES OF THE ABOVE RESTRICTIONS.

Breach of No. 1.—There is no fixed punishment for a breach of this regulation, but the man would be accused of causing damage to the child, and should abortion take place later, or the child be born with any deformity, he would be held responsible.

Breach of No. 2.—There is no punishment for a breach of this regulation, but it is simply "Not done."

Breach of No. 3.—A woman who is found infringing this rule is severely punished in the following way. She is tied up and severely beaten by her husband, so that her whole skin is bruised, and then sheeps' urine is poured over the abrasions. This acid causes very severe pain for many hours. The boy is not punished, as the fault is held to be entirely that of the woman, who should know better. In actual practice the boy is expected to bring the husband a present of honey beer in order to placate him, and so avoid being cursed with a very potent curse. [431] [754]

Breach of No. 4.—There is no punishment for the woman who is found to have broken this rule, nor is there actual punishment for the man, save that if his sin is discovered he is dishonoured at once by his fellow age-group members, and even if not found out at once, his dishonourable conduct will be found out at the Eunuto ceremony (see p. 194), when his turn comes to enter the thingira.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Marriage.—The warriors may not marry till after the E-Unoto, and do not usually do so till after their first Ol-Ng'esher. The case stated by Mr. Leakey,[1] in which a warrior cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice. 561 582 584 585 [833]

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be reclaimed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where lives a man of his generation he may choose in which hut belonging to his generation he will sleep. When it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to vacate it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 202) are observed. It is said that if a woman is persistently unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle. 583 561 837 [684]

On the other hand, the members of one generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of one generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women. [978]

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his eldest son is old enough, and then sends him to fetch her back. 586

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (mother's son), but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister. 835

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names. 551 [593]

Father-in-law
Mother-in-law
Son-in-law
Daughter-in-law
} Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Ol Morei. Relationship is not recognised beyond first cousin. The Masai take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Masai descent, Ol Masaini oinoti, he is proud of the fact. 602

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the hyænas, except for those of Laibons or very influential old men. These are buried under cairns of stones. 760 760

[1] See p. 200 of this volume.

Betrothal

584 A man usually chooses his wife himself and, after obtaining the girl's consent, asks his father to approach her parents; if they agree the girl's head is smeared with fat, and she may no longer live in the same kraal as her betrothed. According to Hollis, a man makes the first approach to the girl's father himself, giving him first tobacco, and later on when the girl is older, more tobacco and honey. It is considered wrong for a girl to become pregnant during the betrothal period, and the engagement may be broken off, a custom of which advantage is taken by girls who are betrothed to a man they do not wish to marry, since betrothals are sometimes arranged without the girl's consent. Fathers, for instance, sometimes arrange betrothals between their young sons and daughters in order to strengthen the bonds of friendship between them (as also among the Nandi); and betrothals may take place between warriors and babies, and even unborn girls.

Regulation of Marriage

582 614 This depends on three things: clan, age-set, and kinship. (a) According to Hollis, marriage between clans is allowed, but sub-clans are exogamous groups (see below, p. 119); a man may marry a woman of another sub-clan of his own clan. Merker says he may not marry a woman of his mother's sub-clan. Tombo ole Mbasi, however, says that though intermarriage between clans is allowed, each clan is an exogamous group; Foubrooke agrees that the clan is the exogamous group (see p. 120). (b) A man may not marry a woman who is by custom considered as belonging to the age-set (ol-porror) senior to his own, to his own age-set, or (if he belongs to the Right-hand Circumcision) to a woman of the Left-hand Circumcision. But he may marry one of the same generation[] (ol-oji). See below, p. 117, for details of the age-set system. (c) A man may not marry a woman whose relationship to him is closer than that of third cousin, and then only if they call each other o-le-sotua and en-e-sotua.

Bridewealth

583 Payment of bride-cattle establishes the husband's rights in his wife's procreative faculties and over the children she bears him. The numbers of stock paid seem to vary slightly. Merker gives them as three cows and one ox to the girl's father (the ox being eaten at the marriage feast), and a ewe and ram to her mother (the ram also being eaten). Hollis says the bride's father is given three heifers and two oxen, one of which is slaughtered "at the door of the hut"; on account of the other ox the man and his father-in-law call each other pa-hitay, "giver and receiver of an ox." To the bride's mother are given two rams, which are slaughtered, and a ewe, on account of which he and his mother-in-law call each other pa-ker (sheep). Foubrooke gives the number as two oxen and three cows or heifers, including the "pa-hitay" ox.

Marriage

585 There appears to be little ceremonial at a wedding. The chief occurrence is a feast at the bride's home, of which the bride and bridegroom do not partake. This is followed by a ceremonial journey of the bride to her husband's home; she wears a freshly oiled garment, carries a gourd ornamented with cowries, and is accompanied by two men and two old women; on her arrival, she is given a child to feed. Thomson says that on the day of marriage and for a month afterwards (if I understand him aright) the husband wears female dress.[] If the husband is still a warrior he may not have sexual intercourse with his wife, though they may live together at [] Merker, p. 67.

[] Discrepancies between authorities may sometimes be due to difference of tribe, and not always to incorrect information or mere misunderstanding.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL.12 Masai FL.12

his father's home or in his own manyata. But it seems that a ceremony is performed which releases the husband from the prohibition on warriors having sexual relations with married women. 585

A widow is looked after by her husband's brother, or by one of her own brothers; she may cohabit with her husband's brother. It appears that a woman who has had children may not marry again, though one who is childless may marry her husband's half-brother, if he has one. Any children she may have after her husband's death are counted as his. 587 837 848

Polygyny

A man may have as many wives as he can pay for: one of Hollis's texts says that a rich man may have as many as 20. Actual figures show that while two wives are common, three and over are found much less often, and more than five very seldom. Each wife has her own hut in the husband's kraal, enk-ay, the first wife on the right of the gate as you go in, the second on the left. To each wife are allocated cattle which she holds in trust for her children. 595

Adultery

Adultery is not common, because the rules controlling sexual relations are wide and elastic. Any of a man's age-mates (members of his own el-ayi) may have access to his wife, and though men of one age-set are not supposed to associate with the wives of another age-set, in practice this rule is little observed. A warrior is not supposed to have intercourse with a married woman, and a married woman may not have sexual relations with an uncircumcised boy. 837 684

Divorce

A wife cannot be divorced once she has borne a child, though a temporary separation may occur, the wife, if the husband is at fault, going to one of his age-mates, or, if she is at fault, to her father. 586

Adoption

In the old days, children captured in war were often adopted; and even today, children of "foreigners" (those who are not Masai) may be adopted, especially in times of famine. Such children become accepted as Masai. Under the term "adoption" is also included the practice of adopting children within the family, e.g., a father will adopt a child of his wife's which has been begotten by another man, and a barren wife may adopt a child of one of her co-wives. 597

Birth and Naming

Birth takes place in the mother's hut, where she is attended by a midwife, enk-ainyiyoni. The women and girls of the kraal assemble, and after the child has been born they feast on an ox supplied by the father; next day another ox is killed for the rest of the people of the kraal. The mother remains in her hut till she feels strong enough to go out; the husband may not enter the hut for 10 days, nor eat in it till the child can walk. Intercourse between husband and wife stops as soon as the wife knows she is pregnant, and is not resumed till the child is weaned, when it is between one and two years old. (Hollis says till the time when it cuts the two middle incisor teeth, upper and lower.) Twins are considered very desirable, and a boy is preferred to a girl. 844 846 843 833 845

The first name is given either on the fourth day after birth, when the child is taken outside to be shown the sun, or at a feast held on the 10th day, which begins with the killing and cooking of an ox: the meat is distributed to the inhabitants of the kraal, and in the evening the mother, carrying the child on her back, milks the cows. After this, the child is named in the presence of the father and mother 553 652

/44 cont./

582 for the contemplative idleness of the married man. But before the 583 marriage takes place the bride price is to be paid first.

As bride price (en dogitin = the things, each part of them, en dogi = the thing) he first pays the bride's father five pots of honey from which beer will be brewed, furthermore three cows and an ox. The bride's mother receives a male and a female sheep. The ox and the male sheep will be eaten at the feast taking place on the [601] wedding day. Around that day, more often afterwards than before,
[551] the /45/ bridegroom further brings the father-in-law a cow and the mother-in-law a female sheep that has not yet had young, whereupon the former call each other ba-geteñ (1),

1. Cf. Second Part, III, terms of address for relatives.

while the bridegroom and the mother-in-law call each other ba-ger
585 from now on. Every wife married later receives at the wedding
[595] from the principal wife of her husband a year-old heifer, whereupon [431] the two call each other b'-asche, from the eldest child of her hus-
[551] band two goats or sheep, hence the address ba-ndare, and from the [601] smaller children of four to six years old and upward a goat or a sheep each, through which the address ba-gine, ba-suben, or ba-
583 lelo is brought about. During the period immediately after the wedding, the mother-in-law receives from the son-in-law several more pots of honey, skins for clothing, and iron wire for making [791] leg and arm ornaments. In the family of Chief Zendeo he receives, as he told me, only a cow as bride price for one of his daughters, while the mother of the girl gets two donkeys, a bull and a cow with calf. Since the last rinderpest it has happened not infrequently that a man is not in a position to pay the customary bride price. He then gives the father-in-law only one cow and leads her to him on a rope twisted out of grass. Whereas the bridegroom or young married man delivers the gifts of livestock himself, he always sends the honey by a woman. She is either a wife married previously, his mother, his older sister, or a wife of his brother. Only when the distance is very great does he deliver the honey himself,

/47 cont./

582 [614] [178] [583] [613] [561] by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age class (1)

1. Cf. Chapter IX of this part.

(ol boror) or to his age-class association (ol adji). The bride may not be from an older age class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the Masai are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between foster brother and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as [613] incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage; it is precisely in membership in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

[564] [326] Moreover, a marriage between relatives of blacksmiths and those of nonblacksmiths is not permitted.

[587] Widows (eñ goliai, ñ golia) or divorced women who have living sons may not marry again, but live with men who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an [565] obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man. [595] The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

585 The wedding feast, allegedly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal in which the bride's parents live.

/47 cont./

585 People gather in the vicinity of this kraal in the cool morning hours under a large shade tree, to which each of the participants brings something edible and potable, a sheep, a goat, a pot of honey, a calabash of milk or honey beer. The children belonging to the family of the bride and to her relatives drive up a head of cattle belonging to the bride's father. The head of cattle is immediately slaughtered to feed the guests. Bride and groom are festively adorned, that is, [302] above all /48/ rubbed on the upper body and head with a paint made out of beef suet and red ocher. Those present sit in a large circle, one half of which is formed by the bridegroom with the men and the other by the bride with the women and children, so that the bride and groom are opposite each other. Whereas the guests partake [753] heartily of the foods, the bridal couple may not take anything because they would become sick from it, would get a rash around their mouths, but rather they must bear patiently a flood of good teachings and advice. After finishing the banquet and the dance following it, which does not come to an end until shortly before midnight, everyone retires; the bride goes with her mother into the latter's hut, the bridegroom together with other warriors into another one. On the following day people again assemble for dancing. On this day only two sheep are slaughtered; the bridegroom brings one, his father-in-law gives the other. Women and girls rub their bodies and skin aprons with the fat of the animals. After the meal the bride is handed over to the bridegroom and the two move into their new hut, to which the man's mother brings a small child from the neighborhood. The man takes the child from her and puts it on the lap of his wife, who gives the [842] child milk to drink out of a gourd bottle. This ceremony is supposed not only to express the wish for numerous progeny, but it is also believed that it has the magic power to bring them forth.

In some regions it is customary for married people to remain together immediately after the wedding, and the wife may not leave the hut either on the wedding day or for the following five days. In others the wife goes for a time, 20 days to two months, to her mother or mother-in-law, or, if her husband already has several wives, to his principal wife, in order to be instructed in the work of the household and, with the help of her hostess, to build a hut of

/48 cont./

585 her own. Where a jus primae noctis is customary -- frequent, but not general -- it belongs to one or two old comrades-in-arms of the young husband. One who does not grant the jus primae noctis when it is claimed is insultingly called ol alomöni or ol ömischo (formed from a-lōm, that is, refuse). He refuses others what they have a right to and must expect them to steal a few head of cattle from him in the next few days without his being entitled to raise a complaint about it. One who does not want to go along with this old custom, which is said to happen, has the wedding take place without any festivity, in order to avoid it. The bridegroom simply hands over the bride price, whereupon the bride, without any ceremony, follows
[591] him into his already completed hut. This dwelling lies either in the kraal of his father or in the warrior kraal occupied by the young husband up to then and remains there until all his age mates are married; only then do the married couple build their own kraal.

/49/ After the married couple have moved into their home, the wife may not leave it for the next two days. It is customary for the husband to present her with three cows and a bull during these days, and on the third day she accompanies this livestock to the pasture, but does not stay there. During the next three days the wife does no work; not until the fourth day does she start it, and to be sure, with the milk-
[822] ing of a plain black cow. According to the Masai explanation, the plain black is the symbol for quiet seriousness, whereas bright colors signify gaiety and lightheartedness. The woman is supposed to perform her duties with seriousness and not neglect them, lightheartedly rambling about, and make her husband angry by idle gossip.

768 If the marriage is dissolved by the husband's death, the widow
587 may, if she is willing, become the property of his eldest brother or half brother; she may live with the former, whereas the latter may marry her legally after the expiration of three or four months. Upon 586 the death of the wife, the husband pays no compensation. A divorce may be brought about if the man drives out the woman or if the woman runs away from the man and refuses to return. In the first instance, the divorce is preceded by a family consultation in which the head of the family pronounces the divorce. The woman must

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Kitala.

593 Ten ĕar il-Maasae 'ñgorōyok enye, etii naapwo kitala, netii naañgiri, nemepwo.

Ten ĕar ol-móruo e-ñgorōyōni, neipiri alo kitala, naa ten neme kitok-tōki eitarueiye, nelo eng-aji o-'l-poror lo-'l-móruo lenye.

Ore pe eriku lido idya-ñgorōyōni nashōmo kitala, nemeitōki ol-openy aar, amu [626] ĕure lido-tuñgani lo-'l-poror lenye medek.

Naa, ten eitaruo e-ñgorōyōni en-dōki kitok, p' eiyōlōu ajo ĕari, nelo eng-añg e-menye, neishori en-gitañg nalōtu [431] e-ñgorōyōni asaiye ol-móruo lenye.

The refuge[1].

If the Masai men beat their wives, some go and seek refuge elsewhere, whilst others suffer and stop at home.

Should a husband beat his wife, but not badly, she will seek refuge in the house of a member of her husband's age.

When the man with whom she has taken refuge returns her to her owner, the latter does not beat her again, for he fears that he will be cursed by the members of his age.

If a woman commits a serious crime, and knows that she will be beaten in consequence, she goes to her father's kraal, and is given an ox, which she takes to her husband and begs forgiveness.

En-gäa.

964 55 Ten ĕä ol-tuñgani loo-'l-Maasae, neituraari ten a en-gerai, araki ol-murani, araki e-ñgorōyōni; nenuki eng-arna too-'l-tuñganak lenye.

Ore ten etii en-dōki naipotyeki inna-arna, neishori ae-arna nemenyikita en-e-'ldo ōtua.

Ore ten ĕä ol-tuñgani oti ōji Ol-ōnana, nemeipot te-'ng-añg e-menye en-nanai amu

Death.

On the death of a child, or a warrior, or a woman amongst the Masai, the body is thrown away[2], and the person's name is buried, i.e. it is never again mentioned by the family.

Should there be anything which is called by that name, it is given another name which is not like that of the deceased.

For instance, if an unimportant person called Ol-onana (he who is soft, or weak, or gentle) were to die, [586] [1] Divorce appears to be unknown amongst the Masai.

[2] The body is always taken to the west of the kraal, towards the setting sun. It is laid on the left side with the head towards the north, so that the face looks towards the east. The legs are drawn up to the chest, the left hand supports the head, and the right arm is folded across the breast.

[823]

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

poison is being made and when honey wine is being brewed. During the time that a man is making poison (eight days) he is treated almost as an outcast. He must leave his house at 4 a.m. and not return till 7 p.m., when he must rub clay on his body. He may not eat when the sun is above the horizon; he may only relieve nature far away from the kraal; and he must sleep alone. If he were to break any of these rules it is believed that the poison would be useless. When honey wine is to be brewed a man and a woman are selected for the purpose, neither of whom has had sexual intercourse for two days. A hut is set apart for them to live in until the honey wine is ready for drinking (six days), during which time they may not sleep together. As soon as the honey wine is ready they receive payment, and go to their respective homes. Were they to have sexual intercourse during the six days that the honey wine is brewing, it is believed that the wine would be undrinkable, and the bees that made the honey would fly away. 834 278 834 273

Mothers-in-law and their sons-in-law (eng-aputani) must avoid one another as much as possible, and if a son-in-law enters his mother-in-law's hut she must retire into the inner compartment and sit on the bed, whilst he remains in the outer compartment; they may then talk. Own brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani le-anyit and e-sindani e-anyit) must also avoid one another, though this rule does not apply to half-brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani and e-sindani). This rule is possibly due to the fact that when a man dies his own brother may not marry his widow, though there is no objection to his half-brother (paternal) or one of his paternal cousins taking her to wife. In fact, the only person who may marry a widow is one of the deceased husband's half-brothers or paternal cousins. It frequently happens, however, that widows never re-marry, but live with their children in the kraal of the eldest living brother of their late husband, who becomes the guardian of their children. 606 607 606 607 587 [591]

Divorce is almost unknown amongst the Masai, and it is only barren women who may be divorced. But if a woman is barren it is usual for her husband to give her some of his children by another wife to bring up. Daughters are usually selected; but if there are several sons the youngest and the youngest but two may be given to the stepmother. When a barren woman is a bad woman and is disliked by her husband and his other wives, she may be divorced, in which case her father or his heirs must refund the cattle paid for her, and she is at liberty to re-marry. 586

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Marriage.—The warriors may not marry till after the E-Unoto, and do not usually do so till after their first Ol-Ng'esher. The case stated by Mr. Leakey,[1] in which a warrior cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice. 561 585 884 [585] [833]

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be reclaimed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where lives a man of his generation he may choose in which hut belonging to his generation he will sleep. When it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to vacate it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 202) are observed. It is said that if a woman is persistently unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle. 583 561 837 [684]

On the other hand, the members of one generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of one generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women. [978]

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his eldest son is old enough, and then sends him to fetch her back. 586

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (mother's son), but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister. 835

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names. 551 [593]

Father-in-law
Mother-in-law
Son-in-law
Daughter-in-law
} Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Ol Morei. Relationship is not recognized beyond first cousin. The Masai take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Masai descent, Ol Massini oinoti, he is proud of the fact. 602

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the hyænas, except for those of Laibons or very influential old men. These are buried under cairns of stones. 764 766

[1] See p. 200 of this volume.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

his father's home or in his own manyata. But it seems that a ceremony is performed which releases the husband from the prohibition on warriors having sexual relations with married women. 585

A widow is looked after by her husband's brother, or by one of her own brothers; she may cohabit with her husband's brother. It appears that a woman who has had children may not marry again, though one who is childless may marry her husband's half-brother, if he has one. Any children she may have after her husband's death are counted as his. 587 837 848

Polygyny

A man may have as many wives as he can pay for: one of Hollis's texts says that a rich man may have as many as 20. Actual figures show that while two wives are common, three and over are found much less often, and more than five very seldom. Each wife has her own hut in the husband's kraal, enk-ay, the first wife on the right of the gate as you go in, the second on the left. To each wife are allocated cattle which she holds in trust for her children. 595

Adultery

Adultery is not common, because the rules controlling sexual relations are wide and elastic. Any of a man's age-mates (members of his own ol-aji) may have access to his wife, and though men of one age-set are not supposed to associate with the wives of another age-set, in practice this rule is little observed. A warrior is not supposed to have intercourse with a married woman, and a married woman may not have sexual relations with an uncircumcised boy. 837 684

Divorce

A wife cannot be divorced once she has borne a child, though a temporary separation may occur, the wife, if the husband is at fault, going to one of his age-mates, or, if she is at fault, to her father. 586

Adoption

In the old days, children captured in war were often adopted; and even today, children of "foreigners" (those who are not Masai) may be adopted, especially in times of famine. Such children become accepted as Masai. Under the term "adoption" is also included the practice of adopting children within the family, e.g., a father will adopt a child of his wife's which has been begotten by another man, and a barren wife may adopt a child of one of her co-wives. 597

Birth and Naming

Birth takes place in the mother's hut, where she is attended by a midwife, enk-aitoyioni. The women and girls of the kraal assemble, and after the child has been born they feast on an ox supplied by the father; next day another ox is killed for the rest of the people of the kraal. The mother remains in her hut till she feels strong enough to go out; the husband may not enter the hut for 10 days, nor eat in it till the child can walk. Intercourse between husband and wife stops as soon as the wife knows she is pregnant, and is not resumed till the child is weaned, when it is between one and two years old. (Hollis says till the time when it cuts the two middle incisor teeth, upper and lower.) Twins are considered very desirable, and a boy is preferred to a girl. 844 846 843 833 845

The first name is given either on the fourth day after birth, when the child is taken outside to be shown the sun, or at a feast held on the 10th day, which begins with the killing and cooking of an ox: the meat is distributed to the inhabitants of the kraal, and in the evening the mother, carrying the child on her back, milks the cows. After this, the child is named in the presence of the father and mother 553 852

/45 cont./

583 not alone, however, but with the support of a friend. The honey pot is hung on a horizontal pole, one of them grasping each end. It is not the weight of the pot that makes this method of carrying necessary, but an ancient custom, about whose meaning I have discovered [556] nothing. Wealthy people often also pay up to four cows more than usual, which is then regarded as the highest price that may be demanded. Beauties, as well as daughters of distinguished people, that is, of wealthy and influential people, often stand above the [587] average price. The price for childless widows and for childless, divorced women is the same as for young girls. for a widow who bore daughters, on the other hand, only a male and a female head of cattle are paid. In order that her father does not receive bride price twice, however, he gives back from the first one as much as the second one amounts to. For the second, third, etc. wife, just as much is paid as for the first. If the bride price is in part deferred for the bridegroom, the woman nevertheless passes into his possession provisionally, and likewise the children born before the final settlement of the bride price belong to him. If, however, he then ab- [586] solutely refuses to pay the rest, the father-in-law or the mother-in-law has the right to take back the daughter with her children in exchange for the return of what has already been paid. The cattle paid as bride price must be plain black or white. With the payment [606] of the bride price, the bride withdraws from her family. In /46/ some lineages, however, there still prevails a -- so it seems -- formerly general custom, according to which the father-in-law does not lose the right to interfere in the domestic relations of the young couple until the son-in-law has further given him a bull. The relatives of the bridegroom need not contribute the payment of the bride price, but usually do it if it is necessary. The bride does not get a dowry, just as the bridegroom does not receive a gift from his parents or parents-in-law. If one of the betrothed dies before the 583 586 marriage or dissolves the betrothal, the portion of the bride price that was paid is returned. If the husband turns the wife out or the marriage remains fruitless, this has no influence on the bride price paid, while a possible remainder not yet paid remains unpaid. On the other hand, if a childless woman leaves her husband, the

/46 cont./

583 father-in-law must return the bride price if he grants his daughter
[586] admission. If the woman who has run away has had children, her husband keeps them: in this case the woman's parents do not pay back anything.

[431] On the day the parents-in-law receive the bride price, the [607] bridegroom gives the eldest brother of the bride a year-old heifer,
[572] each of her other brothers and each sister of the bride a male head of cattle. This is only a gift of friendship and has nothing to do with the bride price. Exchange of wives occurs, but does not result in a valid marriage, any more than does wife stealing. On the other hand, it is not infrequent that the girl flees from her maternal hut as soon as she reaches marriageable age and runs to her love. It often happens then that the girl's father sends a band of boys armed with sticks after her so that through the beating she will be induced to return. Since the boys act at the command of the old man, neither the bridegroom nor anyone else may hinder them. In order to protect the girl from such violence, only one course remains to the bridegroom, to leave the kraal with her immediately and move into the forest for a few days. With this he makes it understood that he will oppose with weapons anyone who might still venture to take his bride from him and at the same time it deprives the girl's father of any further right to object. As soon as the couple in the forest have consumed a cow, they return to the kraal, where, without further ceremony,
[613] they are recognized as married. Only the girls of the El magesan and El kiboron do not have this possibility of self-help, for both lineages believe that a girl who goes to her lover in order to remain with him as his wife without her father's consent will die in only a few days after the flight.

582 In olden times the bride was not supposed to belong to the tribe
614 of her bridegroom. The livestock epidemics of the last 20 years,
178 however, which resulted in the death of many thousands of Masai,
[731] have modified this law somewhat. Accordingly, /47/ a man may [613] marry a woman who belongs to his tribe, but not to his lineage, whereby in individual districts there is the further prerequisite that the girl came to him of her own free will and, after being sent back

/48 cont./

585 her own. Where a jus primae noctis is customary -- frequent, but not general -- it belongs to one or two old comrades-in-arms of the young husband. One who does not grant the jus primae noctis when it is claimed is insultingly called ol alomŏni or ol ŏmischo (formed from a-lōm, that is, refuse). He refuses others what they have a right to and must expect them to steal a few head of cattle from him in the next few days without his being entitled to raise a complaint about it. One who does not want to go along with this old custom, which is said to happen, has the wedding take place without any festivity, in order to avoid it. The bridegroom simply hands over the bride price, whereupon the bride, without any ceremony, follows
[591] him into his already completed hut. This dwelling lies either in the kraal of his father or in the warrior kraal occupied by the young husband up to then and remains there until all his age mates are married; only then do the married couple build their own kraal.

/49/ After the married couple have moved into their home, the wife may not leave it for the next two days. It is customary for the husband to present her with three cows and a bull during these days, and on the third day she accompanies this livestock to the pasture, but does not stay there. During the next three days the wife does no work; not until the fourth day does she start it, and to be sure, with the milk-
[822] ing of a plain black cow. According to the Masai explanation, the plain black is the symbol for quiet seriousness, whereas bright colors signify gaiety and lightheartedness. The woman is supposed to perform her duties with seriousness and not neglect them, lightheartedly rambling about, and make her husband angry by idle gossip.

768 If the marriage is dissolved by the husband's death, the widow
587 may, if she is willing, become the property of his eldest brother or half brother; she may live with the former, whereas the latter may marry her legally after the expiration of three or four months. Upon • 586 the death of the wife, the husband pays no compensation. A divorce may be brought about if the man drives out the woman or if the woman runs away from the man and refuses to return. In the first instance, the divorce is preceded by a family consultation in which the head of the family pronounces the divorce. The woman must

/49 cont./

586 then temporarily move to her mother's, and the man has the right, in the course of the next four or five months, to state definitively [687] whether or not he wants to have the woman back. If he demands her return, she must obey; otherwise she may marry again at the end of [851] the stated period of time. The parents must then pay back the full bride price to the divorced husband, though he may refuse to accept it, and, to be sure, with the legal consequence that all the children that the woman may still bear belong to him.

Her male relatives seek to persuade a runaway -- not divorced -- wife to return, at first amicably, and, if this is of no avail, by a beating in the presence of the husband, while the husband, in that he keeps the children to whom the woman gives birth, hopes to achieve her return by means of mother love. It is said that only in the rarest cases is there a lack of success, especially since no [587] pleasant fate awaits the resisting woman. She may not legally marry [837] again, and, if she goes to another man in order to remain with him [851] permanently, the children arising from this affair belong to the man whom she left. Though the principle is valid that all children remain with the father, he almost always keeps only the boys and leaves the girls to the mother. The latter also takes along any male suckling and keeps him, but only until he is weaned. Then she must return him to his father. Divorce during a woman's pregnancy does not occur. If two divorced spouses wish to remarry, /50/ the woman returns to the man without any ceremony. Divorce is generally rather rare. Usually the man lets the woman from whom he wishes to be separated live peacefully in one of his huts, but he does not pay any attention 837 to her. Barrenness is not grounds for divorce, nor is marital infidelity [586] on the part of the woman, a concept with which the Masai ethic is not familiar (1).

1. /The following footnote is a translation of the Latin of the original source./ A husband entrusts his wife to the guest at night, while he himself spends the night outside the dwelling. To keep the wife from the guest is considered insulting. Wives are accustomed to sleeping at any time with interchanged

/109 cont./

861 A father reprimands his disobedient child with the words eñ gulugoni eñ gob, that is, you are like a piece of earth or dirt, or eñ dian eñ gob, dirty fellow, or os soid eñ gob, dirty stone.

578 Invectives and curses are:

192 ol meneñani (or eñ meneñani) = skeleton, as remains of a decayed corpse:

ol ag' ischobo (Eñg ai eñ abiak, which means: may God give you the serious sickness "abiak"; es súti = dirt, dust, that is, if only one could sweep you out of the hut like the dirt;

ol agaescherteta = fall down;

ol agaua 'Ng ai, that is, may 'Ng ai take you away;

ol agatoñóro ol assurai = may the snake bite you;

ol againassà ol ugaru = may the lion devour you;

ol agatadoijirié èñg olon = go away along with the sun;

ol agoimisso or redji = may your footprints be lost, that is, may you disappear entirely.

Bantering expressions that may sometimes be meant rudely are used by boys and youths to one another:

/110/

ol orobó ñ otonji = accumbens matri /one who lies with his mother/;

ol orobó eñg arnasche = accumbens sorori /one who lies with his sister/;

hai, eñg inobi = hi, anus (neutrius generis) /these old fogies (neutral in gender)/;

hai, ol gorom = nates /buttocks/.

The last two are used teasingly both by young girls to the warriors and the latter among themselves. Furthermore warriors insult one another with ol kíregen = accumbens uxori alienae /one who lies with another's wife/; and os sinoni = scorned by the girls, ol orobó eñg ikau énje = accumbens filiae maxima natu /one who lies with his oldest daughter/, ol orobó 'ñg abudani = accumbens matri uxoris /one who lies with his wife's mother/. If a married man were to use toward his wife such vulgar invectives that had reference to her parents, the latter -- according to the assurances of the people -- would immediately take their daughter back and return the bride price to the man.

[593] [586]

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

En-juñgore.

Ten ëä ol-móruo loo-'l-Maasae, nejuñg en-gerai enye bötor in-dökitin enye pökin, oo 'n-gíshu oo 'n-dare oo-'ñgorōyok nemeata 'n-gera; kake meidim aiyawa 'n-gíshu oo 'n-dare oo-'ñgorōyok naaata 'ng-ayok.

E'ya 'n-gulye-kera naara 'ng-ayok 'n-gíshu oo-'ng-ajijik oo-nooñgotonye.

Teni meata ol-móruo 'n-gera, nejuñg il-alashera lenyena 'n-gíshu oo 'ñgorōyok; kake mejuñg i-ñgorōyok ol-alashe oñgárie kina, amu torono; nejuñg lekwa lemeñgárie kina, ninje oo'ya 'ñgorōyok.

Ore ten eíu e-ñgorōyōni enye eng-ayōni to-'l-alashe lemeñgárie kina, araki telighae-tuñgani, neishori innakerai 'n-gíshu metujuñgo, neipotyeki aajo ol-le-inna-añg.

Naa, ten ëä ol-móruo, neiñgua e-ñgorōyōni enye eata en-gerai kake eng-ayōni, mejuñgi 'n-gíshu enyena, epali metubulu ol-openy.

Mejuñg il-Maasae 'l-apulayani lenye, amu torono.

Inheritance.

When the father of a family dies, his eldest son inherits all his property[1], and also the herds and flocks belonging to the childless widows, but not those which are the property of widows who have sons. 428

The sons by each wife inherit the cattle belonging to their mother's family.

If a man dies childless, his brothers inherit his cattle and his half-brothers his wives. It is unlawful for a man's own brothers (i. e. brothers by the same mother) to take his wives. [587]

Should a widow have a son by her late husband's half-brother or by another man, the child is given the cattle which he would otherwise have inherited had his mother's former husband been alive, and he is considered to belong to that family. 587 428 851

If a man dies and leaves a son who is a minor, the property which he inherits is taken care of for him until he grows up[2]. 428 429

It is considered unlawful for a man to inherit the property of his maternal uncle. 428 604

[1] The Masai distribute their herds and flocks amongst their wives during their lifetime, each one being given a certain number to look after and milk. The cattle so distributed are said to belong to the wife's family, and are recognized as the property of her sons, who, however, do not assume ownership until after their father's death. [422]

[2] In a case of this kind, the child does not go to the wars, but marries soon after he is circumcised.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

It is possible to consider that solidarity as a kind of class identity. 561
This identity does not exclude the possible variations and differentiations of class-members arising from individual differentiations of talents and character, from leadership, seniority and social prestige attached to the possession of a great number of wives and a large herd of cattle. The main expressions of that identity are the use of a single name for the whole class and some special marriage regulations which apply to class members and, to some extent, to their children.

Thus, a man may not marry the daughter of a member of his [582] [684] own class. If he fornicates with her he is punished by his own age-mates. " His kraal is destroyed, he is severely beaten, and a number of his oxen are slaughtered ". Similarly, " if a warrior or boy commits adultery with a wife of a man belonging to his father's age-grade (or class), he is solemnly cursed by the members of that age-grade ". (HOLLIS). Furthermore, any class member when a guest [837] of any of his age-mates, has a right to cohabit with his host's wife. MERKER, says that a widow " must not re-marry but she must live [587] with the members of her deceased husband's class ". This " sexual communism ", as HOLLIS calls it, takes place only among members [837] of the same class. It is limited, of course, by clan and kinship exogamy, which, even for class members, is strictly enforced. [582]

At the performance of the Embolosat, Engibata, Unoto, Ngeherr 561
names are given to sets instituted. Names assumed at the Embolosat, 552
Engibata, and Unoto are temporary, for temporary is the nature of the set thus established. At the Ngeherr-proper all previous names are discarded for a single name which is final and applies to the age-class as a whole. It is this name which is handed down to the following generations. Age-class names are, as it were, the milestones by which Masai can order their past into a certain historical perspective. Class names are thus recalled when historical facts are recounted.

Lists of class-names have been recorded by our authorities. It may be of interest to reproduce here some of those lists collected by MERKER, FOX, and FOSBROOKE.[186] FOSBROOKE has attempted has been shown them, he will enter one. When he has entered, the owner of [574]

the hut leaves him and goes to search for a place to sleep in... A Masai cannot refuse hospitality to a stranger (of his own age) for he is afraid that the other [954]
members of his age will curse him, and he will die ". [626]

[186] MERKER, l. c., p. 289; FOX, l. c., pp. 450, 462; FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 11 s.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

poison is being made and when honey wine is being brewed. During the time 834 that a man is making poison (eight days) he is treated almost as an outcast. He 278 must leave his house at 4 a.m. and not return till 7 p.m., when he must rub clay on his body. He may not eat when the sun is above the horizon; he may only relieve nature far away from the kraal; and he must sleep alone. If he were to break any of these rules it is believed that the poison would be useless. When 834 honey wine is to be brewed a man and a woman are selected for the purpose, 273 neither of whom has had sexual intercourse for two days. A hut is set apart for them to live in until the honey wine is ready for drinking (six days), during which time they may not sleep together. As soon as the honey wine is ready they receive payment, and go to their respective homes. Were they to have sexual intercourse during the six days that the honey wine is brewing, it is believed that the wine would be undrinkable, and the bees that made the honey would fly away.

Mothers-in-law and their sons-in-law (esg-aputani) must avoid one another 606 as much as possible, and if a son-in-law enters his mother-in-law's hut she must 607 retire into the inner compartment and sit on the bed, whilst he remains in the outer compartment; they may then talk. Own brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani le-anyil and e-sindani e-anyil) must also avoid one another, though this rule does not apply to half-brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani and e-sindani). This rule is possibly due to the fact that when a man dies his own 606 brother may not marry his widow, though there is no objection to his half-brother 607 (paternal) or one of his paternal cousins taking her to wife. In fact, the only 587 person who may marry a widow is one of the deceased husband's half-brothers or paternal cousins. It frequently happens, however, that widows never re-marry, [591] but live with their children in the kraal of the eldest living brother of their late husband, who becomes the guardian of their children.

Divorce is almost unknown amongst the Masai, and it is only barren women 586 who may be divorced. But if a woman is barren it is usual for her husband to give her some of his children by another wife to bring up. Daughters are usually selected; but if there are several sons the youngest and the youngest but two may be given to the stepmother. When a barren woman is a bad woman and is disliked by her husband and his other wives, she may be divorced, in which case her father or his heirs must refund the cattle paid for her, and she is at liberty to re-marry.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

his father's home or in his own manyata. But it seems that a ceremony is performed which releases the husband from the prohibition on warriors having sexual relations with married women. 585

A widow is looked after by her husband's brother, or by one of her own brothers; she may cohabit with her husband's brother. It appears that a woman who has had children may not marry again, though one who is childless may marry her husband's half-brother, if he has one. Any children she may have after her husband's death are counted as his. 587 857 948

Polygyny

A man may have as many wives as he can pay for: one of Hollis's texts says that a rich man may have as many as 20. Actual figures show that while two wives are common, three and over are found much less often, and more than five very seldom. Each wife has her own hut in the husband's kraal, enk-ay, the first wife on the right of the gate as you go in, the second on the left. To each wife are allocated cattle which she holds in trust for her children. 595

Adultery

Adultery is not common, because the rules controlling sexual relations are wide and elastic. Any of a man's age-mates (members of his own ol-eji) may have access to his wife, and though men of one age-set are not supposed to associate with the wives of another age-set, in practice this rule is little observed. A warrior is not supposed to have intercourse with a married woman, and a married woman may not have sexual relations with an uncircumcised boy. 837 684

Divorce

A wife cannot be divorced once she has borne a child, though a temporary separation may occur, the wife, if the husband is at fault, going to one of his age-mates, or, if she is at fault, to her father. 586

Adoption

In the old days, children captured in war were often adopted; and even today, children of "foreigners" (those who are not Masai) may be adopted, especially in times of famine. Such children become accepted as Masai. Under the term "adoption" is also included the practice of adopting children within the family, e.g., a father will adopt a child of his wife's which has been begotten by another man, and a barren wife may adopt a child of one of her co-wives. 597

Birth and Naming

Birth takes place in the mother's hut, where she is attended by a midwife, enk-aitoyioni. The women and girls of the kraal assemble, and after the child has been born they feast on an ox supplied by the father; next day another ox is killed for the rest of the people of the kraal. The mother remains in her hut till she feels strong enough to go out; the husband may not enter the hut for 10 days, nor eat in it till the child can walk. Intercourse between husband and wife stops as soon as the wife knows she is pregnant, and is not resumed till the child is weaned, when it is between one and two years old. (Hollis says till the time when it cuts the two middle incisor teeth, upper and lower.) Twins are considered very desirable, and a boy is preferred to a girl. 844 846 843 833 845

The first name is given either on the fourth day after birth, when the child is taken outside to be shown the sun, or at a feast held on the 10th day, which begins with the killing and cooking of an ox: the meat is distributed to the inhabitants of the kraal, and in the evening the mother, carrying the child on her back, milks the cows. After this, the child is named in the presence of the father and mother 553 852

/45 cont./

583 not alone, however, but with the support of a friend. The honey pot is hung on a horizontal pole, one of them grasping each end. It is not the weight of the pot that makes this method of carrying necessary, but an ancient custom, about whose meaning I have discovered [556] nothing. Wealthy people often also pay up to four cows more than usual, which is then regarded as the highest price that may be demanded. Beauties, as well as daughters of distinguished people, that is, of wealthy and influential people, often stand above the [557] average price. The price for childless widows and for childless, divorced women is the same as for young girls. For a widow who bore daughters, on the other hand, only a male and a female head of cattle are paid. In order that her father does not receive bride price twice, however, he gives back from the first one as much as the second one amounts to. For the second, third, etc. wife, just as much is paid as for the first. If the bride price is in part deferred for the bridegroom, the woman nevertheless passes into his possession provisionally, and likewise the children born before the final settlement of the bride price belong to him. If, however, he then ab- [586] solutely refuses to pay the rest, the father-in-law or the mother-in-law has the right to take back the daughter with her children in exchange for the return of what has already been paid. The cattle paid as bride price must be plain black or white. With the payment of the bride price, the bride withdraws from her family. In /46/ [606] some lineages, however, there still prevails a -- so it seems -- formerly general custom, according to which the father-in-law does not lose the right to interfere in the domestic relations of the young couple until the son-in-law has further given him a bull. The relatives of the bridegroom need not contribute the payment of the bride price, but usually do it if it is necessary. The bride does not get a dowry, just as the bridegroom does not receive a gift from his parents or parents-in-law. If one of the betrothed dies before the 583 marriage or dissolves the betrothal, the portion of the bride price 587 that was paid is returned. If the husband turns the wife out or the 586 marriage remains fruitless, this has no influence on the bride price paid, while a possible remainder not yet paid remains unpaid. On the other hand, if a childless woman leaves her husband, the

582 /47 cont./
[614] by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a
[17] legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this [583] case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed
[613] to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her
[561] mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age class (1)

1. Cf. Chapter IX of this part.

(ni hoor) or to his age-class association (ni adi). The bride may not be from an older age class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the Masai are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between foster brother and sister is not permitted: this is regarded as [613] incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage: it is precisely in membership in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

[562] Moreover, a marriage between relatives of blacksmiths and those [28] of nonblacksmiths is not permitted.

[587] Widows (ol gulai, ñ gulia) or divorced women who have living sons may not marry again, but live with men who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to [565] marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man.
[595] The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

585 The wedding feast, allegedly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal in which the bride's parents live.

/48 cont./

585 her own. Where a jus primae noctis is customary -- frequent, but not general -- it belongs to one or two old comrades-in-arms of the young husband. One who does not grant the jus primae noctis when it is claimed is insultingly called ol alomōni or ol ōmischo (formed from a-lōm, that is, refuse). He refuses others what they have a right to and must expect them to steal a few head of cattle from him in the next few days without his being entitled to raise a complaint about it. One who does not want to go along with this old custom, which is said to happen, has the wedding take place without any festivity, in order to avoid it. The bridegroom simply hands over the bride price, whereupon the bride, without any ceremony, follows [591] him into his already completed hut. This dwelling lies either in the kraal of his father or in the warrior kraal occupied by the young husband up to then and remains there until all his age mates are married; only then do the married couple build their own kraal.

/49/ After the married couple have moved into their home, the wife may not leave it for the next two days. It is customary for the husband to present her with three cows and a bull during these days, and on the third day she accompanies this livestock to the pasture, but does not stay there. During the next three days the wife does no work; not until the fourth day does she start it, and to be sure, with the milk- [822] ing of a plain black cow. According to the Masai explanation, the plain black is the symbol for quiet seriousness, whereas bright colors signify gaiety and lightheartedness. The woman is supposed to perform her duties with seriousness and not neglect them, lightheartedly rambling about, and make her husband angry by idle gossip.

768 If the marriage is dissolved by the husband's death, the widow • 587 may, if she is willing, become the property of his eldest brother or half brother; she may live with the former, whereas the latter may marry her legally after the expiration of three or four months. Upon 586 the death of the wife, the husband pays no compensation. A divorce may be brought about if the man drives out the woman or if the woman runs away from the man and refuses to return. In the first instance, the divorce is preceded by a family consultation in which the head of the family pronounces the divorce. The woman must

/49 cont./

586 then temporarily move to her mother's, and the man has the right, in the course of the next four or five months, to state definitively [587] whether or not he wants to have the woman back. If he demands her return, she must obey: otherwise she may marry again at the end of [851] the stated period of time. The parents must then pay back the full bride price to the divorced husband, though he may refuse to accept it, and, to be sure, with the legal consequence that all the children that the woman may still bear belong to him.

Her male relatives seek to persuade a runaway -- not divorced -- wife to return, at first amicably, and, if this is of no avail, by a beating in the presence of the husband, while the husband, in that he keeps the children to whom the woman gives birth, hopes to achieve her return by means of mother love. It is said that only in the rarest cases is there a lack of success, especially since no [587] pleasant fate awaits the resisting woman. She may not legally marry [837] again, and, if she goes to another man in order to remain with him [851] permanently, the children arising from this affair belong to the man whom she left. Though the principle is valid that all children remain with the father, he almost always keeps only the boys and leaves the girls to the mother. The latter also takes along any male suckling and keeps him, but only until he is weaned. Then she must return him to his father. Divorce during a woman's pregnancy does not occur. If two divorced spouses wish to remarry, /50/ the woman returns to the man without any ceremony. Divorce is generally rather rare. Usually the man lets the woman from whom he wishes to be separated live peacefully in one of his huts, but he does not pay any attention 837 to her. Barrenness is not grounds for divorce, nor is marital infidelity [586] on the part of the woman, a concept with which the Masai ethic is not familiar (1).

1. /The following footnote is a translation of the Latin of the original source./ A husband entrusts his wife to the guest at night, while he himself spends the night outside the dwelling. To keep the wife from the guest is considered insulting. Wives are accustomed to sleeping at any time with interchanged are in for a bad time." That is sufficient to ensure that a deputation from Moibo will visit him without delay. 791 789

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL18
Kisonko

Apart from specific payments for age grade matters, and the ceremonies obtained thereby, all the elders of an area are supposed to benefit from the performance of these local ceremonies, and consequently are expected to pay. It is an accepted practice that the Dalala age should not give cattle to be taken to the laibon, but are expected to provide hospitality for the meeting which is called to decide who shall contribute. At the meeting proceedings may begin by a man being denounced for refusing hospitality to an age-mate, and so in effect fined. Otherwise the matter is one for general discussion, X pointing out that he gave a beast last time, Y drawing attention to the fact that Z has not helped for many years, and so on. 791

These details have been included under the heading "Modern Adaptations," since one is so frequently assured that in the old days no such levies were made. It is asserted that the only occasions on which boma to boma levies were made was when a party of moran returned from a raid empty-handed, and were so ashamed that they collected beasts from amongst themselves to take to the laibon.

Another demand which a laibon makes on his followers is that he should be provided with wives. Some elders say that this is an age-old institution, others that it is a recent innovation. Be this as it may, motor transport is an innovation, and by getting round the country more, the laibon sees a greater number of suitable women, and consequently increases his demands. Parrit (15) is credited with collecting five girls as a result of the safari he went round South Masailand when the boundary was demarcated: the Dwati paid the dowry and arranged the weddings. Mbeiya (17), on a safari to Kibaya in 1937, demanded and was given the daughter of Lemauna, although she was engaged to another; Kapurwa (23) paid one beast towards the dowry and contributed the ram-skins for the wedding garment. When the girl was brought to Mondul, a number of milch cows were presented to form the nucleus of her herd. On the same trip, Mbeiya demanded and was given one girl from Simanjiro and another from Losogonoi. Taiko (18) is also alleged to have tried his hand at the same game, demanding the daughter of an old man at Sanya; the father asserted that it was just an ordinary marriage, but local Masai opinion thought otherwise. For when a girl is married to a laibon, she is regarded as lost to her family and clan. The usual relationship which marriage sets up between in-laws does not exist; one cannot approach a laibon for assistance as one can an ordinary son-in-law, nor can one expect a laibon to let either one's daughter or her children go home on protracted visits. 791 595 [177] [588] [614]

The introduction of Pax Britannica and of motor transport makes contact between the Masai medicine men and alien witch doctors much more possible. There always seems to have been a close association between the Kikuyu and the Engidong clan, so much so that we may reasonably suspect that the heaven-sent child ol-le-Mweiya was merely a Kikuyu impostor. But if, as one gathers, the Masai and Kikuyu were 791 177 494

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

593 431 601 Gifts to Certain Relations.—A somewhat similar custom is that which ordains that a grown-up son must give certain presents to all children born to his father, as follows:—

(1) To a young girl-child, either a heifer or else a young ewe or young she-goat which has not yet had young. If the former present is given the child in future calls its brother (or half-brother) baashi, and if either of the two latter animals is given the appropriate name is bakuu.

(2) To a boy-child, either a heifer or a young ram or else a young ewe or she-goat which has not yet had young. The following are the appropriate names by which the boy henceforward calls the man: Ithubin if the gift was a young ewe, ingini if the gift was a young she-goat, ndauu if the gift was a heifer, ithithume if the gift was a young ram.

A grown-up son must also give a present to any new wife married by his father, the animal given and the name thenceforward used by the woman to the man being exactly as in the case of girl-children above.

604 Mother's Brother.—Among the Masai I can find no trace of any special functions of the mother's brother, and he has no special position in relation to his sister or her children.

589 Widowhood.—There is no idea of uncleanness attaching to widowhood, and therefore there is no ceremonial purification ceremony before sexual life can be indulged in by a widow. When a woman is left a widow she builds herself a hut [607] with one of her husband's own brothers (i.e. brothers by the same mother), and he becomes responsible for her welfare and acts in loco parentis to her children as far as making arrangements for initiation and marriage, etc., are concerned. In [835] no circumstances, however, may this brother or any other of her husband's own [851] brothers have sexual intercourse with the woman. If she is still of child-bearing age she is expected to go on having children (who will rank as her late husband's), and to this end she may have sexual relations with:—

589 834

(1) Any men of her late husband's age-group, who are not excluded by other restrictions (see above).

(2) Any of her late husband's half-brothers (i.e. brothers by a different mother).

(3) Any other men not otherwise excluded.

757 Sickness.—My informant was unwilling or unable to give me any detailed information about the treatment of sick people, save that medicines were made from the barks and seeds of various trees and from the stomach juices of slaughtered animals.

PART VII.—DEATH AND BURIAL.

76 Death.—Death is looked upon with fear and, therefore—except in the case of very old men and women past child-bearing—every precaution is taken to avoid a

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

P238

PART III

'N-DEPEN OO-'L-MAASAE
MASAI PROVERBS AND SAYINGS

* 539 No. 1. Ainyó-pe ingarsiso anaa
What-and (or Why) you-are-rich like en-naiyamishe ol-tito ?
the-who-has-married (intr.) the-son ?

Why do you behave like a woman whose son has just married ?

[591] [606] [A newly married man usually lives in his father's kraal for some months after his marriage, and a woman whose son has recently married may sit down and rest, as her daughter-in-law will do all the work.].

No. 2. Eata en-nëor.
He-has the-which-divides.

There is a Judge for him, and He will avenge me.

[A favourite saying when a person has been defeated in a fight.]

No. 3. Eata 'l-ojoñga 'n-giyaa.
They-have the-flies the-ears.

Flies have ears.

Also: Eata en-gewárie 'n-giyaa.
It-has the-night the-ears.

The night has ears.

['Walls have ears.']

No. 4. Ebaïki en-gutuk nainosa 'sunya
It-reaches (or Perhaps) the-mouth which-ate the-fats neinos i-ñgik, nebaïki and-it-eats the-excrements, and-it-reaches (or and-perhaps) en-nainosa 'ñgik neinos i-sunya.
the-which-ate the-excrements and-it-eats the-fats.

The mouth which ate fat shall eat excrement, and that which ate excrement shall eat fat.

Also: Ebaïki ol-ötaara 'n-gituñgat neaku
It reaches (or Perhaps) the-who-killed the-cutters (or attackers or enemies) and-he-becomes

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Behold the people you are passing. The man is there, and the male, the woman and the female. 539*

[All people are not alike, and if you watch you find that some of the passers-by are good and others bad.]

No. 27. Itiñgide ansa en-gäa naiya
You-have-given-yourself-airs like the-illness which-takes ol-murani ti-añg.
the-warrior in-kraal (of the married people).

[A warrior is supposed to be always in a perfect state of health, and if he is taken ill, he will hide himself in the woods or in a hut apart from the others. A disease which succeeds in overtaking him when on a visit to the married people[1], and making him the laughing-stock of all, may well be proud of itself!]

No. 28. I'yopo en-gine eng-oñgu.
Cover the-goat the-eye.

[When a goat is about to be strangled, it is thrown on its side, and the eye which is uppermost is covered with its ear, so that it shall not see what is happening. Similarly, if a raid is meditated on, secrecy must be observed beforehand.]

No. 29. Kindér ol-le-'modai, pe kindōkí
We-begin the-of-the-foolishness, and we-do-again ol-le-'ñgēno.
the-of-the-wisdom.

We begin by being foolish and we become wise by experience.
['Experientia docet.']

No. 30. Kitägha neme te-'ng-orioñg.
You-have-pressed-on-me which-is-not on-the-back.

You are not like a child who when carried only presses on my back, you press on every part of my body.

[This saying is equivalent to, 'I am weary of your company.']

No. 31. Meata ol-atadúakine nemeata
He-has-not the-visibleness who-has-not oidipa, ōtua ake ōtadnakine who-has-become-finished, who-died only to-whom-he-was-visible.

[Do not believe in the report of a person's death until it is well founded. Unless an eye-witness tells you the news, receive it with caution.]

[1] The warriors live in kraals apart from the married people (vide p. 292).

[59]

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

En-aidura.

484 Enyor naleñg il-Maasae en-
[233] aidura, amu ten emany e-wēji nemetii 'n-gujit, neidur aapwo ae-wēji netii 'n-gujit.

Ten eidur, neirot i-airkon
[492] aapik il-onīto oo 'l-direta, nepik i-malasin atwa 'l-direta, nenap i-ñgorōyok il-benīa.

Naa, ten emany e-wēji nemetii
484 'n-gujit, nemeshetu 'ng-ajijik,
342 emany il-ñgobori. Ore 'l-ñgobori naa 'ng-ajijik oo-'l-onīto. Ore ten epwo e-wēji netii 'n-gujit kumok, neshetu 'ng-ajijik.

[462] Naa 'ñgorōyok naashetu. E 'yau 'l-loom, nēunōki en-gop, neän too-'ng-opit, nepik il-kujit. Ore p' eidip, nemur too-'mōdiok oo-'n-gīshu, o ol-ōkidoñgoi ōahulare 'mōdiok.

The process of moving.

The Masai are fond of moving, and if they happen to be staying in a place where the grazing is poor, they move to another spot.

When they move, they saddle their donkeys with skins and pack-saddles in which they put their gourds, and the women carry bags.

Should they stop in a place where the grass is not good, they do not build proper huts, but they live in the so-called il-ngobori, i. e. in huts made of skins. When they go to a good grazing ground, they build huts.

The women do the work of building. They procure poles, and put one end in holes, which they dig in the ground; they then bind the poles together with cord made from trees; after which they cover the framework with long grass. When they have finished this, they plaster the whole of the outside with cow-dung and mud.

'Manyat oo 'l-puli loo-'l-muran loo-'l-Maasae.

591 Memany il-muran oo-'l-Maasae ing-añgite, kake emany i-manyat eboitare nooñgotonye oo 'sanjan.

343 Ore ten epwo o-sero áinos 'n-giri, nemany il-puli eboitare 'singan lenye.

Masai warriors' kraals and slaughter-houses.

Masai warriors do not live in the kraals of the married people; they have their own kraals, where they dwell with their mothers and lovers.

When they go to the woods to eat meat, they live in the slaughter-houses[1] with their boy-servants.

[264] [1] Meat may not be eaten in the manyat, or warriors' kraals, and special places, called il-puli, are erected in the woods, to which the warriors retire when they slaughter cattle.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

 634 101 619

KISONGO.	1. Kisongo	2. Sigirari	5. Salei or Saleh
	a. Kiteto	3. Laitokitok	6. Laitayok
	b. Moiba	4. Siria
LUMBWA.	1. Nguruman	2. Serenget	3. Engaruka

The villages, eng ang, pl. ing angite, is the minimal territorial unit. Villages are distributed within the minor sections. JOHNSTON,[15] had already noted that "they generally range within certain districts". A village is the residence of one or more elders with his or their wives and cattle. A man after his marriage does not live in the same village as his father, unless the latter has become senile and unable to cater for himself. 621 [591] [888]

The internal structure of the village is based on the gatesystem. This consists in a proper arrangement of the house on the sides of the village's gates. The village consists of a large yard enclosed by a thorny fence with gates opening at opposite sides. The house are built on the right and left sides of each gate, every gate with its houses belonging to a single elder. The usual arrangement is as follows: the first house on the gate's right is the dwelling of the owner's first wife; the first house on the left side is that of his second wife; the second house on the right side is that of his third wife; and the same alternating order is followed if marries more wives. The central yard is reserved for cattle. The elder's cattle are allotted to each of his wives according to her rank in the house. Cattle in possession of one side of the gate cannot be inherited by the other side. When inheritance takes place it is with great care that one tries to avoid cattle interchange.[16] The gate system, observes FOSBROOKE,[17] is an ideal, and "a symmetrically arranged gate is seldom found in practice". When people move in search of better grassland, the village is not destroyed, but simply evacuated. During the owner's absence the houses may be occupied by other temporary tenants. At the reverse migration the owner comes back to his old village if this is not irreparably decayed, and it is agreed by custom that any foreigner who might have found shelter in the house must vacate the place to the original owner. 621 361 [428] [166]

Another type of Masai village should be mentioned here. It is 621

[15] JOHNSTON, The Uganda Protectorate, London 1904, p. 810.
[16] See especially MERKER, l. c., pp. 27 s.
[17] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 44.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 "I say, thou art no longer ol moran (a circumcized, a warrier), [539] but ol morou (an elder). Take care of thy cattle, goats and sheep, and have regard for them. Give up the occupations of the warriors thou art now an elder".

"After this feast", remarks MERKER, "it all depends on the warrior whether he chooses to take a greater or lesser part in raids. Usually he gets married at once and lives with his wife either in [591] his father's kraal or in the warriors' kraal (manyatta) until all his age-mates have married. Only then he is recognised as el moruo;
561 554 each one builds his own kraal and lays aside the clothes, decorations and the pigtail of the warriors".

[587] It is evident that the effect of the ceremony is rather limited. It allows an initiate to take a wife, but, even after that, the initiate is not yet "recognised" as an elder. It is as if he were given the elder's status in anticipation of the time when all his age-mates are married. At which time only the status of elder becomes for all purposes official.

561 A very detailed description of "the ngeherr of milk" is given by J. V. DAWSON, but the ceremony is mentioned also by other authorities. FOX,[155] states that "this ceremony is performed by each warrior individually",[156] and DAWSON tells us that it occurs at the village of the initiate's father and that four piron-elders take a special part in it.

[535] The ceremony is preceded by a dance. The candidate is clothed
[392] in women's clothes and the first two of the elders place women ear-
[301] rings (surutya) on him.[157]

A test follows, in which the candidate is expected to confess
[783] how many times he has "stolen milk", i. e. taken milk by himself
[685] or with people other than his age mates. Two heads of cattle are usually paid as a fine by a guilty candidate. He is then solemnly instructed by one of the elders, apparently the most senior, about "what he must and must not do after he has drunk and become an elder". He now drinks the milk, "very little however" at this

[155] FOX, l. c., p. 453.

[156] He says also that "the ceremony usually takes place nowadays a year or two after the E-unoto owing to the Government policy of reducing the period of warriorhood as much as possible".

[157] These ear-rings, surutya, are also worn by elders. For this reason some of our authorities describe the earrings put on by candidates as the elder's ear-rings or decorations. But the whole attire of candidates is undoubtedly of a femine type.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 of these associations (the age-units) have long been married, the ol oiboni (the prophet) binds them more closely by giving a common name to both age-classes [164] each of which, as we have seen, had its own name. This takes place at ol neher feast. All the members of the associations come together at the ol oiboni's place and build a great kraal near his village. Everybody brings honey for making beer or an ox for meat. This last is then killed by suffocation at the en gebata feast. The feast consists in consuming all these things, and its climax is the proclamation by the ol oiboni that from now on all the assembled people shall belong to a single ol adji (age-class), and have a common class name ".

561 624 FOSBROOKE, [165] states that " a single official, ol-loo-surutya, is chosen as the head of the whole generation (age-class), thus symbolising the union of the two ages (age-units) which have up to now been independent, each with its own launon or ceremonial leader ".

561 It is after this feast that " those who are not yet married do so at the carliest opportunity. Those who are married, if their fathers [591] are still alive, move off from the paternal boma (village); for they are now in complete control of their cattle, and if they stayed with their fathers there would be constant bickering on animal husbandry matters. It is also this feast that " pigtalls are cut off and are not allowed to grow again, the new elders may drink milk alone, eat meat that married women have seen, carry about short bladed spears (embere sero) in place of the long polished warriors' spears, in fact all the customs of warriorhood are abandoned ". [166] In other words through the ngeherr ceremony initiates reach a complete [554] social and economic independence and become full men or elders; they may beget children, own their own stock and build their own village or 'gate'.

There is no doubt that the value of the Ngeherr proper for the institution of the age-class is equal to that of Embolosat. This is stated by Fosbrooke. [167] He writes: " Just as the Kakonyuke ceremony of Embolosat starts off the age (class-period) for the whole tribe (read = the whole Masailand), it appears that the Kissongo Ngeherr closes it throughout Masailand ". This value of Ngeherr

[164] Read = age-units (my terminology).
[165] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30.
[166] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30.
[167] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

Besides the power of a maternal uncle to stop a fight, he has also the right to take anything which belongs to his nephew. If the uncle desires anything that is the property of his nephew's father, the nephew must buy it from his father, who will at once give it up when he knows for whom it is required. This power of taking property is reciprocal, and in fact applies to all persons who address one another as ol-apu, ol-le-'ng-apu, etc. A nephew, for instance, can go to his maternal uncle's kraal, and if his uncle is absent, he can slaughter a goat or drink his uncle's milk, and nothing would be said. He cannot, however, drive off a cow without his uncle's sanction, but permission would not be refused. Other relatives have likewise some power of taking property. A boy or man can go to his father's or paternal uncle's kraal and take or demand a goat or milk, and in all probability nothing would be said, but if it were done repeatedly the father or uncle would express dissatisfaction or refuse altogether. A man may also go to his sister's husband or wife's brother (ol-aputani) and take anything, but an account is kept and the debt has to be returned. If a man is poor it is customary for him to live with one of his brothers-in-law (ol-aputani) and help to look after the stock. He is fed for his trouble, and as payment receives one out of every pair of twin goats born.

First cousins and second cousins may not marry, but there is no objection to third cousins marrying if the relationship is no nearer than ol-le-'sōtwa (or en-e-'sōtwa). Thus, a man's son's son's son may not marry the man's brother's son's son's daughter, nor may a man's son's son's son marry the sister's son's son's daughter, but there would be no objection to a man's son's son's son marrying the brother's daughter's daughter's daughter or the sister's daughter's daughter's daughter. Likewise though a man's son's son may not marry the man's maternal uncle's son's son's daughter, he may marry the maternal uncle's son's daughter's daughter. These unions are always contingent on the two parties not belonging to the same sub-clan.[1] The rules of consanguinity and affinity which regulate marriage also apply to the sexual intercourse of warriors with immature girls before marriage and to the rights of hospitality after marriage. No warrior may select as his

[1] The Masai are divided into five clans: Il-Aiser, Il-Meñgana, Il-Mokesen, Il-Möldyan, and Il-Tarösero. Each clan is again divided into sub-clans, e.g., the Il-Aiser contain amongst others the following: In-gidoñgi and Il-Parkeneti. No man belonging to the In-gidoñgi sub-clan may take as wife the daughter of a man of the same sub-clan, but he may marry the daughter of the Il-Parkeneti or he may marry a daughter of the Il-Meñgana, Il-Mokesen, Il-Möldyan, or Il-Tarösero clans. Members of the various sub-clans are usually to be found in all the districts and sub-districts. Marriages are not affected by geographical considerations, and a man has the same lawful marital relations in all the sub-districts as he has in his own home sub-district.

In his recent book, The Ethnology of the A-Kamba and other East African Tribes (Cambridge, 1910), Hobley states (p. 121) that the restrictions governing marriage amongst the Masai are far from simple, and he gives a number of complicated instances. As a matter of fact the rules are quite simple if one remembers (i) that though the clans are not exogamous, the sub-clans into which the clans are divided are exogamous; and (ii) that no man may marry a nearer relation than a third cousin, and then only if the terms of address used are ol-le-'sōtwa and en-e-'sōtwa.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

poison is being made and when honey wine is being brewed. During the time that a man is making poison (eight days) he is treated almost as an outcast. He must leave his house at 4 a.m. and not return till 7 p.m., when he must rub clay on his body. He may not eat when the sun is above the horizon; he may only relieve nature far away from the kraal; and he must sleep alone. If he were to break any of these rules it is believed that the poison would be useless. When honey wine is to be brewed a man and a woman are selected for the purpose, neither of whom has had sexual intercourse for two days. A hut is set apart for them to live in until the honey wine is ready for drinking (six days), during which time they may not sleep together. As soon as the honey wine is ready they receive payment, and go to their respective homes. Were they to have sexual intercourse during the six days that the honey wine is brewing, it is believed that the wine would be undrinkable, and the bees that made the honey would fly away. 834 278 834 273

Mothers-in-law and their sons-in-law (eng-aputani) must avoid one another as much as possible, and if a son-in-law enters his mother-in-law's hut she must retire into the inner compartment and sit on the bed, whilst he remains in the outer compartment; they may then talk. Own brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani le-anyit and e-sindani e-anyit) must also avoid one another, though this rule does not apply to half-brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani and e-sindani). This rule is possibly due to the fact that when a man dies his own brother may not marry his widow, though there is no objection to his half-brother (paternal) or one of his paternal cousins taking her to wife. In fact, the only person who may marry a widow is one of the deceased husband's half-brothers or paternal cousins. It frequently happens, however, that widows never re-marry, but live with their children in the kraal of the eldest living brother of their late husband, who becomes the guardian of their children. 606 607 606 607 587 [591]

Divorce is almost unknown amongst the Masai, and it is only barren women who may be divorced. But if a woman is barren it is usual for her husband to give her some of his children by another wife to bring up. Daughters are usually selected; but if there are several sons the youngest and the youngest but two may be given to the stepmother. When a barren woman is a bad woman and is disliked by her husband and his other wives, she may be divorced, in which case her father or his heirs must refund the cattle paid for her, and she is at liberty to re-marry. 586

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

After going through the ceremony, the new elders can drink milk alone, eat meat that married women have seen, carry about short bladed spears (embere sero) in place of the long polished warrior's spear; in fact all the customs of warriorhood are abandoned. 561

On return to their homes those who are not yet married do so at the earliest opportunity. Those who are married, if their fathers are still alive, move off from the paternal boma; for they are now in complete control of their cattle, and if they stayed with their fathers there would be constant bickering on animal husbandry matters. [591] [578]

From the foregoing it may be concluded that the average Masai male spends at least 10 years of his life as a moran. What are his economic duties and privileges during this period? In olden times his primary duty was to defend the country and, by raiding other tribes, to maintain and increase the cattle population. But European intervention has deprived him of his main occupation, and the only duties which the moran by custom seem bound to perform to-day are (a) drawing water from wells for his father's cattle or superintending their watering at flowing streams, (b) cutting the thorn tree branches which form the fence of the boma, and (c) escorting home night-bound cattle or searching for lost beasts. It was natural that few everyday tasks should be imposed on the standing army, but although the military duties are now in abeyance, the moran have retained the privilege of freedom from responsibility together with many other perquisites. These include access to the unmarried girls and the right to demand milk in any boma. In the matter of bullocks for slaughter in ol pul, the camp at which the moran may alone eat meat, the warriors seem to have a fairly free hand; if an elder withholds his consent, his moran son (with friends) will frequently help himself. It is not improbable that with the prohibition of raiding the moran exert these privileges in greater degree than they used to. If the elders are to be believed they spent a considerable portion of their time as warriors absent from home on raids, living in the bush on stolen cattle preparatory to stealing more. Consequently the time which they spent wandering round the bomas making their demands must have been considerably curtailed. [648] [178]

Another duty, or rather, restriction placed on the moran was abstinence from tobacco and beer. The former is largely breaking down, but fortunately the latter still holds to a considerable extent. This is not so with the Arusha, amongst whom drunken brawls between groups of moran are not infrequent. [273] [276] [184]

The above largely refers to the unmarried moran; once they settle down, even before the ngeherr ceremony, their mode of life is practically indistinguishable from that of a newly made elder.

Elderhood is in itself marked by different stages, each of which has its own privileges and responsibilities. The members of the generation immediately above that of the moran are mostly concerned in family matters, establishing their own gates, marrying and performing ceremonies to ensure the fertility of their wives. The generation next above the most junior elders, as explained earlier in this chapter, is responsible for the

When blood-money is paid, it is less when the payment is between clansmen. The logical extension of this principle is that when cattle are due from one member of the clan they may be taken from any of his clansmen. This is in fact the rule for payment of compensation amongst the Masai, though the offender and his near relatives naturally pay more. In the one case of blood money in which details were obtained, members of sub-clans other than that of the murderer contributed, and it is, therefore, safe to calculate that clan responsibility and cohesion applies to the whole clan in greater degree than it does to the sub-clans. 614 672 681

B. Family matters — the boma system — the 'gates' — polygamy — marriage statistics — number of cattle to each gate — relations in law — travelling — adoption — economic.

Briefly, the Masai live in groups of families, usually three, four or five together, in a village comprising a ring of huts, built immediately inside a circular fence, which thus forms an enclosure for the cattle. Such villages are usually built some two or three miles, frequently more, from the water which the cattle use, so that it is unusual to find more than two or three bomas in close proximity. Frequently a boma is a mile or more from its nearest neighbour. In the village each family possesses a separate gate, engishome, round which its members are grouped. 361 621

It is difficult to define a typical family or 'gate' unit. The ideal of a Masai elder is to possess half a dozen wives with many children, ranged on either side of his gate. As he marries he places the first on the right of the gate, and the second on the left; when a third wife comes in she builds her hut immediately to the right of the gate, and the fourth immediately to the left, the earlier wives moving round accordingly. Each wife on arrival is given a number of cattle, which are hers to hold in trust for her children. She is also given, for tending, some of the unallocated cattle which the elder holds in reserve for future marriages; such cattle are termed engishu e boo. Those living to the right and the left of the gate form two distinct groups, indaloishin, and for the purpose of inheritance, should a wife on the left die without male issue, her cattle will be inherited by the senior male on the left of the gate; they may in no circumstances be taken by an heir on the right so long as there is a son on the left to inherit. 592 595 [428]

When the sons are circumcised, they nominally take over the guardianship of their mother, and of the cattle allocated to her. In the old days they would move off with her to the manyatta, warriors' village, but this is less frequent now. As they approach elderhood, however, in polygamous families the sons at times claim their patrimony and move off with their mothers, to form a separate gate in some other boma. More frequently they show little desire for this responsibility, and spend the greater part of their period of warriorhood wandering round the countryside, or living in meat-camps in the bush (ol pul). Once they become elders it is exceptional for a son to continue to live with his father, except when the latter has reached senility. 591 592 [361]

This is the theory of the gate system, but in practice it varies very considerably from the ideal. Polygamy (see below) is limited by the 595

561 place until the two senior groups move out together into the elders' class. The result of this arrangement is that no group which enters the warrior class as muratogedienye ever stays in the warrior class for as long as any jangienabor group.

56 62 59 [361] [634] Manyattas.—During their time of service in the warrior class the members of each age-group live in special villages built away from the main married men's villages. These villages are territorial, in that all the warriors of a single age-group in a single area live in one such village. Warriors of different age-groups never live in a single manyatta, as each manyatta is essentially the headquarters of the members of a single age-group in the warrior class in a given area. Manyattas are moved about from place to place when fresh grazing is necessary.

62 561 A manyatta consists of a number of huts each one of which is built, and lived in, by the mother (or another married woman relative) of one of the warriors of that manyatta. Normally each warrior has his own mother living in the manyatta and she is accompanied by her children, especially by some of the man's uninitiated sisters and half-sisters. The elder women are there to do the work of the manyatta, [462] such as milking, fuel gathering, water drawing, etc., and in this they are assisted to a certain extent by the girls, but the latter are chiefly in the manyattas as companions and lovers for the warriors. No girl can live at a manyatta at all unless her brother or half-brother is a member of that manyatta, and each warrior living at a manyatta is expected to bring two or three of his sisters or half-sisters to live at the manyatta, and if possible some of these should be fairly grown up and others quite children who will grow up at the manyatta.

836 561 Sex Life.—During the warrior stage no man may have sexual intercourse with any initiated girl or with married women, but on the other hand, there exists in the manyattas a system of sex life which is decidedly interesting. The warriors, whenever they feel like it (which, as my informant pointed out, is "very, very often"), invite one of the girls (sisters of the other men in the Manyatta) to sleep with them. [201] This is done by a method and formula which corresponds in some ways to the [832] umbani of the Kikuyu peoples, but has certain marked differences. [971]

A group of warriors at any time of the day will stand outside the village and call to any of the girls whom they see about, and when they come they say to them tasiukiu, and the girls then each select one of the men, and say "I choose so-and-so," not mentioning the man by his own name but as "the son of so-and-so." By so doing the girl binds herself to go and sleep with the man so chosen that night. It is a point of honour and etiquette that no girl so called upon to choose a man may refuse to do so unless she is (a) actually at a menstruation period at the time, or (b) has already promised herself to another man for that night, but she may make her choice from any of those men who were in the group that called to her.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 the nine days the elders in charge of the ceremony go about looking out for two 346 warriors from the group noted for their humility and honesty, and having selected them they keep their names very quiet, as the position for which they are being chosen is not at all sought after. In fact, as soon as the selection has been made, the relations of the two men chosen are heavily bribed in order that they shall allow them to be appointed.

561 Shaving Ceremony.—On the tenth day of the ceremony the heads of all the 624 warriors of the age-group are shaved, and during the shaving the elders come and [302] point out the two warriors whom they have chosen, and publicly proclaim them as the heads of the group during its time in the senior warrior stage. These two men are called respectively olotwat and oloborungene, and there are certain very strict regulations and restrictions attached to their position, the breaking of which would result in punishment by death; hence the unwillingness of the warriors to be chosen for these appointments, and the bribing of their relations. Unfortunately, no information about the duties of these two, or of the restrictions which they must observe under penalty of death, could be obtained from my informants. After
561 the shaving ceremony is over and these two have been appointed, the warriors go back to their normal life; but before doing so they first go all together for a few nights to a new village built for the purpose called ngong'ongorikki, and from there
[361] they scatter to their own districts. They may not, however, return to their old manyattas, which they vacated when they came to the Eunoto ceremony, but must build new manyattas.

Becoming Elders.—The length of time spent in the senior warrior class depends entirely upon whether a man belongs to an age-group called jangiendur or murutugediengo (see the Age-group system). Transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage takes place as a group transfer, but one age-group cannot transfer alone, but always two groups, a jangiendur and a murutugediengo, must transfer together. No transfer, therefore, can take place until there are two age-groups in the warrior stage who have gone through the Eunoto ceremony. Once there are two such groups in the senior stage the actual time of transfer is dictated by whether or not there is a new age-group waiting in the novice stage ready to move up into the junior warrior stage, for as stated above (see the Age-group system), there may never be more than three age-groups in the warrior stage at one time. Equally no two warrior groups may move out into the Elders' stage until there is a new age-group in the novice stage, as otherwise it would mean leaving a single age-group alone in the warrior stage for too long, and this would be a serious thing when only the warrior groups are the fighting forces of the tribe. The actual transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage takes place without any ceremonial, and the [591] men just leave their manyattas and go and live with their wives, with whom as yet they have never lived, although the wives may be mothers with several children (see Marriage).

11: Leakey K-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

584 The method of betrothing an unborn child is as follows:—A man or boy wishing to do so seeks a pregnant woman (provided, of course, that her husband is not of his own sub-clan), and goes to her and anoints her on the stomach either with fat or with red ochre mixed with castor oil. By so doing he pledges that if the child born is a girl he will eventually marry her. Should the child be a boy he is bound to it in friendship for life. In the event of the child being a girl he must, from birth onwards, present the child with small gifts from time to time, and as the girl grows up supply her with such necklaces or ornaments as she may demand from him. A man or boy wishing to betroth himself to an infant girl does so simply by giving the child a necklace, and from then on he must supply her with such ornaments as she may require. Of course, a man must first of all ascertain that the child—whether unborn or an infant—is not already betrothed. A man may cancel a betrothal if he wishes to do so (but he cannot break his pledge of friendship with a boy in the case of a boy being born to a woman whom he anointed when she was pregnant), and the father of a girl may cancel betrothal by refusing to drink any more of the suitor's beer. If a girl, as she grows up, decides that she does not wish to marry the man to whom she is betrothed, she can easily avoid doing so by arranging with one of her lovers to have intercourse with her just after menstruation, and thereby conceiving. She then has the option of marrying this lover should he be willing.

584 584 Normal Marriage (as a First Wife).—It is clear from the above description of betrothal that it is unlikely that a girl will reach her time for initiation unbetrothed. Should she do so by any chance, her father would at once make every effort to find her a husband, probably from among the older men who already have several wives. Nor would the girl object in any way, for to be initiated and not be married directly afterwards would make her the laughing stock of all the neighbourhood. When a girl is to be the first wife of a man, it usually means that her husband-to-be is still a member of a warrior group. This, of course, means that he cannot in the normal way live with his wife for some time. This fact, however, in no way interferes with the marriage ceremony and transaction, the presence of the husband not being considered in any way necessary. 585

The respective fathers of the girl and of the man make all the arrangements and transactions when the girl is initiated (see below), and as soon as these have been concluded, and the girl has recovered from the operation and been through the shaving ceremony, she goes to the village of her husband's family, where she has already built herself a hut (or had it built for her by her friends).

As a married woman her main duty in life now is to bear children, just as it was her duty before initiation to avoid conception. If her husband is still in the warrior class and may, therefore, not have any sexual intercourse with her, this is no hindrance to her in performing this duty, as she may now have intercourse with any married man of sub-class other than her own. [591] [591] are taken in another direction, which means that they drink only on alternate days, but at the same time graze over a larger area than if they went to water every day, thus helping to conserve the grazing. There are two types of kraal. The married men with their wives and children live in one type, and the warriors with their mothers, sisters, and girl lovers in another type. The main structural difference between the two types seems to be that the warriors' kraal has no fence, while the elders' kraal is surrounded by a thorn fence. The elders' kraal varies in size: it may contain from seven to several hundred huts, though very large examples (such as were seen by Tobbi and von Höhnel) are probably uncommon; the average is probably about 20 to 50. The warriors' kraal may contain between 50 and 100. In the elders' kraal the huts are built round the inside of the fence, which is also the enclosure in which the livestock are housed at night. The number of gates in the fence depends upon the number and size of the families which live in it. Each family has exclusive rights over at least one gate, and a large family with many cattle has more than one. The kraal, enk-ang, thus approximates to a village, for several families live in it, and the gate, ilokwani, has come to typify the family, the word being used with the article (en-ilokwani) as a synonym for el-manyi, "the family." When a man sets up his home in a kraal, he puts his first wife in a hut on the right of his gate as one goes in, and the second wife on the left; the third, if he has one, goes on the right, and the fourth on the left, and so on, the huts being so arranged that each succeeding wife lives immediately to the right or left of her gate. The people on each side of the gate form two distinct groups, ie-lalaisia, the effect of which is felt most in matters of inheritance. (See below, p. 108.) The warriors' kraal or e-manyata is inhabited by all the members of one age-set in one district, who constitute a company, eirt, and the kraals are built in strategic positions. With the men live their mothers, and some young sisters who help their mothers, and if old enough become lovers of warriors. The mother, her warrior son, and younger children share a hut, all sleeping on separate beds; when the warrior wants to sleep with his lover he goes to another hut. The mother's husband may visit her at any time, and when he comes her hut must be given up to the pair. The inhabitants of a manyata vary considerably in number, ranging from 30 to several hundred.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

LIVESTOCK

Cattle

Cattle, ie-ldiko, are the object on which the lives of the Masai are centred, and on which their whole existence depends. Their importance is both material and spiritual, and people who perform any kind of work other than tending cattle are despised by the Masai, whose attitude towards cattle is similar to that of the Nandi. The Masai believe that in the beginning God gave them all the cattle in the world, and therefore nobody else has a right to possess any. Cattle provide the Masai warrior with his food in the form of milk, blood, and meat, and they give him spiritual and mental satisfaction through their existence, though it would seem that there is less outward and ritual expression of the love of cattle than among some other East African tribes who combine pastoralism with agriculture. This, however, does not by any means indicate that the Masai are an agricultural people who have wholly given up agriculture and taken to pastoralism. Since the Masai, unlike the Nandi, kill large numbers of their cattle for eating, it was essential in the past for them to maintain the size of their herds by continual raiding, for the natural reproduction rate would not have been enough. On account of its high ritual value, milk may not be drunk on the same day that meat is eaten, nor may it be boiled; but it may be drunk mixed with blood. Grass also has a high ritual value, being the food of cattle, and is used as a sign of peace. In 1930 the average size of an elder's herd was officially estimated at about 75 head of cattle, 80 sheep and goats, and 18 donkeys; this was based on the estimate of 720,000 as the total number of cattle belonging to the Kenya Masai. In Tanganyika, it was found that the average number

595 /27 cont./
[736] see in their position as secondary wife lasting or temporary maintenance. Each wife has her own hut, in which she lives with one or several small children and manages an independent household. The woman married first is the principal wife (en altero eng an) (1)

1. = the first in the kraal.

and remains such until death; then the woman married next after [422] her steps into this position. The principal wife is supported the best, in that the husband surrenders to her a large part of his cattle for the usufruct and treats her with distinction before the other wives by means of gifts of ornaments and clothing, as well as by better service. /28/ Her eldest son has prerogatives in the right of succession. The principal wife exercises supervision over the other wives and keeps them at the work when they neglect it.

422 The domestic community does not have any common property. As property there comes into consideration first cattle, goats,
[554] sheep, and donkeys. The size of the herd is the gauge for the social position of its owner, the father of the family. The cattle
[428] handed over by him to each of his wives for care and usufruct remain his own, and only when the wife has a son about ten or twelve years old do they pass, with his consent, into the latter's possession, and sometimes into his ownership. /Ill. 9 appears here./ A presupposition for the latter, however, is that the boy is not needed in the tending of the paternal herds. For as soon
• [591] as he receives the livestock, he must leave his father's kraal, along with his mother, in order to lay out a small new kraal for himself at a distance of several kilometers. This is supposed to prevent the two herds from coming together, an opportunity which otherwise the son would often enough take advantage of 422 to steal from the father. Huts and household implements, both 423 only of slight durability and little value, theoretically also belong to the father of the family, but in practice to those of his [462] wives who use these things. The woman builds the hut, whereby the children or other women help her. What is not used in

000

/30 cont./

592 422 [434] The earnings of the sons who are growing up to become warriors consist of captured livestock and in the main passes into the father's herd. Actual separate goods for the individual members of the family are only clothing and ornaments, for the sons also their weapons, and further for boys the livestock given to them by the father, for youths and warriors the share of the captured cattle which they keep for themselves.

592 593 The family head is the father of the family. If an older man of his family also lives with him or in the same or a closely neighboring kraal, the two share in the office of the head in such a manner that in all decisions people listen to and heed the counsel of the elder one. Legally the head can be deposed by his brothers for mismanagement and incompetence, but this seems to take place only very exceptionally. The head makes the decisions in all family matters. A right to kill and penalize the members does not belong to the father of the family: just as he is not responsible for their debts and misdeeds, neither may he sell or pledge them. The [731] [667] fact that during the famine caused by two cattle epidemics that followed each other in a short time around the year 1890 children and women were given into slavery by their relatives does not prove anything to the contrary. When the corpses of many thousands of the starved lay in the steppes and there was no food of any kind for the survivors, no escape remained for them other than to give themselves or their relatives as serfs to such people as could feed them.

593 591 613 Individual members may detach themselves on account of bad treatment. One who detaches himself flees to another of his lineage or to the one from which his mother stems and purchases his admission with a few cattle that he has stolen from his father's herd and taken along. If he found acceptance in the latter, he must return to his own as soon as he becomes a father.

If a girl is expelled, she may freely choose her future abode, irrespective of tribe or lineage. Wherever she finds admittance /31/ she usually remains permanently, in that she marries a member of this lineage. That is, the men and girls taken in remain nonmembers of the lineage, despite their admission, so that they can enter into a legal marriage with members of the lineage concerned.

/44 cont./

584 A betrothal in earliest childhood is not infrequent among the Masai, though also not common by far. In such cases the father of the boy, several months after the birth of a girl, asks for her [572] for his son. Such a betrothal is in no way binding; rather it seems to have only the value and purpose of strengthening a friendship between the two fathers and assuring each other of mutual aid in case of impoverishment. It probably need scarcely be mentioned that in connection with a betrothal in early childhood it is only a matter of the betrothal of the boy to his later first, that is, principal, wife. Usually the betrothal to the later principal wife is not entered into until the boy is 20 or 22 and the girl eight to ten years old. For the former, his father makes the proposal to the mother of the girl, after the bridegroom himself has made sure of the girl's consent. As soon as the mother has then obtained the consent of her husband, she anoints the head of the bride with butter or beef fat, as a sign that the betrothal has been accepted and the girl is now betrothed. As such she is called atesêra. During the period of betrothal the couple do not come together; the bridegroom avoids the kraal in which his bride lives, but, if he should enter it, the girl hides from him. Thus the two live completely separated from each other, and, to be sure, in two different warrior kraals. The bridegroom, first as young warrior [591] (ol barnôti, el barnôt), then as actual warrior (ol morîni, el morân), lives with his companions and a corresponding number of young girls in one kraal, the bride, on the other hand, with other young girls and warriors in another, distant one. If the girl be- 584 comes pregnant during this time, it is regarded as a disgrace and 848 usually leads to dissolving the betrothal. If the latter, by way of exception, is not the case, the betrothed ones marry as soon as possible. Otherwise the girl awaits her confinement in the hut of an old woman from among her relatives, and after the nursing period is over she goes to another, distant warrior kraal, in the 582 hope of finding a husband there. Only when the warrior is tired of the military life, when his physical strength falls behind that of the majority of his companions, does he think of getting married, in order not long afterwards to exchange the military life

/48 cont./

585 her own. Where a jus primae noctis is customary -- frequent, but not general -- it belongs to one or two old comrades-in-arms of the young husband. One who does not grant the jus primae noctis when it is claimed is insultingly called ol alomöni or ol ömischo (formed from a-lōm, that is, refuse). He refuses others what they have a right to and must expect them to steal a few head of cattle from him in the next few days without his being entitled to raise a complaint about it. One who does not want to go along with this old custom, which is said to happen, has the wedding take place without any festivity, in order to avoid it. The bridegroom simply hands over the bride price, whereupon the bride, without any ceremony, follows
• [591] him into his already completed hut. This dwelling lies either in the kraal of his father or in the warrior kraal occupied by the young husband up to then and remains there until all his age mates are married; only then do the married couple build their own kraal.

/49/ After the married couple have moved into their home, the wife may not leave it for the next two days. It is customary for the husband to present her with three cows and a bull during these days, and on the third day she accompanies this livestock to the pasture, but does not stay there. During the next three days the wife does no work; not until the fourth day does she start it, and to be sure, with the milk-
[822] ing of a plain black cow. According to the Masai explanation, the plain black is the symbol for quiet seriousness, whereas bright colors signify gaiety and lightheartedness. The woman is supposed to perform her duties with seriousness and not neglect them, lightheartedly rambling about, and make her husband angry by idle gossip.

768 If the marriage is dissolved by the husband's death, the widow
587 may, if she is willing, become the property of his eldest brother or half brother; she may live with the former, whereas the latter may marry her legally after the expiration of three or four months. Upon 586 the death of the wife, the husband pays no compensation. A divorce may be brought about if the man drives out the woman or if the woman runs away from the man and refuses to return. In the first instance, the divorce is preceded by a family consultation in which the head of the family pronounces the divorce. The woman must

881 /63 cont./
[626] trample underfoot. The one now scorned had also wanted /64/ to [152] regale guests with it on that day, but no one came to him whose son [535] showed himself to be a tŏrŏnŏ. While the old people, as long as [533] there is something to eat and drink, are only interested in that, the warriors, already early in the afternoon, start to dance and sing with the young girls and amuse themselves in this way into the night. Not until about ten o'clock do they go back to their kraal, to which the girls presently follow them, after they have begged for a little more milk, which they take along to their lovers. /Ill. 18 appears here./

[158] The circumcised boys, soon after the completed operation, went into the huts of their mothers and stayed there for seven days, until a superficial healing of the wound has taken place. In order to hasten this, they are particularly well cared for and are given only milk,
[411] blood, and meat. During the following period, until complete
[223] healing, they roam in small bands with bow and arrow -- they do not use the ordinary bows, but ones only about half as long, made only for this occasion: the arrows used with them have a wax ball at the tip -- through steppe /65/ and forest, in order to shoot small birds, the skins of which they string by the beaks on a cord, which they place garland-like around forehead and occiput. Between the bird
[301] skins the es sibolio (sing. os siboli) -- as the newly circumcised ones
[302] are called during their recuperation -- stick an ostrich feather on each side of their heads and paint their faces with white clay (en doroto). On the first day they go out, they slaughter a white goat-
[262] buck on the steppe. After they have roasted and eaten its meat, they throw the gnawed bones into the fire. This meal is called ol gĭne l ol benek (ol gĭne = the goat buck, ol benek means the tree with whose branches they make the fire). Every evening after their excursions they return to the kraal and to the huts of their mothers.

881
• 591 As soon as the young girl, who until then has lived in the warrior kraal in the most unrestrained freedom, concludes from certain

[TEXT CONTINUED ON PAGE 86]

881 /65 cont./
• 591 indications that she is about to become a woman, she returns to her

142
291
301

C. G. Schillings phot.

Ill. 19. Young Masai girls.

881 mother's hut. If several girls of the kraal are in the same situation,
[591] the mothers agree /66/ on a definite day (1)

[613] 1. The circumcision of the girls belonging to the El kiborón always takes place on the 24th day of the Masai month.

for which they then secure an old woman experienced in circumcision. Otherwise they wait a few more weeks; perhaps a girl who is ready will still be found, since one need not necessarily wait for the aforementioned indications, or, if by chance a circumcision of the boys is about to take

/82 cont./

714 black, the youths then paint their shields. The red color may appear 701 in the ornamental band only with the carrying of the large red emblem.
531 They carry the black emblem and the ornamental band until they 561 have become the equals of the warriors and are able, by their ability, to obtain the red emblem by obstinacy or force, for the warriors, of their own accord, will not let a younger age class carry those emblems. Therefore, when the youths feel strong enough, they complete their shield escutcheon in the aforesaid way and then carry it 714 /83/ ostentatiously for show. The warriors see it, become angry, 701 and scold. The el barnot, for whom the warriors have until then 531 been persons of respect, answer snappishly and impudently and scoff
561 that the warriors have now become old and weak and neither need 578 nor deserve the red emblem any longer. No one likes to be reminded of his shortcomings, and a Masai least of all tolerates the reproach -- for that is what it is for the one still in the warrior association -- of incompetence in war, especially if it is hurled at him in streeturchin fashion out of the taunting mouth of a younger person. At the [591] same time the youths build a circular barricade of branches and move in, possibly even before it is filled with huts -- a further provocation of the warriors, for with that the el barnot declare that they too now have a right to their own warrior kraal and are no longer to be regarded as recruits, but as full-fledged soldiers. The consequence of this is that during one of the following nights the warriors attack the growing kraal in order to make the point clear to the el barnot with force. If the latter are defeated, nothing remains for them for the time being but to scratch the red emblem from their shields again with [721] all haste. They give vent to their anger over their defeat by scolding and by one or two small raids against Negro tribes. Sometimes the 701 warriors then acknowledge them as equals, especially if the raids have 561 brought rich spoils, but often too they must force their recognition as [531] before. If this succeeds, they may now also carry the red emblem and [714] are henceforth regarded as true warriors. They continue to build the kraal that was started and live beside the other warriors, but go to war with them. Usually, however, this situation does not last long;
rather, the old warriors soon quit the service and marry. It is therefore an exception if there are two warrior kraals in one region at the same time.

701 /104 cont./
182 a little while, will then lead them farther. Otherwise they leave it 222 the rest.
[825] When the warriors of an ol boror notice that their bones are 701 getting old and the el barnot surpass them in strength, they agree
561 that it is now time to think of marriage. After they have obtained
582 the permission of the speaker and then that of the chief, one after the other leaves the warrior association, each one shortly before his 701 wedding. He announces his retirement by means of a feast, the ol
561 geteñ l ol bāā, that is, ox slaughtering with a tournament. To this 574 all the inhabitants of the nearest kraals are invited and are shown hospitality with the meat of one or several head of cattle. As soon as these are killed, each warrior cuts off a piece of meat for himself and devours it behind a bush standing somewhat apart. Then each of those present receives his share, while the remainder is strung on sticks two meters high. For these the warriors fight with the girls and women in a game in which the latter vigorously swing the sticks, before which the former has more fear than the women, somewhat
[526] accustomed to beatings. Then the younger ones amuse themselves and play, for instance, tag (tosudja). Before there is thought of de-
[539] parture, about five o'clock in the afternoon, a married man and his principal wife go to the host and make the following speech: "adjogi megur' ira ol morāni dada it' ol móruo, iñora ñ gischu inonu, ñ gera inonu, iñora naleñ, tabala 'mbaa el móran, idà tada ol móruo, tabala n dogitin bāgin el móran, ida tada ol móruo"; in translation: I say, you are no longer Ol morāni, but Ol móruo, take care of your cattle and your goats and sheep and watch over them well, leave the occupation of the warriors, now you are ol móruo, refrain from all things of the warriors, now you are ol móruo.

701 After this feast it is up to the warrior whether he takes part more 561 or less regularly in the expeditions of war. As a rule he soon marries [582] and lives with his wife either in the father's kraal or in the warrior kraal until all his contemporaries are married. Only then are they
• [591] considered ol móruo: each one builds his own kraal and removes
[145] clothing, ornaments, and braid of the warriors. He is now at the end of the twenties, his best strength has been spent. In general the Masai, just like all members of the black race, spend their lives very quickly, they age early, without ever attaining a really advanced age.

177 178 224 561 701 721 previously. There is a considerable amount of raiding to steal stock from surrounding tribes. This precipitated several minor wars when we were there, and administrative action prevented one major war with thousands of combatants. Some lions are still killed, and the morani have been blooding their spears on a variety of other animals, most notably rhinos.

561 Following the period of service as warriors, each age class goes through another ceremony. Two age classes, a right hand and left hand together, take the ceremony and they then receive another age grade name which they retain the rest of their lives. Thus these elder age grades each span a period of about 15 years (Grant, 1957).

177 178 561 Periodically the administration has tried to discourage the moran system. In late years some of the elders have also tried to change the system in order to maintain better control over the young men. The system still continues in Western Masailand but it is much less regular than previously.

561 593 591 When a warrior becomes circumcised he may take his mother with him to the warrior' manyatta, or he may leave her home or apparently even stay home himself.

561 He may marry when he is a senior warrior. When he becomes 593 an elder he may take his mother (if he wants) and her
• 591 share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given [582] share of cattle) and move off to join others in a village [422]
[562] (Fosbrooke, 1948).

561 The unmarried girls of the tribe live in the 836 warrior's manyattas and normally each moran has one [583] favorite girl who becomes his concubine. They told us that usually that girl became the warrior's first wife.

621 (c) Villages: Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called bomas or 361 (improperly) manyattas. Each boma consists of an outer
#233 circular thorn fence with a series of gates, one for [417] each Masai elder. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Often around the huts are small thorn fences in which young livestock are kept. The cattle of the village are normally herded into the space in the center of the boma each night for protection from two and four legged predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

595 When a Masai marries, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left,

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

When blood-money is paid, it is less when the payment is between clansmen. The logical extension of this principle 614 is that when cattle are due from one member of the clan they may be taken from any of his clansmen. This is in fact the rule for payment 672 of compensation amongst the Masai, though the offender and his near 681 relatives naturally pay more. In the one case of blood money in which details were obtained, members of sub-clans other than that of the murderer contributed, and it is, therefore, safe to calculate that clan responsibility and cohesion applies to the whole clan in greater degree than it does to the sub-clans.

B. Family matters — the boma system — the 'gates' — polygamy — marriage statistics — number of cattle to each gate — relations in law — travelling — adoption — economic.

Briefly, the Masai live in groups of families, usually three, four 361 or five together, in a village comprising a ring of huts, built immediately 621 inside a circular fence, which thus forms an enclosure for the cattle. Such villages are usually built some two or three miles, frequently more, from the water which the cattle use, so that it is unusual to find more than two or three bomas in close proximity. Frequently a boma is a mile or more from its nearest neighbour. In the village each family possesses a separate gate, engishome, round which its members are grouped.

It is difficult to define a typical family or 'gate' unit. The ideal of 592 ●
a Masai elder is to possess half a dozen wives with many children, ranged 595
on either side of his gate. As he marries he places the first on the right of the gate, and the second on the left; when a third wife comes in she builds her hut immediately to the right of the gate, and the fourth immediately to the left, the earlier wives moving round accordingly. Each wife on arrival is given a number of cattle, which are hers to hold in trust for her children. She is also given, for tending, some of the unallocated cattle which the elder holds in reserve for future marriages; such cattle are termed engishu e boo. Those living to the [428] right and the left of the gate form two distinct groups, indaloishin, and for the purpose of inheritance, should a wife on the left die without male issue, her cattle will be inherited by the senior male on the left of the gate; they may in no circumstances be taken by an heir on the right so long as there is a son on the left to inherit.

When the sons are circumcised, they nominally take over the 591 guardianship of their mother, and of the cattle allocated to her. In the 592 old days they would move off with her to the manyatta, warriors' village, but this is less frequent now. As they approach elderhood, however, in polygamous families the sons at times claim their patrimony and move off with their mothers, to form a separate gate in some other boma. More frequently they show little desire for this responsibility, and spend [361] the greater part of their period of warriorhood wandering round the countryside, or living in meat-camps in the bush (ol pul). Once they become elders it is exceptional for a son to continue to live with his father, except when the latter has reached senility.

This is the theory of the gate system, but in practice it varies very 595 considerably from the ideal. Polygamy (see below) is limited by the

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

595 number of women available; at times a poor relation will join in a gate with a richer one; again, mothers and mothers-in-law and deceased brothers' wives are frequently included; and nowadays married warriors [592] are found staying on with their fathers. Thus a symmetrically arranged 'gate' is seldom found in practice.

The practical effect of this system is that a Masai elder attempts to main a constant succession of wives, marrying new ones to replace those who depart with their sons. As there are no unmarried adult women amongst the Masai, this means that senile old men take to wife girls only just past the age of puberty. As such girls have previously been accustomed to the companionship, both sexual and social, of the moran, it is little to be wondered at that they frequently run away, or attempt to run away, with their erstwhile companions. The elders have no idea of preventing this by making the girls' married life more attractive than their previous one; their only remedy is force.

The two primary motives for polygamy are the desire for children, [152] and the necessity to have women to tend the cattle. There is little sexual jealousy amongst the Masai; within the age-set the wives are [836 837] communal to all age-mates, and an age-mate known to be the father of one's child is regarded as a special friend. Intercourse between men of one age and the wives of another is nominally prohibited, but its [572] extensive practice is acknowledged by the Masai, and in fact receives general connivance. Concerning the economic motive for polygamy, increasing herds necessitate more women to tend them, and at the same time offer the means of obtaining such women. Not that the actual [583] dowry is heavy — usually three heifers and a bullock — but a man prefers to marry off his daughters to a rich elder, rather than to a poor moran. Thus economics and sociology are closely linked, and action in one sphere will have repercussions in the other.

162 595 The extent to which polygyny is practised can be judged from the following table :—

Distribution of Wives amongst Adult Male Population.

	Kibaya		Samatwa		Engasu-met		Longido		Total
	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives
Total unmarried	102	—	135	—	53	—	151	—	441	—
One wife	65	65	82	82	50	50	134	134	331	331
Two wives	46	92	46	92	15	30	46	92	153	306
Three wives	13	39	12	36	11	33	10	30	46	138
Four wives	8	32	6	24	5	20	1	4	20	80
Five wives	1	5	2	10	1	5	—	—	4	20
Over five wives	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	25	4	25
Total polygamists	68	—	66	—	32	—	61	—	227	—
Total of men and women	235	233	283	244	135	138	346	285	999	900

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

These figures were obtained by reading through tax registers to groups of elders, who supplied the information. The number of wives showing in the registers were not revealed to them, and it was noted that in many cases the numbers given by the elders exceded those recorded in the books. 162 595 [26]

The percentages to be drawn from this table are of special interest when compared with another tribe. For this reason they are tabulated below, in conjunction with those of the Hehe, figures from Brown and Hutt's 'Anthropology in Action', page 107. 162 171 595

Marriage Statistics.

	MASAI	HEHE
Unmarried men	42.2%	25.3%	) of adult
Men with one wife	33.1%	46.4%	) male
Men with two or more wives ...	22.7%	28.3%	) population.
Wives for every 100 married men ...	161	153

Two points of interest arise from these figures. The first is the much larger proportion of unmarried men amongst the Masai. These fall mainly in the warrior class, as the following table shows :—

Marriage of Moran. 162 595

	Kibaya	Samatwa	Engasumet	Longido	Total
Total moran	123	159	66	234	582
Total married moran	17	23	20	85	145
Percentage married	13.8%	14.5%	30.3%	36.3%	28.0%

The other interesting point is that one would expect both the percentage of polygamous marriages to total marriages, and the number of married women per 100 men to be much higher in the case of the Masai than the figures actually reveal. The reason for this lies in the number of dependent women not classified by the Masai as wives. The first table shows that for 999 adult males there are only 900 wives; but census figures show a preponderance of females over males, and the 999 males probably represent at least 1,200 adult females, the balance being made up by mothers (with husbands still alive) living with their moran sons, deceased brothers' wives with male issue, (not therefore taken to wife), etc.

In one area the distribution of the women (wives only) amongst the ages was worked out; it was found that there were approximately 2 wives to every Dwati, 1.5 to every Dareto and 0.3 only to every Kisale.

Although it was found that on an average each gate pays only four taxes, the probability is that there are usually more than four huts to a gate, for those moran who pay tax but do not possess a hut are thought to be more than offset by those women who do possess a hut yet pay no tax. The number of cattle to each gate were examined in the Longido area, with the results shown in the table below :— 233 592

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

233
592

Cattle per Gate.

Number of cattle.		Gates.		Percentage.
Under 50	—	52	—	10.1%
50 — 100	—	92	—	17.9%
101 — 200	—	193	—	37.5%
201 — 300	—	115	—	22.4%
301 — 400	—	34	—	6.8%
401 — 500	—	11	—	2.1%
501 — 600	—	9	—	1.7%
601 — 700	—	3
701 — 800	—	2
801 — 900	—	1	—	1.5%
901 —1000	—	1
Over 1000	—	1
		Total 514

As 156,966 cattle were owned by these 514 gates it follows that the average number per gate is just over three hundred, but this figure is misleading, for two-thirds of the gates possess less than two hundred head.*

581
606

The advantages of marriage not only include the acquisition of a woman to bear one's children and to tend one's cattle. For marriage sets up a new relationship with one's wife's family, whereby each party is expected to help the other. If a father-in-law loses his cattle by drought or disease, the son-in-law is expected to contribute towards a new herd; if a son-in-law strikes hard times, the father-in-law — if only for the sake of his daughter — will transfer cattle to him.

At times, also, a daughter will, by amicable arrangement with the son-in-law, return to live with her father for considerable periods, being visited from time to time by her husband, or again a grandson will be sent from home to help herd his grandfather's cattle.

484
[584]

The fulfilment of these various obligations leads to much travelling and consequent contact, almost as much as the actual betrothal and marriage does. This latter is a lengthy process. Early betrothal is the rule and involves a long engagement, during which the man is expected to maintain contact with his future in-laws. Frequent travelling is also necessary in other connections; for example a man goes himself or sends a son to examine the water and pasture of the area to which he proposes to move, and as we have seen the moran are always on the move, visiting friends, begging bullocks for meat-feasts, etc. So in spite of the size of the area which they inhabit, and of their scattered settlements, the Masai maintain very close contact amongst themselves.

597

Another point of considerable importance in Masai family affairs is the adoption of children, frequently practised both in respect of Masai

* The mean number of cattle per gate lies between 100 and 200 or between 25 and 50 head per adult male taxpayer—Ed.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

are taken in another direction, which means that they drink only on alternate days, [233] but at the same time graze over a larger area than if they went to water every day, 361 thus helping to conserve the grazing. There are two types of kraal. The married men with their wives and children live in one type, and the warriors with their mothers, sisters, and girl lovers in another type. The main structural difference [351] between the two types seems to be that the warriors' kraal has no fence, while the elders' kraal is surrounded by a thorn fence. The elders' kraal varies in size: it may contain from seven to several hundred huts, though very large examples (such as were seen by Teleki and von Höhnel) are probably uncommon; the average is probably about 20 to 50. The warriors' kraal may contain between 50 and 100. In the elders' kraal the huts are built round the inside of the fence, which is also the enclosure in which the livestock are housed at night. The number of gates in the fence depends upon the number and size of the families which live in it. Each family has exclusive rights over at least one gate, and a large family with many cattle has more than one. The kraal, enk-ay, thus approximates to a village, for several [329] families live in it, and the gate, kishomi, has come to typify the family, the word being used with the article (en-kishomi) as a synonym for ol-merei, "the family." When a man sets up his home in a kraal, he puts his first wife in a hut on the right 361 of his gate as one goes in, and the second wife on the left; the third, if he has one, 592 goes on the right, and the fourth on the left, and so on, the huts being so arranged that each succeeding wife lives immediately to the right or left of her gate. The people on each side of the gate form two distinct groups, in-tabishin, the effect of which is felt most in matters of inheritance. (See below, p. 108.) The warriors' 361 kraal or e-manyata is inhabited by all the members of one age-set in one district, 591 who constitute a company, sirit, and the kraals are built in strategic positions. With the men live their mothers, and some young sisters who help their mothers, and if [561] old enough become lovers of warriors. The mother, her warrior son, and younger children share a hut, all sleeping on separate beds; when the warrior wants to sleep with his lover he goes to another hut. The mother's husband may visit her at any [593] time, and when he comes her hut must be given up to the pair. The inhabitants of a manyata vary considerably in number, ranging from 30 to several hundred.

Livestock

Cattle

Cattle, in-kishu, are the object on which the lives of the Masai are centred, and on which their whole existence depends. Their importance is both material and spiritual, and people who perform any kind of work other than tending cattle are despised by the Masai, whose attitude towards cattle is similar to that of the Nandi. The Masai believe that in the beginning God gave them all the cattle in the world, and therefore nobody else has a right to possess any. Cattle provide the Masai [262] warrior with his food in the form of milk, blood, and meat, and they give him spiritual and mental satisfaction through their existence, though it would seem that there is less outward and ritual expression of the love of cattle than among some other East African tribes who combine pastoralism with agriculture. This, however, does not by any means indicate that the Masai are an agricultural people who have wholly given up agriculture and taken to pastoralism. Since the Masai, unlike the Nandi, kill large numbers of their cattle for eating, it was essential in the past for them to maintain the size of their herds by continual raiding, for the natural reproduction rate would not have been enough. On account of its high ritual value, milk may not be drunk on the same day that meat is eaten, nor may it be boiled; but it may be drunk mixed with blood. Grass also has a high ritual value, being the food of cattle, and is used as a sign of peace. In 1930 the average size of an elder's herd was officially estimated at about 75 head of cattle, 86 sheep and goats, and 18 233 donkeys; this was based on the estimate of 720,000 as the total number of cattle belonging to the Kenya Masai. In Tanganyika, it was found that the average number

233 of cattle to a family (kishomi) in 1948 was between 100 and 200 head. There [171] appears to be no such system as the Nandi koptic or Kipsikis himanakas. (See above, p. 21.) Milking is done by girls and women into gourds; the calf is allowed [234] to suck, and if it dies the skin, sometimes stuffed with grass and called ol-kuta, is presented to the cow at each milking. The milk yield is about three pints a day.
Cattle are bled in the same way as by the Nandi, with a blocked arrow, ol-goret, shot into the jugular vein, and the blood is caught in a gourd. Sheep also are bled.
Cattle are branded with marks on the rump or flank which indicate the owner's clan or sub-clan, with sometimes a private mark as well; the ears are also clipped for the same purpose. Salt for cattle is obtained by driving the herds to a salt-lick, 232 em-bolioi. The Masai are said to have effective remedies for diseases of cattle, but their efficacy has never been enough to prevent heavy loss during epidemics of rinderpest and pleuro-pneumonia.

Donkeys

492 The Masai keep large numbers of donkeys (i-sirhon, sing. e-sihiria) which are used for carrying their goods when they move house (idur). Donkeys are marked by slitting the ears in different ways.

The Status of Cattle

422 The status of cattle as regards ownership is uncertain. Merker says that warriors may own cattle; Thomson says they may not, and on such a point the statements of a traveller are open to question. Fosbrooke says that they may.[1] But further investigation of cattle as property, and of their status in the light of ritual value is required.

Inheritance of Cattle

428 There does not seem to be any clear account of the rules which control the division of a man's stock among his sons. The guiding principle is that the eldest son of the senior wife gets the largest share, inheriting not only the cattle given in trust to his mother, but also those which his father had kept for his own use.
Inheritance is affected also by the "gate" (kishomi) arrangement in the kraal, for cattle may not pass from one side to the other. If a wife on the left side dies without sons, her cattle may not go to a man on the right side so long as there are any sons by other wives on the left side. This subject also needs further investigation.

Grazing and Water Rights

423 Land is not owned by individuals, but by the sub-tribe (ol-oiko), and grazing rights are acquired by residence. Water rights are controlled by the clan. In the old days, when the Masai occupied new territory, each warrior, according to tradition, claimed a well, spring, or water-hole on behalf of his clan. Individual rights over water are thus ruled out by tradition, and the senior member of a clan living at the water decides, after consultation with other clansmen, the order in which people take their cattle to water. But a Masai when actually on the move with cattle may claim, and must be given, priority over local cattle at any well or spring. Where water is plentiful, however, as in a river, possession is communal.

Division of Labour

592 In a purely pastoral society like that of the Masai the expression "economic 593 unit" has little meaning, but so far as it can be said to exist, it is the family. It must be remembered, however, that the normal practice is for families to be divided between the father's kraal, enk-ang, and the warriors' kraal, e-manyata, and that the [1] Fosbrooke, personal communication.

[Can details of the (Kishomi) arrangement in residence, see p. 109. --Analyst]

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

572 ●
573
462

latter is of little economic significance, except that it is the duty of the warriors to get cattle by raiding. In the division of work, the people mainly concerned are the uncircumcised boys, the girls, and the women. The boys do most of the herding, assisted by the elders. Women and girls milk and act as servants to the warriors. The girls do household work till they are old enough to become lovers of the warriors, when they do very little work. The greater part of the work thus falls on the older women, who besides doing or supervising the milking and other ordinary household tasks like fetching water and firewood, build the huts, load and drive the donkeys when moving, prepare skins for clothing, and trade with neighbouring tribes for food and other things. The warriors used to be occupied exclusively either with war or preparations for war, or with dancing, visiting, and making love. Their military activities have today been replaced by certain tasks connected with cattle, and by cattle-stealing and raids on neighbouring tribes. The senior elders are occupied with political matters, and some of them with the instruction and control of the initiates and younger warriors; they also help with the herding, and take part in trading with the neighbouring peoples.

The only specialists in the economic sphere are the smiths, il-kunono, sing. ol-kunoni, who live segregated from the rest of the Masai, and marry among themselves. They have a distinctly inferior status, and are despised by the Masai, who oil their hands before taking anything from a smith. At one time the smiths lived near deposits of iron ore, such as those in the Mataputo river; but nowadays the availability of trade-iron has given them greater freedom of domicile. They make the iron-work used by the Masai, including spears, swords, and ornaments.[1]

326
[463]
[364]

Though according to Hollis a few Masai women made pottery, the Masai as a rule buy their pots from the Bantu.

323
439

Food

Except among the agricultural Masai, no cereal or vegetable food at all is grown, nor was it eaten in the old days by warriors, whose diet consisted of meat, milk, and blood, the latter providing the necessary salt. The animals eaten included their own cattle, buffalo, ol-ereweni, and eland, e-ewe, which they considered to be related to cattle, and therefore fit to eat.[2] Warriors were not allowed to eat honey, to drink honey-wine, or to take tobacco, though some took snuff. Children and married people eat vegetable food, and the meat of cattle which die a natural death. Warriors when they want to eat meat, build a rough shelter called ol-pul in the bush where, accompanied by a boy to do the work, small groups feast upon the meat of an ox supplied by the father of one of their number. The elder who supplies the ox is given some of the meat, and this is one of the regular sources of meat for married people, for meat eating is the regular practice of warriors. Men and women do not eat together, and fish, fowls, eggs, and game other than buffalo and eland are not eaten by any Masai.

262
[441]
[343]
[264]

Trade

Since the Masai are not self-supporting, they have to trade with the Bantu agriculturists, il-meek, whom they despise, in order to get what they want. Their chief suppliers are the Kikuyu, Chaga, and Taveta; and for certain things, notably ivory and honey, the Dorobo. The media of exchange are cattle (old, barren, and otherwise unsatisfactory cows), old and thin goats and sheep, donkeys, butter, and hides. The principal goods bought are food (beans, millet, maize) and tobacco, which they get from the Bantu; the chief suppliers of meal are Indian traders, often Sikhs,

[1] Leakey says that the Masai buy their swords from the Kikuyu (JRAI, LX, p. 300); this may well be the case near the Kikuyu border, though it is perhaps a recent development.
[2] The Galla also consider the buffalo to be the equivalent of the ox. Sadney, Mysterious Gentle Galla, chap. XX, Gamb.

/28 cont./

342
417

Ill. 9. Small pen on the kraal.

592 What is not used in her own household in the way of milk, meat, and skins /70/ /Ills. 10 and 11 appear here/ /70/ is her housekeeping money, with which she buys vegetable foods and such household objects as she does not make herself. She is not supervised in this in any way by her husband. It is beneath his dignity to interfere in these affairs.

443
437
[39]

Approximately every three to six days caravans of old women, accompanied by a few old men and laden with maize, bananas, beans, etc., arrive in the Masai kraals. Then there begins an hour-long haggling and bargaining with the customary market-woman shouting. Each one tries to sell her goods as advantageously as possible, that is, exchange them for just the articles that she needs. Often the caravans come from a distance of four to five days' march and then remain in the kraal for a couple of days before they set out for home.

/34 cont./

• 572 422 [434] The earnings of the men who are growing up to become warriors consist of captured livestock and in the main passes into the father's herd. Actual separate goods for the individual members of the family are only clothing and ornaments, for the men also their weapons, and further for boys the livestock given to them by the father, for youths and warriors the share of the captured cattle which they keep for themselves.

572 573 The family head is the father of the family. If an older man of his family also lives with him or in the same or a closely neighboring kraal, the two share in the office of the head in such a manner that in all decisions people listen to and heed the counsel of the older one. Legally the head can be deposed by his brethren for mismanagement and incompetence, but this seems to take place only very exceptionally. The head's brothers then hold sway in all family matters. A right to kill and penalize the members does not belong to the father of the family; just as he is not responsible for their debts and misdeeds, neither may he sell or pledge them. The fact that during the famine caused by two cattle epidemics that followed each other in a short time around the year 1895 children and women were given into slavery by their relatives does not prove anything to the contrary. When the corpses of many thousands of the starved lay in the veldt and there was no food of any kind for the survivors, no escape remained for them other than to give themselves or their relatives as serfs to such people as could feed them.

[731] [567]

573 591 613 Individual members may detach themselves on account of bad treatment. One who detaches himself flees to another of his lineage or to the one from which his mother stems and purchases his admission with a few cattle that he has stolen from his father's herd and taken along. If he found acceptance in the latter, he must return to his own as soon as he becomes a father.

If a girl is expelled, she may freely choose her future abode, irrespective of tribe or lineage. Whenever she finds admittance /35/ she usually remains permanently, in that she marries a member of this lineage. That is, the men and girls taken in remain nonmembers of the lineage, despite their admission, so that they can enter into a legal marriage with members of the lineage mentioned.

/31 cont./

593 consent. One who is expelled from the family because of bad behavior is, as a rule, taken in again upon payment of a head of cattle or a goat. Whenever he hands over the animal to a man friendly to his lineage. The latter takes it to the father of the one expelled and requests reacceptance for him. If it is refused, the one expelled seeks and finds acceptance in the same manner as the detached one. Detachment and expulsion occur only in very

361
516
291

Mecker phot.

Ill. 11. Kraal of the married.

593 rare cases and have no influence on the right of succession. The 516 rights of the head over the individual members of the family lapse 291 legally upon their marriage, but not yet practically, since, conditioned by attachment and respect for the elder, lasting concessions are made to him in questionable matters.

/31 cont./

517 For the most part an atmosphere of dullness and boredom lies 535 over the kraal of the married (eng ăn el murŭak). Only on moon-[533] lit evenings /32/ do the women amuse themselves with song, especially if a few warriors are there on a visit and give the impetus for the gaiety. Women and warriors dance in separate groups.
For dancing the women station themselves in a row, move forward a short distance, then make a "right turn" and, with short steps, dance in a row back to the former place. The married men dance only on festive occasions, but by themselves. The text of the accompanying song naturally refers to the life prevailing here.

517 Otherwise quiet prevails in the family kraal after darkness has 521 set in: in good weather the people will sit for a while in front of 513 the huts, silently or softly conversing, and go to rest already at 8:00 o'clock or 8:30.

621 Even 12-14 years ago, before the Masai lost their huge
• 592 livestock-holdings in two great epidemics, each family had its 178 own kraal; now, on the other hand, almost everywhere several 233 families live together.
731

In the morning life begins around 4:00 o'clock, at which time
512 the women fetch the quite young calves from the compartments
[462] and take them to the cows, where they remain for the driving out
[233] to pasture. At daybreak the milking commences, for which all [234] the women appear. After it is finished, breakfast, consisting of 264 fresh milk, is taken. Milk, soups, and this porridge are drunk [512] from gourd bottles; foods of greater consistency are put in the [262] mouth with the fingers. Meat is partially cut up with a knife and [415] completely torn into bits with the teeth. The hands are not washed [412] before a meal. Smacking and belching while eating show good breeding. Men and women eat apart and have their separate vessels for eating and drinking. Those of the latter are shared by the children. If the man wishes to eat in the hut, the woman has to leave it beforehand.

1:Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Neili 'l-kilani le-'lgurtytai, naishop, naishori en-lukuri naripakino 'aghera 'matwan pikin. Naitanapi eng-oriolg, nerikí eng-alig o-'l-mdrno lenye, nerolnere ol-mdrno, oo 'l-tulgunak nare 'l-churuata lenyuna, oo 'n-gitunk are o-'ng-alig o-'lgurtytai.

Nemenitye, erikitai ale akiti ne matabai. Ore pe ebaiki, naishori en-gerai, naitiki.

Ten eiyam ol-mdrno o-lgurtytai, nemeipot eng-arna enye, anen terrem. Edulgtiki ne-arna. Enyer naleig aipotye eng-arna o-'l-pusur lenye, anan 'l-ne-'lkura.

Ten enta ol-tulgani en-'l-Masaai 'n-glaio kumok, naidim eiyama 'lgurtyok kumok. Itii kulikae eeiyam 'lgurtyok are, ana uni, ana ellgwan; lake eiyam il-karial, ten eiyin, tomon ana tigitkin.

Ten eiyam ol-Masaai kat'-are erabi kat'-uni, naisho en-gitok enye eng-aini ol-nabe, ana ainye eimalye eng-aini aje Paaabe.

Naidim il-Masaai eiyama 'lgurtyok o-'ng-aji enye ten eimi te-'l-nabe the, kake eidim eiyama 'lgurtyok o-'n-gishtai enye, naidim eiyama 'lgurtyok o-'ng-an-kishtai.

After the bride's wedding-garments have been oiled, she puts them on, and is given a gourd which has been ornamented with cowries. This is put on her back, and she is taken by her husband, who is accompanied by two of his friends and two of the old women from his bride's kraal, to her future home. 585

She does not hurry but walks very slowly until she reaches her husband's kraal, where a child is given her to feed.

When a man marries, it is considered unlucky if he calls his wife by her name. He must give her another name. A favourite method is to call her by the age to which she belongs, thus, The (woman) of the Seure age. 551 593 777 [561]

If a Masai owns large herds of cattle he is able to marry many wives. Some have two wives, others three, and others four; whilst if rich men wish, they may have as many as ten or twenty. 595

When a Masai marries for the second or third time, his first wife gives the new wife a calf, after which they call one another Paaabe, i.e. the giver and receiver of a calf. 595 431

No Masai may marry a woman belonging to the same sub-division as himself if both families live in the same district, but he may marry a woman of his own clan or one belonging to another clan. 582

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Kitala.

593 Ten ɛar il-Maasaa 'ɛgurɔ́yok enye, etii naapwo kitala, netii naaɛ́giri, nemapwo.

Ten ɛar ol-mɔ́ruo e-ɛgurɔ́yɔ́ni, neipiri alo kitala, naa ten neme kitok-ɛ́ɔ́ki eitarueiye, nelo eng-aji o-'l-poror lo-'l-mɔ́ruo lenye.

Ore pe eriku lilo idya-ɛgurɔ́yɔ́ni naabɔ́uo kitala, nemeitɔ́ki ol-epeny aar, amu [626] ɛare lilo-tuɛ́ɛgani lo-'l-poror lenye medek.

Naa, ten eitaruo e-ɛgurɔ́yɔ́ni en-dɔ́ki kitok, p' eiyɔ́lɔ́u ajo ɛari, nelo eng-aɛ́g e-menye, [431] neiahori en-gitaɛ́g nalɔ́tu e-ɛgurɔ́yɔ́ni aaiye ol-mɔ́ruo lenye.

The refuge[1].

If the Masai men beat their wives, some go and seek refuge elsewhere, whilst others suffer and stop at home.

Should a husband beat his wife, but not badly, she will seek refuge in the house of a member of her husband's age.

When the man with whom she has taken refuge returns her to her owner, the latter does not beat her again, for he fears that he will be cursed by the members of his age.

If a woman commits a serious crime, and knows that she will be beaten in consequence, she goes to her father's kraal, and is given an ox, which she takes to her husband and begs forgiveness.

En-gɛ́a.

764 55 Ten ɛ́ɛ́ ol-tuɛ́ɛgani loo-'l-Maasaa, neituraari ten a en-gurai, araki ol-murani, araki e-ɛgurɔ́yɔ́ni; nenaki eng-arna too-'l-tuɛ́ɛganak lenye.

Ore ten etii en-dɔ́ki naipɔ́ɔyɔ́ki inna-arna, neiahori ae-arna nemenyikita en-e-'ldo ɛ́ɛna.

Ore ten ɛ́ɛ́ ol-tuɛ́ɛgani oti ɛ́ɛ́ Ol-ɛ́naana, nemeipot ta-'ng-aɛ́g e-menye en-nanai amu

Death.

On the death of a child, or a warrior, or a woman amongst the Masai, the body is thrown away[2], and the person's name is buried, i.e. it is never again mentioned by the family.

Should there be anything which is called by that name, it is given another name which is not like that of the deceased.

For instance, if an unimportant person called Ol-ɛ́naana (he who is soft, or weak, or gentle) were to die, [526] [1] Divorce appears to be unknown amongst the Masai.

[2] The body is always taken to the west of the kraal, towards the setting sun. It is laid on the left side with the head towards the north, so that the face looks towards the east. The legs are drawn up to the chest, the left hand supports the head, and the right arm is folded across the breast.
[323]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

English as 'generation' and 'age', respectively. Such a terminology is too vague and of little assistance in shedding light on the matter. 561

Sometimes the Masai apply those terms alternatively to the class or to the units,[36] but usually ol aje stands for the broader and final association i. e., the age-class, and ol poror for the temporary association i. e., the age-unit.

Age-class membership is obtained through initiation, and is held for life. The initiation course is opened by some preliminary ceremonies. These must be performed before any individual member may be initiated singly or in a group. Analysis shows that the importance of these ceremonies in connection with the institution of an age class varies greatly. There are four such ceremonies: 1) Epolos e-sita; 2) Embolosata; 3) Endungore; 4) Engibata.[37] 561 881 Epolos E - Sita, " The passing of the fence ".[38] " A Masai child ", states HOLLIS, " cannot be circumcised until the father has observed a custom called " The passing of the fence ". The ceremony consists in a period of four days segregation. The candidate's father lives in a special hut set apart from the village, where he also takes his food. During this time he wears the clothes, decorations and weapons of a warrior. On the last day he is taken back to the village by some elders. Before he enters the house where the ceremonial wine is kept, he is addressed five times by one of the elders thus: " Go, become an old man ". He refuses saying: " Ho, I shall not ". At the fifth time, he replies – " Ho, I have gone then ". He then, enters the hut and puts aside the warrior's paraphernalia; the honey wine is drunk; and he is called by his son's name, thus: The father 881 593

[36] WHITEHOUSE, Masai Social Customs, in J. E. A. U. N. H. S., 2, 1913, p. 146; FOX, l. c., p. 449.

[37] It is a widely held opinion that the institution of the Masai age-class is based entirely on the circumcision ceremony. Actually it is not uncommon to find the term " circumcision " used as an alternative to age-system and its groups. This opinion is partly justified by the expressions " right-hand circumcision ", emurata tatene, and " left-hand circumcision ", emurata kedyenyi, applied by the Masai to the first and second age-units, il poror, that forms a single age-class, ol aje.

It is a fact that circumcision is one of the outstanding ceremonies of the initiation course. However, it should be realised that circumcision is not identical with initiation, and above all that the institution of the age-unit as well as the age-class does not arise immediately out of circumcision. Therefore the tendency to make everything connected with Masai age-system gravitate towards circumcision is misleading.

[38] HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 294 ss.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

881 of so-and-so. When he replies to his name, he is told to go and make 593 a profit. He answers: " Herds and flocks ". This is repeated four times, and the ceremony is over ".

554 The ceremony is performed only once in a man's life, namely 561 when he " wishes to have his eldest child circumcised ". This par-881 ticular circumstance shows that by " the passing of the fence " a 593 man obtains a special elderly status which gives him a right to have all his children initiated.

Thus, there is a relationship between the father's social status and the initiation into the age-class of his son's. None of these may be initiated unless the father has reached the proper status. The personal status of the father is reflected on his children. Therefore the " passing of the fence " is not in itself part of the age-system initiation, but a condition which must have been observed before a man is allowed to have his sons initiated.

[565] Other authorities (Fox) have stressed the fact that class membership of a Masai is somehow dictated by the class to which his father belongs. " The passing of the fence " gives a special emphasis to this fact and shows how a Masai's initiation into a class is conditioned by the social status of his father. It shows how the structure of Masai society stands on the balance of status of its members. [41]

881 " The tearing of the ox " (Embolosat ol Kiteng). [42] Though this 634 ceremony is performed by a single section or a group of sections,
[184] its performance has a far reaching value which is accepted throughout Masailand. The ceremony is performed by such sections as the Kakonyuke, the Dalalakotok and the Purko (all Kapiti). According to Fox the Kisongo also perform it. But this is denied by Fosbrooke, [114] who qualifies Fox's statement by saying that the Kisongo acknowledge and respect the value of the ceremony performed by the Kakonyuke.

881 As a matter of fact special importance is attached to the ceremony
561 performed by the Kakonyuke, who in any case must be the first 634 to do it and who have the lead in the matter. All the sections which

[41] The social balance between the father and his son is only an expression of a wider and basic principle, which, in our opinion, is an essential principle of Masai social organisation: the principle of the distribution of power. See Bernardi, l. c., pp. 326 ss.

[42] Fox, Notes on Marriage Customs among the Masai, in J. E. A. U. N. H. S, 42-43, 1931, pp. 189 s.; Leakey, l. c., p. 448: NAD, 1926, p. 9, n. 11; 1927, p. 18 n. 61; Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 27.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 riors to the exclusion of other classes above them. Their status is 701 that of trainees in the case of junior initiates, and of full warriors in the case of senior initiates. Although it is not incorrect to state that they are in a condition of conscripts it is wrong to say that military activity is solely their privilege.

[621] Residential segregation is generally connected with the military activity of the initiates. MERKER states that the manyat were ordinarily situated in the strategic positions of the country.[146]

561 But there are other points to show that this segregation was not intended only for military purposes. Thus the initiates are not allowed to form their own family until they are elders. They are [262] also forbidden to eat meat "seen by women", and because their mothers and girls reside with them in their village, the initiates hold their meat festivals on their own in a secluded place. Similarly, they are not allowed to have milk unless they are in groups of two or three at least.[147]

It is difficult to see any relationship between these restrictions and the initiates' military activity. It seems evident that members of the age-units are still considered not sufficiently qualified to deal with cattle, and matters connected with them such as meat and milk, with complete freedom. Apparently, they do not have the [421] full possession of any cattle; the share of their mother's cattle to which they have right remains the property of their fathers' until [721] they get married. And to the father goes the best part of the booty which they take from a raid.[148] Since cattle are the primary source [593] of wealth and food, we must conclude that the initiates are still in a state of dependence on their fathers socially and economically.

This conclusion is corroborated by the fact that an analogous dependence holds true of their political activity. On this they depend entirely on their piron-elders.[149]

[146] The statement is confirmed by HINDE's description l. c., p. 91. He [361] says that the manyat were always built free from any kind of cover, "if possible on a plateau overlooking a good water supply", and "commanding many miles of plain".

[147] The initates have a right to ask everybody for milk which cannot be refused. Generally they address themselves to their piron-elders.

[148] MERKER, l. c., p. 30: "Das Verdienst der zu Kriegern herangewachsenen Söhne besteht in erbeuteten Vieh und fliesst in der Hauptsache zur Herde des Vaters".

[149] Other restrictions such as the prohibition against snuffing and dri- [559] nking beer, both privileges of the elders, confirm the general status of inferiority of the initiates with relation to the elders.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

601 431 Thus, a man gives his brother's wife or his paternal uncle's wife, or his paternal uncle's son's wife a cow, a calf, or a lamb, and the terms of address used by the two, instead of being par-sidan or yriyo, as the case may be, are pa-kitekg, pa-ashe, or pa-supen; a father-in-law gives his daughter-in-law a calf, and the two call one another pa-ashe; and a paternal uncle gives his nephew's wife a she-goat and calls her pa-kine. Similarly a man's first wife usually presents each successive wife with [595] a calf on her marriage, and instead of using the term na-aini when speaking to one another the two women say pa-ashe; a woman gives her husband's brother's wife a donkey as a welding present, and the two women call one another pa-sighirio; and a mother-in-law selects a cow for her daughter-in-law some months after marriage, when she has learnt to keep house for her husband, and the form of address is pa-kitekg. This method of address is carried even further, and is used between men of the same family. A father, for instance, usually gives his son a bull when the boy is eight or nine years of age, and the two call one another pa-oiñgoni instead of papa and li-ayoni; a paternal uncle makes a similar present to his nephew, and the same form of address is used; an older brother gives his younger brother a heifer, and the two call one another pa-'n-dauwo; and paternal cousins often use the terms pa-oro or pa-merrgesh when talking to each other.

The following terms are found: pa-kitekg, the bullock or the cow; pa-mokgi, the bullock; pa-kishe, the cows; pa-oiñgoni, the bull; pa-'n-dauwo, the heifer; pa-bukgoi, the bull calf; pa-ashe, the calf; pa-kuo, pa-oro, or pa-sitima, the he-goat; pa-kine, the she-goat; pa-lolelo, the kid; pa-kerr, the ewe; pa-merrgesh, the ram; pa-sighirio, the donkey; pa-supen, the ewe lamb; pa-mas, the twin kids.

With one exception, a present of this nature is not made, nor are those terms of address used, outside the father's family. Thus, a brother cannot give his sister a heifer so that the two might call one another pa-'n-dauwo, because if the sister marries she will leave the family; a maternal uncle cannot give his nephew a bull and call him pa-oiñgoni, and maternal cousins may not address one another by the terms pa-oro, etc. The exception to this rule is made when a man marries. He then presents his father-in-law with a bullock and his mother-in-law with an ewe, and the terms of address are pa-kitekg and pa-kerr. These presents have nothing [583] to do with the cattle paid for the bride.

604 578 754 A maternal uncle (ol-apu) exercises great influence over his nephews, as it is believed that if he were to curse them they would die. He can at any time stop a fight in which one of his nephews is engaged by merely calling on his nephew to desist, as the nephew would be afraid of his right arm withering if he were to [593] disobey. This power is to a certain extent reciprocal, and if a man were to start beating his wife he would have to stop if his maternal nephew ordered him to do 593 so. A father and any old man of the family can also usually stop a fight by telling 626 754 the combatants to desist, but they are not necessarily listened to. A mother has more influence, and if her son refuses to obey her, she strikes her stomach and says, "You were born in this"; whereupon the son is said to sicken, and can only recover when his mother makes a rope of fibre which she hangs round his neck.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

Besides the power of a maternal uncle to stop a fight, he has also the right to take anything which belongs to his nephew. If the uncle desires anything that is the property of his nephew's father, the nephew must buy it from his father, who will at once give it up when he knows for whom it is required. This power of taking property is reciprocal, and in fact applies to all persons who address one another as el-apu, el-le-'ng-apu, etc. A nephew, for instance, can go to his maternal uncle's krsal, and if his uncle is absent, he can slaughter a goat or drink his uncle's milk, and nothing would be said. He cannot, however, drive off a cow without his uncle's sanction, but permission would not be refused. Other relatives have likewise some power of taking property. A boy or man can go to his father's or paternal uncle's kraal and take or demand a goat or milk, and in all probability nothing would be said, but if it were done repeatedly the father or uncle would express dissatisfaction or refuse altogether. A man may also go to his sister's husband or wife's brother (el-aputani) and take anything, but an account is kept and the debt has to be returned. If a man is poor it is customary for him to live with one of his brothers-in-law (el-aputani) and help to look after the stock. He is fed for his trouble, and as payment receives one out of every pair of twin goats born.

604
425
593
604
425
607
425
736
591
465

First cousins and second cousins may not marry, but there is no objection to third cousins marrying if the relationship is no nearer than el-le-'ltiwa (or ra-e-'ltiwa). Thus, a man's son's son's son may not marry the man's brother's son's son's daughter, nor may a man's son's son's son marry the sister's son's son's daughter, but there would be no objection to a man's son's son's son marrying the brother's daughter's daughter's daughter or the sister's daughter's daughter's daughter. Likewise though a man's son's son may not marry the man's maternal uncle's son's son's daughter, he may marry the maternal uncle's son's daughter's daughter. These unions are always contingent on the two parties not belonging to the same sub-clan.[1] The rules of consanguinity and affinity which regulate marriage also apply to the sexual intercourse of warriors with immature girls before marriage and to the rights of hospitality after marriage. No warrior may select as his

582
83

[1] The Masai are divided into five clans: Il-Aiser, Il-Nekpusa, Il-Nakusa, Il-Wildpus, and Il-Purkusa. Each clan is again divided into sub-clans, e.g., the Il-Aiser contain amongst others the following: Ie-gidokpi and Il-Purkusati. No man belonging to the Ie-gidokpi sub-clan may take as wife the daughter of a man of the same sub-clan, but he may marry the daughter of the Il-Purkusati or he may marry a daughter of the Il-Nekpusa, Il-Nakusa, Il-Wildpus, or Il-Purkusa clans. Members of the various sub-clans are usually to be found in all the districts and sub-districts. Marriages are not affected by geographical considerations, and a man has the same lawful marital relations in all the sub-districts as he has in his own home sub-district.

614
582

In his recent book, The Ethnology of the A-Kamba and other East African Tribes (Cambridge, 1910), Hobley states (p. 181) that the restrictions governing marriage amongst the Masai are far from simple, and he gives a number of complicated instances. As a matter of fact the rules are quite simple if one remembers (i) that though the clans are not exogamous, the sub-clans into which the clans are divided are exogamous; and (ii) that no man may marry a nearer relation than a third cousin, and then only if the terms of address used are el-le-'ltiwa and ra-e-'ltiwa.

[114]

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

ceived from the traders, he, of course, did not keep himself, but divided among his sweethearts of the kraal. 431

And so with war and women, life passed in happy fashion. His demeanour was serious, and his expression ferocious, though he acquired an aristocratic beauteur truly striking. He showed curiosity in a dignified manner. He rarely indulged in vulgar laughter, and smiling was hardly possible on a face which could only be called fiendish. 157

He passed some twenty years in this manner. At last his father was found to be on the point of death, and he was sent for. Shortly after his arrival, the old man succumbed. 764 885

301 304 593

BAR ORNAMENTS, MARRIED WOMAN.

It was not thought necessary to recognise this common-place occurrence in any way whatever, and therefore Moran lost no time in picking up the corpse and throwing it outside the kraal. Next morning, he smiled grimly as on going out, he kicked aside some freshly-picked bones, and glanced at some disgusting hyenas slinking away, in company with marabout storks, while vultures flapped gravely overhead.

He was now sole heir of his father's herds, for his younger brothers did not receive a single head of cattle, though they had captured in their raids considerable numbers of them. Any they might secure now, however, would be their own property. Moran decidedly preferred the free and easy life of the warrior's kraal, but, alas! he discovered, not that he was 428 815 885

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

and alien children; the latter frequently come to be regarded as tribesmen by this process. 597

First of all a Masai adopts any child born to his wife by anyone other than himself, including those born prior to marriage: in fact a betrothed girl is frequently left in her father's boma until she bears a child. The child of one's own loins is called oiunoto, that of another engera oilaitalak. No distinction is made between the two, and the latter term is generally used playfully. [192]

If a man has one wife with a number of children, and another who is barren, when the former gives birth to another child, there is a ceremony by which the latter may adopt this child. The adopting mother sits on the after-birth, and pays to the true mother a cow and calf called nongeya. She takes over the child as her own, and it is asserted that by stimulation of the breasts and special food, lactation can be artificially induced, even when the foster-mother has never given birth. The fact that a woman has adopted a child in this manner is seldom referred to afterwards — the child is regarded as though she herself had given birth to it.

In the olden days children were frequently captured in war and adopted into the tribe: such a child is referred to as ol arnoti lembere. It was, and still is, not uncommon for a Masai to adopt an alien's child; at times this will occur when the Masai marries the alien's daughter and adopts a younger son; or in time of famine amongst aliens, the Masai may find an abandoned child, or be given one to look after; or he may give some cattle to the alien for the privilege of adopting the child. The use of the word 'purchase' has been deliberately avoided, for neither party looks on the transaction in this light. A son acquired in this manner is called ntaborno. These last two categories of adoptee can inherit the cattle of their foster-mother's house, whilst their children can inherit the 'gate' like any other Masai. 597 727 597

A peculiar custom of adoption exists amongst the Engidong or laibon's clan. Any Masai, child or adult, can attach himself to a member of the clan, and such person must treat him as a son, giving him cattle, and arranging his circumcision and/or marriage. Such a person is called ol owito, as also are the numerous Kikuyu received into the clan. The relationship is terminable at will, the adoptee shaving and departing, but leaving behind everything that he has been given. Though theoretically applicable to the whole clan, such adoptions usually only take place in the laibon's immediate family. 597 184

These notes on adoption are by no means full: they may, however, be sufficient to emphasise that it is a mistake to regard the Masai as being racially pure. If they come in time to accept new ideas as readily as they accept new blood, their rapid advancement would be assured. 144

It is important for a number of reasons to know who holds the purse-strings in a Masai family group, but it is a question to which no definite answer can be given. Rules, where they exist, are seldom followed — in such intimate family matters it is personality that counts. 422 593 [183]

The cattle which have been allotted to a woman in trust for her children are nominally in her control. The elder looks after the animal

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

422 husbandry side, deciding which beasts shall be castrated, etc. He may also take bullocks and exchange them for heifers, or sell them at auctions and buy heifers. He is however expected to use his own reserve (ongishu le boo) for tax payments, and if he uses his wife's bullock he should later replace it with a heifer. When however the son takes over responsibility for his mother, the tax payable on their hut will be met by a bullock from the mother's herd.

When relations come to beg cattle, if they are clansmen of the husband, he should try to find cattle for them out of his own reserve, but may beg on their behalf from his wives. If a relation of one of his wives comes begging, the request should be met from that wife's herd, but the elder may also help from his own cattle. But wife B is not expected to assist the relations of wife A, and would in fact be very insulted if asked.

In the matter of milk and beer, the wife is in control. The husband should not go into the partitioned-off, private bed-chamber of the wife, where such drinks are kept. If the wife says the milk or beer is finished, the husband should accept her word, but if it is obviously untrue, he [579] will at times look for himself. If he finds any, the wife is in the wrong; if he does not, he himself is: so in either case a quarrel starts.

Concerning cash realised by the sale of bullocks, the husband will grudgingly give it out to his wives for purchase of beads, wire, etc., but one sees no great display of generosity at auctions. When a man pays another's tax — the most frequent occasion on which one sees cash changing hands — the matter is always remembered and set off later, even in the case of a son.

Though these notes are only superficial, certain aspects of them must be regarded as important. In some cases the wives doubtless follow the advice of their husbands concerning the sale of stock, but they do possess rights of their own, on which — if strong-minded — they can insist. Thus if, for example, stock limitation were made compulsory, many an elder would be placed in an awkward position; if he refused to cull his stock, he would be prosecuted, if he arbitrarily sold his wives' beasts, he would have to face their wrath.

000 The introduction of economic schemes should, therefore, be preceded by consideration of their social aspects, so that the co-operation of the right person can be enlisted. It has been mentioned for instance that the women have complete control of the distribution of milk; it would appear, therefore, that the women should be consulted and agree to the establishment of any creamery or ghee manufacturing project, and that they should also directly enjoy its profits.

CONCLUSION.

114 In place of the administrative proposals with which this paper originally concluded, perhaps the writer may be permitted to substitute a few general reflections. These are based on 17 years' experience of purely District Administration in country ranging from the most unspoilt to the most heavily eroded, from the thickest of fly bush to the broadest

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Breach of No. 5.—A married man who breaks this regulation and is found out is very severely punished, the punishment being left to the women of the village, who have the right to hamstring and maim all his cattle. 689

Breach of No. 6.—The punishment for this is as for a breach of No. 3 as far as the woman is concerned, and likewise the man must take beer to the aggrieved husband to avoid a curse. [431] [154]

Breach of No. 7.—A man who breaks this regulation is held to be solely responsible, no guilt whatever attaching to the woman. As this offence (intercourse with a member of one's own sub-clan) is the worst possible, the penalty is very severe indeed. Every animal the man possesses—cattle and sheep alike—is hamstrung and otherwise maimed and left to die, and if the man can be caught he is so severely beaten and maltreated that he is almost certain to die too.

The Marriage Transaction.—The usual number of animals transferred as marriage settlement are :— 583

3 Heifers.
1 Ox.
1 Ewe yearling.
1 Ram.
Also honey beer in large quantities.

Of these, the ram is slaughtered by the mother of the bride, who is anointed with its fat.

When a girl who has conceived before initiation is being married by a man other than the lover who was responsible for her condition, only one heifer is given (instead of the three mentioned above) at the time of the marriage, but the other two heifers must be handed over at such time as the first of her children is initiated.

PART VI.—FAMILY LIFE.

The Relation of Parents to Children.—As already indicated, a man's legal children among the Masai are—as often as not—only his by virtue of his being the husband of their mother, and quite irrespective of physical parentage. Nevertheless, fathers are very proud of their children, and take considerable interest in their welfare. They must always be present at the initiation of a son or daughter, and feel very hurt if for any reason they are prevented from doing so. When a son grows up and eventually forms a village of his own, his father and the other men of the village who belong to his father's generation may not come and feed at the new village until one of them has been presented with a heifer called ndowo by the young man. 583 583 [431]

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

593 431 601 Gifts to Certain Relations.—A somewhat similar custom is that which ordains that a grown-up son must give certain presents to all children born to his father, as follows:—

(1) To a young girl-child, either a heifer or else a young ewe or young she-goat which has not yet had young. If the former present is given the child in future calls its brother (or half-brother) baashi, and if either of the two latter animals is given the appropriate name is b[illegible]u.

(2) To a boy-child, either a heifer or a young ram, or else a young ewe or she-goat which has not yet had young. The following are the appropriate names by which the boy henceforward calls the man: Ithubin if the gift was a young ewe, ingini if [illegible] was a young she-goat, ndaus if the gift was a heifer, ithithume if the gift was a young ram.

A grown-up son must also give a present to any new wife married by his father, the animal given and the name thenceforward used by the woman to the man being exactly as in the case of girl-children above.

604 Mother's Brother.—Among the Masai I can find no trace of any special functions of the mother's brother, and he has no special position in relation to his sister or her children.

589 Widowhood.—There is no idea of uncleanness attaching to widowhood, and therefore there is no ceremonial purification ceremony before sexual life can be indulged in by a widow. When a woman is left a widow she builds herself a hut [607] with one of her husband's own brothers (i.e. brothers by the same mother), and he becomes responsible for her welfare and acts in loco parentis to her children as far as making arrangements for initiation and marriage, etc., are concerned. In [835] no circumstances, however, may this brother or any other of her husband's own brothers have sexual intercourse with the woman. If she is still of child-bearing [951] age she is expected to go on having children (who will rank as her late husband's), and to this end she may have sexual relations with:—

589 834 (1) Any men of her late husband's age-group, who are not excluded by other restrictions (see above).

(2) Any of her late husband's half-brothers (i.e. brothers by a different mother).

(3) Any other men not otherwise excluded.

757 Sickness.—My informant was unwilling or unable to give me any detailed information about the treatment of sick people, save that medicines were made from the barks and seeds of various trees and from the stomach juices of slaughtered animals.

PART VII.—DEATH AND BURIAL.

761 Death.—Death is looked upon with fear and, therefore—except in the case of very old men and women past child-bearing—every precaution is taken to avoid a

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Marriage.—The warriors may not marry till after the E-Unate, and do not usually do so till after their first Ol-Ng'ator. The case stated by Mr. Leakey,[1] in which a warrior cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice.

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be reclaimed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where lives a man of his generation he may choose in which hut belonging to his generation he will sleep. When it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to vacate it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 209) are observed. It is said that if a woman is persistently unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle.

On the other hand, the members of one generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of one generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women.

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his eldest son is old enough, and then sends him to fetch her back.

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (mother's son), but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister.

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names.

Father-in-law Mother-in-law Son-in-law Daughter-in-law	Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Ol Mawi. Relationship is not recognized beyond first cousin. The Masai take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Masai descent, Ol Maasinó ainati, he is proud of the fact.

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the hyænas, except for those of Laibons or very influential old men. These are buried under cairns of stones.

[1] See p. 208 of this volume.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

are taken in another direction, which means that they drink only on alternate days, but at the same time graze over a larger area than if they went to water every day, thus helping to conserve the grazing. There are two types of kraal. The married men with their wives and children live in one type, and the warriors with their mothers, sisters, and girl lovers in another type. The main structural difference between the two types seems to be that the warriors' kraal has no fence, while the elders' kraal is surrounded by a thorn fence. The elders' kraal varies in size: it may contain from seven to several hundred huts, though very large examples (such as were seen by Teleki and von Höhnel) are probably uncommon; the average is probably about 20 to 50. The warriors' kraal may contain between 50 and 100. In the elders' kraal the huts are built round the inside of the fence, which is also the enclosure in which the livestock are housed at night. The number of gates in the fence depends upon the number and size of the families which live in it. Each family has exclusive rights over at least one gate, and a large family with many cattle has more than one. The kraal, enk-ang, thus approximates to a village, for several families live in it, and the gate, kishomi, has come to typify the family, the word being used with the article (en-kishomi) as a synonym for el-moran, "the family." When a man sets up his home in a kraal, he puts his first wife in a hut on the right of his gate as one goes in, and the second wife on the left; the third, if he has one, goes on the right, and the fourth on the left, and so on, the huts being so arranged that each succeeding wife lives immediately to the right or left of her gate. The people on each side of the gate form two distinct groups, in-tainishin, the effect of which is felt most in matters of inheritance. (See below, p. 108.) The warriors' kraal or e-manyata is inhabited by all the members of one age-set in one district, who constitute a company, olot, and the kraals are built in strategic positions. With the men live their mothers, and some young sisters who help their mothers, and if old enough become lovers of warriors. The mother, her warrior son, and younger children share a hut, all sleeping on separate beds; when the warrior wants to sleep with his lover he goes to another hut. The mother's husband may visit her at any time, and when he comes her hut must be given up to the pair. The inhabitants of a manyata vary considerably in number, ranging from 30 to several hundred.

Livestock

Cattle

Cattle, in-ñiko, are the object on which the lives of the Masai are centred, and on which their whole existence depends. Their importance is both material and spiritual, and people who perform any kind of work other than tending cattle are despised by the Masai, whose attitude towards cattle is similar to that of the Nandi. The Masai believe that in the beginning God gave them all the cattle in the world, and therefore nobody else has a right to possess any. Cattle provide the Masai warrior with his food in the form of milk, blood, and meat, and they give him spiritual and mental satisfaction through their existence, though it would seem that there is less outward and ritual expression of the love of cattle than among some other East African tribes who combine pastoralism with agriculture. This, however, does not by any means indicate that the Masai are an agricultural people who have wholly given up agriculture and taken to pastoralism. Since the Masai, unlike the Nandi, kill large numbers of their cattle for eating, it was essential in the past for them to maintain the size of their herds by continued raiding, for the natural reproduction rate would not have been enough. On account of its high ritual value, milk may not be drunk on the same day that meat is eaten, nor may it be boiled; but it may be drunk mixed with blood. Grass also has a high ritual value, being the food of cattle, and is used as a sign of peace. In 1930 the average size of an elder's herd was officially estimated at about 70 head of cattle, 80 sheep and goats, and 10 donkeys; this was based on the estimate of 720,000 as the total number of cattle belonging to the Kenya Masai. In Tanganyika, it was found that the average number

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

233 of cattle to a family (kishomi) in 1948 was between 100 and 200 head. There [171] appears to be no such system as the Nandi kaptic or Kipsiki kimwakan. (See above, p. 21.) Milking is done by girls and women into gourds; the calf is allowed [233] to suck, and if it dies the skin, sometimes stuffed with grass and called el-kate, is presented to the cow at each milking. The milk yield is about three pints a day.
Cattle are bled in the same way as by the Nandi, with a blunted arrow, el-gwet, shot into the jugular vein, and the blood is caught in a gourd. Sheep also are bled.
Cattle are branded with marks on the rump or flank which indicate the owner's clan or sub-clan, with sometimes a private mark as well; the ears are also clipped for the same purpose. Salt for cattle is obtained by driving the herds to a salt-lick, 232 em-balai. The Masai are said to have effective remedies for diseases of cattle, but their efficacy has never been enough to prevent heavy loss during epidemics of rinderpest and pleuro-pneumonia.

Donkeys

492 The Masai keep large numbers of donkeys (i-sirkali; sing. e-sirkia) which are used for carrying their goods when they move home (ldar). Donkeys are marked by slitting the ears in different ways.

The Status of Cattle

422 The status of cattle as regards ownership is uncertain. Merker says that warriors may own cattle; Thomson says they may not, and on such a point the statements of a traveller are open to question. Fadiman says that they may.* But further investigation of cattle as property, and of their status in the light of ritual value is required.

Inheritance of Cattle

428 There does not seem to be any clear account of the rules which control the division of a man's stock among his sons. The guiding principle is that the oldest son of the senior wife gets the largest share, inheriting not only the cattle given in trust to his mother, but also those which his father had kept for his own use.
Inheritance is affected also by the "gate" (kishomi) arrangement in the kraal; her cattle may not pass from one side to the other. If a wife on the left side dies without sons, her cattle may not go to a man on the right side so long as there are any sons by other wives on the left side. This subject also needs further investigation.

Grazing and Water Rights

423 Land is not owned by individuals, but by the sub-tribe (el-oshe), and grazing rights are acquired by residence. Water rights are controlled by the clan. In the old days, when the Masai occupied new territory, each warrior, according to tradition, claimed a well, spring, or water-hole on behalf of his clan. Individual rights over water are thus ruled out by tradition, and the senior member of a clan living at the water decides, after consultation with other clansmen, the order in which people take their cattle to water. But a Masai when actually on the move with cattle may claim, and must be given, priority over local cattle at any well or spring. Where water is plentiful, however, as in a river, possession is communal.

Division of Labour

592 In a purely pastoral society like that of the Masai the expression "economic 593 unit" has little meaning, but so far as it can be said to exist, it is the family. It must be remembered, however, that the normal practice is for families to be divided between the father's kraal, enk-aji, and the warriors' kraal, e-manyata, and that the

* Fadiman, personal communication.

[See details of the (Kishomi) arrangement in residence, etc.* p. 109. — Ashton] better is of little economic significance, except that it is the duty of the warriors to get cattle by raiding. In the division of work, the people mainly concerned are the uninitiated boys, the girls, and the women. The boys do most of the herding, assisted by the elders. Women and girls milk and act as servants to the warriors. The girls do household work till they are old enough to become brides of the warriors, when they do very little work. The greater part of the work thus falls on the elder women, who besides doing or supervising the milking and other ordinary household tasks like fetching water and firewood, build the huts, load and drive the donkeys when moving, prepare skins for clothing, and trade with neighbouring tribes for food and other things. The warriors tend to be occupied exclusively either with war or preparations for war, or with dancing, visiting, and making love. Their military activities have today been replaced by certain tasks connected with cattle, and by cattle-stealing and raids on neighbouring tribes. The senior elders are occupied with political matters, and some of them with the instruction and control of the initiates and younger warriors; they also help with the herding, and take part in trading with the neighbouring peoples.

The only specialists in the economic sphere are the smiths, il-kewenon, sing. ol-kewenot, who live segregated from the rest of the Masai, and marry among themselves. They have a distinctly inferior status, and are despised by the Masai, who all their hands before taking anything from a smith. At one time the smiths lived near deposits of iron ore, such as those in the Mainapitia river; but nowadays the availability of trade-iron has given them greater freedom of domicile. They make the iron-work used by the Masai, including spears, swords, and ornaments.[1]

Though according to Hollis a few Masai women made pottery, the Masai as a rule buy their pots from the Dorobo.

Food

Except among the agricultural Masai, no cereal or vegetable food at all is grown, nor was it eaten in the old days by warriors, whose diet consisted of meat, milk, and blood, the latter providing the necessary salt. The animals eaten included their own cattle, buffalo, el-ewenon, and eland, e-ewat, which they considered to be related to cattle, and therefore fit to eat.[2] Warriors were not allowed to eat honey, to drink honey-wine, or to take tobacco, though some took snuff. Children and married people eat vegetable food, and the meat of cattle which die a natural death. Warriors when they want to eat meat, build a rough shelter called el-pul in the bush where, accompanied by a boy to do the work, small groups feast upon the meat of an ox supplied by the father of one of their number. The elder who supplies the ox is given some of the meat, and this is one of the regular sources of meat for married people, for meat eating is the regular practice of warriors. Men and women do not eat together, and fish, fowls, eggs, and game other than buffalo and eland are not eaten by any Masai.

Trade

Since the Masai are not self-supporting, they have to trade with the Dorobo ngat-ewiriot, il-mach, whom they despise, in order to get what they want. Their chief suppliers are the Kikuyu, Chagga, and Teveta; and for certain things, notably ivory and honey, the Dorobo. The media of exchange are cattle (old, barren, and otherwise unsatisfactory cows), old and thin goats and sheep, donkeys, butter, and hides. The principal goods bought are food (beans, millet, maize) and tobacco, which they get from the Dorobo; the chief suppliers of meat are Indian traders, often Sikhs,

[1] Lenkey says that the Masai buy their swords from the Kikuyu (JRAI LX, p. 308); this may well be the case near the Kikuyu border, though it is perhaps a recent development.
[2] The Galla also consider the buffalo to be the equivalent of the ox. Bulmer, Western Gamo Galla, chap. XX, Gamo.

/91 cont./

392 922 (434) The earnings of the sons who are growing up to become warriors consist of captured livestock and in the main passes into the father's herd. Actual separate goods for the individual members of the family are only clothing and ornaments, for the sons also their weapons, and further for boys the livestock given to them by the father, for youths and warriors the shares of the captured cattle which they keep for themselves.

592 • 593 The family head is the father of the family. If an older man of his family also lives with him or in the same or a closely neighboring kraal, the two share in the office of the head in such a manner that in all decisions people listen to and heed the counsel of the older one. Legally the head can be deposed by his brethren for mismanagement and incompetence, but this seems to take place only very exceptionally. The head makes the decisions in all family matters. A right to kill and penalize the members does not belong to the father of the family; just as he is not responsible for their debts and misdeeds, neither may he sell or pledge them. The fact that during the famine caused by two cattle epidemics that followed each other in a short time around the year 1899 children and women were given into slavery by their relatives does not prove anything to the contrary. When the corpses of many thousands of the starved lay in the steppes and there was no food of any kind for the survivors, no escape remained for them other than to give themselves or their relatives as serfs to such people as could feed them.

(131) (347)

593 591 613 Individual members may detach themselves on account of bad treatment. One who detaches himself from to another of his lineage or to the one from which his mother stems and purchases his admission with a few cattle that he has stolen from his father's herd and taken along. If he found acceptance in the latter, he must return to his own as soon as he becomes a father.

If a girl is expelled, she may freely choose her future abode, irrespective of tribe or lineage. Wherever she finds adoptees /93/ she usually remains permanently, in that she marries a member of his lineage. That is, the men and girls taken in remain nonmembers of the lineage, despite their admission, so that they can enter into a legal marriage with members of the lineage concerned.

[illegible] G-5 [illegible] 1910 PLIS [illegible] PLIS

593

/[illegible]/

• 593 convenient. One who is expelled from the family because of bad behavior is, as a rule, taken in again upon payment of a head of cattle or a goat. Moreover he hands over the animal to a man friendly to his lineage. The latter takes it to the father of the one expelled and requests reacceptance for him. If it is refused, the one expelled seeks and finds acceptance in the same manner as the detached one. Detachment and expulsion occur only in very

341
516
791

[illegible] photo.

Fig. 11. Kraal of the warriors.

593
516
[illegible]

rare cases and have no influence on the right of succession. The rights of the head over the individual members of the family lapse largely upon their marriage, but are yet partically, there, conditioned by attachment and respect for the elder, having consequence are made to him in questionable matters.

/98 cont./

while he was implaring Ng ai that he might join together so securely as this bent their body and soul. He prays in similar fashion every morning after leaving the hut. The mother likewise prays to God for protection for her son and each time offers him some milk, which she spills on the ground either out of a gourd bottle or out of her right breast. The girls are somewhat more cheerful about the affair, in that, instead of other prayers, they accompany their dances with libation for the preservation of their lovers and the many other loved ones. Today the warriorsse thoughts are again particularly intense; the warriors soon soon be coming home, and then it will be definite as to whether the son or lover is among them.

Pass also one already saw lofted little clouds of dust, which the cattle that are driven along stir up. The girls and young women hasten to meet the El ndiwa and warmly welcome all who are approaching. But what is this? There, among the laughing women, stands a young woman who has just kissed her brother heartily on both cheeks; now comes her husband, who still wanted to take part in this one expedition before he remains at home permanently as an old ol mdiwa, and one would expect at least as hearty a welcome for him. But both act as though they did not see each other. Indeed, they even turn away from each other. One might think she is angry with him because he risked his life unnecessarily. She is not angry with him, however; on the contrary, she is secretly happy that he has come back safely and is bringing along rich booty. But the Masai too /100/ have their "good breeding" and this requires that married people upon first seeing each other again after an expedition of war, cut each other completely.

From his share of the booty the warrior keeps only one or two milch cows, which he hands over to his loved one. The rest he presents to the mother, the father, the latter's other wives, the brothers, sisters, and one or another of his more distant relatives of whom he is particularly fond. A person who does not receive anything this time will get his share after the next expedition. He need not wait long, war follows one another quickly, the interval between two is seldom more than two or three months. Hence the Masai are a veritable scourge for the neighboring tribes, and the rumor, "The Masai are coming," in spite of its frequency, is often enough to disturb whole towns and villages for weeks.

/109 cont./

861 A father reprimands his disobedient child with the words ol gulugoni eŋ̄ gob, that is, you are like a piece of earth or dirt, or eŋ̄ dian eŋ̄ gob, dirty fellow, or ge naid eŋ̄ gob, dirty mama.

578 192 Invectives and curses are:

ol menéiani (or eŋ̄ menéiani) = skeleton, as remains of a decayed corpse:

ol ag' ichobo (Eig ai eŋ̄ shiak, which means may God give you the serious sickness "shiak"):

es síri = dirt, dust, that is, if only one could sweep you out of the hut like the dirt:

ol agaechertata = fall down:

ol agana 'Eig ai, that is, may 'Eig ai take you away:

ol agatobero ol amurai = may the snake bite you:

ol againamá ol ugaru = may the lion devour you:

ol agatadetjirit eŋ̄g oine = go away along with the sun:

ol agoimisso or redji = may your footprints be lost, that is, may you disappear entirely.

Bantering expressions that may sometimes be meant rudely are used by boys and youths to one another:

/110/

ol orobó ɛ̄ onoji = accumbens matri /one who lies with his mother/:

ol orobó eŋ̄g arnasche = accumbens sorori /one who lies with his sister/:

hai, eŋ̄g inobi = hi, anus (neutrius generis) /these old fogies (neutral in gender)/:

hai, ol gorom = nates /buttocks/.

The last two are used teasingly both by young girls to the warriors and the latter among themselves. Furthermore warriors insult one another with ol kiregus = accumbens uxori alienae /one who lies with another's wife/; and os sinani = scorned by the girls. ol orobó eŋ̄g ikau éaje = accumbens filiae maximae natu /one who lies with his oldest daughter/, ol orobó 'Eg abudani = accumbens matri uxoris /one who lies with his wife's mother/. If a married man were to use toward his wife such vulgar invectives that had reference to her parents, the latter -- according to the assurances of the people -- would immediately take their daughter back and return the bride price to the man.

[593] [586]

/110 cont./

578 192 ran. From young girls among themselves one hears ai ondé nanja = accumbens pati /one who lies with her father/, ai ondé ʒ ainka = accumbens frati /one who lies with her brother/.

Used by women toward young girls: hai ana hallach = you, valve; hai, ʒ ainka = you, clitoris.

Younger children lanch one another:

ʒonoʒ ai gunna = vagina nanja;

ai ngaraha: Ilig ai = hated by 'Ilig ai;

ainkaha = mandible;

ai ngaiskiri Ilig ai = cry to God (when you get a beating);

ʒ mai = stupid fellow;

hai ai ondé (or ʒ ondé) = you stupid fellow (stupid girl);

AI' ai ainka, you are a blockhead;

AI ai hua, you are a rowdy;

AI' ai dika ondé, that is, you are indeed mad. The term ai dika, which here means madness, is formed from the like-named bird, the red-headed Anaplectes melanotis, one of the many species of the weaver birds native to East Africa. If one on route hears it calling on the enyye from the left side, it means good luck, but if it calls to the right of the traveler the latter will soon encounter a misfortune.

[136] 577 [125]

Ol ngatar' ana hain, that is, die by an arrow. ai ngawa ai galing = die of fever; ai lehenda = of the spots sickness; ai mingiai = of smallpox; ai gakaqa = of monach or intestinal sickness; ai ngaiwana ai gigaat = may the thorns prick you; ai ngaraigi ai mainga = may your belly burn from eating; ai ngainkiarha = become black; ai ngaihara = rogue, bowler; ʒ ai' ai mawaga = slanderer, gossiper; ai dulgaai mawai = bad fellow; ai dulgaai gaari = coward.

201

To express contempt one spits before the person concerned or at him.

192 • 913

The large number of invectives stands in contrast to a striking poverty in terms of endearment.

/111/ The mother designates her child as ʒ ainka 'Ilig ai = child given me by God, as ai gaaka e Ilig = mouth of the mother, or as ai oib e Ilig = resting place of the mother. The father calls it ana ʒonoʒ = child of the wife. Older brothers and sisters call kindly to younger ones with the term ana e Ilig = child of mother.

/119 cont./

The Masai are animated by a deep feeling of solidarity: they stand united against all foreigners. A sincere attachment and love bind the individual members of the family: they vie with one another in order to free a relative who has fallen into slavery. Thus, in 1896, the Masai who returned from the Berlin Exposition immediately used the greater part of their savings to buy back relatives who had become slaves during the great livestock epidemics around the year 1890. The tightest is the bond between parents, especially the mother, and children, as well as between brothers and sisters, lesser between married people, where the lowly, oppressed position of the wife is of some importance.

The men scorn any kind of work. Only waging war is worthy of a man. Large herds of livestock and many wives are his supreme happiness. One who has both enjoys respect and prestige. One looks down on a poor devil. Truly poor people, however, are exceptions, since relatives support one another in generous ways. One who does not have such quickly finds accommodations as a rule with one who is well-to-do. He receives food and for that helps the women and children of his benefactor with their work (livestock-tending, kraal-building, night watch for the small livestock, etc.). The condition of /120/ poverty is also always only of brief duration: the poor man soon acquires some prosperity again through gifts from friends or a share of the spoils of war. Toward friends, one is just as generous as one is good-natured: the hospitality to countrymen, no matter where they come from (with the exception of the blacksmiths, of course), is unlimited. Everyone offers a visitor whatever he happens to have in food and drink. Everything that the stranger needs or wishes is at his disposal. He reserves for himself a hut for the night by sticking his spear in the ground in front of it: the host then seeks other quarters for the night and leaves home and wife to the guest. If a woman comes for a visit, the wife leaves the hut for the night, so that the stranger may take her place. Hospitality toward other peoples is known only if peace is concluded with them through the ceremony of infant exchange or through blood friendship. The cruelty of the Masai is no greater than that of the other black peoples, for example, the Negroes neighboring the Masai. If they

/120 cont./ If they spare women and children in war, it is not out of compassion, but solely in order to make them useful as slaves, whereas the Masai do not keep such. In general one cannot attribute to them a lasting vindictiveness toward their own kind. The Masai only in part possesses the courage attributed to him. Their extraordinary impudence often makes them appear more courageous than they really are. Their sensuality equals that of most East African tribes. The wife is at the disposal of every man who belongs to the age class (both ol bonor and ol adji) of her husband and desires her. It is obvious that, as a result of such conditions and in conjunction with the prevailing polygyny, there can be no question of a proper family life in the higher sense. For her own husband the woman is especially the labor force that he needs for household and livestock management and the means of fulfilling his wish for as many progeny
as possible. Accordingly her treatment depends on how she measures up to these tasks. Moderate beatings are not uncommon, but rough treatment almost never occurs. In contrast to the men loafing about lazily, the women are busy all day long. For the married women there are scarcely any amusements except dance and song;
they had their share of them before their marriage, when they could have their fling in the warrior kraal. In public life, as well as with respect to her own husband, the wife has no rights. Of course the Masai woman does not regard her servile position as such. She knows nothing else, and fortunately one does not miss a comfort that one does not know. As soon, however, as she is transplanted from her own tribe into a foreign one through kidnapping in war, her willingness to work immediately comes to an end. The less oppressive her new position is, the lazier and at the same time more demanding she becomes. She suddenly regards herself as too good to work, and her desire for clothing and adornment often increases immeasurably.
/121/ Accordingly, her interest in the household becomes less to the point of disappearing and her passion for ornament great. The reason for this phenomenon undoubtedly lies in the fact that she regards life among the hated and despised ol oiki as a disgrace and the work required of her by them as an insult inflicted on her.

/144 cont./

301 837 036 yellow long-tailed monkey (Cercopithecus pygerythrus, ol ôdûnchi), the black long-tailed monkey (C. albigularis, ol gûma), the honey badger (Mellivora ratel, ol bilîli), and a few other smaller animals.

301 954 Around the right wrist, often covering almost the entire lower arm, those warriors who are generous and benevolent, the ɨ ganaini, wear a cuff (Fig. 50) that consists of rows of iron beads (ol dundûlîn or ol gahatan) put close together, in whose place in more recent times appear ordinary small -- especially blue -- glass beads. The iron beads are made by pounding flat small wire rings and then /145/ putting them, strung on thin strips of sheep leather, around the lower [431] arm and knotted on the inner side of the arm. Those people who constantly enjoy the kindnesses of the ɨ ganaini express their gratitude from time to time by giving a string of such beads, so that, as was said, the ornament often extends almost to the elbow. More rarely than among warriors, the ornament is also found on one or [431] another of the young girls living in the warrior kraal. If a girl has no brother belonging to the warrior standing, but does have a wealthy [393] father, she receives from the latter both milch cows and an occasional piece of slaughtered livestock. She then generously distributes milk and meat and thus acquires the position of benefactress.

301 211

Fig. 49. Arm and leg ornaments of the women.

30 /145 cont./

The arms and legs of a beauty, except for the thighs, are stuck into a more or less complete armor of tubes of iron wire, which often leave only the knee and elbow free, while among poorer women this adornment shrinks to a few coils. These tubes are called es segengel = iron wire, and are differentiated according to their location as es segengel ol beráŋgach for the upper arm, es segengel en dagile for the lower arm, es segengel ol oeschet = what is worn on the lower leg (below the knee). This ornament, like the neck spiral (es segengel e murt), /146/ is wound directly onto the body part in question and can therefore not be taken off, but only unwound again, which usually does not occur until death. The weight of the ornamentation seriously impairs the mobility of the women and not infrequently gives them a waddling gait.

Warriors in dance ornamentation wear around their hips a leather strap embroidered with small beads (eng ene om bolói; eng ene is any strap, om bolói = the hip). Little girls also wear a like-worked strap; it then bears a row of small chains in front as a fig leaf and is called en deré (pl. en dereń). Older girls and women wear around their hips an inch-wide belt likewise stitched with beads (Fig. 57), which holds the leather apron together. Boys and younger men often wear below the knee and above the calf a ring made out of white neat's hide, with an end five centimeters long and one centimeter wide hanging down in front and in back (Fig. 58), and around each ankle a small bell (en duli, eh /Figs. 57-61 appear here/ dulilin [Fig. 59]) tied on with a little strap, which, by its widely audible tinkle in the silent steppe, is supposed to frighten off predatory animals lying in the grass. Finally with the war and dance ornamentation belong the long-haired black and white strips of skin (e mónge, e mónges) that the warriors tie around their ankles and that are made out of the skin of the white-tailed colobus (Colobus caudatus).

/174 cont./

231 242 341 [593] out, since special food laws determine to which class of people this or that piece will fall. From a head of cattle slaughtered during the meateating in the bush the warrior will send his father a shoulder-blade (ol kirebuscha) and for the wives of his father the head (ol ogunja), paunch (ek gonjori), the entrails (memer), feet (el oilelek), as well as the hind leg without the rear ha lf (ek gubek), and to the girls, the lateral belly-piece (e murit). The warriors eat all the rest of the meat. If they have visits from other warrions, the latter are entitled to the long, straight belly muscle (ek galemian) and rear hocks (el oreschiria). On the other hand, if a head of cattle of a married man is slaughtered at the kraal, the warriors get nothing. From the cut-up animal there is put aside first for the other married men: the tongue (ol kajik), a shoulderblade (ol kirebuscha), a rear hock, the rear part of the hind leg (el mono), the long belly-muscle: for the uncircumcised boys, the rib (el orik), a rear hock, the filet (os sonik), the "flacha /flat/ Roastbeef" -- as my cookbook calls it -- (el ori), the heart (el dil). The rest of the meat is given to the women, who give the girls the lateral belly-piece and the neck (e murt) from it. The principal wife of the one to whom the slaughtered animal belongs is given the tail piece.

/175/ If the warrior slaughters a goat, the married men are given half the liver (e mojua), the wives the paunch and head, the girls the back (en gorisi) and the feet. If a married man slaughters a goat, he gives the wives the paunch, the rennet bag, spleen, entrails, and head, the girls back and feet, the boys a side of ribs, breast (el oigoli), lungs (el kibiuk), heart, and a hind leg (ek gojiu muik), while he himself keeps the rest.

[593] From a warrior's sheep, the father gets the neck; the wives of the father, paunch, rennet bag, entrails, and liver; the sisters, feet and back. If a married man slaughters a sheep, the distribution to the women and girls is the same, and the boys receive the same pieces as from the father's goat. Of the individual pieces of meat, one boils [252] the bones for soup, furthermore the filets, the carved-out cutlets, the dark meat on the hind leg, and the heart. Everything else is roasted at the open fire. Brains and spinal marrow are not eaten, but thrown away. Bone marrow is sucked raw out of the smashed bones.

/184 cont./

757 With toothache (elg ga ol alal) one bites on a very hot residuum [164] of fat with the aching tooth. Pieces of twigs of o'remit (Salvadora [519] persica L.) and ol abalasa (Dodonaea viscosa L.) chewed to resemble a brush at one end serve as toothbrushes.

[168] For rheumatic pains in the muscles one makes use of massage, which is practiced by the women, or one makes poultices with the pulp of the pulverized root of o'remit (Salvadora persica), which • [593] also finds use otherwise as a "mustard plaster." Married men have [585] themselves massaged by their wives to get rid of pains in the leg muscles after long marches, whereas the warriors scorn this help as unmanly. Furthermore one administers a root decoration, preferably mixed with a broth from steer meat, of o'rarait (Cissus rotundifolia [Forsk.] Vahl.) or of ol ingiliai (Pentas zanzibarica [Kl.] Vhe.), or also a decoction of the wood of ol gonji (Rhamnus prinoides l'Herit.). For rheumatic pains in the back one drinks a root decoction, sweetened with honey, of ol sasia l ne nbentai (Cayris tenuifolia Engl.). To cure articular rheumatism a root decoction of ol ogiliai (Boerhavia diffusa L.) is administered. Besides these remedies, those that are regarded as diaphoretic, especially the above-mentioned ol ambochi (Momordica cardiospermoides Kl.) and elg ainoinjai lenie (Asparagus johnsonii K. Sch.), are also given.

296 Other than for curative purposes the warriors regularly, and, to be sure, for the entire duration of their membership in the warrior [296] standing, take various narcotic /185/ stimulants. These are taken especially on war expeditions and, even more, during the meat feasts forming the preparation for these. One of the most popular stimulants is the bark of the frequently mentioned ol mukutan (Albizzia anthelmintica). One pounds a piece of bark but the size of two hand-palms with a club and then lets it steep for a few minutes in still hot meat broth. The other stimulants are ol dinjai or ge ngurtai (Cissus quadrangularis): an arm-long piece is cut up and boiled in water. The extract is taken mixed with goat-meat broth.
Equally strong in effect is the root of ol ongira (?). One takes a piece of root three centimeters thick and approximately ten centimeters long, chops it twice, and cooks it with beef broth. The decoction smells disgusting.

/211 cont./

XXII.

000 Law. -- Concerning family and personal rights. cf. 2nd Part, II, IV, and XX. -- Property rights. -- Things found. -- Barter or purchase. -- Liability of the relatives for debts, gift. -- Penal law. -- Murder and manslaughter. -- Revenge. -- Composition. -- Negligent homicide. -- Bodily injury of various degrees. -- Accomplices. -- Immoral offenses. -- Suicide. -- Kidnapping. -- Theft. -- Treason. -- Arson. -- Cowardice in war. -- Death penalty. -- Fines. -- Degrading punishment of warriors. -- Compensation for innocent accused persons. -- The mentally ill. -- Warning. -- Legal proceedings. -- Courts. -- Example of a /212/ criminal case. -- Inquiry about an unknown culprit -- Pleading. -- Swearing to the truth. -- Torture for exerting the truth. -- Ordeals in the search for truth. -- Secrecy procedures. -- No international prosecution of criminal deeds.

691 An awareness and understanding of justice are very little developed among the Masai. Therefore only a small number of customary [184] legal provisions exist, which are by no means uniform for all Masai, but rather often enough vary in the different districts. As nomads, [561] among whom individual families frequently live alone or with their closest relatives in a kraal, by themselves, without having neighbors in the larger vicinity, they make do with fewer laws than another tribe whose numerous members are supposed to live within definite fixed limits in permanent order and peace. Furthermore, the nomadic life in and of itself leads to a freer conception of life, which opposes restraint through laws and often prefers to let might [593] come before right. But in order to understand the great inconsis-[669] tency in individual legal decisions, one must above all take into [664] consideration the feeling of solidarity, which is strongest in the family and always still strong enough in the tribe to arouse from the first great prejudice against anyone who does not belong to the 593 tribe. The questions concerning family and personal rights have

/712 cont./

593 already been discussed elsewhere (1).

1. Cf. Bad Part. II, IV, XX.

All disputes arising in this connection are settled by the head of the family without formal procedure.

421 The property rights are little developed. There are no provisions with reference to landed property. The pasture land of the district is the common property of all its inhabitants. The plains are so large that there is more than enough pasture for everyone's herds. Property belongs to a single individual, not to the family jointly.

425 A lost article, if the loser lives in the vicinity and is known, will be returned for a reward (for example, for a spear that has been found, a small goat or a piece of meat will be paid as finder's reward). Otherwise the finder keeps it and it is up to him whether or not he ever returns it. If a stolen article is sold, the buyer becomes the owner, while the person stolen from has to look to the thief for compensation. Even up to 30-40 years ago ivory that was found was heedlessly left lying. Then the Masai learned to appreciate its value from the caravans coming from the coast, and it became customary that, of the two tusks of an elephant that was found, one belongs to the finder, the other belongs to the members of his lineage living in the vicinity and known to the finder. The division among

(439) the latter takes place through the exchange of the tusk for livestock

437 with an ivory buyer. Among themselves the /713/ Masai barter

438 only livestock for livestock. A small cow is paid for with a fat ox

(415) for slaughter. In former times, before the rinderpest, when the people still had huge cattle herds but few donkeys, a donkey cost two small cows, whereas now, since the cattle has changed, it is paid for with five goats. A fat goat or a sheep is bought for a male

439 calf two to three months old. In trade with caravans, etc., people regard as trade articles, besides livestock, especially wire of iron, brass, and copper, glass beads, such as have already been mentioned in the enumeration of the ornaments, and, more recently, here and there, also colored cloth, especially the cotton fabrics known by the Swahili /Swahili/ names ukiki, kangwa, and gwani. The Masai the full debts, not only up to the amount of the inherited property. If a warrantor is liable for the debt, he must satisfy the creditor if the debtor is unable to pay and, through that, becomes a creditor of the debtor himself. The liability of the warrantor does not end with his death, but passes on to his heir.

/314 cont./

431 The nonacceptance of a gift is a rude insult to the giver and therefore never occurs. Giving is followed by counter-giving, except when the thing given was solicited by the ol mumai a divine judgment. The Masai is put into the awkward position of having to ask in this way only if, for example, on an expedition of war, he has come a long way from his home district and finds no members of his lineage in the land to which he has come. The petitioner hangs from the roof of the hut of the one from whom he wishes to have a head of cattle a tool with the legs upward, or he wraps the legs of the stool or a bar with grass. This type is more urgent than the former, since the request must be granted before the grass dries. The ol mumai is a divine judgment. A person who does not grant the request expressed in the ol mumai sign will soon be punished by being struck through death or illness. A person who did not grant the request until after the grass had dried has himself absolved, for his own peace of mind, by gathering of old men whom he entertains with a head of cattle and honey beer. It is believed that by the observance of this formality and by the statement of absolution of the old men God, too, is forgiven the sin. Upon handing over a gift, the giver always sits on it.

Leave or testament is unknown. The creditor does not have a right to the corpse of his debtor; neither debts nor misdeeds or crimes committed by the deceased have an influence on the nature of his burial.

No distinction is made between murder and manslaughter, but there is one between this and negligent homicide. If murder was committed on a boy or warrior, it is explated by blood revenge carried out by boys and warriors or only by warriors. Any brother of the one murdered is the of all entitled to carry out the blood revenge and, further, any man belonging to the family. Blood

/214 cont./

[623] [682] [672] [593] revenge goes first against the murderer or, if he has fled and is not available, against his brother or any man of the family of the murderer. Usually blood revenge is commuted by composition (wergild), the amount of which the murderer negotiates with the avenger through a friend. As a rule it consists of 200-300 cattle -- [613] [614] now fewer in many cases -- which the murderer, together with his people and his fellow lineage and tribal members living in the vicinity, that is, in the same district, gather together. The avenger is free to accept or reject the composition. /215/ Blood revenge is not carried out longer than one or two months after the murder; composition then takes its place.

[618] The kraal of the el oibonot is regarded as a place of refuge. If the murderer has confessed his deed here, blood revenge may no longer be carried out on him, though he remains obligated for the payment of the composition. Murder committed on a married man, a girl, or a woman is never expiated by blood revenge, but by a fine. Until the payment of the composition or fine the murderer is called [626] [624] el oikshani (pl. el oikshi). The murder of a blacksmith is unpunished. On the other hand, if a blacksmith murders or even only negligently kills a Masai, a band of Masai consisting of married men, warriors, and boys immediately sets out to kill several blacksmiths.

[682] [613] [672] Negligent homicide is expiated only by fines. These are very minor if the perpetrator and the one killed belong to one lineage. If they belong to different lineages of the same tribe, every male member of the lineage (warrior, married man) and every married female member of the lineage must pay a cow. Of this livestock the brother of the one killed receives one half, while the other half [614] is distributed equally to his fellow lineage members. The fine is paid and distributed analogously if perpetrator and victim belong to different tribes. If a woman kills a man through negligence, she will also be killed in most districts. On the other hand, if a man has killed a woman, he either remains unpunished or is given a [682] [613] [614] [672] [624] beating by the brother of the woman killed. In a few districts no distinction is made as to whether the perpetrator acted intentionally or negligently, for example, in Laiko, where blood revenge is also only very rarely used.

177 178 229 541 701 FL1 previously. There is a considerable amount of raiding to steal stock from surrounding tribes. This precipitated several minor wars when we were there, and administrative action prevented one major war with thousands of combatants. Some lions are still killed, and the moran have been blooding their spears on a variety of other animals, most notably rhinos.

541 Following the period of service as warriors, each age class goes through another ceremony. Two age classes, a right hand and left hand together, take the ceremony and they then receive another age grade name which they retain the rest of their lives. Thus these elder age grades each span a period of about 15 years (Grant, 1957).

177 178 541 Periodically the administration has tried to discourage the moran system. In late years some of the elders have also tried to change the system in order to maintain better control over the young men. The system still continues in Western Masailand but it is much less regular than previously.

54 543 597 When a warrior becomes circumcised he may take his mother with him to the warriors' manyatta, or he may leave her home or apparently even stay home himself.

561 He may marry when he is a senior warrior. When he becomes
• 573 an elder he may take his mother (if he wants) and her
591 share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given (522) (722) (562) share of cattle) and move off to join others in a village (Fosbrooke, 1948).

561 The unmarried girls of the tribe live in the 836 warrior's manyattas and normally each warrior has one
(522) favorite girl who becomes his concubine. They told us that usually that girl became the warrior's first wife.

621 (c) Villages: Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called kraals or (improperly) manyattas. Each kraal consists of an outer circular thorn fence with a series of gates, one for each kraal elder. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Often around the huts are small thorn fences to which young livestock are kept. The cattle of the village are normally herded into the space in the center of the kraal each night for protection from two and four legged predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

595 When a kraal secedes, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left.

MASAI PROVERBS AND SAYINGS 449

No. 63. Ki'ro 'nwai ainoro 'l-kaji. 539*
Do-not-talk the-words which-get-themselves the-grasses.

Or: Ki'ro 'nwai nnna 'l-kaji.
Do-not-talk the-words like the-grasses.

Do not talk a great deal.

[' In the multitude of words there lacketh not sin.'—Pro. x. 19.]

No. 64. Kiroro o-ilgoge nnna el-naiwa
Do-not-tread-on the-pink like the-old-man ilnoro ayok.

who-has-many boys.

Don't tread on the pink, i.e. don't be proud, like the father of many sons.

[A man with a large family may lie on his back all day long with his feet up against a post, and trouble about nothing. His wife and daughters see to the food and milk the cows, whilst his sons guard the cattle and sheep.] [594]

No. 65. Kiaitye nnna lmoore.
Do-not-hasten-thither for pre-time-present.

['More haste less speed.']

No. 66. Ne-ai! lajoki el-ejo nnna el-a-'l-dami.
O-the-God! give-me the-shade and-not the-d-the-tree.

[Originally a prayer for a child, but now used for anything that is earnestly desired.

When the sun is hot, a mother protects her infant, head by covering it with the 'kanu,' or garment for tying the child on to her back. No woman wears this garment unless she has a baby, hence her prayer for shade.] [154] [595]

No. 67. Nanaiale nnna ta'lag-ualaulu ilnna Nanaiale and-not from-the-million where-there-down a-ultiaji ang-aji 'l-ainai.

the-bird the-hut (or family) with-the-feeling (or weight).

She is like Nanaiale (nickname given to a weak woman), but not because she has no milk: her child is so badly fed that it is knocked over by the weight of a bird.

[This is a form of reproach used to a woman if she does not look after and feed her children properly.]

No. 68. Enaiolibi 'ngiri.
Who-separates the-gates (or characters, climates, or nations).

He who separates the gates, etc.

[A common expression for the Almighty.]

1:Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Kadi 'l-kilasi le-'Ngorityani, naidongo, naidoori ana-ipokori naripokitoi 'ingiboro 'naiswa gikio. Kolomenyi ang-ariolig, naiki ang-alig a-'l-nakwa lanya, nawiboro el-nakwa, na 'l-ndigonak nawa 'l-ekuwata lanyana, na 'n-gitonak ana a-'ng-alig a-'Ngorityani.

Ewanaitiye, naikilani ale ekiti na nanalani. Ore pa ekaiki, naidoori na-gawai, naidoori.

Ten siyana el-nakwa a-'Ngorityani, nanaipori ang-arwa anya, ana tarwan. Ekiekgiki na-arwa. Enyor naiduig ainyitiye ang-arwa a-'l-pawor lanya, anana 'l-na-'Ilmoro.

Ten ana el-ndigonai na-'l-Kumana 'n-gitin-o kumak, naidilan siyana 'Ngorityak kumak. Ekii kolikan naiyana 'Ngorityak ana, ana tai, ana ekgwan; kake siyana il-kumai, ten siyin, tenana ana ilgilian.

Ten siyana el-Kumani kal'-ana enaki kal'-nai, naidika na-gitok anya ang-alai el-nakw, ana siayo ainaiye ang-alai ale Pandu.

Kolilan il-Kumana siyana 'Ngorityak a-'ng-alj anya ana [illegible] siyana 'Ngorityak a-'n-gidoinai anya, naidika siyana 'Ngorityak a-'ng-ana kiddinai.

After the bride's wedding-garments have been oiled, she puts them on, and is given a gourd which has been ornamented with cowrie. This is put on her back, and she is taken by her husband, who is accompanied by two of his friends and two of the old women from his bride's kraal, to her future home. 385

She does not hurry but walks very slowly until she reaches her husband's kraal, where a child is given her to feed.

When a man marries, it is considered unlucky if he calls his wife by her name. He must give her another name. A favourite method is to call her by the age to which she belongs, thus, The (woman) of the fifteen age. 386 387 388 389 [390]

If a Masai owns large herds of cattle he is able to marry many wives. Some have two wives, others three, and others four; whilst if rich men wish, they may have as many as ten or twenty. 391

When a Masai marries for the second or third time, his first wife gives the new wife a calf, after which they call one another Pandu, i.e. the giver and receiver of a calf. 392 393

No Masai may marry a woman belonging to the same sub-division as himself. If both families live in the same district, but he may marry a woman of his own clan or one belonging to another clan. 394

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

[684] elkopuni, ele วววววว

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Masai FL.12

ceremonies are not performed by some selected individuals on behalf of others, as for Eunkolomi and Enkangaro-Enpiloto. Also from a territorial point of view all these ceremonies differ. A single performance of Eunkolomi, which spans the class-period, is valid for all Manyatta; Enkangaro-Enpiloto, which spans the unit-period, is sectional; individual initiation is held at each village. The following diagram illustrates the correspondences.

A candidate's age for individual initiation is indicated by Fosbrooke as 16-17 years. The principle for admission to initiation seems to be that the candidate must have passed his puberty, and his father must have performed "the passing of the horn" as described above.[*]

Circumcision is the central point of Masai individual initiation. The ceremony is performed in three stages, a) a testing of the pre-marital behaviour of the candidate, b) the ordeal of circumcision, c) a period of special segregation.

a) On the eve of circumcision day the candidate is completely shaved by his mother. The elders are entertained with meat and beer[] at the house of the candidate's mother.[] Then the elders [*] Cases may occur of boys who have to be initiated at an earlier age for some special reasons. Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 20, records the ceremony of a father's orphan having to be initiated in his early puberty in order to inherit.

[] Beech, l. c., p. 307, states that a bullock is slaughtered and called el-ongoldonot — the animal that has caused him to be taken out of the boys' ranks. Fox says that a number (3, 4 or 5) of gourds of beer are offered to the elders.

[] There is no special meaning in the use of the mother's house. The reason is connected by the arrangement of a Masai polygynic village. Every

J: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

[571] "ask the boy (candidate) various questions as to his past behaviour, and he is put on oath to answer truly".[*] Apparently no special ordeal such as we find among the Kipsigis is attached to this testing.

5) The operation may be performed "in the morning or the evening according to the particular custom of the family concerned" (Fox). Generally it takes place early in the morning. The operator is said never to be a Masai. Generally he is a Dorobo, and sometimes a Kikuyu (Fox). This peculiarity is worth noting, especially if it is compared with the great care observed in selecting all other leaders or officers out of the pure Masai.[*]

[572] Before the operation is performed, the candidates take a cold bath in order to make their body insensible, or remain "shivering in a state of nudity until the sun rises" (Baxter).[*] Candidates are then operated upon, outside the village near the right-hand post of the gate. The patient must not betray any sign of suffering. That would disgrace him and all his family. A few elders assist and support the patient during the operation, and help him to his mother's house after the wound has been washed. Once inside he is given food (fresh blood) and a special beverage, called ong olipata, after which he is allowed to speak.

[573] The circumcised youth is presented by his mother's brother with new sandals, and henceforth he is not supposed to make use of any garment worn before the ceremony. A procession by four girls (cfr. Fox), waving branches takes place to the entrance of the boy's hut. The elders are again entertained with meat and beer;

[573] wife of a man has her independent house where she lives with her children and cattle. But the whole homestead belongs to the father, and it would be quite correct, though not so precise, to say: the house of the candidate's father.

[574] [*] We may assume that these questions are connected with the candidate's moral and social behaviour. Fosbrooke states that "prior to circumcision no youth may have intercourse with a circumcised woman. This is a rule most strictly adhered to". The same custom is observed among the Nandi-speaking peoples.

[*] Cfr. the ekerion of the Ol Oil spoke at the Enkolomi, of the ol emal boys, the ekperuni, and the enjongoro at the Enkangoro-Enjikoto, of the ol emanat at the ceremonial.

[575] [*] Lacger states that it is "absolutely essential that the cattle shall be in their enclosure during the whole of the ceremony". No further details are given, nor are reasons offered for this fact which is not mentioned by any of our Masai authorities. However, it shows that circumcision is not related to the cattle aspect of Masai culture.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

601 431 Thus, a man gives his brother's wife or his paternal uncle's wife, or his paternal uncle's son's wife a cow, a calf, or a lamb, and the terms of address used by the two, instead of being pa-ninkin or paipa, as the case may be, are pa-ikitok, pa-nake, or pa-napa; a father-in-law gives his daughter-in-law a calf, and the two call one another pa-nake; and a paternal uncle gives his nephew's wife a she-goat and calls her pa-kiar. Similarly a man's first wife usually presents each successive wife with
● [595] a calf on her marriage, and instead of using the term na-ninkin when speaking to one another the two women say pa-nake; a woman gives her husband's brother's wife a donkey as a wedding present, and the two women call one another pa-nipkirio; and a mother-in-law adopts a cow for her daughter-in-law some months after marriage, when she has learnt to keep house for her husband, and the form of address is pa-ikitok. This method of address is carried even further, and is used between men of the same family. A father, for instance, usually gives his son a bull when the boy is eight or nine years of age, and the two call one another pa-nipkiri instead of papa and ti-napiri; a paternal uncle makes a similar present to his nephew, and the same form of address is used; an elder brother gives his younger brother a heifer, and the two call one another pa-i-ndoum; and paternal cousins often use the terms pa-ara or pa-nanyuk when talking to each other.

The following terms are found: pa-ikitok, the bullock or the cow; pa-nanyi, the bullock; pa-ikiko, the cows; pa-nipkiri, the bull; pa-i-ndoum, the heifer; pa-ti-kipiri, the bull calf; pa-nake, the calf; pa-kiar, pa-ara, or pa-nilimo, the he-goat; pa-kiar, the she-goat; pa-kitala, the kid; pa-kiro, the ewe; pa-nanyuk, the ram; pa-nipkirio, the donkey; pa-napa, the ewe lamb; pa-nam, the twin kids.

With one exception, a present of this nature is not made, nor are these terms of address used, outside the father's family. Thus, a brother cannot give his sister a heifer so that the two might call one another pa-i-ndoum, because if the sister marries she will leave the family; a maternal uncle cannot give his nephew a bull and call him pa-nipkiri, and maternal cousins may not address one another by the terms pa-ara, etc. The exception to this rule is made when a man marries. He then presents his father-in-law with a bullock and his mother-in-law with an ewe, and the terms of address are pa-ikitok and pa-kiro. These presents have nothing [583] to do with the cattle paid for the bride.

604 578 754 A maternal uncle (ol-apa) exercises great influence over his nephews, as it is believed that if he were to curse them they would die. He can at any time stop a fight in which one of his nephews is engaged by merely calling on his nephew to desist, as the nephew would be afraid of his right arm withering if he were to [593] disobey. This power is to a certain extent reciprocal, and if a man were to start beating his wife he would have to stop if his maternal nephew ordered him to do
593 626 754 so. A father and any old man of the family can also usually stop a fight by telling the combatants to desist, but they are not necessarily listened to. A mother has more influence, and if her son refuses to obey her, she strikes her stomach and says, "You were born in this"; whereupon the son is said to sicken, and can only recover when his mother makes a rope of fibre which she hangs round his neck.

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

776 In connection with the divided belief of the Masai in a God, it may be noted that they have also some minor deity called Ndorobeh—apparently, as far as I could learn, an earth spirit. They have faith in witchcraft, though the efficacy of the lyhon, or medicine-man, lies not in any innate ability of his own, but in his power of intercession with Ngai, who works through him, and imparts magical virtues to various objects. Their conception of the Deity seems to be marvellously vague. I was Ngai. My boy was Ngai. Ngai was in the morning holes. His house was in the sacred caves of Kilimanjaro. In fact, whatever struck them as strange or incomprehensible, that they at once assumed had some connection with Ngai. Their prayers to him were incessant. Nothing could be done without hours of howling, whether it was to seek direction where to slaughter their enemies, or to ward off a disease. The most sacred thing among them is the grass. Held in the hand, or tied in a sprig to the drum, it is a sign of welcome and peace. Thrown at any one, or into some mysterious place, it is an invocation for a blessing on the person, or a propitiatory offering. Next to the grass comes the milk. No libation may be taken with it. The milk must be drawn into calabashes specially reserved for its reception, into which water is not allowed to enter—cleanliness being ensured by washing. To boil it is a heinous offence, and would be accounted a sufficient reason for massacring a caravan. It is believed that the cattle would cease to give milk. The cows, it may be remarked, are never milked except in the dark.

Moran found married life sadly dull after his warrior experiences, and to kill time he accompanied one or two war-parties. But that was exceptional. His time homeward was chiefly occupied in eternal and interminable discussions on the most trivial questions, or wandering long distances on visits to his friends, while his wife stayed at home to milk the cattle, or occasionally made journeys to neighbouring hostile tribes to buy grain. She, however, was in her element when a caravan came round, and then she enjoyed the double pleasure of an intrigue and a lovely present of iron wire and beads.

In time Moran's first wife became old and ugly, and he took to himself a second—the former being stripped of all her iron wire for the purpose of decking the new comer. At last the day dawned for both of them, and one after the other, they formed the subject of horrible hyenas' laughter. Those fierce are in for a bad time." That is sufficient to ensure that a deputation from Matau will visit him without delay.

9:Fuchsuke G-5 (1936-1968) 1968 FL12 Masai FL18
Kisuke

Apart from specific payments for age grade matters, and the ceremonies obtained thereby, all the elders of an area are supposed to benefit from the performance of these local ceremonies, and consequently are expected to pay. It is an accepted practice that the Dalala age should not give cattle to be taken to the laibon, but are expected to provide hospitality for the meeting which is called to decide who shall contribute. At the meeting proceedings may begin by a man being denounced for refusing hospitality to an age-mate, and so in effect fined. Otherwise the matter is ripe for general discussion, X pointing out that he gave a heifer last time, Y drawing attention to the fact that Z has not helped for many years, and so on.

These details have been included under the heading 'Modern Adaptations,' since one is so frequently assured that in the old days no such levies were made. It is asserted that the only occasions on which items to laibon levies were made was when a party of moran returned from a raid empty-handed, and were so ashamed that they collected beasts from amongst themselves to take to the laibon.

Another demand which a laibon makes on his followers is that he should be provided with wives. Some elders say that this is an age-old institution, others that it is a recent innovation. Be this as it may, motor transport is an innovation, and by getting round the country more, the laibon sees a greater number of suitable women, and consequently increases his demands. Parti (II) is credited with collecting five girls as a result of his safari to west-central South Mamaland when the boundary was demarcated: the Dwani paid the dowry and arranged the weddings. Mbaiya (III), on a safari to Kikuyu in 1937, demanded and was given the daughter of Lemaiyo, although she was engaged to another. Lapurwa (II) paid one heifer towards the dowry and contributed the cowhides for the wedding garment. When the girl was brought to Mendul, a number of relatives were presented to form the nucleus of her herd. On the same trip, Mbaiya demanded and was given one girl from Simanjiro and another from Longonot. Taiko (II) is also alleged to have tried his hand at the same game, demanding the daughter of an old man at Garya; the laibon asserted that it was just an ordinary marriage, but local Masai opinion thought otherwise. For when a girl is married to a laibon, she is regarded as lost to her family and clan. The usual relationship which marriage sets up between in-laws does not exist; one cannot approach a laibon for assistance as one can an ordinary son-in-law, nor can one expect a laibon to let either son's daughter or her children go home on protracted visits.

The introduction of Pax Britannica and of motor transport makes contact between the Masai medicine men and also with doctors much more possible. There always seems to have been a close association between the Kikuyu and the Ingidong clan, so much so that we may reasonably suspect that the movement child circumcision was merely a Kikuyu importer. But it, as we gather, the Masai and Kikuyu were

9:Fosbrooke G-S (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

When blood-money is paid, it is less valued than payment is between clansmen. The logical extension of this principle is that when cattle are due from one member of the clan they may be taken from any of his clansmen. This is in fact the rule for payment of compensation amongst the Masai, though the offender and his near relatives naturally pay most. In the one case of blood money in which female were claimed, members of sub-clans other than that of the murderer contributed, and it is, therefore, safe to calculate that clan responsibility and solidarity applies in the whole clan in greater degree than it does to the sub-clans.

2. Family unitary — the boma system — the 'gate' — polygamy — marriage statistics — number of cattle to each gate — relations in law — breeding — adoption — economic.

Briefly, the Masai live in groups of families, usually three, four or five together, in a village comprising a ring of huts, built immediately inside a circular fence, which then forms an enclosure for the cattle. Such villages are usually built some two or three miles, frequently more, from the water which the cattle use, so that it is unusual to find more than two or three homes in close proximity. Frequently a home is a mile or more from its nearest neighbour. In the village each family possesses a separate gate, ingoitome, round which its members are grouped.

It is difficult to define a typical family or 'gate' unit. The ideal of a Masai elder is to possess half a dozen wives with many children, ranged on either side of the gate. As he marries he places the first on the right of the gate, and the second on the left; when a third wife comes in she builds her hut immediately to the right of the gate, and the fourth immediately to the left, the earlier wives moving round accordingly. Each wife on arrival is given a number of cattle, which are here to hold in trust for her children. She is also given, for feeding, some of the unalienated cattle which the elder holds in reserve for future marriages; such cattle are termed engitu e ilon. Those living to the right and the left of the gate form two distinct groups, moieties, and for the purpose of inheritance, should a wife on the left die without male issue, her cattle will be inherited by the senior male on the left of the gate; they may in no circumstances be taken by an heir on the right so long as there is a son on the left to inherit.

When the sons are circumcised, they eventually take over the guardianship of their mother, and of the cattle allocated to her. In the old days they would move off with her to the manyatta, warriors' village, but this is less frequent now. As they approach adulthood, however, in polygamous families the sons at times claim their patrimony and move off with their mothers, to form a separate gate in some other boma. More frequently they show little desire for the responsibility, and spend the greater part of their period of warriorhood wandering round the countryside, or living in manyattas in the bush (el pul). Once they become elders it is exceptional for a son to continue to live with his father, except when the latter has married wives.

This is the theory of the gate system, but in practice it varies very considerably from the ideal. Polygamy (see below) is limited by the number of women available; at times a poor relation will join in a gala with a richer one; again, mothers and mothers-in-law and deceased brothers' wives are frequently included; and sometimes married women are found staying on with their fathers. Thus a symmetrically arranged 'gala' is seldom found in practice.

9:Fukouoka G-5 (1934-1948) 1948 FL12 Mawi FL12
Kisaoka

The practical effect of this system is that a Mawi elder arranges to make a constant succession of wives, marrying new ones to replace those who depart with their sons. As there are no unmarried adult women amongst the Mawi, this means that uncle old men take to wife girls only just past the age of puberty. As such girls have previously been accustomed to the companionship, both sexual and social, of the menfolk, it is little to be wondered at that they frequently run away, or attempt to run away, with their available companions. The elders have no idea of preventing this by making the girls' married life more attractive than their previous one; there only remedy is force.

The two primary motives for polygamy are the desire for children, and the necessity to have women to tend the cattle. There is little sexual jealousy amongst the Mawi; within the agnate the wives are continued to all agnatics, and an agnatic lessey is for the father of one's child is regarded as a special friend. Intercourse between men of one age and the wives of another is naturally prohibited, but its extensive practice is acknowledged by the Mawi, and is but mildly general conversation. Concerning the economic motive for polygamy, increasing herds necessitate more women to tend them, and at the same time offer the means of obtaining such women. But that the actual dowry is heavy — usually three heifers and a bullock — but a man prefers to marry off his daughters to a rich elder, rather than to a poor mayan. Thus economics and sociology are closely linked, and action in one sphere will have repercussions in the other.

The extent to which polygamy is practised can be judged from the following table —

Distribution of Wives amongst Adult Male Population

	Kilinga		Senetoro		Ungunan		Longido		Total
	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives	men	wives
Total unmarried	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—
One only	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Two wives	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Three wives	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Four wives	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Five wives	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Over five wives	—	—	—	—	—	—	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Total polygamists	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—	[illegible]	—
Total of men and women	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

9:Foebrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

These figures were obtained by reading through tax registers to groups of elders, who supplied the information. The number of wives showing in the registers were not revealed to them, and it was noted that in many cases the numbers given by the elders exceeded those recorded in the books.

The percentages to be drawn from this table are of special interest when compared with another tribe. For this reason they are tabulated below, in conjunction with those of the Kisii, figures from Brown and Hutt's "Anthropology in Action", page 197.

Marriage Statistics.

	MASAI	KISII
Unmarried men	45.5%	39.5%	) of adult
Men with one wife	35.5%	48.5%	) male
Men with two or more wives ...	22.7%	20.5%	) population.
Wives for every 100 married men ...	161	122

Two points of interest arise from these figures. The first is the much larger proportion of unmarried men amongst the Masai. These fall mainly in the warrior class, as the following table shows :—

Marriage of Women.

	Kisonko	Sonnoiro	Engwesat	Longido	Total
Total women	122	100	60	104	386
Total married women	17	20	20	40	140
Percentage married	13.9%	19.9%	33.3%	38.5%	36.0%

The other interesting point is that one would expect both the percentage of polygamous marriages to total marriages, and the number of married women per 100 men to be much higher in the case of the Masai than the figures actually reveal. The reason for this lies in the number of dependent women not classified by the Masai as wives. The first table shows that for 100 adult males there are only 100 wives, but census figures show a preponderance of females over males, and the 100 male probably represent at least 1,200 adult females, the balance being made up by mothers (with husbands still alive) living with their sons, deceased brothers' wives with male issue, (not therefore taken to wife), etc.

In one area the distribution of the women (wives only) amongst the ages was worked out; it was found that there were approximately 5 wives to every Dwat, 1.5 to every Dwata and 0.5 only to every Kisale.

Although it was found that on an average each gate pays only four cows, the probability is that there are usually more than four huts to a gate, for those women who pay tax but do not possess a hut are thought to be more than offset by those women who do possess a hut yet pay no tax. The number of cattle to each gate were examined in the Longido area, with the results shown in the table below :—

However, there will be no lack of married men willing to be the physical father of her children, since no married man may have intercourse with unbaptised girls, nor yet with their own wife or wives if with child.

Married women make a point of having intercourse immediately after menstruation in order to "get a child." All children born to a woman who is married are considered to be the children of her husband, no matter who their actual father may be. Owing to this system it may happen that by the time a man leaves the warrior stage and passes into the Elders' stage, and goes to live with his wife, he may find that she already has one or more children.

Second Marriage (of a subsequent Wife).—In the case of a girl marrying a man who already has one or more wives, she simply goes to his village—where she has either already built a hut or had it built for her—as soon as the shaving ceremony is over after her initiation. She then lives with him in the normal way and he will probably be the physical father of her children, although not necessarily so, as she is permitted to have lovers if she wishes it, provided they are married men.

Forced Marriage.—It occasionally happens that the father of a man who is still in the warrior class decides for some reason or another that he wishes to have his son at home—wishes, in fact, that his son should leave the warrior stage before the age-group to which he belongs is due to move up to the Elders' stage as usual. In such a case he waits until the girl to whom his son is betrothed has been initiated and is ready for marriage (or even arranges for her initiation to be hastened) and then proceeds as follows. The marriage transaction having been completed and the girl's new hut built in the village, he sends for the girl and secludes her in the hut. He then arranges with some of the young men of the same age-group as his son to bring the youth to the village on some pretext or other. The usual pretext is that of going to the village to ask for a bullock for a meat feast (see Part IX). As soon as the village is reached these young men together with some elder men seize the man and carry him forcibly to the girl's hut. The girl is alone in the hut; not even her mother may be present when the man is brought in. The two—man and girl—are forcibly held together so that their bodies touch. Once his body has touched hers (an initiated girl) in the presence of witnesses he cannot go back to the warrior group, and so has to resign and reconcile himself to premature married life with its restrictions.

Marriage of a Virgin.—There is a very curious custom connected with the marriage of a girl who is a virgin in the physical sense of the word, i.e. of a girl whose hymen has never been penetrated. Should a girl's husband find that his wife has come to him in this condition, he must send her back to her father's village the next morning carrying on her back a milk gourd without its stopper. This is a sign to her father that she went to her husband as a virgin, and her father must send her back to her husband with a gift in the form of a heifer as compensation to the husband. The husband may not himself perforate the hymen until this heifer has been received.

Each man of property has one or more village gates through which his herds enter and leave the village. His first wife builds her hut on the right (looking towards) of her husband's gate, the second wife on the left. The third wife will build next to and on the right of the first wife, and the fourth wife next to and on the left of the second wife.

The diagram below (Text-fig. 5) shows a village belonging to two elders, A and B, with the positions of their gates and of their wives' huts in relation thereto.

When a man marries his first wife he hands over to her a portion of his stock, perhaps half, to look after. He hands to his second wife a slightly smaller herd and the first wife may add a few from her portion. The third and fourth wife receive their portions from the first and second wife respectively, and the husband may also meditate a few. The fifth and subsequent wives receive a few cattle from each of the previous wives in order to form a herd.

FIG. 5.

Inheritance (Ba Enkeshi).—When a woman has a husband alive, and at the same time a son who marries, the elder some cattle to this son, and they then become his property. On the death of the head of the family each wife divides her portion among her sons. If a wife is already dead her eldest son divides her portion among her sons.

The cattle from the portions on the right side of the gate cannot pass on inheritance to the left side unless there are no sons of the wives on the right, and vice versa. If a man dies without male issue his property goes to the nearest male relations in his sub-clan. If the first wife has no male her portion is inherited by the sons of the other wives on the right of the gate. A man may frequently the father's home or in his own compound. But it seems that a ceremony is performed which releases the husband from the prohibition on mention having sexual relations with married women. [295]

A widow is looked after by her husband's brother, or by one of her own brothers, she may cohabit with her husband's brother. It appears that a woman who has had children may not remarry again, though one who is childless may marry her husband's half-brother, if he has one. Any children she may have after her husband's death are considered as his. [297] [298]

Polygamy

A man may have as many wives as he can pay for: one of Shiffu's sons says that a rich man may have as many as 20. Actual figures show that while few wives are common, three and four are found much less often, and more than five very seldom. Each wife has her own hut in the husband's kraal, and go, the first wife on the right of the gate as you go in, the second on the left. In each wife are observed cattle which she holds in trust for her children. [315]

Adultery

Adultery is not common, because the rules controlling sexual relations are well and clearly. Any of a man's age-mates (members of his age-set) may have access to his wife, and though men of one age-set are not supposed to cohabit with the wives of another age-set, in practice this rule is little observed. A woman is not supposed to have intercourse with a married woman, and a married woman may not have sexual relations with an uncircumcised boy. [316] [318]

Divorce

A wife cannot be divorced once she has borne a child, though a ceremony separation may occur, the wife, if her husband is an Iteso, going to one of his age-mates, or, if she is an Iteso, to her father. [324]

Adoption

In the old days, children captured in war were often adopted, and were called, children of "foreigners". Those who are not Iteso may be adopted, especially in times of famine. Such children become accepted as Iteso. Under the term "adoption" is also included the practice of adopting children within the family, e.g., a father will adopt a child of his wife's which has been begotten by another man, and a farmer who may adopt a child of one of his servants. [317]

Birth and Naming

Birth takes place in the mother's hut, where she is attended by a midwife, and relatives. The women and girls of the local community, and when the child has been born they hear as we are supplied by the father, and they mention as is called for the use of the people of the kraal. The mother remains in her hut till she feels strong enough to go out; the husband may not enter the hut for 10 days, nor eat in it till the child was born. Intercourse between husband and wife might be seen as the wife knows she is pregnant, and is not resumed till the child is weaned, when it is between one and two years old. (Middle says 10 the time when it was the two middle incisor teeth, upper and lower.) Twins are considered very desirable, and a boy is preferred to a girl. [319] [320] [321] [322] [323]

The first name is given either on the fourth day after birth, when the child is taken outside to be shown the sun, or at a feast held on the 10th day, which begins with the killing and cooking of an ox; the meat is distributed to the inhabitants of the kraal, and in the evening the mother, carrying the child on her back, walks the cows. After this, the child is moved to the presence of the father and mother [324] [325]

511	611	[The mythological accounts of the origin of:
512	612	livestock and dogs — see category 110, p. 510
513	613	honey as a source of food 560
514	751	beard grass 561
611	754	club carried of wood 562
614	759	blood as a source of food 563
664	803	blackbirds 564
665	805	claw and lizards 565-569
		counting and number words 570
		7-day week 570
		polygamy 571
		of others and chief 571
		rainbows 572
		double-edged knife 573
		sorcerers 573
		physicians 573
		[illegible] for war on [illegible] 573-575.]

/TO CONT./

recovery from that pain. Mbanyan earned outstanding work through the discovery of a protective vaccination against lung disease of cattle. According to the corresponding accounts of Zambia and few old timers, Mbanyan, several years before his death, had already prophesied the appearance of Godspeak that did not take place until after it and the subsequent subduing of the blacks by Europeans. In the outward appearance of this man nothing divulged his power. On a thin, average-sized figure sat an ugly head whose face was disfigured more particularly by the lack of one eye — allegedly a birth defect. This latter circumstance led to the origin of the legend that the chief must always be one-eyed and that the latter should destroy in childhood one eye of the one later following him. The face was even more repulsive because of a scanty, slightly gray full beard. That is, in contrast to the other men, neither the ci ndwani nor the ci gatanda and ci ndwala mentioned further below may pluck out their beards, because they would lose their supernatural power through the removal of the beard hairs.

The chief's village consists of a large number of huts lying close together, several of which serve as the dwelling of the ci ndwani with his numerous wives. Mbanyan had about 100 wives; the still young Zambia has only 35 of them. No stranger may enter these dwelling huts of the chief and his wives or appear in their immediate vicinity. Close by are found the one of the huts, one of which is intended for conferences and receptions and to which a few elder men close to the chief as helpers and advisers (ci ndagatali ciwoff of ndwani) live with their families, whereas the others are occupied by warriors who form the defense of the village and, on the mention of the chief, his bodyguard. In his last years of life, when Mbanyan was mentally disturbed, he often spent months on the open steppe in a small hut made of branches, around which the warriors accompanying him camped in a large circle. The ceremony in the chief's camp is very simple. One of the men wandering about idly in the village leads the newcomer into the conference hut, where he waits for the chief. As soon as the latter appears, the stranger are separated from one another by thorn barricades, and the huts are often protected from damage by the cattle by means of thorny branches placed around them.

/[illegible]/

One distinguishes between bonds for the married (ring of marriage) and such for the warriors (of manhood). In the former live the married men (of manhood) with their families, in the latter the warriors (of manhood, of valour) with their mothers and the half-grown, uninitiated girls /[illegible]/ (as [illegible] a [illegible]). Over mountains also lack several bonds build together into one. The author found a village that consisted of five bonds built near to one another, three of which were (3) warrior bonds. A thorn thorn-barricade surrounded around the entire bond complex.

The married men on the average has five to six wives, wealthy men have in addition also a few secondary wives to whom they are not legally married. The secondary wives are made up of widows who may not marry again or who have not married and Ill. 6. Small pan beside the hut.

[illegible] /[illegible] cases./
[illegible] are in their position as secondary wife having or temporary maintenance. Each wife has her own hut, in which she lives with one or several small children and manages an independent household. The women married first is the principal wife (or [illegible]) [illegible]

1. = the first to the head.

and remains such until death; then the woman married next after her steps into this position. The principal wife is supposed the best, in that the husband surrenders to her a large part of his cattle for the mother and treats her with distinction before the other wives by means of gifts of ornaments and clothing, as well as by better service. /[illegible]/ The oldest son has prerogatives in the right of succession. The principal wife exercises supervision over the other wives and keeps them at the work when they neglect it.

The domestic community does not have any common property. As property there comes into consideration first cattle, goats, sheep, and donkeys. The size of the herd is the gauge for the social position of its owner, the father of the family. The cattle handed over by him to each of his wives for care and uniform remain his own, and only when the wife has a son about ten or twelve years old do they pass, with his consent, into the latter's possession, and constitute into his ownership. /[illegible]. I spoke here./ A prerequisite for the latter, however, is that the boy is not needed in the tending of the personal herds. For as soon as he receives the livestock, he must leave his father's kraal, along with his mother, in order to lay out a small new kraal for himself as a distance of several kilometers. This is supposed to prevent the two herds from mixing together, an opportunity which otherwise the son would often enough take advantage of to steal from the father. Hut and household implements, both only of slight durability and little value, theoretically also belong to the father of the family, but in practice to those of his wives who use them things. The women build the hut, whereby the children or other women help her. What is not used in

[illegible]

[illegible] The [illegible] [illegible], or [illegible], [illegible], and [illegible] are used only so long as the above-mentioned [illegible] of [illegible] are not affected by gifts of [illegible]. This explains why they are used only among children. This law we apply to the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible], because the girl is not in a position to make the [illegible] gift of [illegible].

[illegible] The sons and daughters of the brother or of the sister are [illegible], as long as they remain in childhood, with no [illegible] of any claim. The [illegible] for the grandfather [illegible] [illegible], for the grandmother [illegible]. The grandfather calls the grandson [illegible] [illegible], the grandmother, [illegible]. Brother to boy and sister to boy are called by name or the name of [illegible] derived from [illegible] designations.

(iv).

[illegible] Conjugal relations. — Betrothal. — Fear of being betrothed. — Bride price. — Breaker of the bride price. — Character to marriage. — Wedding. — Beginning of the marriage. — Dissolution of the marriage.

[illegible] The conjugal relationships are very loose, and to some [illegible] [illegible] from the [illegible] [illegible] to unfavorable courses to their [illegible] [illegible] neighbors. Among the latter — and, to be sure, with [illegible] exception (1) — polygamy (pervade among the [illegible]). The number of wives of a man is limited neither by law nor custom, but depends only on his means. If a man has but one wife, poverty is always the reason. There are no marriages or mid marriages; rather, marriage is a mere [illegible] relationship. The woman through the marriage passes the family of her [illegible] husband, but she has [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] to her own lineage.

> 1. The so-called monogamy of the Washagan is in practice the hidden polygamy.

[illegible]

[illegible] In the contemporaries Chinese of the nuanced eras. But before the marriage takes place the bride price is to be paid first.

In bride price [illegible] - five things, each part of them, [illegible] - five things be first pays the bride's father five pots of beauty tea which beer will be brewed, Lufuwanyu does cows and so on. The bride's mother receives a male and a female sheep. The so and the male sheep will be eaten at the feast taking place on the wedding day. Around that day, more often afterwards than before, the [illegible] bridegroom further brings the father-in-law a cow and the mother-in-law a female sheep that her son yet had young, whereupon the former call each other [illegible] (1).

1. Cf. Second Part, [illegible], verse of address for relatives.

while the bridegroom and the mother-in-law call each other [illegible] their son-in. Sheep with marked tone constant at the wedding from the principal wife of her husband a year-old heifer, whereupon the two call each other [illegible]. From the upper child of her husband two goats or sheep, before the relatives [illegible], and from the another children of her to six years old and upward a goat or a sheep each, through which the relatives [illegible], [illegible], or [illegible] is brought about. During the period immediately after the wedding, the mother-in-law receives from the son-in-law several more pots of beauty, since the wedding, and now wine for making [illegible] and [illegible]. In the family of Chief Sendee he receives, as he said so, only a cow as bride price for one of his daughters, while the mother of the girl gets two donkeys, a bull and a cow with calf. Since the [illegible] has happened not infrequently that a man is not in a position to pay the customary bride price, he then gives the father-in-law only one cow and leads her to him as a sign instead out of grace. Whenever the bridegroom or young married man delivers the gifts of [illegible], he always ends the beauty by a session. She is either a wife married personally, the mother, his elder sister, or a wife of his brother. Only when the distance is very great does he deliver the beauty himself, by his one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this case does pay no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age-class (3)

[illegible]

1. (3). Chapter 12 of this part.

(4) based on his age-class seniority (5) [illegible]. The bride may not be from an older age-class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the blood ox goes to livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between [illegible] and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage; it is precisely to membership in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

Moreover, a marriage between relatives of Mechanicite and those of matrilineal-lineage is not permitted.

Widows (6) [illegible], [illegible] or divorced women who have living men may not marry again, but live with men who belong to the age-class of their deceased husband. If there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in wealth is in practice an obstacle to marriage (unless in the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man. The man may not even take a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

The wedding feast, allegedly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal to which the bride's parents live.

(Gift copy.)

Upon the death of the father, his sons inherit the land left behind, and, in his sons, each inherits from it the livestock that his mother had had the care and use of up to then. Since the sons provide like for his principal wife and give some livestock to her then to the other wives, her sons certainly inherit some then from of the other wives. The relatively largest part of the livestock is inherited by her eldest son, the principal heir. The livestock that a widow owned her in her own is divided among the sons whose mothers live on the same side of the land, the center line of which is formed by the two entrances, or the door. The reason that the father distributes a not inconsiderable part of his livestock among his sons is boyhood is peculiar. It occurs to the heirs, however, it is only when the sons have the mental level that the father gives him a number of cows from it in order for him to be able to cover his needs in milk, and furthermore feels time to take a head of cattle to daughter. Thus the father actually reserves the right of disposal over the livestock, even though the sons designate it as belonging to them, and it is part of the legacy to the inheritance. The wives of the deceased actually pass into the possession of his older brother, but as a rule continue to live with their sons. The other wives, who have no sons, nevertheless not infrequently go back to their parental home. The other son of the deceased takes the father's place for the surviving daughters, which in practice is expressed only in that he counts the consent for their marriage and the bride price will be paid to him. Upon the death of the mother, the daughters inherit her ornaments, and the household equipment used by the female up to now also passes to them. Upon the death of a woman, his brothers, preferably the older sons, receive his weapons and half of his livestock, while the other half goes to his father.

/[illegible]./

(6).

[illegible] The future of the Ideal People. — Weighing the effect of the people-preserving and people-destroying forces. — Polygamy. — Inertia. — Fertility. — Child mortality. — Free love. — Organization. — Wars. — Epidemics. — Excessive pride. — Clash of the culture of the Ideal with that of the Europeans. — The incompatibility of the two laws the Ideal. — Graceful consequence of the imperialism. — Difficulty of becoming extinct.

[illegible] In order to make a prognosis about the future of the Ideal people is more necessary. But of all, to weigh the people-preserving and people-destroying forces established in the people, in its character and customs, and then to observe the phenomena that appear when the Ideal meet the Europeans. We have many examples of the fact that polygamy does not promote an increase in the population to the extent that monogamy does as a rule. As the reason for this phenomenon one finds an accumulation of wives in the hands of the wealthy, and, as a consequence of that, celibacy for lack of women among very many of the low well-to-do and among the poor. It is obvious that under such circumstances polygamy leaves very many women unplaced. But it is different among the Ideal. So here there is such a surplus of women — perhaps in part again as a result of polygamy — that no man remains celibate. In fact the possession of only one woman is an exception. Hand in hand with this goes the not so unequal distribution of property: in practice there are scarcely any poor people. Another reason to which /[illegible]/ the decline in population among many polygamous peoples is ascribed is that polygamous marriages as a rule are relatively poorer in children than monogamous ones. This objection is not to be taken into consideration here either, for we have seen that the fertility of the Ideal women is very great. Yet, in order fully to consider the polygamy of the Ideal in its economic effect, we must observe the milieu in which it exists. The polygamous household of the Ideal may be compared to a stock company, in which the property, theoretically belonging wholly to the house father belongs in practice. The house father is the chief dandelion, the use of the dance are in the hands of his wives, who acquire these dances through the birth of a son. Though his the wives, who have the duty to tend and care for the livestock, are interested in the preservation of the property in the most sensitive way. This is the one factor of the polygamy of the Masai promoting prosperity with all its advantages for the political economy. The other lies in the fact that many women give birth to more sons for one man than one woman could. Sons, however, make offspring are supposed of the personal property. The boy grows up to become a warrior and brings his family the spoils of the successive raids, through which not only is the herd increased, but, through the supply of new blood, is also improved.

/340 cont./

Polygamy among the Masai is therefore a natural institution. Without it large number of women would be deprived of their natural occupation, a condition that seems impossible for a primitive people. It is, moreover, a source of prosperity, which, among a culture-poor nomadic people, can only make itself felt favorably for their preservation as a people. From it follows, first of all, good nutrition, which makes the body resistant to the effects of diseases. It corresponds to my observation that among the Masai in general, among adults, fewer cases of death occur as a consequence of illness than to the case among the Bagesse living in their vicinity. Also, serious diseases are more infrequent among them than among the farmer and are milder in their course. The circumstance that abortion is practiced by the women in only very rare exceptional cases also undoubtedly acts to promote health. One can sufficiently observe the harm that this bad custom has often caused primitive peoples among the various neighbors of the Masai, though indeed there are also exceptions to this. Thus, I met a number of Dalagga women who went through this operation four to six times and allegedly, as well as apparently, without harm.

In contrast to the high fertility there is also a rather high child mortality, though infanticide is entirely unknown. It is definitely beneficial for the child that through work the mother is not kept outside the kraal, but can always remain in the vicinity of the child. The long nursing period of about two years is also advantageous.

§A6 he may marry when he is a senior warrior. When he becomes §T3 an elder he may take his mother (if he wants) and her §M1 share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given [§Z1] share of cattle) and move off to join others in a village [§T1] [§L1] (Peekenke, 1948).

§L1 The unmarried girls of the tribe live in the §I4 warrior's manyattas and normally each warrior has one [§Z2] favorite girl who becomes his concubine. They told us that usually that girl became the warrior's first wife.

§E1 (e) Villages: Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called kraal or §A1 (improperly) manyattas. Each kraal consists of an outer §Z33 circular thorn fence with a series of gates, one for [§T7] each Masai elder. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Often around the huts are small thorn fences in which young livestock are kept. The cattle of the village are normally herded into the space in the center of the kraal each night for protection from two and four legged predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

§T5 When a Masai marries, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left.

595 and so on. The wife is given a specified number of cattle to keep in trust for her son, and she and the children also tend young animals in the herds.

342 These huts are about five feet high and of varying dimensions, but usually roughly square and 10 to 20 feet across. The door is very low. Just inside the door there is normally a baffle wall of loosely woven twigs. Beyond that there are often two or three rooms, each divided from the others by a low open wall of twigs. Young livestock are brought into one of the rooms and the others serve for sleeping and cooking. Usually the beds are platforms of twigs and grass covered by hides. The cooking fire is in a far corner and is very small, normally with three stones around it to support pots. There is no smoke hole in the roof. The outer walls and roof are an open mesh of wattle often interwoven with coarse grass and shrubs. Support comes from larger branches and small logs up to about six inches in diameter. The exterior and walls and roof, and the insides of the door opening are plastered with a mixture of mud, cattle dung, and short grasses. Hut design varies slightly from area to area. Constructing the huts is women's work. Men occasionally help in collecting larger trees and bushes.

[231] [513] [352] [354] [184] [462]

A: Bernardi E. 56-6 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Maasai FL.12

cattle" and "red bulls". Hollis,[*] recorded two subdivisions of the Uasin Gishu, "the black striped cattle", and "the red striped cattle", which were, very probably, no other thing than the cattlelines.

The Maasai clans, ol piloto, pl. il piloto or en piloonoi, pl. in piloonoi, are patrilineal and exogamous. Generally, they do not seem to be totemic. However, Hobley,[*] and the author of EO. No. 48 have recorded the names of a few clan totems. Fox,[*] refers also to the association of snakes with some clans.

The true exogamic unit of the Maasai seems to be any individual unit, either clan or branch of the clan. A Maasai may be adopted into another clan than his original one. The same provision applies even to an alien (Kikuyu, Dorobo). The adoptee, however, never attains the same social status as a full member of the clan. He is free to leave at any time, provided he returns whatever he was presented by his patrons, such as cattle or any other valuable.

The relationship between clans and their territorial distribution is not very clear. Analysis would suggest that in the past, clans were territorially separated. At present, there is still a tendency for members of the same clan to live close by to one another and occupy neighbouring ecosystems. Some sections are almost made up by members of a single clan. Thus, the Kidiliani clan is predominant in Kapiti section; the Kaapoi clan is predominant in Dalalekutuk section. Such facts, however, seem to be the exception. Usually clans are represented at a time in many different sections "There is no rule", writes Hobley,[*] "governing the distribution of the various piloi (clans); often members of as many as three piloi will be found in one ewaso enyang (elders' village) or a ewaso manyat (warriors' village)".

Water and cattle are generally clan possession. When new water sources are discovered, they are claimed on behalf of the clan. All clan members who live in the neighbourhood are entitled to make use of them. A foreigner may also be allowed to water his cattle there. If disputes arise, they are settled by the council of clan-members on the spot. As a matter of fact, these water sources are the centre of ordinary social life, as Fosbrooke[*] writes: "The

[*] Hollis, l. c., p. 458.
[*] Hobley, l. c., p. 126.
[*] Fox, l. c., p. 458.
[*] Hobley, Eastern Uganda. An ethnological Survey, London 1903, p. 102.
[*] Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 45.

to endorsed by numerous reliable elders, that, even if the Iaiboo had given his sanction for the circumcision, the Uasin elders would have been justified in acting as they did.

On a subject in June, 1909, Iaiboo Kiptoo laid down a ceremonial for closing the age. It consisted of taking a small bird (Kwel) and breaking its legs and putting out its eyes. Whitehouse records a similar ritual in the same connection. On further enquiry it appears that this procedure is merely a curse which may be laid on any elder who is determined to circumcise his son during the 'closed season' in defiance of warnings. It is generally considered inconceivable that such a ceremony will actually be performed. The point of recording this case is to illustrate that the Iaiboo's part in this matter is merely to re-inforce by magical means a decision that had already been taken by the elders. It is also of interest to note that Kiptoo was passing off as original a curse which had been used in Gusiiya for years.

Although the supervision of the age grade ceremonies has been recorded as an important function of the Iaiboo, this activity is subject to various restrictions, the principle of which I have been unable to ascertain. The facts, however, show that the Iaiboo of one section may perform the ceremony for another, or alternatively the assistance of an 'unofficial' Iaiboo may be sought; for instance the Ogiek or passing out ceremony of the Uasin against of the Kimnaga section was customarily held under Parti, and the Uasin or promotion ceremony of the Kimis age under Kiptoo, who were respectively the ruling Laiboo at the material times. But in fact an old Kimnaga elderer of the Kaplelach clan, and Laiboo ole Kaitungo (now deceased), was called in to assist in both these ceremonies. By agreement the Mondi Iaiboo received the fees in respect of these ceremonies from the Pakerwa and Kimnaga sons, while fees contributed by the Mondi and Longisa Masai went to Laiboo at Siati, Kenya Colony. In another case, Sengeyon, Iaiboo of the Lotu section, performed the Uasin or promotion of the Kimis age for the Sumgoro and Lubulkiani sections, which are customarily under Kimnaga (ib). All that can be said, therefore, in our present state of knowledge, is that the 'official' Iaiboo to the section does not customarily play the leading part in the age grade ceremonies of that section.

In the choice of Laigwanak or Spokesmen of the Age-grades, Whitehouse records "The medicine man always accepts the spokesman presented to him," a statement for which there is ample confirmation throughout Kimnaga. Hollis, it is true, states "If the chief medicine man approves of the selection, a cloth is made for the new chief . . . ", but this is with reference to the lenana who is a chief of ceremonies only, and certainly does not apply to the Laigwanak or Spokesmen.

It is also noteworthy that the 5 Pororo elders keep in very close touch with the Iaiboo, from the time they take charge of the new age, until their charges stand down. Most of the Laigwanak of the Kimis or Senior Warrior Age of to-day state that they were first taken to Laiboo Parti when he was still resident in Kenya, i.e. prior to 1923; they were of course only boys at the time. The laigwanak of Lumagaan for initiation

Cattle per Gate

Number of cattle		Gates		Percentage
Under [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]	=	[illegible]
[illegible] = [illegible]	=	[illegible]
Over [illegible]	=	[illegible]
		Total [illegible]

As [illegible] cattle were owned by these [illegible] gates it follows that the average number per gate is just over three hundred, but this figure is misleading, for two-thirds of the gates possess less than two hundred head.*

The advantages of marriage not only include the acquisition of a woman to bear one's children and to tend one's cattle. For marriage sets up a new relationship with one's entire family, whereby each party is expected to help the other. If a father-in-law loses his cattle to drought or disease, the son-in-law is expected to contribute towards a new herd. If a son-in-law strikes hard times, the father-in-law — if only for the sake of his daughter — will consider cattle to him.

At times, also, a daughter will, by amicable arrangement with the son-in-law, return to live with her father for considerable periods, being visited from time to time by her husband, or again a grandson will be sent from home to help herd his grandfather's cattle.

The fulfilment of these various obligations leads to much travelling and consequent contact, almost as much as the actual herding and marriage does. This latter is a lengthy process. Early betrothal is the rule and involves a long engagement, during which the male is expected to maintain contact with his future in-laws. Frequent travelling is also necessary in other connections, for example a man goes himself or sends a son to examine the water and pasture of the area to which he proposes to move, and as we have seen the moves are always on the move, visiting friends, begging bullocks for meat-feasts, etc. So in spite of the size of the area which they inhabit, and of their scattered settlements, the Masai maintain very close contact amongst themselves.

Another point of considerable importance to Masai family affairs is the adoption of children, frequently practised both in respect of Masai and also children, the latter frequently come to be regarded as tributaries by this process.

* The mean number of cattle per gate lies between 100 and 200 or between 50 and 60 head per adult male taxpayer—Ed.

First of all a Masai adopts any child born to his wife by anyone other than himself, including those born prior to marriage: in fact a married girl is frequently left to her father's home until she bears a child. The child of man's own loins is called enanda, that of another ingore ilkiteiti. No distinction is made between the two, and the latter term is generally used playfully.

If a man has one wife with a number of children, and another who is barren, when the former gives birth to another child, there is a ceremony by which the latter may adopt this child. The adopting mother sits on the after-birth, and pays to the true mother a cow and calf called sangiye. The tribe sees the child as her own, and it is asserted that by stimulation of the breasts and special food, lactation can be artificially induced, even when the foster-mother has never given birth. The fact that a woman has adopted a child in the manner in which referred to afterwards — the child is regarded as though she herself had given birth to it.

In the older days children were frequently captured in war and adopted into the tribe: such a child is referred to as of ormoi lineage. It was, and still is, not uncommon for a Masai to adopt an alien's child, at times this will occur when the Masai marries the alien's daughter and adopts a younger son, or in time of famine amongst aliens, the Masai may find an abandoned child, or he gives one to look after, or he may give some cattle to the alien for the privilege of adopting the child. The use of the word 'purchase' has been deliberately avoided, for neither party looks on the transaction in this light. A son acquired in this manner is called ainkiro. These last two categories of adoptee can inherit the cattle of their foster-mother's house, whilst their children can inherit the 'gate' the way other Masai.

A peculiar custom of adoption exists amongst the Ingidong or Iolore's clan. Any Masai, child or adult, can attach himself to a member of the clan, and such person must treat him as a son, giving him cattle, and arranging his circumcision and/or marriage. Such a person is called ol oiti, he also are the numerous Kikoyo received into the clan. The relationship is terminable at will, the adoptee leaving and departing, but leaving behind everything that he has been given. Though theoretically applicable to the whole clan, such adoptions usually only take place in the lolore's immediate family.

These notes on adoption are by no means full: they may, however, be sufficient to emphasise that it is a mistake to regard the Masai as being racially pure. If they came in time to accept new ideas as readily as they accept new blood, their rapid advancement would be assured.

It is important for a number of reasons to know who holds the parentage in a Masai family group, but it is a question to which no definite answer can be given. Rules, where they exist, are seldom followed — in such intimate family matters it is personality that counts.

The cattle which have been allocated to a woman to treat for her children are nominally in her control. The elder looks after the animal [illegible] D. Masai Tribe.—Further Notes on the Masai of Kenya Colony.

[illegible] The name of the main group 'Loita Masai' is very liable to be confused with that of the sub-class 'Loita' (Kidu) because the former means "the Masai and Lolkidia and the latter the Masai and cattle."

It is further difficult, if not impossible, to know whether to treat some of the divisions as class or sub-class.

The two words used by the Masai are Ol-piron (the class) and Enkiduenot (the sub-class). But these words are not much help to the enquirer, because the Masai use each to mean almost interchangeably.

Hollis, p. 296, speaks of a group of Masai called 'Lolkiboi or Dilamiriro. I have been unable to discover these people. The tribe called Lamiriro, which lives to the east of the Masai area, is quite different in language and customs from the Masai, being similar to the Nandi.

[illegible] These class are associated with certain colours as under :—

1. Kiser of Dorobo Orok (the black colour 2). Tenghenen of Sorok Sengir Orok (the dirty black colour). 3 Dorobo of Masai Sam (the brown colour). 4 Kidulian all colours.

[illegible] Adoption.—The Masai like to adopt children, and even grown men, of other class and other tribes, who may help them to herd their cattle. Of recent years they have also shown a tendency to adopt Kikuyu cultivators to plant maize for them in the more fertile areas Narosura Gagam and Il Ambi, west of the Rift valley. [illegible] An adopted person is called Ol-Oiogo. Having been adopted he is regarded as being a member of the family and class of his adoption and has nothing to do with his former class. He may even marry a woman of the sub-class of his natural father, provided that it is not also the sub-class of his adoption. But he may not marry or have sexual intercourse with a woman of the sub-class of his adoption. Accordingly, an adopted Kikuyu may call himself a Masai, and even though he may be unable to speak the Masai language he is not telling a lie according to Masai ideas.

When a man or boy is adopted as a herdsman he is treated by the head of the family as one of his own sons. He is given the head of cattle and is helped to marry a wife. But if or when he wants to leave his adopted family he must go empty handed as he came, leaving behind his cattle, wives and children as he may have acquired under adoption.

[illegible] An adopted man takes an inferior position socially to a well-born Masai. He would not in practice hold any important position in the tribe nor be able to marry a well-born Masai woman.

[illegible] Subclass. Arrangements of Ward Huts.—Before dealing with inheritance it is necessary to explain briefly the arrangement of huts in a village in order that the terms "right of the gate" and "left of the gate" may be understood.

[illegible]

[illegible]

Polygamy

[illegible]

Adultery

[illegible]

Divorce

[illegible]

Adoption

[illegible]

Birth and Naming

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] it for the night. Their captives are not eaten. The men from the enemy who can be taken are killed, but not mutilated. The women, on the contrary, are usually spared and freed. It also happens, however, that their captors who are undertaking their first expedition also strike down children, in order not to return as [illegible]. But even in this case pregnant women are spared. For it is believed that God punishes the murderer of a pregnant woman by the death of his own children. Only very exceptionally does one take along a few women or children. The latter, however, do not become slaves; rather, the captured women may even become the (wife) wife of the one who captured her, just as he also regards the kidnapped child precisely like his own. A ceremony of adoption does not exist: the man simply hands the child over to his wife, who treats it like her own. The next day they march on toward the home land; in the evening a fierce fence is again built, and at the same time the share of the booty destined for the of [illegible] is set apart. The total booty of every war expedition is given a name. This is determined on this second evening, while the men are eating. It is called in [illegible], [illegible], because men fall on both sides. Other names are [illegible] of the provisions in living [illegible]. Livestock taken along on the expedition did not last, and the warriors, out of hunger and contrary to the existing custom, had to eat raw fruits. [illegible] of the [illegible] soldiers suffered on the way because of a shortage of water. [illegible], formed from the call [illegible], that is, approximately: "only revenge, if it is not possible, what does it matter," a frequent saying if one believes oneself inferior to the opponent in strength. The next morning, early, before the departure, the leaders distribute the booty

Fig. 40. On picket duty.

MAORI STORIES

[illegible] While the elephant was pulling at the rock, the hare slipped out of the hole and ran away. As he ran, he met some baboons, and called out to them to help him. They inquired why he was running so fast, and he replied that he was being chased by a great big person. The baboons told him to go and sit down, and promised not to give him up. The hare entered the baboons' lair whilst they sat down outside and waited. Presently the elephant arrived, and asked if the hare had passed that way. The baboons inquired whether he would give them anything if they pointed out the hare's hiding-place. The elephant said he would give them whatever they asked for, and when they said they wanted a cup full of his blood, he promised to give it them, after satisfying himself that the cup was small. The baboons then shot an arrow into his neck, and the blood gushed forth.

After the elephant had lost a considerable quantity of blood, he inquired if the cup was not full. But the baboons had made a hole in the bottom, and when the elephant looked at it, he saw that it was still half empty. The baboons jeered at him, and said he had enough, so he told them to fill the cup.

They continued to bleed him, but still the cup would not fill, and at length he sank exhausted to the ground and died.

The hare having nothing more to fear was then able to leave his hiding-place.

Ta-rotoro,' hare Ta-rotoro, o ngu-pikiro.
Tha-roro of-tha-mysterious and tha-thrill.

Ka-ki ngu, Ta-whakawa ngaro ngu-figure Ururi,
They-were-there formerly the-brothers two who-not hunt,
ngu-kiro-i ka-ha-ngi-ngi, a-ngaro,
and-they-stay he-who-hunt of-tha-fallen.

Ka-ki-ki-a, a-ngaro-ngaro-i, a-ngaro
And-they-grew, and-in-there-disappeared-he, and-they-lament Ta-rotoro.
tha-mysterious.

Ka-a-tuku ngaro-ngaro, ngaro, ngaro-ngaro,
And-he-there-grew ngaro-ngaro ngaro-ngaro ngaro-ngaro,
ngaro-ngaro:
and-he-there-sayin-he: *Ta-ngu, ngaro-ngaro'
*Ta-ngu, (ngu)-slaughter-(ng)'

* Ta-rotoro, the name, is only used in the plural. Ta-rotoro means the messenger.

* Ta-whakawa, the brothers, can also be used for relatives. Ta-whakawa aligns for aligning, from ngaro brother with the same mother, and is the second syllable to full brother that relates.

● 601

p. 602
facing p. 602 (A) facing p. 602 (B)
facing p. 602 (C)
facing p. 602 (D)
facing p. 602 (E)

Positions of kinship chart entitled "Maori System of Relationship." /p. 602 & ff./

601

[illegible] OF THE [illegible] OF [illegible] AND OTHER [illegible] [illegible].

By [illegible]

The principal terms of [illegible] used by the Sheet are as follows:—

	Spelling of indicatrix	Indicatrix Gravity	Remarks
Rubber	orange	green	[illegible]
Shellac	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Gingelleine ...	orange	green.
Hexamethylene ...	[illegible]	[illegible].
Sandiver Silver Sandiver Transparent Sandiver	[illegible] ...	[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] — [illegible] of the [illegible] Figures of Relationship

	Number of relationship	Abbreviated Genealogy	Remarks
Wife	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Son-in-law	[illegible]	[illegible]	Son-in-law. Shown on right side of [illegible].
Son's wife Son's wife Son's wife	[illegible]	[illegible]	Son's wife. Shown on left side of [illegible]. Son's wife. Shown on right side of [illegible]. Son's wife. Shown on left side of [illegible].
Co-wife	[illegible]	[illegible]
Son	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Sister's son	[illegible]	[illegible]
Transgenit son	[illegible]	[illegible]
Daughter Sister's daughter Transgenit daughter	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Father's father	[illegible]	[illegible]
Father's mother	[illegible]	[illegible]

	Position of authority	Authorised Gazette	Remarks
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

	System of Relationship	Antecedent Generally	Remarks
Husband's brother's son	[illegible] or [illegible] (boy or man); [illegible] or [illegible] (girl or woman)	[illegible] (boy or man); [illegible] (girl or woman)
Husband's brother's daughter	[illegible] or [illegible] ...	[illegible] (boy or man); [illegible] (girl or woman)
Husband's sister's son	[illegible] or [illegible].	[illegible] (family, [illegible], etc., see brother)
Husband's sister's daughter	[illegible] or [illegible].	[illegible] (family, [illegible])
Son's son	[illegible] (man); [illegible] or [illegible] (woman).	[illegible] (man); [illegible] (woman)
Son's daughter ...	[illegible] (man); [illegible] or [illegible] (woman).	[illegible] (man); [illegible] (woman)
Daughter's son ...	[illegible] (man); [illegible] or [illegible] (woman).	[illegible] (man); [illegible] (woman)
Daughter's daughter	[illegible] (man); [illegible] or [illegible] (woman).	[illegible] (man); [illegible] (woman)
Wife's father ...	[illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible] (see).
Wife's mother ...	[illegible] ...	[illegible], [illegible] or [illegible].
Wife's brother ...	[illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible] (see).
Wife's half-brother
Wife's sister ...	[illegible] ...	[illegible] or [illegible] (see).	[illegible] or [illegible] [illegible]
Wife's half-sister	[illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible] (see).
Wife's [illegible]'s husband	[illegible] or [illegible].	[illegible] (if children, by [illegible])
Husband's father	[illegible] or [illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible].
Husband's mother	[illegible] or [illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible].
Husband's brother	[illegible] ...	[illegible] or [illegible] (see).
Husband's half-brother	[illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible] (see).

601

	Systems of relationship	Achievement diversity	Remarks
Husband's sister; Husband's half-sister	[illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible] ...
Husband's first cousin's wife	[illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible] ...
Son's wife ...	[illegible]	[illegible]
Daughter's husband	[illegible] (man); [illegible] (woman)	[illegible] (man); [illegible] (woman)
Brother's wife ...	[illegible] [illegible] (man); [illegible] (woman)	[illegible] or [illegible] ...
Half-brother's wife	[illegible]	[illegible] or [illegible] ...
Sister's husband ...	[illegible] (man or boy); [illegible] (woman or girl or woman)	[illegible] (m.); [illegible] or [illegible] (f.)
Brother's son; Half-brother's son	[illegible], [illegible] ...	[illegible]
Brother's daughter; Half-brother's daughter	[illegible], [illegible] ...	[illegible]
Sister's son ... Half-sister's son	[illegible], [illegible] ...	[illegible]
Sister's daughter; Half-sister's daughter	[illegible], [illegible] ...	[illegible]

When listening to Maori talking to one another it would often appear as if many of the terms of relationship used were the same as names of birds, dogs, pigs, and donkeys, etc. This is chiefly due to the fact that whenever a woman is brought into the family by marriage it is customary for her husband's relatives and their wives to give her an animal to show that she is recognised as a member of the family. The giver and the recipient ever afterwards call one another after the animal which has been given, to which the particle pu is prefixed.

601
431
[515]

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

601 431 Thus, a man gives his brother's wife or his paternal uncle's wife, or his paternal uncle's son's wife a cow, a calf, or a lamb, and the terms of address used by the two, instead of being par-sidan or yeiyo, as the case may be, are pa-kiteăg, pa-ashe, or pa-supen; a father-in-law gives his daughter-in-law a calf, and the two call one another pa-ashe; and a paternal uncle gives his nephew's wife a she-goat and calls her pa-kine. Similarly a man's first wife usually presents each successive wife with [595] a calf on her marriage, and instead of using the term na-aīni when speaking to one another the two women say pa-ashe; a woman gives her husband's brother's wife a donkey as a wedding present, and the two women call one another pa-sighirin; and a mother-in-law selects a cow for her daughter-in-law some months after marriage, when she has learnt to keep house for her husband, and the form of address is pa-kiteăg. This method of address is carried even further, and is used between men of the same family. A father, for instance, usually gives his son a bull when the boy is eight or nine years of age, and the two call one another pa-oiăgōni instead of papa and li-ayōni; a paternal uncle makes a similar present to his nephew, and the same form of address is used; an older brother gives his younger brother a heifer, and the two call one another pa-'n-dauwo; and paternal cousins often use the terms pa-oro or pa-merregesh when talking to each other.

The following terms are found: pa-kiteăg, the bullock or the cow; pa-moăgi, the bullock; pa-kīshu, the cows; pa-oiăgōni, the bull; pa-'n-dauwo, the heifer; pa-buăgni, the bull calf; pa-ashe, the calf; pa-kuo, pa-oro, or pa-sitima, the he-goat; pa-kine, the she-goat; pa-lulelo, the kid; pa-kerr, the ewe; pa-merregesh, the ram; pa-sighirin, the donkey; pa-supen, the ewe lamb; pa-mao, the twin kids.

With one exception, a present of this nature is not made, nor are those terms of address used, outside the father's family. Thus, a brother cannot give his sister a heifer so that the two might call one another pa-'n-dauwo, because if the sister marries she will leave the family; a maternal uncle cannot give his nephew a bull and call him pa-oiăgōni, and maternal cousins may not address one another by the terms pa-oro, etc. The exception to this rule is made when a man marries. He then presents his father-in-law with a bullock and his mother-in-law with an ewe, and the terms of address are pa-kiteăg and pa-kerr. These presents have nothing [583] to do with the cattle paid for the bride.

604 578 754 A maternal uncle (ol-apu) exercises great influence over his nephews, as it is believed that if he were to curse them they would die. He can at any time stop a fight in which one of his nephews is engaged by merely calling on his nephew to desist, as the nephew would be afraid of his right arm withering if he were to [593] disobey. This power is to a certain extent reciprocal, and if a man were to start beating his wife he would have to stop if his maternal nephew ordered him to do 593 so. A father and any old man of the family can also usually stop a fight by telling 626 the combatants to desist, but they are not necessarily listened to. A mother has 754 more influence, and if her son refuses to obey her, she strikes her stomach and says, "You were born in this"; whereupon the son is said to sicken, and can only recover when his mother makes a rope of fibre which she hangs round his neck.

601

MASAI SYSTEM OF RELATIONSHIP.

109

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

[Facing p. 482 (A)]

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

[Facing p. 482 (B)]

MASAI SYSTEM

60 P

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

[Facing p. 482(C)]

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

[Facing p. 482(D)]

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

[facing p. 482(E)]

To face p. 482.

601

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

593 431 601 Gifts to Certain Relations.—A somewhat similar custom is that which ordains that a grown-up son must give certain presents to all children born to his father, as follows :—

(1) To a young girl-child, either a heifer or else a young ewe or young she-goat which has not yet had young. If the former present is given the child in future calls its brother (or half-brother) baashi, and if either of the two latter animals is given the appropriate name is bakuu.

(2) To a boy-child, either a heifer or a young ram or else a young ewe or she-goat which has not yet had young. The following are the appropriate names by which the boy henceforward calls the man: Ithubin if the gift was a young ewe, ingini if the gift was a young she-goat, ndauu if the gift was a heifer, ithithume if the gift was a young ram.

A grown-up son must also give a present to any new wife married by his father, the animal given and the name thenceforward used by the woman to the man being exactly as in the case of girl-children above.

604 Mother's Brother.—Among the Masai I can find no trace of any special functions of the mother's brother, and he has no special position in relation to his sister or her children.

589 Widowhood.—There is no idea of uncleanness attaching to widowhood, and therefore there is no ceremonial purification ceremony before sexual life can be indulged in by a widow. When a woman is left a widow she builds herself a hut [607] with one of her husband's own brothers (i.e. brothers by the same mother), and he becomes responsible for her welfare and acts in loco parentis to her children as far as making arrangements for initiation and marriage, etc., are concerned. In no circumstances, however, may this brother or any other of her husband's own [835] brothers have sexual intercourse with the woman. If she is still of child-bearing [851] age she is expected to go on having children (who will rank as her late husband's), and to this end she may have sexual relations with :—

589 834

(1) Any men of her late husband's age-group, who are not excluded by other restrictions (see above).

(2) Any of her late husband's half-brothers (i.e. brothers by a different mother).

(3) Any other men not otherwise excluded.

757 Sickness.—My informant was unwilling or unable to give me any detailed information about the treatment of sick people, save that medicines were made from the barks and seeds of various trees and from the stomach juices of slaughtered animals.

PART VII.—DEATH AND BURIAL.

76 Death.—Death is looked upon with fear and, therefore—except in the case of very old men and women past child-bearing—every precaution is taken to avoid a

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

.561 if they are not already married. They have duties also towards the uncircumcised boys as guardians and instructors, while the elders of the ol-aji senior to them (see p. 117) are said to be responsible for the ol-aji of the warriors. One hundred years ago Krapf wrote that the Masai had six age-divisions: "(1) Engera, little children. (2) Leiok, boys. (3) Elmoran or elkeiteau, from 17 to 20 or 25 years of age. These have not yet married wives, nor obtained cattle of their own. . . . (4) Ekieko, who marry and have cattle of their own. (5) Esabuki, older than the Ekieko. (6) The Elkijaro or Elkimirisho, the aged persons."[16] A woman is classed as a girl (small, en-kiyio; older, en-tito) till married, when she becomes e-siankiki, "young married woman," and then en-kitok, married woman.

Kinship and Behaviour

601 [171] The Masai kinship system stresses agnatic descent, and in this respect differs somewhat from the kinship systems of the Nandi peoples; but the distinction between agnates is not taken into the third and second ascending generations. The Masai system is therefore different from the Nandi tiliet; and though the word -sotua, meaning both "peace" and "relative" occurs in the Masai system, it is not used with the group-significance of the Nandi term tiliet. The Masai system has not yet been studied in detail, and the following analysis is based mainly on Hollis's account, the fullest that we have.[17] Certain alterations and additions have been made after discussion with John Tombo ole Mbaei; but there are considerable discrepancies between him and Hollis, and this analysis must be regarded as purely provisional.[18]

There are 11 terms used of both kindred and affines, together with two others used only of affines. The words koko, papa, and yieyio are used without gender signs; koko is derived from enk-oko; papa and yieyio are the correct words for "father" and "mother" (not menye and goto, which mean "father of" and "mother of"). Apu and its derivatives take gender signs (ol-apu, o-le-nk-apu, en-e-nk-apu, ol-aputani, enk-aputani); as do akui or akuyia (ol-akui, enk-akui); sotua (o-le-sotua, en-e-sotua); e-sindani (only feminine); ol-ayioni, en-tito, meaning son and daughter (both covered by en-kerai, "child," referring to either sex); and ol-alashe, brother, enk-anashe, sister, which have in addition the internal change of L to N indicating the feminine.

In the third ascending generation all males are ol-akui and all females koko. In the second ascending generation, all males are ol-akui, except the father's mother's brother, who is ol-apu. The wives of all -akui are koko; but the wife of ol-apu is yieyio. The husbands of koko are: (1) of father's brother's sister, ol-aputani; (2) of father's mother's sister, mother's father's sister, mother's mother's sister, o-le-sotua.

In the first ascending generation, the father and his brothers are papa, the mother and her sisters yieyio, as well as father's sister. Mother's brother is ol-apu. Father's brother's and mother's brother's wives are yieyio; husband of father's sister is ol-aputani, of mother's sister, o-le-sotua.

In a man's own generation, brother and father's brother's son are ol-alashe, and their wives e-sindani, brother's wife being distinguished as e-sindani e-anyit to indicate closer relationship. Sister and father's brother's daughter are enk-anashe, and their husbands ol-aputani. Father's sister's son is ol-apu, and his wife yieyio; mother's brother's son is o-le-nk-apu and his wife yieyio. Father's sister's daughter is en-e-nk-apu and her husband o-le-sotua, a term applied also to mother's sister's son and daughter (masc., o-le-, fem., en-e-), and to the husband of the mother's brother's daughter, who is en-e-nk-apu.

[16] Vocabulary, pp. 14, 15. In modern spelling, the Masai words are en-kerai, il-ayiok, il-murran. The remaining words are names of age-sets. (See p. 116.)

[17] JRAI, 1910, XL, pp. 473–82. This supersedes Merker's account in Die Masai, pp. [114] 40–3. There is an excellent analysis of the Masai system by Radcliffe-Brown in African Systems of Kinship and Marriage, pp. 18–22.

[18] It may be mentioned, however, that the use of terms within a tribe is not always uniform, as I have found among the Nandi; and this may sometimes account for apparent discrepancies.

In the first descending generation, the word en-kerai, "child," may be applied to son, daughter, brother's son and daughter, and father's brother's son's son and daughter, or they may be distinguished as masc. ol-ayioni, "boy," and fem. en-tito, "girl." Father's brother's daughter's son is ol-aputani, and father's brother's daughter's daughter en-e-sotua, the latter term applying also to father's sister's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's son's daughter. The term o-le-sotua is applied to the mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's daughter's son, and father's sister's daughter's son. O-le-nk-apu is applied to the sons of father's sister's son and mother's brother's son, and en-e-nk-apu to their daughters. In this generation there are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's daughter. 601

In the second descending generation, ol-akui includes the sons of a man's own son and daughter, brother's son, father's brother's son's son, father's brother's son's daughter; while enk-akui is applied to their daughters. Father's brother's daughter's son's son is ol-aputani, and the daughter is en-e-sotua. The term o-le-nk-apu covers son's son, and the sons of sister's son, father's sister's son's son, and mother's brother's son's son; their daughters are en-e-nk-apu. O-le-sotua includes the sons of sister's daughter, father's brother's daughter's daughter, father's sister's daughter's son, father's sister's son's daughter, mother's brother's son's daughter, mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's son's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's son; en-e-nk-apu is applied to the daughters. There are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter's son and daughter, or for mother's sister's daughter's daughter's son and daughter.

Among affines, the term ol-aputani is applied to wife's father, wife's father's brother, and wife's brother, but their wives are enk-aputani, en-e-sotua, and en-e-sotua respectively. Son and grandson of wife's brother are also ol-aputani. Wife's sister is e-sindani e-anyit, and all children and grandchildren of wife's brother and sister (except wife's brother's son and grandson) are -e-sotua. The majority of affinal terms are in fact of the -e-sotua category. Husband is ol-moruo or ol-payian, wife e-goroyioni or en-kitok; junior wife is enk-aini.

These kinship terms, however, are not very much used, for it is the custom of the Masai to call each other by cattle-names: members of a domestic group give each other cattle on various occasions, and thereafter the word denoting the kind of animal given is used as the equivalent of a reciprocal relative term; the animal name is prefixed by pa, meaning "giver or receiver of." Thus, a father usually gives his son a bull when he is about 10 years old, and they then call each other pa-oiyoni, "giver (receiver) of a bull" instead of papa and li-ayioni. An elder brother will give a younger brother a heifer, and they will then be pa-n-tawuo (heifer) to each other. Paternal cousins often call each other pa-meregesh (ram). 551

Among these relatives, the mother's brother has great power and influence over his sister's son. He can give him orders, which must be obeyed, and he may take what he wants from his nephew, who has also the right to take what he wants from his uncle. Refusal to obey the mother's brother can be punished by cursing, but this is not reciprocal. Behaviour patterns are based on seniority and the claims of kinship, and are expressed in the avoidance of bad language and unseemly actions, and the observance of formality between certain persons. There is avoidance between a man and his wife's mother, and between a man and his full brother's wife, though not between him and his half-brother's wife. The formality of greetings helps to preserve the respect for elderhood. 604 602 606 607 388

Pre-marital Sex-life

A man's sex-life begins when he has been circumcised; a girl's when she reaches puberty. Pre-marital relations are more formalized than among the Nandi, since the unmarried warriors of a local company, sirit, live in a barrack, e-manyata, with their mothers, some of their sisters, and their girl lovers, e-sanca, each man having his own lover. The rules which regulate marriage apply in the selection of a lover. 836

/40 cont./

415 Now and then the receptacles are also replaced by two pouchlike
492 pack-holders (ol deretal, el derēta), one tied on the other. These [283] have the oval shape of a shield and consist of a wooden frame that is covered with a plaited work of leather thongs or ropes. Otherwise they serve to hold the pack loaded on the donkey and some-
285 times also on oxen. Mats are unknown; dressed neat-skins take 237 their place. Mortars are also unknown.
412

III.

000 Closer family relationships. -- Kinship designations. -- Terms of address for relatives.

602 Since every tribe and every lineage are descended from a
[613] tribal ancestor, the tribal and lineage members consider themselves
[614] more or less distant relatives. The family, one's own as well as, ascending, those of the father and of the mother, forms the closer
[611] relationship. The child follows the father's family (father right).
[672] Relatives are not responsible for punishable offenses, fines, or debts of a relative. Legally they need not support them either in connection with impoverishment or release from captivity; it is such a general custom, however, that probably no one ever evades it.

601 /41/ The Masai language is poor in particular kinship designations; most of them are made up of words for father, mother, brother, sister, son, daughter, etc.

Father: baba.

Mother: jējo.

Another wife of the father: eṅg aṅhji e jējo.

Principal wife: e' ṅgorojoni kitok, that is, the great woman, or en altero eṅg aṅ, that is, the first in the kraal.

Every other wife: e' ṅgorojoni.

Brother (1):

1. Brother and sister come from the same wife, half brother and half sister from different wives of the same father.

/41 cont./

601 ol alasche or ol alahe (pl. el alaschana or el alahana).

Sister: eng anasche or eng anahe (pl. ng anaschara or ng anahara) or en didan or en ditan (pl. ng dojan).

Half brother: ol aijoni la baba (pl. el aijok la baba), or ol aijoni l'eng ainji e jējo; ol aijoni = the son or the boy.

Half sister: en dido (or en dito) a baba ('n doje a baba), or en dido eng ainji e jējo.

Father's brother: ol alasche le baba.

Father's sister: eng anasche e baba.

Mother's brother: ol alasche le jejo.

Mother's sister: eng anasche e jējo.

Brother of another wife of the father: ol alasche 'l eng ainji e jējo.

Sister of another wife of the father: eng anasche eng ainji e jējo.

Son of the father's brother: ol aijoni l ol alasche le baba.

Son of the father's sister: ol aijoni l eng anasche e baba.

Daughter of the father's brother: en dido (2)

2. Not infrequently one also hears en dido l ol alasche le baba; the l apparently should be interpreted, not as a grammatical irregularity, but as a concession made to euphony.

ol alasche le baba.

Daughter of the father's sister: en dido eng anasche e baba.

Son of the mother's brother: ol aijoni l ol alasche le jējo.

Son of the mother's sister: ol aijoni l eng anasche e jējo.

Daughter of the mother's brother: en dido ol alasche le jejo.

Daughter of the mother's sister: en dido eng anasche e jējo.

Son of my brother: ol aijoni l ol alasche lai.

Son of my sister: ol aijoni l eng anasche ai.

Daughter of my brother: en dido ol alasche lai.

Daughter of my sister: en dido eng anasche ai.

My grandfather: ol akuja lai.

My grandmother: koko ai.

/41 cont./

• 601 The grandfather designates the grandson as: ṅg akuja.

/42/ The grandmother designates the grandson as: eṅ gerai eṅ gerai ai, that is, child of my child.

Father-in-law: oḷ abudani lai.

Mother-in-law: eṅg abudani ai.

Brother of wife: oḷ abudani or oḷ alasche le 'ṅgorojoni.

Sister of wife: es sidani ai or eṅg anasche e ṅgorojoni ai.

Wife of own brother: e' ṅgorojoni oḷ alasche lai.

Wife of the half brother: es sidani ai.

Different ones of these designations are terms of address among relatives, with the exception of the ones for father and mother, who 551 are addressed as baba or jëjo. Most terms of address by far are formed from names for animal species; if one has given the one concerned a gift of a bull, one calls him b-aiṅoni, from oḷ oiṅoni, the bull; after the gift of an ox or a cow, ba-'geteṅ or ba-'gischu (oḷ geteṅ, the ox; eṅ geteṅ, the cow; 'ṅgischu, the neat); of a heifer, ba-'n dauo (from en dauo); of a calf, ba-sche or ba-he (from oḷ or eṅg asche); for a donkey, ba-sigiria (os sigiria, the donkey), for a male calf, ba-moṅi, for a buck goat or sheep, ba-meregesch, for a mother sheep, ba-ger, for a she-goat or sheep, ba-ndare; for a she-goat, ba-gine; for a female sheep or female goat that has not yet had young, ba-suben; for a kid or lamb, ba-lelo, for twin lambs or kids, ba-mao (1).

1. El mao, the twins.

551 With all these designations may be addressed: the brother by the 576 brother, the half brother by the half brother, and -- if the one
[601] addressing and the one addressed are the same age -- the father's brother, the son of the father's brother, the son of the father's sister, the son of the mother's brother, the son of the mother's sister, the son of the brother, the son of the sister. Male individuals who are close friends and the same age also use these terms of address, as soon as they have given each other the first head of livestock. The later gift of a head of livestock of another kind does not alter the form of address.

/42 cont./

601 [431] [551] As soon as the man marries another woman, each of his children present her with a head of small livestock and call her accordingly, ba-ger, ba-gine, ba-ndare, ba-suben, or ba-lelo. The term of address for father-in-law is always ba-geteñ, for mother-in-law, ba-ger.

Brother and sister call the sister and half sister en eljo. Brother and sister call the brother and half brother eraljo. The form of address for the father's brother, baba; the mother's brother, abula; the sister of the father and of the mother, koko. The brother of another wife of the father is addressed as baba, if he is old; by his name if he is younger. The sister of another wife of the father is called koko if she is old; en akitok if she is younger. The latter (pl. 'n akitwa) is also the term of address on the part of /43/ unmarried men for a woman in general. The uncle calls the nephew abula, the niece 'n gabulalja. The aunt calls both en geral ai = my child.

601 605 For the terms of address of those relatives whom we designate as male and female cousins in the narrower and broader sense I was able to construct the following rules from a very large number of examples:

1. If the relationship is derived from the mother's father or from the husband of the father's sister through consanguinity or relationship by marriage, the boy calls his male cousin abula, boy and girl call the female cousin en eljo before her circumcision and 'n gabulalja afterwards. The same designations are customary for (friendly) members of the lineage of the mother and of the husband of the father's sister.

2. If the relationship is based on consanguinity through the father's brothers or on membership in the same lineage, the male cousin will be called arabá by a boy, the female cousin 'n elba by boy and girl, both before and after her circumcision.

The girl calls any boy standing in a cousin relationship to her, according to one of the two rules, ol alacha 'Ng ai = the one given (me) by God.

/43 cont./

601 605 [431] The designations abula, en gijo, arabá, and 'n ełhe are used only as long as the above-mentioned terms of address are not affected by gifts of livestock. This explains why they are used only among children. This does not apply to the address ol aischa Ng ai, because the girl is not in a position to make the necessary gift of livestock.

601 The son and daughter of the brother or of the sister are addressed, as long as they remain in childhood, with na gerai ai = my child. The address for the grandfather runs ng alaja, for the grandmother koko. The grandfather calls the grandson ng akuj'ai; the grandmother, koko ai. [431] [551] Brother-in-law and sister-in-law are called by name or the terms of address derived from livestock designations.

IV.

600 Conjugal relations. -- Betrothal. -- State of being betrothed. -- Bride price. -- Evasion of the bride price. -- Obstacles to marriage. -- Wedding. -- Beginning of the marriage. -- Dissolution of the marriage.

581 The conjugal relationships are very loose, and in some views about them the Masai stand in unfavorable contrast to their sedentary Negro neighbors. As among the latter -- 595 [171] and, to be sure, without exception (1) --

> 1. The so-called monogamy of the Wambugwe is in practice the boldest polygyny.

polygyny prevails among the Masai. The number of wives of a man is limited neither by law nor custom, but depends only on his means. If a man has but one wife, poverty is always the reason. 581 There are no temporary or trial marriages; rather, marriage is a [583] more stable relationship. The woman through the marriage passes [618] into the family of her /44/ husband, but not into his lineage; rather she retains membership in her own lineage.

/44 cont./

582 for the contemplative idleness of the married man. But before the 583 marriage takes place the bride price is to be paid first.

As bride price (en dogitin = the things, each part of them, en dogi = the thing) he first pays the bride's father five pots of honey from which beer will be brewed, furthermore three cows and an ox. The bride's mother receives a male and a female sheep. The ox and the male sheep will be eaten at the feast taking place on the [601] wedding day. Around that day, more often afterwards than before,
[551] the /45/ bridegroom further brings the father-in-law a cow and the mother-in-law a female sheep that has not yet had young, whereupon the former call each other ba-geteṅ (1),

1. Cf. Second Part, III, terms of address for relatives.

while the bridegroom and the mother-in-law call each other ba-ger
585 from now on. Every wife married later receives at the wedding
[595] from the principal wife of her husband a year-old heifer, whereupon [431] the two call each other b'-asche, from the eldest child of her hus-
[551] band two goats or sheep, hence the address ba-ndare, and from the [601] smaller children of four to six years old and upward a goat or a sheep each, through which the address ba-gine, ba-suben, or ba-
583 lelo is brought about. During the period immediately after the wedding, the mother-in-law receives from the son-in-law several more pots of honey, skins for clothing, and iron wire for making [791] leg and arm ornaments. In the family of Chief Zendeo he receives, as he told me, only a cow as bride price for one of his daughters, while the mother of the girl gets two donkeys, a bull and a cow with calf. Since the last rinderpest it has happened not infrequently that a man is not in a position to pay the customary bride price. He then gives the father-in-law only one cow and leads her to him on a rope twisted out of grass. Whereas the bridegroom or young married man delivers the gifts of livestock himself, he always sends the honey by a woman. She is either a wife married previously, his mother, his older sister, or a wife of his brother. Only when the distance is very great does he deliver the honey himself,

/71 cont./

561
576 en dito to ol móruot bábă, es siĕ̆ngiki to ol móruot bábă, or ol móruo, if the latter is almost the same age as her husband, koko to ol móruot ol móruo.

[572] Friends often address each other with ol djore lai or ol jerai = my friend.

Instead of the address term 'n akitok, an ol barnoti or an ol morăni says to an es siĕ̆ngiki whom he has known from childhood 'siĕ̆ngiki or es siĕ̆ngiki, whereas an ol móruo in the same case uses the address term naito. The term of address "'n akitok" for an es siĕ̆ngiki is more polite than "siĕ̆ngiki," the latter used toward a strange es siĕ̆ngiki would be downright impertinent and rude (1).

1. In places the term es siĕ̆ngiki also has the meaning "married woman"; thus, at different times I heard a young woman call out coldly to one not entitled to use this designation when he used it: "I am not your es siĕ̆ngiki."

The obsolete term address en dagile, used for 'n akitok, is often regarded nowadays as affectedly polite.

[601] [651] [431] The terms of address required by kinship or livestock-gift take precedence over the above.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

Marriage.—The warriors may not marry till after the B-Unote, and do not usually do so till after their first Ol-Ng'esher. The case stated by Mr. Leakey,[1] in which a warrior cannot have sexual intercourse with his initiated wife, is therefore hypothetical, and does not occur in practice. 561 581 884 585 [833]

The cattle required for the bride-price are payable on the birth of the first child, and cannot be reclaimed if the wife dies or runs away, because the husband has got the child. Wives live with their husbands, but they are common to their husband's generation, not his own exclusively. Thus if a stranger comes to a village where lives a man of his generation he may choose in which hut belonging to his generation he will sleep. When it is time to sleep it is the custom for the owner of the hut to vacate it and leave the stranger with his wife. It is quite lawful and proper for the stranger to have sexual intercourse with the woman provided that she consents and that the restrictions (see p. 202) are observed. It is said that if a woman is persistently unwilling to allow the members of her husband's generation to have intercourse with her she may be severely admonished, and her husband may be fined a number of cattle. 583 561 837 [684]

On the other hand, the members of one generation are extremely jealous of generations older or younger than themselves. A fight between generations is very likely to occur if the men of one generation find that a man of another has had intercourse with one of their women. [978]

If a woman who has borne children leaves her husband and lives apart from him, he waits till his eldest son is old enough, and then sends him to fetch her back. 586

A man may not have sexual intercourse with the wife of his full brother (mother's son), but may have it with the wife of a half-brother (same father, different mother) who is of his generation. He may not have intercourse with his wife's sister or half-sister. 835

A husband and wife may not call each other by their names. 551 [593]

Father-in-law
Mother-in-law
Son-in-law
Daughter-in-law
} Must not be addressed by name.

Family.—The name for a family is Ol Marei. Relationship is not recognized beyond first cousin. The Masai take little interest in their genealogies and can seldom trace their ancestry beyond the fourth generation. Nevertheless, if a man is of pure Masai descent, Ol Masaini oinoti, he is proud of the fact. 602

Death and Burial.—Dead bodies are disposed of by the hyænas, except for those of Laibons or very influential old men. These are buried under cairns of stones. 764 766

[1] See p. 200 of this volume.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

In the first descending generation, the word en-kerai, "child," may be applied to son, daughter, brother's son and daughter, and father's brother's son's son and daughter, or they may be distinguished as masc. ol-ayioni, "boy," and fem. en-tito, "girl." Father's brother's daughter's son is ol-aputani, and father's brother's daughter's daughter en-e-sotua, the latter term applying also to father's sister's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's son's daughter. The term o-le-sotua is applied to the mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's daughter's son, and father's sister's daughter's son. O-le-nk-apu is applied to the sons of father's sister's son and mother's brother's son, and en-e-nk-apu to their daughters. In this generation there are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's daughter. 601

In the second descending generation, ol-akui includes the sons of a man's own son and daughter, brother's son, father's brother's son's son, father's brother's son's daughter; while enk-akui is applied to their daughters. Father's brother's daughter's son's son is ol-aputani, and the daughter is en-e-sotua. The term o-le-nk-apu covers son's son, and the sons of sister's son, father's sister's son's son, and mother's brother's son's son; their daughters are en-e-nk-apu. O-le-sotua includes the sons of sister's daughter, father's brother's daughter's daughter, father's sister's daughter's son, father's sister's son's daughter, mother's brother's son's daughter, mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's son's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's son; en-e-nk-apu is applied to the daughters. There are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter's son and daughter, or for mother's sister's daughter's daughter's son and daughter.

Among affines, the term ol-aputani is applied to wife's father, wife's father's brother, and wife's brother, but their wives are enk-aputani, en-e-sotua, and en-e-sotua respectively. Son and grandson of wife's brother are also ol-aputani. Wife's sister is e-sindani e-anyit, and all children and grandchildren of wife's brother and sister (except wife's brother's son and grandson) are -e-sotua. The majority of affinal terms are in fact of the -e-sotua category. Husband is ol-moruo or ol-payian, wife e-goroyioni or en-kitok; junior wife is enk-aini.

These kinship terms, however, are not very much used, for it is the custom of the Masai to call each other by cattle-names: members of a domestic group give each other cattle on various occasions, and thereafter the word denoting the kind of animal given is used as the equivalent of a reciprocal relative term; the animal name is prefixed by pa, meaning "giver or receiver of." Thus, a father usually gives his son a bull when he is about 10 years old, and they then call each other pa-oiyoni, "giver (receiver) of a bull" instead of papa and li-ayioni. An elder brother will give a younger brother a heifer, and they will then be pa-n-lawuo (heifer) to each other. Paternal cousins often call each other pa-meregesh (ram). 551

Among these relatives, the mother's brother has great power and influence over his sister's son. He can give him orders, which must be obeyed, and he may take what he wants from his nephew, who has also the right to take what he wants from his uncle. Refusal to obey the mother's brother can be punished by cursing, but this is not reciprocal. Behaviour patterns are based on seniority and the claims of kinship, and are expressed in the avoidance of bad language and unseemly actions, and the observance of formality between certain persons. There is avoidance between a man and his wife's mother, and between a man and his full brother's wife, though not between him and his half-brother's wife. The formality of greetings helps to preserve the respect for elderhood. 604 602 606 607 888

Pre-marital Sex-life

A man's sex-life begins when he has been circumcised; a girl's when she reaches puberty. Pre-marital relations are more formalized than among the Nandi, since the unmarried warriors of a local company, sirit, live in a barrack, e-manyata, with their mothers, some of their sisters, and their girl lovers, e-sanca, each man having his own lover. The rules which regulate marriage apply in the selection of a lover. 836

/40 cont./
415 Now and then the receptacles are also replaced by two pouchlike
492 pack-holders (ol deretai, el derēta), one tied on the other. These [283] have the oval shape of a shield and consist of a wooden frame that is covered with a plaited work of leather thongs or ropes. Otherwise they serve to hold the pack loaded on the donkey and some-285 times also on oxen. Mats are unknown; dressed neat-skins take 237 their place. Mortars are also unknown.
412

III.

000 Closer family relationships. -- Kinship designations. -- Terms of address for relatives.

602 Since every tribe and every lineage are descended from a
[613] tribal ancestor, the tribal and lineage members consider themselves [614] more or less distant relatives. The family, one's own as well as, ascending, those of the father and of the mother, forms the closer [611] relationship. The child follows the father's family (father right).
[672] Relatives are not responsible for punishable offenses, fines, or debts of a relative. Legally they need not support them either in connection with impoverishment or release from captivity; it is such a general custom, however, that probably no one ever evades it.

601 /41/ The Masai language is poor in particular kinship designations; most of them are made up of words for father, mother, brother, sister, son, daughter, etc.

Father: baba.

Mother: jējo.

Another wife of the father: eṅg aṅji e jējo.

Principal wife: e' ṅgorojoni kitok, that is, the great woman, or en aitero eṅg aṅ, that is, the first in the kraal.

Every other wife: e' ṅgorojoni.

Brother (1):

1. Brother and sister come from the same wife, half brother and half sister from different wives of the same father.

/119 cont./

593 The Masai are animated by a deep feeling of solidarity; they 181 stand united against all foreigners. A sincere attachment and love
[186] bind the individual members of the family; they vie with one another in order to free a relative who has fallen into slavery. Thus, in 1896, the Masai who returned from the Berlin Exposition immediately used the greater part of their savings to buy back relatives who had become slaves during the great livestock epidemics around the year 1890. The tightest is the bond between parents, especially the mother, and children, as well as between brothers and sisters, looser between married people, where the lowly, oppressed position of the wife is of some importance.

181 The men scorn any kind of work. Only waging war is worthy of a 461 man. Large herds of livestock and many wives are his supreme 554 happiness. One who has both enjoys respect and prestige. One looks down on a poor devil. Truly poor people, however, are exceptions,
735 since relatives support one another in generous ways. One who does 602 not have such quickly finds accommodations as a rule with one who is well-to-do. He receives food and for that helps the women and children of his benefactor with their work (livestock-tending, kraal-building, night watch for the small livestock, etc.). The condition of /120/ poverty is also always only of brief duration; the poor man soon acquires some prosperity again through gifts from friends or a
574 share of the spoils of war. Toward friends, one is just as generous
[572] as one is good-natured; the hospitality to countrymen, no matter where they come from (with the exception of the blacksmiths, of course), is unlimited. Everyone offers a visitor whatever he happens to have in food and drink. Everything that the stranger needs or wishes is at his disposal. He reserves for himself a hut for the night
[837] by sticking his spear in the ground in front of it; the host then seeks other quarters for the night and leaves home and wife to the guest. If a woman comes for a visit, the wife leaves the hut for the night, so that the stranger may take her place. Hospitality toward other peoples is known only if peace is concluded with them through the ceremony of infant exchange or through blood friendship. The 181 cruelty of the Masai is no greater than that of the other black peoples, for example, the Negroes neighboring the Masai. If they

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

*539 No. 69. Narōito[1] e-ñgape anaa en-dingi
Who-is-treading the-post like the-outcast
oo-'l-oo-mbwai.
of-the-who-have-the-teeth-extracted.

She is treading against the post like one who is not allowed in the warriors' kraals.

[577] [626] [Unless a girl is well dressed, according to Masai ideas, and anoints her body from time to time with oil, she is not admitted into the warriors' kraals, and becomes a social outcast. She has nothing left her to do but lie on her back and put her feet up against a post. Unlike the old man who has many sons, however (vide proverb No. 64), this is considered an undignified position for a maiden.]

No. 70. O-sina liki'ya en-neado,
The-poorness (or trouble) which-takes-you where-it-is-long,
dorop ol-oikulu.
short the-breast-of-a-dead-ox (or happiness).

It is better to be poor and live long than rich and die young.

No. 71. Papa elde oiyēu en-giteñg oje
Father that who-wishes the-cow which-has-just-borne nemetum amu sumbati 'n-gejek o-'l-aabe and-he-does-not-get-it because weak the-legs of-the-calf le-'n-dito enye.
of-the-daughter his.

The old man cannot get milk from the cow that has recently borne, because his daughter has not looked after the calf whose legs are consequently weak.

[A saying applied by women to one of their number who is notoriously lazy.]

No. 72. Paahupashut anaa en-gerai natii eng-aji Pride like the-child who-is-there the-hut
e-ōghoi[2] enye.
of-the-grandmother his.

He is as proud as a child living at its grandmother's.

[603] [Grandmothers are apt to spoil their granchildren, and a naughty boy is not so likely to be whipped at his grandmother's as at home.]

[1] Old or poetical form for en-narorita.
[2] E-ōghoi is here used for eng-ōgho.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

En-juñgore.

Ten ëä ol-móruo loo-'l-Maasae, nejuñg en-gerai enye bötor in-dökitin enye pökin, oo 'n-gíshu oo 'n-dare oo-'ñgorōyok nemeata 'n-gera; kake meidim aiyawa 'n-gíshu oo 'n-dare oo-'ñgorōyok naaata 'ng-ayok.

E'ya 'n-gulye-kera naara 'ng-ayok 'n-gíshu oo-'ng-ajijik oo-nooñgotonye.

Teni meata ol-móruo 'n-gera, nejuñg il-alashera lenyena 'n-gíshu oo 'ñgorōyok; kake mejuñg i-ñgorōyok ol-alashe oñgárie kina, amu torono; nejuñg lekwa lemeñgárie kina, ninje oo'ya 'ñgorōyok.

Ore ten eíu e-ñgorōyōni enye eng-ayōni to-'l-alashe lemeñgárie kina, araki te-lighae-tuñgani, neishori inna-kerai 'n-gíshu metujuñgo, neipotyeki aajo ol-le-inna-añg.

Naa, ten ëä ol-móruo, neiñgua e-ñgorōyōni enye eata en-gerai kake eng-ayōni, mejuñgi 'n-gíshu enyena, epali metubulu ol-openy.

Mejuñg il-Maasae 'l-apulayani lenye, amu torono.

Inheritance.

When the father of a family dies, his eldest son inherits all his property[1], and also the herds and flocks belonging to the childless widows, but not those which are the property of widows who have sons. 428

The sons by each wife inherit the cattle belonging to their mother's family.

If a man dies childless, his brothers inherit his cattle and his half-brothers his wives. It is unlawful for a man's own brothers (i. e. brothers by the same mother) to take his wives. [587]

Should a widow have a son by her late husband's half-brother or by another man, the child is given the cattle which he would otherwise have inherited had his mother's former husband been alive, and he is considered to belong to that family. 587 428 851

If a man dies and leaves a son who is a minor, the property which he inherits is taken care of for him until he grows up[2]. 428 429

It is considered unlawful for a man to inherit the property of his maternal uncle. 428 604

[1] The Masai distribute their herds and flocks amongst their wives during their lifetime, each one being given a certain number to look after and milk. The cattle so distributed are said to belong to the wife's family, and are recognized as the property of her sons, who, however, do not assume ownership until after their father's death. [422]

[2] In a case of this kind, the child does not go to the wars, but marries soon after he is circumcised.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

601 431 Thus, a man gives his brother's wife or his paternal uncle's wife, or his paternal uncle's son's wife a cow, a calf, or a lamb, and the terms of address used by the two, instead of being par-sidan or yeiyo, as the case may be, are pa-kiteñg, pa-ashe, or pa-supen; a father-in-law gives his daughter-in-law a calf, and the two call one another pa-ashe; and a paternal uncle gives his nephew's wife a she-goat and calls her pa-kine. Similarly a man's first wife usually presents each successive wife with [595] a calf on her marriage, and instead of using the term na-aïni when speaking to one another the two women say pa-ashe; a woman gives her husband's brother's wife a donkey as a wedding present, and the two women call one another pa-sighiria; and a mother-in-law selects a cow for her daughter-in-law some months after marriage, when she has learnt to keep house for her husband, and the form of address is pa-kiteñg. This method of address is carried even further, and is used between men of the same family. A father, for instance, usually gives his son a bull when the boy is eight or nine years of age, and the two call one another pa-oiñgōni instead of papa and li-ayōni; a paternal uncle makes a similar present to his nephew, and the same form of address is used; an elder brother gives his younger brother a heifer, and the two call one another pa-'n-dauwo; and paternal cousins often use the terms pa-oro or pa-meregesh when talking to each other.

The following terms are found: pa-kiteñg, the bullock or the cow; pa-moñgi, the bullock; pa-kīshu, the cows; pa-oiñgōni, the bull; pa-'n-dauwo, the heifer; pa-buñgui, the bull calf; pa-ashe, the calf; pa-kuo, pa-oro, or pa-sitima, the he-goat; pa-kine, the she-goat; pa-balelo, the kid; pa-kerr, the ewe; pa-merregesh, the ram; pa-sighiria, the donkey; pa-supen, the ewe lamb; pa-mao, the twin kids.

With one exception, a present of this nature is not made, nor are these terms of address used, outside the father's family. Thus, a brother cannot give his sister a heifer so that the two might call one another pa-'n-dauwo, because if the sister marries she will leave the family; a maternal uncle cannot give his nephew a bull and call him pa-oiñgōni, and maternal cousins may not address one another by the terms pa-oro, etc. The exception to this rule is made when a man marries. He then presents his father-in-law with a bullock and his mother-in-law with an ewe, and the terms of address are pa-kiteñg and pa-kerr. These presents have nothing [583] to do with the cattle paid for the bride.

● 604 578 754 A maternal uncle (ol-apu) exercises great influence over his nephews, as it is believed that if he were to curse them they would die. He can at any time stop a fight in which one of his nephews is engaged by merely calling on his nephew to desist, as the nephew would be afraid of his right arm withering if he were to [593] disobey. This power is to a certain extent reciprocal, and if a man were to start beating his wife he would have to stop if his maternal nephew ordered him to do 593 so. A father and any old man of the family can also usually stop a fight by telling 626 the combatants to desist, but they are not necessarily listened to. A mother has 754 more influence, and if her son refuses to obey her, she strikes her stomach and says, "You were born in this"; whereupon the son is said to sicken, and can only recover when his mother makes a rope of fibre which she hangs round his neck.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

Besides the power of a maternal uncle to stop a fight, he has also the right to take anything which belongs to his nephew. If the uncle desires anything that is the property of his nephew's father, the nephew must buy it from his father, who will at once give it up when he knows for whom it is required. This power of taking property is reciprocal, and in fact applies to all persons who address one another as ol-apu, ol-le-'ng-apu, etc. A nephew, for instance, can go to his maternal uncle's kraal, and if his uncle is absent, he can slaughter a goat or drink his uncle's milk, and nothing would be said. He cannot, however, drive off a cow without his uncle's sanction, but permission would not be refused. Other relatives have likewise some power of taking property. A boy or man can go to his father's or paternal uncle's kraal and take or demand a goat or milk, and in all probability nothing would be said, but if it were done repeatedly the father or uncle would express dissatisfaction or refuse altogether. A man may also go to his sister's husband or wife's brother (ol-aputani) and take anything, but an account is kept and the debt has to be returned. If a man is poor it is customary for him to live with one of his brothers-in-law (ol-aputani) and help to look after the stock. He is fed for his trouble, and as payment receives one out of every pair of twin goats born.

First cousins and second cousins may not marry, but there is no objection to third cousins marrying if the relationship is no nearer than ol-le-'sōtua (or en-e-'sōtua). Thus, a man's son's son's son may not marry the man's brother's son's son's daughter, nor may a man's son's son's son marry the sister's son's son's daughter, but there would be no objection to a man's son's son's son marrying the brother's daughter's daughter's daughter or the sister's daughter's daughter's daughter. Likewise though a man's son's son may not marry the man's maternal uncle's son's son's daughter, he may marry the maternal uncle's son's daughter's daughter. These unions are always contingent on the two parties not belonging to the same sub-clan.[1] The rules of consanguinity and affinity which regulate marriage also apply to the sexual intercourse of warriors with immature girls before marriage and to the rights of hospitality after marriage. No warrior may select as his

[1] The Masai are divided into five clans: Il-Aiser, Il-Molgana, Il-Molusen, Il-Molelyan, and Il-Tarsara. Each clan is again divided into sub-clans, e.g., the Il-Aiser contain amongst others the following: In-gidolgi and Il-Purkanati. No man belonging to the In-gidolgi sub-clan may take as wife the daughter of a man of the same sub-clan, but he may marry the daughter of the Il-Purkanati or he may marry a daughter of the Il-Molgana, Il-Molusen, Il-Molelyan, or Il-Tarsara clans. Members of the various sub-clans are usually to be found in all the districts and sub-districts. Marriages are not affected by geographical considerations, and a man has the same lawful marital relations in all the sub-districts as he has in his own home sub-district.

In his recent book, The Ethnology of the A-Kamba and other East African Tribes (Cambridge, 1910), Hobley states (p. 121) that the restrictions governing marriage amongst the Masai are far from simple, and he gives a number of complicated instances. As a matter of fact the rules are quite simple if one remembers (i) that though the clans are not exogamous, the sub-clans into which the clans are divided are exogamous; and (ii) that no man may marry a nearer relation than a third cousin, and then only if the terms of address used are ol-le-'sōtua and en-e-'sōtua.

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

593 431 601 Gifts to Certain Relations.—A somewhat similar custom is that which ordains that a grown-up son must give certain presents to all children born to his father, as follows:—

(1) To a young girl-child, either a heifer or else a young ewe or young she-goat which has not yet had young. If the former present is given the child in future calls its brother (or half-brother) baashi, and if either of the two latter animals is given the appropriate name is bakuu.

(2) To a boy-child, either a heifer or a young ram or else a young ewe or she-goat which has not yet had young. The following are the appropriate names by which the boy henceforward calls the man: Ithubin if the gift was a young ewe, ingini if the gift was a young she-goat, ndauu if the gift was a heifer, ithithume if the gift was a young ram.

A grown-up son must also give a present to any new wife married by his father, the animal given and the name thenceforward used by the woman to the man being exactly as in the case of girl-children above.

604 Mother's Brother.—Among the Masai I can find no trace of any special functions of the mother's brother, and he has no special position in relation to his sister or her children.

589 Widowhood.—There is no idea of uncleanness attaching to widowhood, and therefore there is no ceremonial purification ceremony before sexual life can be indulged in by a widow. When a woman is left a widow she builds herself a hut [607] with one of her husband's own brothers (i.e. brothers by the same mother), and he becomes responsible for her welfare and acts in loco parentis to her children as far as making arrangements for initiation and marriage, etc., are concerned. In [835] no circumstances, however, may this brother or any other of her husband's own brothers have sexual intercourse with the woman. If she is still of child-bearing [851] age she is expected to go on having children (who will rank as her late husband's), and to this end she may have sexual relations with:—

589 834 (1) Any men of her late husband's age-group, who are not excluded by other restrictions (see above).

(2) Any of her late husband's half-brothers (i.e. brothers by a different mother).

(3) Any other men not otherwise excluded.

757 Sickness.—My informant was unwilling or unable to give me any detailed information about the treatment of sick people, save that medicines were made from the barks and seeds of various trees and from the stomach juices of slaughtered animals.

PART VII.—DEATH AND BURIAL.

76 Death.—Death is looked upon with fear and, therefore—except in the case of very old men and women past child-bearing—every precaution is taken to avoid a

In the first descending generation, the word en-kerai, " child," may be applied to son, daughter, brother's son and daughter, and father's brother's son's son and daughter, or they may be distinguished as masc. ol-ayioni, " boy," and fem. en-tito, " girl." Father's brother's daughter's son is ol-aputani, and father's brother's daughter's daughter en-e-sotua, the latter term applying also to father's sister's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's son's daughter. The term o-le-sotua is applied to the mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's daughter's son, and father's sister's daughter's son. O-le-nk-apu is applied to the sons of father's sister's son and mother's brother's son, and en-e-nk-apu to their daughters. In this generation there are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's daughter. 601

In the second descending generation, ol-akui includes the sons of a man's own son and daughter, brother's son, father's brother's son's son, father's brother's son's daughter; while enk-akui is applied to their daughters. Father's brother's daughter's son's son is ol-aputani, and the daughter is en-e-sotua. The term o-le-nk-apu covers son's son, and the sons of sister's son, father's sister's son's son, and mother's brother's son's son; their daughters are en-e-nk-apu. O-le-sotua includes the sons of sister's daughter, father's brother's daughter's daughter, father's sister's daughter's son, father's sister's son's daughter, mother's brother's son's daughter, mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's son's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's son; en-e-nk-apu is applied to the daughters. There are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter's son and daughter, or for mother's sister's daughter's daughter's son and daughter.

Among affines, the term ol-aputani is applied to wife's father, wife's father's brother, and wife's brother, but their wives are enk-aputani, en-e-sotua, and en-e-sotua respectively. Son and grandson of wife's brother are also ol-aputani. Wife's sister is e-sindani e-anyit, and all children and grandchildren of wife's brother and sister (except wife's brother's son and grandson) are -e-sotua. The majority of affinal terms are in fact of the -e-sotua category. Husband is ol-moruo or ol-payian, wife e-goroyioni or en-kitok; junior wife is enk-aini.

These kinship terms, however, are not very much used, for it is the custom of the Masai to call each other by cattle-names: members of a domestic group give each other cattle on various occasions, and thereafter the word denoting the kind of animal given is used as the equivalent of a reciprocal relative term; the animal name is prefixed by pa, meaning " giver or receiver of." Thus, a father usually gives his son a bull when he is about 10 years old, and they then call each other pa-oiyoni, " giver (receiver) of a bull " instead of papa and li-ayioni. An elder brother will give a younger brother a heifer, and they will then be pa-n-tawuo (heifer) to each other. Paternal cousins often call each other pa-meregesh (ram). 551

Among these relatives, the mother's brother has great power and influence over his sister's son. He can give him orders, which must be obeyed, and he may take what he wants from his nephew, who has also the right to take what he wants from his uncle. Refusal to obey the mother's brother can be punished by cursing, but this is not reciprocal. Behaviour patterns are based on seniority and the claims of kinship, and are expressed in the avoidance of bad language and unseemly actions, and the observance of formality between certain persons. There is avoidance between a man and his wife's mother, and between a man and his full brother's wife, though not between him and his half-brother's wife. The formality of greetings helps to preserve the respect for elderhood. 604 602 606 607 883

Pre-marital Sex-life

A man's sex-life begins when he has been circumcised; a girl's when she reaches puberty. Pre-marital relations are more formalized than among the Nandi, since the unmarried warriors of a local company, sirit, live in a barrack, e-manyata, with their mothers, some of their sisters, and their girl lovers, e-sanca, each man having his own lover. The rules which regulate marriage apply in the selection of a lover. 836

/42 cont./

601 As soon as the man marries another woman, each of his chil-[431] dren present her with a head of small livestock and call her ac-[551] cordingly, ba-ger, ba-gine, ba-ndare, ba-suben, or ba-lelo. The term of address for father-in-law is always ba-geteṅ, for mother-in-law, ba-ger.

Brother and sister call the sister and half sister en eĩjo. Brother and sister call the brother and half brother eraĩjo. The form of address for the father's brother, baba; the mother's brother, abula; the sister of the father and of the mother, koko. The brother of another wife of the father is addressed as baba, if he is old; by his name if he is younger. The sister of another wife of the father is called koko if she is old; en akitok if she is younger. The latter (pl. 'n akitwa) is also the term of address on the part of /43/ unmarried men for a woman in general. The uncle calls the nephew abula, the niece 'ṅ gabulaĩja. The aunt calls both en gerai ai = my child.

601 For the terms of address of those relatives whom we designate 605 as male and female cousins in the narrower and broader sense I was able to construct the following rules from a very large number of examples:

1. If the relationship is derived from the mother's father or from the husband of the father's sister through consanquinity or relationship by marriage, the boy calls his male cousin abula, boy and girl call the female cousin en eĩjo before her circumcision and ṅ gabulaĩja afterwards. The same designations are customary for (friendly) members of the lineage of the mother and of the husband of the father's sister.

2. If the relationship is based on consanguinity through the father's brothers or on membership in the same lineage, the male cousin will be called arabá by a boy, the female cousin 'n eĩba by boy and girl, both before and after her circumcision.

The girl calls any boy standing in a cousin relationship to her, according to one of the two rules, ol aischa 'Ng ai = the one given (me) by God.

/43 cont./

601 The designations abula, en eijo, arabá, and 'n elba are used •605 only as long as the above-mentioned terms of address are not [431] affected by gifts of livestock. This explains why they are used only among children. This does not apply to the address ol aischa 'Ng ai, because the girl is not in a position to make the necessary gift of livestock.

601 The son and daughter of the brother or of the sister are addressed, as long as they remain in childhood, with na gerai ai = my child. The address for the grandfather runs ng akuja, for the grandmother koko. The grandfather calls the grandson ng akuj'ai;
[431] the grandmother, koko ai. Brother-in-law and sister-in-law are [651] called by name or the terms of address derived from livestock designations.

IV.

000 Conjugal relations. -- Betrothal. -- State of being betrothed. -- Bride price. -- Evasion of the bride price. -- Obstacles to marriage. -- Wedding. -- Beginning of the marriage. -- Dissolution of the marriage.

581 The conjugal relationships are very loose, and in some views about them the Masai stand in unfavorable contrast to their sedentary 595 Negro neighbors. As among the latter -- and, to be sure, with-[171] out exception (1) --

> 1. The so-called monogamy of the Wambugwe is in practice the boldest polygyny.

polygyny prevails among the Masai. The number of wives of a man is limited neither by law nor custom, but depends only on his means. If a man has but one wife, poverty is always the reason.
581 There are no temporary or trial marriages; rather, marriage is a [583] more stable relationship. The woman through the marriage passes [613] into the family of her /44/ husband, but not into his lineage; rather she retains membership in her own lineage.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

P238

PART III

'N-DEPEN OO-'L-MAASAE
MASAI PROVERBS AND SAYINGS

* 539 No. 1. Aisyé-pe — What-and (or Why) ingarisio — you-are-rich sasa — like en-naiyamishe — the-who-has-married (intr.)
ol-tito! — the-son!

Why do you behave like a woman whose son has just married!

[591] [606] [A newly married man usually lives in his father's kraal for some months after his marriage, and a woman whose son has recently married may sit down and rest, as her daughter-in-law will do all the work.]

No. 2. Eata — He-has en-ukur. — the-which-divides.

There is a Judge for him, and He will avenge me.

[A favourite saying when a person has been defeated in a fight.]

No. 3. Eata — They-have
'l-ojúlga — the-flies
'n-giyua. — the-ears.

Flies have ears.

Also: Eata — It-has en-gewúrie — the-night
'n-giyua. — the-ears.

The night has ears.

['Walls have ears.']

No. 4. Ebaiki — It-reaches (or Perhaps) en-gutuk — the-mouth naiuua — which-ate
'nanya — the-fats
naiuua — and-it-eats
i-ligik, — the-excrements, nebaiki — and-it-reaches (or and-perhaps) en-naiuua — the-which-ate
'ligik — the-excrements
naiuua — and-it-eats
i-nanya. — the-fats.

The mouth which ate fat shall eat excrement, and that which ate excrement shall eat fat.

Also: Ebaiki — It reaches (or Perhaps) ol-tiaara — the-who-killed
'n-gitulgat — the-cutters (or attackers or enemies) naaka — and-he-becomes

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

poison is being made and when honey wine is being brewed. During the time that a man is making poison (eight days) he is treated almost as an outcast. He must leave his house at 4 a.m. and not return till 7 p.m., when he must rub clay on his body. He may not eat when the sun is above the horizon; he may only relieve nature far away from the kraal; and he must sleep alone. If he were to break any of these rules it is believed that the poison would be useless. When honey wine is to be brewed a man and a woman are selected for the purpose, neither of whom has had sexual intercourse for two days. A hut is set apart for them to live in until the honey wine is ready for drinking (six days), during which time they may not sleep together. As soon as the honey wine is ready they receive payment, and go to their respective homes. Were they to have sexual intercourse during the six days that the honey wine is brewing, it is believed that the wine would be undrinkable, and the bees that made the honey would fly away. 834 278 834 273

Mothers-in-law and their sons-in-law (ong-ipulani) must avoid one another as much as possible, and if a son-in-law enters his mother-in-law's hut she must retire into the inner compartment and sit on the bed, whilst he remains in the outer compartment; they may then talk. Own brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani le-ongpil and o-sindani o-ongpil) must also avoid one another, though this rule does not apply to half-brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani and o-sindani). This rule is possibly due to the fact that when a man dies his own brother may not marry his widow, though there is no objection to his half-brother (paternal) or one of his paternal cousins taking her to wife. In fact, the only person who may marry a widow is one of the deceased husband's half-brothers or paternal cousins. It frequently happens, however, that widows never re-marry, but live with their children in the kraal of the eldest living brother of their late husband, who becomes the guardian of their children. 606 607 606 607 587 [591]

Divorce is almost unknown amongst the Masai, and it is only barren women who may be divorced. But if a woman is barren it is usual for her husband to give her some of his children by another wife to bring up. Daughters are usually selected; but if there are several sons the youngest and the youngest but two may be given to the stepmother. When a barren woman is a bad woman and is disliked by her husband and his other wives, she may be divorced, in which case her father or his heirs must refund the cattle paid for her, and she is at liberty to re-marry. 586

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

Cattle per Gate.

233
592

Number of cattle.		Gates.		Percentage.
Under 50	—	52	—	10.1%
50 — 100	—	92	—	17.9%
101 — 200	—	193	—	37.5%
201 — 300	—	115	—	22.4%
301 — 400	—	34	—	6.8%
401 — 500	—	11	—	2.1%
501 — 600	—	9	—	1.7%
601 — 700	—	3
701 — 800	—	2
801 — 900	—	1	—	1.5%
901 —1000	—	1
Over 1000	—	1
	Total	514

As 156,966 cattle were owned by these 514 gates it follows that the average number per gate is just over three hundred, but this figure is misleading, for two-thirds of the gates possess less than two hundred head.*

581
606

The advantages of marriage not only include the acquisition of a woman to bear one's children and to tend one's cattle. For marriage sets up a new relationship with one's wife's family, whereby each party is expected to help the other. If a father-in-law loses his cattle by drought or disease, the son-in-law is expected to contribute towards a new herd; if a son-in-law strikes hard times, the father-in-law — if only for the sake of his daughter — will transfer cattle to him.

At times, also, a daughter will, by amicable arrangement with the son-in-law, return to live with her father for considerable periods, being visited from time to time by her husband, or again a grandson will be sent from home to help herd his grandfather's cattle.

484
[584]

The fulfilment of these various obligations leads to much travelling and consequent contact, almost as much as the actual betrothal and marriage does. This latter is a lengthy process. Early betrothal is the rule and involves a long engagement, during which the man is expected to maintain contact with his future in-laws. Frequent travelling is also necessary in other connections; for example a man goes himself or sends a son to examine the water and pasture of the area to which he proposes to move, and as we have seen the moran are always on the move, visiting friends, begging bullocks for meat-feasts, etc. So in spite of the size of the area which they inhabit, and of their scattered settlements, the Masai maintain very close contact amongst themselves.

597

Another point of considerable importance in Masai family affairs is the adoption of children, frequently practised both in respect of Masai

* The mean number of cattle per gate lies between 100 and 200 or between 25 and 50 head per adult male taxpayer—Ed.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

In the first descending generation, the word en-kerai, "child," may be applied to son, daughter, brother's son and daughter, and father's brother's son's son and daughter, or they may be distinguished as masc. ol-ayioni, "boy," and fem. en-tito, "girl." Father's brother's daughter's son is ol-aputani, and father's brother's daughter's daughter en-e-sotua, the latter term applying also to father's sister's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's son's daughter. The term o-le-sotua is applied to the mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's daughter's son, and father's sister's daughter's son. O-le-nk-apu is applied to the sons of father's sister's son and mother's brother's son, and en-e-nk-apu to their daughters. In this generation there are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's daughter. 601

In the second descending generation, ol-akui includes the sons of a man's own son and daughter, brother's son, father's brother's son's son, father's brother's son's daughter; while enk-akui is applied to their daughters. Father's brother's daughter's son's son is ol-aputani, and the daughter is en-e-sotua. The term o-le-nk-apu covers son's son, and the sons of sister's son, father's sister's son's son, and mother's brother's son's son; their daughters are en-e-nk-apu. O-le-sotua includes the sons of sister's daughter, father's brother's daughter's daughter, father's sister's daughter's son, father's sister's son's daughter, mother's brother's son's daughter, mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's son's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's son; en-e-nk-apu is applied to the daughters. There are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter's son and daughter, or for mother's sister's daughter's daughter's son and daughter.

Among affines, the term ol-aputani is applied to wife's father, wife's father's brother, and wife's brother, but their wives are enk-aputani, en-e-sotua, and en-e-sotua respectively. Son and grandson of wife's brother are also ol-aputani. Wife's sister is e-sindani e-anyit, and all children and grandchildren of wife's brother and sister (except wife's brother's son and grandson) are -e-sotua. The majority of affinal terms are in fact of the -e-sotua category. Husband is ol-moruo or ol-payian, wife e-goroyioni or en-kitok; junior wife is enk-aini.

These kinship terms, however, are not very much used, for it is the custom of the Masai to call each other by cattle-names: members of a domestic group give each other cattle on various occasions, and thereafter the word denoting the kind of animal given is used as the equivalent of a reciprocal relative term; the animal name is prefixed by pa, meaning "giver or receiver of." Thus, a father usually gives his son a bull when he is about 10 years old, and they then call each other pa-oiyoni, "giver (receiver) of a bull" instead of papa and li-ayioni. An elder brother will give a younger brother a heifer, and they will then be pa-n-lawuo (heifer) to each other. Paternal cousins often call each other pa-meregesh (ram). 551

Among these relatives, the mother's brother has great power and influence over his sister's son. He can give him orders, which must be obeyed, and he may take what he wants from his nephew, who has also the right to take what he wants from his uncle. Refusal to obey the mother's brother can be punished by cursing, but this is not reciprocal. Behaviour patterns are based on seniority and the claims of kinship, and are expressed in the avoidance of bad language and unseemly actions, and the observance of formality between certain persons. There is avoidance between a man and his wife's mother, and between a man and his full brother's wife, though not between him and his half-brother's wife. The formality of greetings helps to preserve the respect for elderhood. 604 602 606 607 888

Pre-marital Sex-life

A man's sex-life begins when he has been circumcised; a girl's when she reaches puberty. Pre-marital relations are more formalized than among the Nandi, since the unmarried warriors of a local company, sirit, live in a barrack, e-manyata, with their mothers, some of their sisters, and their girl lovers, e-sanca, each man having his own lover. The rules which regulate marriage apply in the selection of a lover. 836

/45 cont./

583 not alone, however, but with the support of a friend. The honey pot is hung on a horizontal pole, one of them grasping each end. It is not the weight of the pot that makes this method of carrying necessary, but an ancient custom, about whose meaning I have discovered [556] nothing. Wealthy people often also pay up to four cows more than usual, which is then regarded as the highest price that may be demanded. Beauties, as well as daughters of distinguished people, that is, of wealthy and influential people, often stand above the [587] average price. The price for childless widows and for childless, divorced women is the same as for young girls. for a widow who bore daughters, on the other hand, only a male and a female head of cattle are paid. In order that her father does not receive bride price twice, however, he gives back from the first one as much as the second one amounts to. For the second, third, etc. wife, just as much is paid as for the first. If the bride price is in part deferred for the bridegroom, the woman nevertheless passes into his possession provisionally, and likewise the children born before the final settlement of the bride price belong to him. If, however, he then ab- [586] solutely refuses to pay the rest, the father-in-law or the mother-in-law has the right to take back the daughter with her children in exchange for the return of what has already been paid. The cattle paid as bride price must be plain black or white. With the payment of the bride price, the bride withdraws from her family. In /46/ [606] some lineages, however, there still prevails a -- so it seems -- formerly general custom, according to which the father-in-law does not lose the right to interfere in the domestic relations of the young couple until the son-in-law has further given him a bull. The relatives of the bridegroom need not contribute the payment of the bride price, but usually do it if it is necessary. The bride does not get a dowry, just as the bridegroom does not receive a gift from his parents or parents-in-law. If one of the betrothed dies before the 583 marriage or dissolves the betrothal, the portion of the bride price 586 that was paid is returned. If the husband turns the wife out or the marriage remains fruitless, this has no influence on the bride price paid, while a possible remainder not yet paid remains unpaid. On the other hand, if a childless woman leaves her husband, the

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

Besides the power of a maternal uncle to stop a fight, he has also the right to take anything which belongs to his nephew. If the uncle desires anything that is the property of his nephew's father, the nephew must buy it from his father, who will at once give it up when he knows for whom it is required. This power of taking property is reciprocal, and in fact applies to all persons who address one another as ol-apu, ol-le-'ng-apu, etc. A nephew, for instance, can go to his maternal uncle's kraal, and if his uncle is absent, he can slaughter a goat or drink his uncle's milk, and nothing would be said. He cannot, however, drive off a cow without his uncle's sanction, but permission would not be refused. Other relatives have likewise some power of taking property. A boy or man can go to his father's or paternal uncle's kraal and take or demand a goat or milk, and in all probability nothing would be said, but if it were done repeatedly the father or uncle would express dissatisfaction or refuse altogether. A man may also go to his sister's husband or wife's brother (ol-aputani) and take anything, but an account is kept and the debt has to be returned. If a man is poor it is customary for him to live with one of his brothers-in-law (ol-aputani) and help to look after the stock. He is fed for his trouble, and as payment receives one out of every pair of twin goats born.

First cousins and second cousins may not marry, but there is no objection to third cousins marrying if the relationship is no nearer than ol-le-'sōtwa (or en-e-'sōtwa). Thus, a man's son's son's son may not marry the man's brother's son's son's daughter, nor may a man's son's son's son marry the sister's son's son's daughter, but there would be no objection to a man's son's son's son marrying the brother's daughter's daughter's daughter or the sister's daughter's daughter's daughter. Likewise though a man's son's son may not marry the man's maternal uncle's son's son's daughter, he may marry the maternal uncle's son's daughter's daughter. These unions are always contingent on the two parties not belonging to the same sub-clan.[1] The rules of consanguinity and affinity which regulate marriage also apply to the sexual intercourse of warriors with immature girls before marriage and to the rights of hospitality after marriage. No warrior may select as his

[1] The Masai are divided into five clans: Il-Aiser, Il-Meñgana, Il-Mokesen, Il-Molelyan, and Il-Tarsero. Each clan is again divided into sub-clans, e.g., the Il-Aiser contain amongst others the following: In-gidoñgi and Il-Parkeneti. No man belonging to the In-gidoñgi sub-clan may take as wife the daughter of a man of the same sub-clan, but he may marry the daughter of the Il-Parkeneti or he may marry a daughter of the Il-Meñgana, Il-Mokesen, Il-Molelyan, or Il-Tarsero clans. Members of the various sub-clans are usually to be found in all the districts and sub-districts. Marriages are not affected by geographical considerations, and a man has the same lawful marital relations in all the sub-districts as he has in his own home sub-district.

In his recent book, The Ethnology of the A-Kamba and other East African Tribes (Cambridge, 1910), Hobley states (p. 121) that the restrictions governing marriage amongst the Masai are far from simple, and he gives a number of complicated instances. As a matter of fact the rules are quite simple if one remembers (i) that though the clans are not exogamous, the sub-clans into which the clans are divided are exogamous; and (ii) that no man may marry a nearer relation than a third cousin, and then only if the terms of address used are ol-le-'sōtwa and en-e-'sōtwa.

3: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

poison is being made and when honey wine is being brewed. During the time that a man is making poison (eight days) he is treated almost as an outcast. He must leave his house at 4 a.m. and not return till 7 p.m., when he must rub clay on his body. He may not eat when the sun is above the horizon; he may only relieve nature far away from the kraal; and he must sleep alone. If he were to break any of these rules it is believed that the poison would be useless. When honey wine is to be brewed a man and a woman are selected for the purpose, neither of whom has had sexual intercourse for two days. A hut is set apart for them to live in until the honey wine is ready for drinking (six days), during which time they may not sleep together. As soon as the honey wine is ready they receive payment, and go to their respective homes. Were they to have sexual intercourse during the six days that the honey wine is brewing, it is believed that the wine would be undrinkable, and the bees that made the honey would fly away. 834 278 834 273

Mothers-in-law and their sons-in-law (eng-aputani) must avoid one another as much as possible, and if a son-in-law enters his mother-in-law's hut she must retire into the inner compartment and sit on the bed, whilst he remains in the outer compartment; they may then talk. Own brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani le-anyit and e-sindani e-anyit) must also avoid one another, though this rule does not apply to half-brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law (o-sindani and e-sindani). This rule is possibly due to the fact that when a man dies his own brother may not marry his widow, though there is no objection to his half-brother (paternal) or one of his paternal cousins taking her to wife. In fact, the only person who may marry a widow is one of the deceased husband's half-brothers or paternal cousins. It frequently happens, however, that widows never re-marry, but live with their children in the kraal of the eldest living brother of their late husband, who becomes the guardian of their children. 606 607 606 607 587 [591]

Divorce is almost unknown amongst the Masai, and it is only barren women who may be divorced. But if a woman is barren it is usual for her husband to give her some of his children by another wife to bring up. Daughters are usually selected; but if there are several sons the youngest and the youngest but two may be given to the stepmother. When a barren woman is a bad woman and is disliked by her husband and his other wives, she may be divorced, in which case her father or his heirs must refund the cattle paid for her, and she is at liberty to re-marry. 586

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

593 431 601 Gifts to Certain Relations.—A somewhat similar custom is that which ordains that a grown-up son must give certain presents to all children born to his father, as follows:—

(1) To a young girl-child, either a heifer or else a young ewe or young she-goat which has not yet had young. If the former present is given the child in future calls its brother (or half-brother) baashi, and if either of the two latter animals is given the appropriate name is bakuu.

(2) To a boy-child, either a heifer or a young ram or else a young ewe or she-goat which has not yet had young. The following are the appropriate names by which the boy henceforward calls the man: Ithubin if the gift was a young ewe, ingini if the gift was a young she-goat, ndauu if the gift was a heifer, ithithume if the gift was a young ram.

A grown-up son must also give a present to any new wife married by his father, the animal given and the name thenceforward used by the woman to the man being exactly as in the case of girl-children above.

604 Mother's Brother.—Among the Masai I can find no trace of any special functions of the mother's brother, and he has no special position in relation to his sister or her children.

589 Widowhood.—There is no idea of uncleanness attaching to widowhood, and therefore there is no ceremonial purification ceremony before sexual life can be indulged in by a widow. When a woman is left a widow she builds herself a hut [607] with one of her husband's own brothers (i.e. brothers by the same mother), and he becomes responsible for her welfare and acts in loco parentis to her children as far as making arrangements for initiation and marriage, etc., are concerned. In [835] no circumstances, however, may this brother or any other of her husband's own brothers have sexual intercourse with the woman. If she is still of child-bearing [851] age she is expected to go on having children (who will rank as her late husband's), and to this end she may have sexual relations with:—

589 834

(1) Any men of her late husband's age-group, who are not excluded by other restrictions (see above).

(2) Any of her late husband's half-brothers (i.e. brothers by a different mother).

(3) Any other men not otherwise excluded.

757 Sickness.—My informant was unwilling or unable to give me any detailed information about the treatment of sick people, save that medicines were made from the barks and seeds of various trees and from the stomach juices of slaughtered animals.

PART VII.—DEATH AND BURIAL.

761 Death.—Death is looked upon with fear and, therefore—except in the case of very old men and women past child-bearing—every precaution is taken to avoid a

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

In the first descending generation, the word en-kerai, "child," may be applied to son, daughter, brother's son and daughter, and father's brother's son's son and daughter, or they may be distinguished as masc. ol-ayioni, "boy," and fem. en-tito, "girl." Father's brother's daughter's son is ol-aputani, and father's brother's daughter's daughter en-e-sotua, the latter term applying also to father's sister's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's son's daughter. The term o-le-sotua is applied to the mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's daughter's son, and father's sister's daughter's son. O-le-nk-apu is applied to the sons of father's sister's son and mother's brother's son, and en-e-nk-apu to their daughters. In this generation there are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's daughter. 601

In the second descending generation, ol-akui includes the sons of a man's own son and daughter, brother's son, father's brother's son's son, father's brother's son's daughter; while enk-akui is applied to their daughters. Father's brother's daughter's son's son is ol-aputani, and the daughter is en-e-sotua. The term o-le-nk-apu covers son's son, and the sons of sister's son, father's sister's son's son, and mother's brother's son's son; their daughters are en-e-nk-apu. O-le-sotua includes the sons of sister's daughter, father's brother's daughter's daughter, father's sister's daughter's son, father's sister's son's daughter, mother's brother's son's daughter, mother's brother's daughter's son, mother's sister's son's son, mother's sister's son's daughter, and mother's sister's daughter's son; en-e-nk-apu is applied to the daughters. There are no terms for mother's brother's daughter's daughter's son and daughter, or for mother's sister's daughter's daughter's son and daughter.

Among affines, the term ol-aputani is applied to wife's father, wife's father's brother, and wife's brother, but their wives are enk-aputani, en-e-sotua, and en-e-sotua respectively. Son and grandson of wife's brother are also ol-aputani. Wife's sister is e-sindani e-anyit, and all children and grandchildren of wife's brother and sister (except wife's brother's son and grandson) are -e-sotua. The majority of affinal terms are in fact of the -e-sotua category. Husband is ol-moruo or ol-payian, wife e-yoroyioni or en-kitok; junior wife is enk-aini.

These kinship terms, however, are not very much used, for it is the custom of the Masai to call each other by cattle-names: members of a domestic group give each other cattle on various occasions, and thereafter the word denoting the kind of animal given is used as the equivalent of a reciprocal relative term; the animal name is prefixed by pa, meaning "giver or receiver of." Thus, a father usually gives his son a bull when he is about 10 years old, and they then call each other pa-oiyoni, "giver (receiver) of a bull" instead of papa and li-ayioni. An elder brother will give a younger brother a heifer, and they will then be pa-n-tawuo (heifer) to each other. Paternal cousins often call each other pa-meregesh (ram). 551

Among these relatives, the mother's brother has great power and influence over his sister's son. He can give him orders, which must be obeyed, and he may take what he wants from his nephew, who has also the right to take what he wants from his uncle. Refusal to obey the mother's brother can be punished by cursing, but this is not reciprocal. Behaviour patterns are based on seniority and the claims of kinship, and are expressed in the avoidance of bad language and unseemly actions, and the observance of formality between certain persons. There is avoidance between a man and his wife's mother, and between a man and his full brother's wife, though not between him and his half-brother's wife. The formality of greetings helps to preserve the respect for elderhood. 604 602 606 607 888

Pre-marital Sex-life

A man's sex-life begins when he has been circumcised; a girl's when she reaches puberty. Pre-marital relations are more formalized than among the Nandi, since the unmarried warriors of a local company, sirit, live in a barrack, e-manyata, with their mothers, some of their sisters, and their girl lovers, e-sanca, each man having his own lover. The rules which regulate marriage apply in the selection of a lover. 836

/46 cont./
583 father-in-law must return the bride price if he grants his daughter
[586] admission. If the woman who has run away has had children, her husband keeps them; in this case the woman's parents do not pay back anything.

[431] On the day the parents-in-law receive the bride price, the [607] bridegroom gives the eldest brother of the bride a year-old heifer,
[572] each of her other brothers and each sister of the bride a male head of cattle. This is only a gift of friendship and has nothing to do with the bride price. Exchange of wives occurs, but does not result in a valid marriage, any more than does wife stealing. On the other hand, it is not infrequent that the girl flees from her maternal hut as soon as she reaches marriageable age and runs to her love. It often happens then that the girl's father sends a band of boys armed with sticks after her so that through the beating she will be induced to return. Since the boys act at the command of the old man, neither the bridegroom nor anyone else may hinder them. In order to protect the girl from such violence, only one course remains to the bridegroom, to leave the kraal with her immediately and move into the forest for a few days. With this he makes it understood that he will oppose with weapons anyone who might still venture to take his bride from him and at the same time it deprives the girl's father of any further right to object. As soon as the couple in the forest have consumed a cow, they return to the kraal, where, without further ceremony,
[613] they are recognized as married. Only the girls of the El magesan and El kiborón do not have this possibility of self-help, for both lineages believe that a girl who goes to her lover in order to remain with him as his wife without her father's consent will die in only a few days after the flight.

582 In olden times the bride was not supposed to belong to the tribe
614 of her bridegroom. The livestock epidemics of the last 20 years,
178 however, which resulted in the death of many thousands of Masai,
[731] have modified this law somewhat. Accordingly, /47/ a man may [613] marry a woman who belongs to his tribe, but not to his lineage, whereby in individual districts there is the further prerequisite that the girl came to him of her own free will and, after being sent back

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

728 628 kituak aare, o en-giteñg naata eng-ashe, o e-ñgorōyōni naata en-gerai kiti; neiko si nēja 'l-mañgati.

portant elders, and take a cow which has a calf, and a woman who has a baby; and the enemy do the same.

Nepwo aatumo te-'wēji nēbo, eibuñg il-tuñganak pôkin il-kujit te-'ng-aina e-tatēne, neitapaashi 'n-gīshu, ne'ya 'l-Maasae en-giteñg oo-'l-mañgati, ne'ya 'l-mañgati en-giteñg oo-'l-Maasae. Nenak en-gerai oo-'l-mañgati ol-kina le-'ñgorōyōni oo-'l-Maasae; nenak sii en-gerai oo-'l-Maasae ol-kina le-'ñgorōyōni oo-'l-mañgati.

They then meet together at a certain spot, everybody present holding grass in his right hand, and exchange the cattle, the Masai taking the enemy's cow and the enemy the Masais'. The enemy's child is suckled at the breast of the Masai woman, and the Masai baby at the breast of the woman belonging to the enemy.

Nerinyo 'ng-añgite enye, etaiyōlōito aajo eibuñga o-sōtwa kitok.

After this they return to their kraals, knowing that a solemn peace has been entered into.

Anaa en-neikuna 'l-Lumbwa oo 'l-Maasae to-'l-ari le-'ng-oloñg te-'wēji nēji El-lañgata e-'Sangaruna.

Thus was peace restored between the Lumbwa Masai and the Masai proper[1], in the year of the sun[2], at the place called the Ford of Sangaruna[3].

[805]

728 628 608 Ore opa teni meiyōu 'l-Maasae neibuñg o-sōtwa kitok oo 'l-meek, neinosaki ol-momai.

Formerly when the Masai did not wish to make a solemn peace with the savages, they entered into blood brotherhood with them.

Etotona ol-móruo loo-'l-Maasae aboitare ol-móruo loo-'l-meek, neitau pokiraare o-sarge te-'ng-aina e-kedyanye, nepik in-giri o-'l-kiteñg ōyeñgi te-inne, neinos.

A Masai elder would sit down with one of the elders of the savages; each of them would then cut his left arm, and after dipping in the blood some meat of a bullock which was killed on the spot, would eat it.

Ore p' eidip, nepwo; kake eitu eibuñg il-Maasae elle-sōtwa.

When they had finished, the Masai went away, but they did not keep the peace.

[113]

[1] Hobley (Eastern Uganda, p. 42) and Johnston (The Uganda Protectorate, p. 884) describe a similar ceremony after a war between the Masai and the Lumbwa or Kip-sikisi.

[2] The year of the great famine (1883).

[3] On the Ruvu or Pangani River.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Ol-le-Ṭatureshi.

Ten eiyōu ol-tuñgani araki en-gerai oo-'l-Maasae neitau ol-alashe araki eng-anashe, neisho ol-tureshi. Naa, ten eipoto 'n-garn, nājo Ṭatureshi.

The ceremony of the red bead.

608

When a Masai wishes to make a person his brother or sister, he gives that person a red bead, called ol-tureshi. After performing this ceremony, they call one another Patureshi, i.e. The giver and receiver of a bead, instead of by their proper names.

Il-tiloi.

Nāji en-dōki najo 'l-Maasae, 'L-tiloi.

Ten elo ol-tuñgani aiñguraa e-ñgorōyōni namwei, p' ōosh ol-ōshi-taritiki ōji Ol-tilo, amu ājo, 'Til-til-til,' te-'matwa e-kedyanye, neiyōlōu 'njere emwei naleñg. Naa, ten ōosh ol-le-tatēne, neiyōlōu 'njere memwei naleñg.

Ore, ten elo ol-tuñgani aiñguraa ol-lee ōmwei, nēosh ol-tilo kedyanye, neiyōlōu 'njere memwei naleñg. Ore, ten ōosh ol-le-tatēne, neiyōlōu 'njere ēä ōlo aiñguraa.

Ore, ten elo ol-tuñgani ol-arabal araki en-jore, neniñg ol-tilo ōorito te-'matwa e-tatēne, neiyōlōu ajo emir lekwa oolo aarare. Naa, ten ōosh ol-le-kedyanye, nerinyo, amu eiyōlo 'njere epwei aamir.

Ore ten elo ol-tuñgani 'ng-añgite, nēosh ol-tilo

Omens.

787
825

The Masai believe in what they term Il-tiloi, or omens.

If a man goes to visit a woman who is ill, and the bird which is called Ol-tilo[1], on account of its note, cries on his left hand, he knows that the woman is very ill indeed. Should the bird utter its cry on his right hand, he knows that the woman is on a fair way to recovery.

If a person visits a man who is unwell, and hears the same bird crying on his left hand, he knows that the man is only indisposed; but on the other hand, if a bird cries out on the right side of the road, he knows that the man will die. [963]

Again, if a man goes to fight or to raid and hears the Tilo bird crying on his right hand, he knows that he will be successful. Should the sound come from the left hand, he will return home again, as he knows he will be beaten.

If a man is going to pay a visit and hears a Tilo bird behind him, it

[1] Mesopicus spodocephalus, Bp.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

from each side suckled each other's babies. Peace was then kept till it suited one side to break it. With Bantu tribes the Masai sometimes made mock blood-brotherhood with intent to deceive, for they have no blood-brotherhood of their own. As among the Nandi, grass is a sign of peace, and a handful of grass constitutes a plea for mercy recognized by the Masai and those whom they count as more or less their equals, the Il-magati or " enemies," such as other pastoralists, but not Il-meek, the Bantu agricultural tribes.

728 [608] 648] [186]

Legal Sanctions

The Masai legal system seems to be less organized than that of the Nandi, and to depend even more on the force of public opinion than on the position and status of the council leader. It appears that only in cases of homicide is there anything like a regular procedure. The Masai distinguish between intentional and accidental homicide, the difference being that for the latter there is no blood feud and the amount of compensation is smaller. The number of blood-cattle paid as compensation, in-kishu oo-l-oikop, " murder cattle," varies, but may be as high as two to three hundred for a man; Hollis says 50 for a boy, and Merker 19 head of cattle and 19 goats and sheep for a woman. Fosbrooke gives the figures as 49 for a circumcised man, and 29 for a woman or uncircumcised man. The Il-Arusa are recognized as a group which pays and receives blood-cattle. The murder may be avenged by the dead person's brothers who may try to kill the murderer; and if compensation is not paid, the resulting feud may involve all agnatic kinsmen on both sides. It is not clear whether killing of the murderer makes the avengers also liable to compensation. If the victim belongs to the same sub-clan as the murderer, no compensation is payable. If they belong to different sub-clans of the same clan, or to different clans, all members of the murderer's sub-clan contribute, and the cattle are divided among the members of the victim's sub-clan after his senior brother has received half the stock. When a settlement has been made, peace is made between the families concerned by an exchange of garments. Maguire gives details of three methods of dealing with cases of murder. (1) The relatives of the victim take all the murderer's cattle; they hold a council and, after giving a few cattle to certain elders and old women, the bell-oxen, herd-leaders, and cows near calving are returned to the owner; the rest they divide among themselves. (2) If action is not taken at once, the relatives of the murderer send a stick to the relatives of the victim, the acceptance of which implies an agreement to meet and settle the matter, and compensation is arranged, the figure named being 40 head of cattle, with nine more added to symbolize the human body (reckoned by the number of its orifices). (3) Sometimes the relatives of the victim do not take action for two years or more; they then raid the murderer's kraal by night and demand the number they want. For killing a smith, ol-kunoni, no compensation was payable, nor was there a blood feud. If a smith killed a Masai, several warriors set out and killed several smiths. Theft (except of cattle) is apparently considered of little account: " if a Masai steals milk or meat or other small things, he is not fined. Grown-up people rarely steal," says Hollis. For cattle thefts, the thieves when caught were fined, seven head from each man concerned.

671 [626] 682 681 627 [614 672] 685

The general principle that a man is entitled to compensation for a wrong suffered is recognized by all Masai; and this recognition is extended to " foreigners " like Dorobo, provided the people concerned are well known to each other. On being accused, a man may submit to an oath, ol-mumai. In some cases a diviner of the type called ol-goiatiki by Merker is employed to find a guilty person. The whole subject of Masai legal institutions needs detailed investigation.

681 695

Modern Administration

The Masai political structure has proved even more difficult of adaptation than that of the Nandi, since it lacked the clear-cut pororiet divisions of the latter. Up to 1918 the chief laibon in Kenya was accepted by the Administration as a paramount

631 648

5: Maguire G-5 (no date) 1928
FL12 Masai FL12
Kisongo

E'-TOOSHO: ASSAULT

683

Resulting in the loss of an eye—no penalty.

Resulting in the tearing of an ear-lobe—a fine of one ewe.

Resulting in the loss or breaking of a tooth—a fine of one ewe.

Resulting in the breaking of a bone—an ox of the offender's (he may not have been the aggressor originally) is slaughtered then and there, and all partake of it. The injured man must not see the skin of the slaughtered ox. At the same time, a fine of one heifer is inflicted, but if the injured man should [682] die before this has been handed over, twenty and nine cattle may have to be paid subsequently by his slayer.[1]

To strike a man with an arrow, a club, spear, sword, or knife would result in the imposition of a fine of one fat sheep or one ox, according to the extent of the cuts or other injuries inflicted.

The preceding penalties refer to Masai only. If the murdered man be a Bantu or savage (Ol-meeki), and if he was known to [648] and a friend of the Masai, twenty and nine cattle must be paid to his relatives. In the case of the murder of or assault on a [609] [682] stranger, no penalty is laid down.

The reiteration of the number nine in the fines prescribed may be explained as follows. A certain round number of cattle is settled upon as fine or compensation. To this number (generally twenty or forty) must be added nine more for the body of the murdered man, in order to wipe out the stain of blood which lies between the rival parties. These nine cattle are accounted for according to the orifices of the human body, thus two for the ears; two for the eyes; two for the nose; one for the mouth; one for the urethra and one for the anus.

'NYAMIN: THEFT

Theft of any kind is almost unknown among the Masai, but 685 if one Masai should steal cattle from another, the thief must pay five beasts for each beast stolen, the sex of the animals paid depending on the sex of the stolen beasts. If sheep are [1] See Hollis, The Masai, p. 312.

175 791
[765]
[232]
[173]
[787]
[648]

/21 cont./

recovery from their pains. Mbatyan earned outstanding merit through the discovery of a protective vaccination against lung disease of cattle. According to the corresponding accounts of Zendeo and four old Masai, Mbatyan, several years before his death, had already prophesied the appearance of rinderpest that did not take place until after it and the subsequent subduing of the Masai by Europeans. In the outward appearance of this man nothing divulged his power. On a thin, average-sized figure sat an ugly head whose face was disfigured more particularly by the lack of one eye -- allegedly a birth defect. This latter circumstance led to the origin of the legend that the chief must always be one-eyed and that the father should destroy in childhood one eye of the son later following him. The face was even more repulsive because of a scanty, slightly gray full beard. That is, in contrast to the other men, neither the ol oiboni nor the el goiatek and el kiborón mentioned farther below may pluck out their beards, because they would lose their supernatural power through the removal of the beard hairs.

[826]
[302]

791
621
[361]
[595]
[623]

The chief's village consists of a large number of kraals lying close together, several of which serve as the dwelling of the ol oiboni with his numerous wives. Mbatyan had about 200 wives; the still young Zendeo has only 20 of them. No strange man may enter these dwelling kraals of the chief and his wives or appear in their immediate vicinity. Close by are found the rest of the kraals, one of which is intended for conferences and receptions and in which a few older men close to the chief as helpers and advisers (el duñganak oirorié ol oiboni) live with their families, whereas the others are occupied by warriors who form the defense of the village and, on the marches of the chief, his bodyguard. In his last years of life, when Mbatyan was mentally disturbed, he often spent months on the open steppes in a small hut made of branches, around which the warriors accompanying him camped in a large circle. The ceremony in the chief's camp is very simple. One of the men wandering about idly in the village leads the newcomer into the conference kraal, where he waits for the chief. As soon as the latter appears, the stranger

791
576
609

/21 cont./

791 576 609 rises, goes toward him, and, with the customary greeting, extends his hand to him, whereby, not this, but the wrist is grasped. After the concluded discussion, for which there are no particular formalities, he takes his leave with the ordinary farewell.

791 789 [262] [173] In the way of food, the ol oiboni takes only goat liver roasted on the fire, milk, and honey, for, through any other food, "he would suffer the loss of the capacity for prophecy and the preparation of efficacious magic charms." Of these arts very little is supposed to have been handed down to his son Lenana and still less to Zendeo, through which it is all the more explicable that the /22/ Masai today tell of hundreds of different kinds of miracles that Mbatyan allegedly performed. According to them, he could fell large trees by sheer will power, or he had the hut in which he was to be found set afire by his attendant, and, after it had burned down, he appeared, uninjured, out of the ashes.

756 [613] From the En gidon lineage there are further supplied, as has already been mentioned, the sorcerers or medicine men (ol goiatiki, el goiatek), several of whom live in each district. Their office, too, is handed down from father to son, who, however, is usually initiated into the whole secret art only after his marriage. The [789] most important magic charm in the life of the Masai, the war medicine, the ol goiatiki does not know how to make. Rather, one turns to him only in cases of illness of human beings and livestock for which the well-known remedies fail, or which one traces back to the sorcery of evil neighbors, as well as to determine unknown wrongdoers (thieves, murderers, etc.).

613 [776] The lineage of the El kiboron of the El mileijan tribe, who, according to the view of all the people, are especially favored by 'Ng ai, the god of the Masai, which has made them primarily the bearers of the religious traditions, require a special discussion.

613 157 Corresponding to their position with 'Ng ai, they are distinguished by a relative peaceableness. The young warriors, to be sure, also set out on raiding expeditions with the other lineages, but they thereby seem to avoid any unnecessary roughness or brutality, in which the others often compete. The passion for disputes, quarrels, and vituperation, a prominent trait in the character of the young

/117 cont./

177
181
• 609
466

As a servant of Europeans the Masai in general shows the same moral quality as the members of other tribes from the interior of East Africa (1).

1. I became acquainted with youths of ten different tribes of the interior. They are all quite considerably better, though also more inept in the beginning, than the brazen-impudent, conceited, and thievish nigger-dandy of the coast.

There is just as little domestic-servant faithfulness and dependability as there is constancy and gratitude for benefits enjoyed. An opportunity to rob the master is happily utilized; in the kitchen, meat, milk, and butter especially disappear. In the pasture the Masai herdsman draws off milk from the cows and blood from the oxen and sucks fat from the tails of sheep. One time the herdsman came home from the pasture in the evening, quite out of breath, and lamented that an elephant coming in the vicinity of the herd had scattered the cattle by its bellowing. In spite of a diligent search, two head of cattle were supposedly lost because of it -- two cows, of course! This was indeed very annoying, but was not to be altered, and I contented myself /118/ with ordering the herdsman to stay closer to the station with the herd. About eight days later the same incident -- ostensibly -- happened, and again it was two of the best cows. If that had gone on, we would have been rid of the entire herd in a few months. The warning had been useless, so the shepard was given a sound thrashing. And behold! From then on not only did the elephants remain away from the herd permanently, but even the cattle that had last disappeared showed up again. He had stolen them and given them to a friend for safe-keeping. Another case. A settler had a herd of fine select livestock about two hours from the farm in a secure palisade-kraal and in the care of a number of Masai in his service. A mark had been scratched into the hide of the cattle. One day the herdsmen brought a number of cows to the farm with the observation that the mark had grown over and would have to be cut again. The owner did 177 181 609 466 this and discovered to his sorrow that the cows had wasted away in the last few weeks to the point of being unrecognizable. If he had examined them more closely, he would also have found that they had aged several years in the preceding month. But he had no thought of any dishonesty of the people, whom he considered honorable and good, until after more than 100 of his finest cows had been exchanged for old, worthless ones and he had unsuspectingly marked all of the latter. One could cite a whole series of such examples instructive for the settler, but here let there be pointed out only one particularly popular trick: When in the evening the livestock of the settler is driven to water, the native stock-owners -- both Masai and Negroes -- also like to drive their herds into the vicinity of this watering place. In the press and haste of the livestock for the water, there run into the herd of the European, as intended, a few head of the cattle of the Black, who now, instead of taking his stock out of the strange herd again, moves off with a corresponding number of the settler's best cattle.

/118 cont./

177 181 464 609 [454] When the Masai servant who regularly invested his savings in cattle has assembled a small herd, he often enough leaves service in order to return again to his people. If an opportunity presents itself, it may happen that he now serves his compatriots as a spy against his former master. Uncircumcised youths who hire themselves out as boys return to their native kraals for circumcision, live there a few years with their contemporaries in the usual manner, and then often go back into service.

177 181 609 829 The Masai living in the tribe is and remains mistrustful of every European whom he has not become intimately acquainted with through the years. He regards the latter's honesty and forbearance as weakness and believes that it is only because of a lack of strength and cleverness that the European does not oppress him just as he himself does this with the Negroes. He performs a service for the European only in order /119/ to have some -- often enough illegal -- benefits from it. If he concludes friendship with him, it is done merely for the sake of appearances and a momentary advantage. As one accused, he almost never confesses, even with guilt proved, but rather, asserts with profound indignation: "A Masai does not do anything like that" (1).

/119 cont./

177 181 • 609 829

> 1. When, after receiving news of an ugly misdemeanor or crime, I spoke to one or another more trustworthy Masai about the unknown culprit, I often heard: It was surely not a Masai. A Masai would not do anything like that. Such things do not happen among the Masai.

Though he may know better, he accuses an ol mōgi just as unhesitatingly as he absolves a fellow tribesman (2).

[544] [326]

> 2. It may be mentioned here that, according to my observation, the insincerity and dishonesty of the people belonging to the blacksmith caste are decidedly greater than that of the other Masai, so that it seems as if the contempt and bad treatment that the former experience from the latter have bred an inferiority of character in the course of the millenniums.

829 The mental superiority of the European impresses him only in those cases where it has convicted him of some villainy, while his technical skills rank far too much of the despised "ol kenyi" to the Masai to seem worth notice. It is solely the guns of the Protectorate Troops that obtain for the white man respect and influence among the Masai and have made this matter care of East Africa somewhat more modest.

186 181 The picture becomes more gratifying if one observes the Masai in intercourse with his own kind. Dakirē ol gutuk sidai ol masai "make a good mouth toward the Masai, that is, be good, friendly, sincere toward your fellow tribesmen.

/121 cont./

181 If we summarize the traits outlined above, there results, on the one hand, the fact that the character of the Masai in general reveals the same virtues and vices as that of other primitive peoples, but then also that the Masai are definitely to be counted among the better half of these peoples.

The following little story, which a man from the Kilimandscharo area of Moschi once told me, shows how the Negroes illustrate the character of the Masai. "It was many years ago when we still fortified the area well with ditches and thorn hedges and the few approaches were both made hidden and well guarded. One day a couple of our people went into the steppe to see whether an elephant had fallen into the trap pit made there. There in the bush they found an old, sick Masai near starvation. Full of compassion, they took him home with them, where he gradually recovered. The convalescent seemed filled with gratitude and swore eternal friendship toward his benefactors when he departed to seek out his kraal again. A few days after his departure the war cry of our people suddenly resounded one night throughout the area. The Masai had come to make war on us, led by that old man who during his stay here had become familiar with the roads and bypaths and who owed his life to us."

201 152 Amazement, depending on its degree, is expressed by a more or less wide opening of the eyes and the mouth, as well as by a simultaneous raising of the eyebrows.

[147] A feeling of shame is manifested by a darkening of the skin of the face and often also the throat, corresponding to the "blushing" of the white race. In order to express indignation one looks at the other with wide-open, staring eyes often cast sideswise. One observes the same in the case of obstinate children.

In reflection the forehead is wrinkled longitudinally and often also transversely in its middle section.

To express ill-humor, depression, anger because of loss, etc., one scratches the head bent to one side -- usually to the left -- with the right hand and thereby wrinkles the forehead transversely above the root of the nose.

121 educations usually regard them as savages and an embarrassment to the advancement of their country. Intentionally or otherwise, information from such sources is very likely to be biased.

123 [609] It is often difficult to get accurate information about the Masai from the Masai themselves. Being ultra-conservative and suspicious, the Masai appear to regard with mistrust anyone who is pointedly interested in them or their livestock, and anyone in government. Their answers are affected by this attitude.

124 123 Interpreters are another, often-unrecognized source of misinformation even for the objective investigator. Whether the interpreter is a Masai or is from another tribe his interpretation may be affected by the factors discussed above. Interpreters frequently "interpret" what they think will please the questioner out of politeness and a desire to please. Occasionally interpreters misinterpret for other reasons. When the language interpreted was Swahili which I understood I have heard interpreters misinterpret when the true answer would have involved the interpreter in more work or an arduous journey. Another good example is the African who interpreted for an American anthropologist who spent several months living with the Masai, but did not learn

124 Swahili. Many Masai in the area speak some Swahili, so [191] using Swahili and a limited number of Masai nouns we usually could converse with Masai throughout the study area. Occasionally we had the services of interpreters.

123 These Masai regard visitors in their country with
• [609] interest and guarded suspicion. The suspicion is greatest if they believe the visitors are representatives of the Government. After we had lived on safari in Western Masailand for some months constantly moving from place to place the Masai appeared to accept us as a harmless, neutral, and occasionally interesting phenomenon.

Our status with them was helped by our work
[251] with grass and animals. Above all else the Masai appear [161] concerned with animal husbandry. They have a lively interest in wild animals, appreciation for domestic livestock that is almost reverence, and an understanding of the importance of grass. Our work on these things therefore seemed understandable. Beyond the frequent initial query: were we with the Government, there was never any question of why we were working there. The Masai appear to accept without question that white men are prone to the strangest behavior. Movie companies and some tourists fortify this conviction.

123 824 Our use of the capture gun to capture and mark wild animals was of particular interest to the Masai. 123 461 824 They would often come up to watch us. Masai are famed for their refusal to carry out manual labor of any sort hence are regarded in East Africa as poor helpers on safari. However, labor, where it involves animals, is another matter. Sometimes Masai would come up and voluntarily help us handle captured animals, and this they did very well. We even experienced Masai coming to our camps to talk about our capture work that they had observed from a distance.

123 262 609 When we had extra meat from animals that we collected, we took it to the nearest Masai village. Most writers have reported that Masai will not eat the meat of most wild animals. We found, however, that they gladly accepted it in most cases. They always wanted to know what animals were involved. In several cases, when we first approached a village those who came out to meet us would refuse the meat. Then someone who knew us or knew of us would appear and accept the meat, explaining that the others did not know us.

123 757 Virtually all visitors to Masailand are regarded as a sort of travelling dispensary by the Masai. This is true throughout the world for most people who do not have

/40 cont./

415 Now and then the receptacles are also replaced by two pouchlike
492 pack-holders (ol deretal, el derēta), one tied on the other. These [283] have the oval shape of a shield and consist of a wooden frame that is covered with a plaited work of leather thongs or ropes. Otherwise they serve to hold the pack loaded on the donkey and some-
285 times also on oxen. Mats are unknown; dressed neat-skins take 237 their place. Mortars are also unknown.
412

III.

000 Closer family relationships. -- Kinship designations. -- Terms of address for relatives.

602 Since every tribe and every lineage are descended from a
[613] tribal ancestor, the tribal and lineage members consider themselves
[614] more or less distant relatives. The family, one's own as well as, ascending, those of the father and of the mother, forms the closer
[611] relationship. The child follows the father's family (father right).
[672] Relatives are not responsible for punishable offenses, fines, or debts of a relative. Legally they need not support them either in connection with impoverishment or release from captivity; it is such a general custom, however, that probably no one ever evades it.

601 /41/ The Masai language is poor in particular kinship designations: most of them are made up of words for father, mother, brother, sister, son, daughter, etc.

Father: baba.

Mother: jējo.

Another wife of the father: eng afhji e jējo.

Principal wife: e' ngorojoni kitok, that is, the great woman, or en altero eng an, that is, the first in the kraal.

Every other wife: e' ngorojoni.

Brother (1):

1. Brother and sister come from the same wife, half brother and half sister from different wives of the same father.

231	• 613	[For mythological accounts of the origin of:
233	614	livestock and dogs	see category 539, p. 359
262	643	honey as a source of food	360
		board game	361
304	721	club carved of wood	362
411	754	blood as a source of food	362
		blacksmiths	364
524	759	clans and lineages	368-369
564	802	counting and number words	370
		7-day week	376
595	805	polygamy	377
		ol oiboni and chief	377
		circumcision	382
		double-edged knife	382
		sorcerers	382
		physicians	362
		mandate for war on non- Masai	382-383.]

/15 cont./

D 197 the El asiti also have their own idiom, which will be briefly discussed at a later place.

M 197 802 184 D 197 802 D M 771 304 619 [191] D M 174 612 [844] [176] D M 614 613 D M 128 Corresponding to the uniformity in language, the number words are the same among the Masai and Wakuafi, whereas the Asá and El asiti have their own words for only a few numbers, but in general always make use of the ones used by the other two branches. One finds a complete correspondence for all three branches in their religious view, and the manner of circumcision customary among both sexes. The peculiar circumcision of the boys is practiced by no other people at all, with the exception of one lineage of the Tatoga, closely related to the Masai people. In birth and death, too, all three have the same customs, while in the rest of their customs one finds only unessential differences which are based solely on the difference in their external way of life. The most striking proof for the three branches' belonging together, however, lies in their descent.

The people as a whole are divided into three large tribes, the L aiser, the El mulelyan, and the El mengana, each of which is made up of a number of lineages, and every Asá, as well as every Ol kuafi and Ol massani, is a representative of one of these lineages.

If we now concern ourselves further with the ethnography of the Masai in particular, which is at the same time that of the Wakuafi, we are thereby including the ethnographic traits of the entire people; the stressing of individual differences that have developed among the Wandorobo in the course of time and under the influence of changed conditions will be reserved for the third part.

/16/ Second Part

I.

000 Tribes, lineages, sublineages. -- The En gidon lineage. -- The chief: his rule and policy, magic medicines, genealogical tree, village, ceremonies, foods. -- The sorcerers. -- The El kiborōn lineage. -- The rainmakers.

M 614 613 Every tribe (en gischomi) is divided, as has already been mentioned, into a number of lineages (ol gelata, el gelat). Among these, in turn, one distinguishes principal lineages (ol gelata kitok)

/16 cont./

614 and sublineages (ol gelat' ate). According to the religious legend, 613 the relationship of the three tribes to one another is that of brothers, whereas the lineages of a tribe stand in relation to them as sons to the father. This is the basis for the view that the persons belonging to a tribe stand in a kindred relationship to one another, for which reason, for example, marriage between members of the principal lineage and of one of its sublineages, as well as between those of the sublineages of the same principal lineage, is not permitted.

The division that seems to have the greatest claim to accuracy, according to unanimous reports of the Asá, Wakuafi, and Masai, is the following:

Tribe: 'L aisér.

Lineage: En gidoñ or El oibonok,
" El bargenetti,
" El bartimaro;

Sublineage: El bedēs,
" El dibiliti,
" El egoio,
" El barsabuggo,
" El morinjero,
" El barsaṅga,
" 'L eng-adji-nanjugi,
" El gumarin,
" El barsiñgo.

Lineage: El ugumoi;

Sublineage: Es sidaio.

/17/ Tribe: El múleljan.

Lineage: El múgurēre;

Sublineage: El barsindē,
" El barserehgo,
" El barsegero,
" El bartelle,
" El kibujuni,
" El barmagua.

/17 cont./

614
• 613

Lineage: El masaṅgua;
Sublineage: El muiṅgo.

Attached to the El mŭleljan tribe:

Lineage: El mamasita;
Sublineage: El monáĭ,
" El gejaní,
" El marawasch,
" El bar-laṅata.
Lineage: El mágesan;
Sublineage: El kiborōn,
" El bartelēle.
Lineage: 'N darasero;
Sublineage: El meboní,
" El gidogu, also called 'L aisi.

Tribe: El meṅgána.

Lineage: 'L oitajuk; Sublineage: Es seroigínigi,
" El barsois,
" 'L endjage,
" El gissikol,
" El mohono or El moschono,
" El magarau,
" El barmaṅgig,
" Es sumaga,
" El barsellé;
Lineage: El marumai;
Sublineage: El goré,
" El maguberia,
" El bodjus,
" El gurá,
" El eberet (see later IV, I),
" El merání,
" El mossedjua,
" Es siria.

M 614 [186] /18/ The 'L aisẽr and El mũleljan to a certain extent stand in contrast to the El meñgana, whom they half-mockingly, half-abusively also call 'N dalata-gutok (1)

M [192]

1. 'N dalata, gluttons, en gutok, the mouth; by putting the two words together the idea of the first is supposed to be intensified.

or Eñg-adji-nagúl-alai (2),

M [192]

2. = the house of the hard teeth; nagúl = hard, el alai, the teeth.

and, in contradistinction to them, designate themselves as Eñg adji el masai. As the reason for this, tradition relates that the El meñgana were once separated for a longer period of time from the other two tribes and, upon reuniting, made a bad impression because they no longer observed the divine commandment forbidding the killing of female animals for consumption. This gave rise to the above nicknames, which, freely translated, mean "greedy gluttons."

M [173] [184]

M 613 The El bedẽs and El goré are not infrequently designated as El aisegela, a name formed after that of a war leader, Os segẽl. As the reason for the combination, it was said that members of the two sublineages were once notorious cattle thieves.

M 791 The most outstanding lineage, not only of the 'L aiser tribe, but of the whole Masai people, is the Eñ gidoñ, because both the family of the chief (ol oiboni) and that of the sorcerer (el goiatek) belong to it. The designation "chief" is actually not quite correct, since the ol oiboni does not rule directly and does not exercise any real executive power. He rules only indirectly; the firm belief of his subjects in his prophetdom and in his supernatural ability of sorcery gives him an influence over the destinies of the people. Despotism and cruelty, such as we find among all Negro rulers, are foreign to him. He is less a ruler than a national saint or a patriarch, in whom the Wakuafi and Asá also see their head. The people speak of his saintly person in timid awe, and no one would [613] [754] M [829] D [791]

/18 cont./

791 dare to appear unsummoned before the mighty one. Thus, the Masai living on the military station of Moschi /Moshi/ remained hidden during Zendeo's presence when the latter visited it at the beginning of 1896, and my Masai servant did not dare deliver a message either to Zendeo or to an attendant sitting beside him.

The aim of the chief's policy is the unity and strengthening of the Masai. By letting the rapacity of the warriors spend itself [648] in expeditions against foreign tribes, he protects his own people from devastating civil wars for which the endless friction of the districts among themselves would give continuous occasion. This influence makes possible for him the belief that a victory is attainable only through the secret power of the war medicine that he alone knows how to manufacture, and a defeat must inevitably come if he predicts it. Neither he nor his closest relatives go to war. He gives remedies against epidemics and sicknesses -- as a [755] rule in the form /19/ of magic medicines -- and orders supplication [782] feasts in honor of the Masai god 'Ng ai. He reads the prophecies [787] from an oracle game of the kind of the counting off of buttons. From a neat's horn provided with a leather cover (Fig. 1) he takes a handful of river pebbles, puts one or several of them aside, and throws back the rest. After he has repeated this several times, he announces his prophetic verdict, which often enough is worded in Pythian ambiguity. The game, like the lineage, is called en gidon. The office of ol oiboni is hereditary and has been handed down until the most recent times from father to the eldest son of the principal wife. The badge of his office is an iron club.

Fig. 1.

791 The Masai do not know much to say about the genealogical • 613 tree of the El oibonok. The first four or five names that it contains 173 belong to chiefs who ruled in early times. These names are: 791 Kidonoi, Geriga, Bargumbe (Bamjumbe), and Lesigirieschi. The 175 next chiefs are historical and descend from modern times. The first of them, Kibebete, seems to have ruled at the beginning of the nineteenth century; he was followed by his son Sitonik, who

/21 cont./

791 rises, goes toward him, and, with the customary greeting, extends 576 his hand to him, whereby, not this, but the wrist is grasped. After 609 the concluded discussion, for which there are no particular formalities, he takes his leave with the ordinary farewell.

791 In the way of food, the ol oiboni takes only goat liver roasted 789 on the fire, milk, and honey, for, through any other food, "he [262] would suffer the loss of the capacity for prophecy and the preparation of efficacious magic charms." Of these arts very little is [173] supposed to have been handed down to his son Lenana and still less to Zendeo, through which it is all the more explicable that the /22/ Masai today tell of hundreds of different kinds of miracles that Mbatyan allegedly performed. According to them, he could fell large trees by sheer will power, or he had the hut in which he was to be found set afire by his attendant, and, after it had burned down, he appeared, uninjured, out of the ashes.

756 From the En gidon lineage there are further supplied, as has [613] already been mentioned, the sorcerers or medicine men (ol goiatiki, el goiatek), several of whom live in each district. Their office, too, is handed down from father to son, who, however, is usually initiated into the whole secret art only after his marriage. The [789] most important magic charm in the life of the Masai, the war medicine, the ol goiatiki does not know how to make. Rather, one turns to him only in cases of illness of human beings and livestock for which the well-known remedies fail, or which one traces back to the sorcery of evil neighbors, as well as to determine unknown wrongdoers (thieves, murderers, etc.).

613 The lineage of the El kiboron of the El mulelian tribe, who,
[776] according to the view of all the people, are especially favored by 'Ng ai, the god of the Masai, which has made them primarily the bearers of the religious traditions, require a special discussion.
613 Corresponding to their position with 'Ng ai, they are distinguished 157 by a relative peaceableness. The young warriors, to be sure, also set out on raiding expeditions with the other lineages, but they thereby seem to avoid any unnecessary roughness or brutality, in which the others often compete. The passion for disputes, quarrels, and vituperation, a prominent trait in the character of the young

/22 cont./

613 Masai, is foreign to them. God rewards them for their virtue by [157] protecting their herds against predatory animals and thieves. It is not supposed to have yet happened that one of their cattle was 613 killed by a lion or otherwise stolen. The El kiborōn are particularly 789 esteemed by all the other Masai on account of their ability to cause 821 rain. The author one day saw such a rainmaker at "work" near a Masai kraal. He was lying on the ground under a big leather apron such as is worn by old men, so that one could see only a slight movement of the arms and now and then hear a soft murmur. After a while he stood up and explained that rain would "soon" come.
Since I had had rain during the preceding night in the camp six hours away, it is very probable that here, too, it had not failed to appear for very long and thus saved the reputation of that rain artist.

613 The only slight differences in the customs of the El kiborōn lineage compared with those of the other lineages will be discussed in the individual sections.

/23/ II.

000 Kraal. -- Construction and arrangement of the huts. -- Stall for the livestock. -- Types of kraals. -- Polygyny; the principal wife. -- Property relations, exchange of wares, earnings; family head. -- Expelling and separation of the family members. -- The family kraal. -- Daily life. -- Work. -- Foods. -- Tobacco. -- Honey beer. -- Play. -- Household equipment.

361 In the vicinity of a few shade trees and a small brook the Masai villages lie scattered in the burning hot steppes. They are circular kraals (eng ān, ng anīti or eng anása, ng anás [Fig. 2]), which are formed by a ring of huts (eng adji, ng adjidik) built close to one another. A kraal contains 20 to 50 huts. At two places opposite each other are found the entrances (en gischomi) three to 342 four meters wide. Since the Masai, as nomads, continue to live 361 in one place only as long as they have good pastures for their livestock, the huts are /Ill. 5 appears here/ built easily and casually out of material available everywhere.

/30 cont./

592 422 [434] The earnings of the sons who are growing up to become warriors consist of captured livestock and in the main passes into the father's herd. Actual separate goods for the individual members of the family are only clothing and ornaments, for the sons also their weapons, and further for boys the livestock given to them by the father, for youths and warriors the share of the captured cattle which they keep for themselves.

592 593 The family head is the father of the family. If an older man of his family also lives with him or in the same or a closely neighboring kraal, the two share in the office of the head in such a manner that in all decisions people listen to and heed the counsel of the elder one. Legally the head can be deposed by his brothers for mismanagement and incompetence, but this seems to take place only very exceptionally. The head makes the decisions in all family matters. A right to kill and penalize the members does not belong to the father of the family; just as he is not responsible for their debts and misdeeds, neither may he sell or pledge them. The [731] [567] fact that during the famine caused by two cattle epidemics that followed each other in a short time around the year 1890 children and women were given into slavery by their relatives does not prove anything to the contrary. When the corpses of many thousands of the starved lay in the steppes and there was no food of any kind for the survivors, no escape remained for them other than to give themselves or their relatives as serfs to such people as could feed them.

593 591 613 Individual members may detach themselves on account of bad treatment. One who detaches himself flees to another of his lineage or to the one from which his mother stems and purchases his admission with a few cattle that he has stolen from his father's herd and taken along. If he found acceptance in the latter, he must return to his own as soon as he becomes a father.

If a girl is expelled, she may freely choose her future abode, irrespective of tribe or lineage. Wherever she finds admittance /31/ she usually remains permanently, in that she marries a member of this lineage. That is, the men and girls taken in remain nonmembers of the lineage, despite their admission, so that they can enter into a legal marriage with members of the lineage concerned.

/40 cont./

415 Now and then the receptacles are also replaced by two pouchlike
492 pack-holders (ol deretal, el derēta), one tied on the other. These [283] have the oval shape of a shield and consist of a wooden frame that is covered with a plaited work of leather thongs or ropes. Otherwise they serve to hold the pack loaded on the donkey and some-
285 times also on oxen. Mats are unknown; dressed neat-skins take 237 their place. Mortars are also unknown.
412

III.

000 Closer family relationships. -- Kinship designations. -- Terms of address for relatives.

602 Since every tribe and every lineage are descended from a
[613] tribal ancestor, the tribal and lineage members consider themselves
[614] more or less distant relatives. The family, one's own as well as, ascending, those of the father and of the mother, forms the closer
[611] relationship. The child follows the father's family (father right).
[672] Relatives are not responsible for punishable offenses, fines, or debts of a relative. Legally they need not support them either in connection with impoverishment or release from captivity; it is such a general custom, however, that probably no one ever evades it.

601 /41/ The Masai language is poor in particular kinship designations; most of them are made up of words for father, mother, brother, sister, son, daughter, etc.

Father: baba.

Mother: jējo.

Another wife of the father: eṅg aṅhji e jējo.

Principal wife: e' ṅgorojoni kitok, that is, the great woman, or en altero eṅg aṅ, that is, the first in the kraal.

Every other wife: e' ṅgorojoni.

Brother (1):

1. Brother and sister come from the same wife, half brother and half sister from different wives of the same father.

/43 cont./

601 605 [431] The designations abula, en gijo, arabá, and 'n gîba are used only as long as the above-mentioned terms of address are not affected by gifts of livestock. This explains why they are used only among children. This does not apply to the address ol aischa 'Ng ai, because the girl is not in a position to make the necessary gift of livestock.

601 The son and daughter of the brother or of the sister are addressed, as long as they remain in childhood, with na gerai ai = my child. The address for the grandfather runs ing akuja, for the grandmother koko. The grandfather calls the grandson ng akuj'ai; the grandmother, koko ai. [431] [651] Brother-in-law and sister-in-law are called by name or the terms of address derived from livestock designations.

IV.

000 Conjugal relations. -- Betrothal. -- State of being betrothed. -- Bride price. -- Evasion of the bride price. -- Obstacles to marriage. -- Wedding. -- Beginning of the marriage. -- Dissolution of the marriage.

581 The conjugal relationships are very loose, and in some views about them the Masai stand in unfavorable contrast to their sedentary Negro neighbors. As among the latter -- and, to be sure, without exception (1) -- 595 [71]

> 1. The so-called monogamy of the Wambugwe is in practice the boldest polygyny.

polygyny prevails among the Masai. The number of wives of a man is limited neither by law nor custom, but depends only on his means. If a man has but one wife, poverty is always the reason. 581 There are no temporary or trial marriages; rather, marriage is a more stable relationship. [583] The woman through the marriage passes into the family of her /44/ husband, but not into his lineage; [618] rather she retains membership in her own lineage.

/46 cont./

583 [586] father-in-law must return the bride price if he grants his daughter admission. If the woman who has run away has had children, her husband keeps them: in this case the woman's parents do not pay back anything.

[431] [607] [572] On the day the parents-in-law receive the bride price, the bridegroom gives the eldest brother of the bride a year-old heifer, each of her other brothers and each sister of the bride a male head of cattle. This is only a gift of friendship and has nothing to do with the bride price. Exchange of wives occurs, but does not result in a valid marriage, any more than does wife stealing. On the other hand, it is not infrequent that the girl flees from her maternal hut as soon as she reaches marriageable age and runs to her love. It often happens then that the girl's father sends a band of boys armed with sticks after her so that through the beating she will be induced to return. Since the boys act at the command of the old man, neither the bridegroom nor anyone else may hinder them. In order to protect the girl from such violence, only one course remains to the bridegroom, to leave the kraal with her immediately and move into the forest for a few days. With this he makes it understood that he will oppose with weapons anyone who might still venture to take his bride from him and at the same time it deprives the girl's father of any further right to object. As soon as the couple in the forest have consumed a cow, they return to the kraal, where, without further ceremony, [613] they are recognized as married. Only the girls of the Il magesan and Il kiboshi do not have this possibility of self-help, for both lineages believe that a girl who goes to her lover in order to remain with him as his wife without her father's consent will die in only a few days after the flight.

582 614 178 [731] [613] In olden times the bride was not supposed to belong to the tribe of her bridegroom. The livestock epidemics of the last 30 years, however, which resulted in the death of many thousands of Masai, have modified this law somewhat. Accordingly, /47/ a man may marry a woman who belongs to his tribe, but not to his lineage, whereby in individual districts there is the further prerequisite that the girl came to him of her own free will and, after being sent back

/47 cont./

582 by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a [516] legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this [517] case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed
[583] to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her [613] mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his [561] age class (1)

1. Cf. Chapter IX of this part.

(of home) or to his age-class association (of age). The bride may not be from an older age class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the elder sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, where the blessed are poor in livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between foster brother and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as [612] incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage; it is precisely in membership in the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

[564] Moreover, a marriage between relatives of blacksmiths and those [565] of nonblacksmiths is not permitted.

[587] Widows (of guilds, 3 guilds) or divorced women who have living sons may not marry again, but live with sons who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an [566] obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man.
[579] The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

585 The wedding feast, allegedly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the local in which the bride's parents live.

/10 cont./ In the lineage of the El Kiborón every newborn boy is exposed to an ordeal through which it is supposed to be shown whether or not his begetter belongs to another lineage. In the evening, when the livestock comes home, the child is laid in the entrance of the kraal so that the entire herd of cattle steps over it. If the little one is killed during this or so seriously wounded that it dies from it, it is regarded as a bastard.

846 In most districts the young mother is not obliged to live isolated in the hut for a specific number of days, but leaves it as soon as her condition permits, often the very next day. In others she may not go out of the hut during the first ten days after the delivery, during which time the woman who assisted her then does all the work for her. For four days following the birth neither fire nor household objects may be carried out of the hut. During this time the woman stream[illegible] the evening recovery, before the complete reversion of the genital parts, alone or with the infant, she goes out of the immediate vicinity of the hut or of the kraal. Until the newborn child can walk, the father may not eat any food in its hut and may not enter it during the first ten days after the birth. If he has had sexual intercourse with one of his other wives, he may not touch the baby the next day. If the mother dies during the nursing period, another woman nurses the child, whereby her own children with respect to it enter into the relationship of lower brothers and sisters, regarded as consanguinity, or else it is fed cow's milk by means of a bottle.

854 The newborn baby is given a sleeping place beside that of its mother, whose leather apron serves it as an underlayer. Here the child rests, and, to be sure, on its side, not lying on its back, usually only as long as the mother is sitting beside it and during the night. Otherwise she carries the little one around with her, and, to be sure, on her back as a rule, more rarely straddling her hip or on her arm. The latter way of carrying is customary only with very small children, say during the first month of life. Even while the mother is working, her child remains on her back, held fast by her upper apron. Only if the little one makes its discomfort known by prolonged crying does she hand it to a woman nearby to be quieted or nurse it -- if it is somewhat bigger -- on a clean and safe spot on

/80 cont./

881 The circumcision of boys is a public affair and is ordered by [191] the ol oiboni. With the issuing of his order, the circumcision years ('l ari omoratyaki 'l aijek) begin, that is, the following four to five /61/ years during which the boys may be circumcised. In all [634] the districts the old men now hold consultations and set a definite day (1)

• [613] 1. The circumcision of the boys belonging to the lineage of the El kiborŏn always takes place on the 20th day of the Masai month, for the circumcision of the first division of the boys in question. Similarly, later, in the following years, the circumcision days, usually only one in each year, will be determined for the following divisions of boys. It should be mentioned here, beforehand that all boys cir-

[561] cumcised during a series of circumcision years form an age class (ol [191] borŏr) and that this age class is given a definite name by the ol oiboni. The circumcision period is ended by the ol oiboni ordering the ol gebata. This is a festival which is celebrated by the first boys in

291
142

Ill. 17. Masai boys.

/65 cont./

881 591 indications that she is about to become a woman, she returns to her

142 291 301

Ill. 19. Young Masai girls.

881 mother's hut. If several girls of the kraal are in the same situation,
[591] the mothers agree /66/ on a definite day (1)

[613] 1. The circumcision of the girls belonging to the El kiboshi always takes place on the 24th day of the Masai month.

for which they then secure an old woman experienced in circumcision. Otherwise they wait a few more weeks: perhaps a girl who is ready will will be found, since one need not necessarily wait for the aforementioned indications, or, if by chance a circumcision of the boys is about to take

/80 cont./

714 531 291
411

Ill. 29. Shield escutcheons of the Masai.

714 influence of the Mochi military station better. The answer to the 531 question concerning the meaning of the black bows was almost always 634 merely that they probably served as ornamentation, since, with the 189 application of the warrior emblem on the one side, the other half
781 of the shield would look unattractively empty, and only a few old men
179 opined that it was originally a lineage emblem of the Ilo gidoñ. This conception seems to me the right one, and it would explain why the emblem /81/ has been commonly used in Kisongo from time immemorial and then also came to Loita after Mbatyan's death.

714 The lineage emblem is almost never found on the shields of 531 today: thus I did not come across it until I had drawn by a number of
• 613 old men the shield escutcheons carried by them in their youth. The illustrations of Plate 3 show a collection of lineage emblems. We see there that the emblem is sometimes applied on the front of the shield surface, sometimes on the back of the shield. While the [561] warrior emblems have remained the same for a long time, the lineage emblems were always quite variable, and it seems that each age class made up its own.

1. [See p. 608--Amlyet]

/81 cont./

714 531 613 [561] The illustrations give the lineage emblems that the members of the el meruturut age class carried before the livestock epidemics around the year 1890. It furthermore seems that even in the times in which the carrying of lineage emblems was customary they were not generally carried by all lineages, but only by those whose members predominated in number in the part of the country concerned. The practical utility of this mode of procedure was to keep constantly before the eyes of compeers of other lineages the fact that these lineages were particularly strong and that therefore the individual belonging to them was entitled to a larger share of the spoils, in accordance with the principle: might comes before right. The emblem of such a lineage was then also sometimes adopted by all the warriors of that part of the country.

714 531 [103] Those warriors who take the lead in battle, the el kigeloni, have the right to carry the emblem of bravery on their shields. This is the small colored emblem that is on the periphery of a longitudinal side and is to be found in Figures 9, 10, 13, 16, and 17 of Plate 1. It is still commonly used today.

[104] The last emblem that may be included in the shield escutcheon is the one mentioned above as the section emblem. By section is to be understood here one of the many small divisions out of which the camp of a troop found on a war expedition is made up. In accordance with its secondary significance, the emblem is not very striking to the eye. A comparison of Illustrations 11 and 12, Plate 1, shows an example. These represent the escutcheons of two shields whose owners belonged to one company and within it to different sections.

714 531 178 It is also to be mentioned that both the shield escutcheon as a whole and its individual constituent parts were probably always dependent on fashion and other circumstances of the moment. Sometimes simplicity was fancied, sometimes gariishness. Sometimes a close feeling of comradeship prevented the carrying of the clique-forming lineage emblem, sometimes internal discord involving grounds of penal law or civil law called forth the opposite. The above-mentioned shield paintings of old men proved to me that the shield escutcheons of a province were uniform during periods of successful warfare. On the [121] other hand, /82/ one can observe almost daily on the Masai steppes that of the fight, or until one party remains the victor two or more times in succession. The fight assumes greater dimensions if the two duelists belonged to different lineages or even different tribes. Then

[Warrior Kraal]

701 578 682 [613] [614] [669]

/88 cont./

701 535 291

Ill. 38. Dance in the warrior kraal I.

701 578 682 [613] [614] [669]

the two lineages or the two tribes make war on each other insofar as they live in one district; a conflict that is equivalent to a small civil war arises. Members of these lineages or tribes who live in a more distant district do not take part in the fight.

A war in which Masai stand against Masai is called oi arabal (pl. ei arabali), not en djóre (n djorín) as a war between Masai and foreign tribes is called.

[192] [196]

701 574

/90/ In peacetime the warrior spends only the least time in his own kraal; for the most part he gads about on visits in neighboring ones, often several days' march away. Never may all leave the kraal together in peacetime; a guard of at least ten men always remains at home for the protection of the girls and the livestock, while the rest stop to visit at an oi hui (forest meal, see p.111 above) or with other people.

/111 cont./

192 When one so often sees how the warriors flirt with the girls and 832 how the latter act lovingly with the former, one would expect an abundance of expressions of tenderness. But here, too, this does not turn out to be true. The only pet name that the warrior gives the girl is joruert' ai = my darling, while the girl calls him ol djore lai = my friend, or also says ánjŏr nalen = I love you very much, to which the warrior replies: ídol íde eń gawariẽ = we shall see (literally videbo noctu /I shall see at night/).

XIII.

000

The blacksmiths. -- Their own kraals. -- Their social position. -- Attitude toward the blacksmiths. -- Workshop. -- Tools. -- Iron extraction. -- Technique. -- Blacksmiths' products; their prices. -- Wire drawing.

564 The kraals of the blacksmiths lie isolated, apart from the true 326 Masai kraals. It is not correct to designate these as a blacksmith [361] tribe, since there are blacksmiths (ol kononi, el konono) in all three [614] tribes and also in all lineages, except the El kiboron, and neither a [613] single tribe nor a single lineage consists exclusively of blacksmiths. They form a caste of their own and are the pariahs of the Masai, the despised and detested, the unclean, whom one would prefer not to tolerate if one did not need them so urgently. From ancient times the trade has been handed down from father to son, who only practices the calling after his marriage, therefore as ol móruo. One cannot detach oneself from the caste by not practicing the trade; rather, one who comes from a blacksmith family always remains ol kononi, no matter whether he works as a blacksmith or not. If, on the other hand -- which happens only very exceptionally -- a Masai who does not belong to the blacksmith caste permanently or temporarily practices the blacksmith's trade, he will, to be sure, also be regarded with scorn, but neither he himself nor his descendants will be despised as blacksmiths or counted in the blacksmith caste. A blacksmith kraal
[777] (eńg an el konono) in the vicinity of other kraals brings the latter bad

/132 cont./

714 were drawn from each end of the grip stick to the grip (Fi. 34). The 178 present-day shields, like the former ones, are also made out of buf-
[237] falo or giraffe skins. For better protection of the hand, the umbo is lined with a round patch of the same skin, and, on top of that, in order to prevent the chafing of the finger knuckles, with a piece of soft sheepskin. The shields now in use, measured with the convexity, are 1-1.10 meters long and half as wide. The escutcheon is painted [531] on the front surface of the shield, whereas the reverse side often -- [613] not always -- bears the lineage coat of arms.

714 On the march the warrior carries the spear with one hand, the 411 shield in the other one. With arm hanging down, the hand grasps 482 the shield grip so that the smaller diameter of the shield is vertical and the painted surface is turned outward.

The club (ol gūmăn, el gūmă [Fig. 35]) is now made out of 411 one piece, generally out of ordinary hard wood, especially from the [824] tree ol oirień and ol oiborbenek (1);
[237]

1. Dregea rubicunda K. Sch.

only the clubs of the speakers, which serve solely for gesticulating, 411 are made out of ebony wood or rhinoceros horn. The old clubs /133/
178 consisted of two parts: the spherical head, into which the sticklike handle was stuck through a central bored-hole. The club does not [412] actually serve as a weapon of war; except for accompanying a speech, it is used almost exclusively in fights and -- to break marrow bones of slaughtered livestock. The present clubs are about 40 centimeters long, their head has a diameter of five to six centimeters. A clublike 411 cudgel (es sēre), especially out of the wood of eń gadardar (1), [824]

1. Ochna Merkeri Gilg.

often takes the place of the club. The club is worn in the sword belt; it sticks in it as a rule close to the sword, with the head upward.

/147 cont./

412
302
302

Fig. 62.

Fig. 63.

Ill. 48. Hair style el babet.

[412] a sharpened little piece of sheet iron which is called ol moronja (Fig. 62). Before the shaving the hair is moistened with water. [777] The head is usually shaved during the es sobia days, the 18th to 20th day of the month, so that on the unlucky day, ol onjugi, the 17th day of the month, the head is not bald. The shorn hair is tossed into the thorn fence of the kraal. Beard hair and such lashes [412] that grow back into the eye are plucked out with tweezers (Fig. 63 [ol budét]). An exception to this is made by the men of the El [613] kiboron lineage, who are not permitted to pluck out their beard hair [789] because otherwise they would lose their power, in particular the [826] supernatural one that enables them to bring and to conjure away rain.

/164 cont./

231 Two breeds are distinguished, a shorter and stockier one and a longer-[613] legged, thinner one. The latter is allegedly found only among the El barsegero lineages.

233 Among the goats a small breed and a large one can be distin-
[621] guished. The Masai have obtained the latter only through raiding expeditions in Pare, Unyamwesi, etc.; the true Masai goats are small. All have medium long, smooth hair, a markedly projecting forehead, and lop ears. The horns are usually only an inch long and have tips turned back somewhat. Among bucks they are larger, but also only rarely seven to eight inches. /165/ The sheep are only medium-sized compared to European ones. They have curly, coarse hair. Three breeds are distinguished, a large one (eñ ger sabug = large sheep) with fat rump, a medium-sized one (eñ ger kĕtĕ = small sheep), white with black head and medium-long fat tail, and a small (eñ ger kiberoto; kiberoto = poor, paltry) breed and with a [232] long fat tail. Among the young female animals of the last two breeds the fat tail is cropped for fear it might be obstructive to the buck during coition.

The black-headed breed is stronger in North Africa and probably degenerated here, just like the last of the three breeds, which might

C. G. Schillings phot.

Ill. 55. Masai goats and sheep.

/167 cont./

233
422
531

Merker phot.

Ill. 58. Bull with ornamental brand.
(the G [= Government] on the hind leg is not part of it, but would have been branded on the animal when it came to the fiscal herd.)

233 capturer of the first head of cattle on a war expedition receives as 552 a reward is called Aherí. Other names for cows are: Narok-gonjék, blackeye, En dobiá, brown one, Mge, cream-colored one, Erek-logunja, blackhead, Na-njugi, red one. A male calf dropped by the cow Súdjaro is called Le-Súdjaro, while a female calf is simply given its mother's name.

231 /168/ Cattle, donkeys, and small livestock bear ownership
233 marks. These consist of cuts or brand lines on one or both ears 422 and of lines and curves burned on the left side of the body. The marks ([Plates 3 and 4] ol mebere, el meberen, if put on the [613] body; ol bonóto, el bonot, if on the ears) on the cattle and donkeys

/168 cont./

231 show to what lineage or sublineage the owner belongs; those on the 233 small livestock the owner chooses for himself. Probably every lineage 422 has several distinct marks. A glance at history will explain this.
• [613] In the immigration of the Masai people, accomplished little by little,
[17] each of the many bands originally formed a closed whole, which each lineage represented in it adopted a particular mark in order to make its property known. So it was natural that later on different ownership marks existed in connection with one and the same lineage, each according to the affiliation with this or that band. Besides this some that belong only to individual -- very wealthy and widely ramified -- families are also known, and then they are applied in place of the others, not together with them. The marks on the cattle are the same as those on the donkeys, although the latter bear the ear marks almost exclusively, only very rarely also those on the body. If a [613] head of breeding cattle passes to an owner belonging to another lineage, it is usually given a new mark, and, to be sure, this one 233 then on the right side of the body. Besides the 531 ownership marks, cattle often have still other signs burned in as adornment, especially [232] circles or a sentry-box type of design. A [412] circle around the root of the tail and, on either side of it, one or two concentric rings on the hind legs are found especially 233 frequently among bulls. In addition to these 232 cut and brand scars, which are therefore supposed to serve in part for identification, in part for beautification purposes, there is also a third type, which arises from operations that are performed with a red-hot iron (Fig. 75) for the curing of swellings on joints and tendons. These lines, usually lattice-shaped, are also found among goats and sheep. On female calves the horn attachments are often casterized, so that they can not butt later on. This operation further brings about, in the view of the Masai, an enlargement of the belly, desirable for leather production.

Fig. 75.

/201 cont./ Later, upon passing
764 the place, one again throws a stone or a handful of grass on that spot [765] where the dead lay. The more respected he was, the longer this custom expressing veneration is continued.

[787] If the laid-out corpse is immediately devoured the first night by hyenas, this is regarded as a sign from 'Ng ai, at whose command the animals act here, that the deceased was a good human being.
[782] On the other hand, if one finds the corpse still untouched the next morning, the survivors bring a black ram as a sacrifice to appease the wrathful god. No prayer is spoken in this connection.

765 After the obsequies, a funeral banquet takes place, at which the animal whose fat served to anoint the deceased person is consumed.
Everyone is welcome to take part. Formal mourning is observed only after the death of adult male persons. The period of mourning does not begin until one or more months after the death, and, to be sure, with the survivors shaving their heads (1)

1. Cf. the passage Micha /Micah/ 1, 16 (from the time around 724 B.C.) and Jer. 7, 23 /sic; see 7, 29/ (from the time around 605 B.C.).

--and the principal widow also cuts her nails -- and ends as soon as the hair has grown back about an inch long. /202/ The mourners remove all ornaments, for which the women also unwind the wire spirals from their necks and the wire cuffs from arms and legs; they do not take part in any feast or dance and may not marry during the period of mourning. For the death of a warrior his fellow comrades and fellow section-members, as well as his brothers and half brothers, mourn by shaving their heads and removing their ornaments.

766 In contrast to the simple exposure of the corpse, that of a chief [791] (ol oiboni), of a married man of the El kiboron lineage, and often also that of a sorcerer (ol goiatiki) is buried. The bottom of a pit
• [613] a meter deep is covered with a neat's hide moistened with fat, and [764] upon this the corpse is laid in the position described above. A [737] second neat's skin, likewise rubbed in fat, is then spread over the corpse. Now the pit is filled with stones and earth and the latter

/202 cont./

766 stamped down firmly so that hyenas will not be able to dig up the [791] grave. The chief's grave, as well as often the graves of the El [613] kiboron old men, are crowned with a larger or smaller stone mound.
[769] Later, as a sign of veneration for the dead, Masai passing by will [778] throw a few bunches of grass on the latter, whereas on the former, which is regarded as sacred, they from time to time pour a little milk as an offering.

766 Concerning the burial of Mbatyan, his son Zendeo told me the 791 following: When the ol oiboni died, his large bodyguard was gathered around him, and immediately warriors set off in all directions, in order to bring the sad news to the kraals lying far from one another. From everywhere Masai came streaming in, the relatives of the deceased all appeared, down to the smallest infant. Every mourner brought a few fat-tailed sheep along, which, after a large herd was assembled, were slaughtered. Meanwhile the corpse had been laid out on a neat's skin. Beside this the closest relatives laid their leather aprons and others added theirs in a line ea. 100 paces long, the aprons being placed so that they formed a channel. Now the boiled-out fat was poured on the corpse and flowed along the channel. Then the body was buried, whereupon all the people brought grass and heaped a pile several meters high over the grave, which was then covered on the sides as well as on top with layered stones. In contrast to this description, there is a rumor circulating repeatedly among the people, according to which Mbatyan, several days before his death, in a state of mental derangement, is supposed to have secretly left the kraal at night and wandered about in the steppe, without the men of his guard, who had followed him, being able to find him. Then, when he was found on the fifth day, he was dead and his body already decomposed.

768 If in one kraal several young people or even children have died of some illness within a short time, it is abandoned, first because it is regarded as unlucky, but then also /203/ to enable the survivors to forget the sad event more easily. In such cases of death one can always observe deep sorrow among the relatives, whereas the death of old people, even own parents, is accepted more calmly. "The old ones are now resting, they sleep, their time has come."

/207 cont./

782 [823] evening toward the setting sun. Both the original home of the Masai and the paradise where the souls of the deceased live lie in the north. Every prayer, as a rule, begins with: 'Ng ai pasinai or 'Ng ai atomono or 'Ng ai atasaia, i. e., Dear God, I pray, I plead. Following this a praying woman thanks 'Ng ai for having protected her and hers and prays to him further for protection, for the preservation and increase of the livestock, and that many children may be granted her. During the prayer she extends her arms toward the sky. During this she holds bunches of grass in both hands or only one in the right hand, while she has tied several blades around the right arm. With every prayer the woman offers a little milk to God. Either she squeezes a few drops out of her own breast -- and, to be sure, the right one -- or she pours a little on the ground out of a gourd bottle. She offers a similar sacrifice morning and evening during the milking, in that she lets a little milk flow to the ground both from the udder and from the milk vessel.

As has already been mentioned, men in general only rarely pray. The married men belonging to the El kiboron lineage, who often pray [613] morning and evening, form an exception. I must leave it undecided as to whether all do this regularly, since I met only a few old men of this small and now very dispersed lineage. Among other married men there are also individual ones who pray to God every morning to keep them and theirs healthy and to give them a goodly number of wives, children, and livestock. /208/ But these are exceptions. As a rule they content themselves with greeting God, in the morning after having left the hut, by spitting several times in a northerly direction, sometimes also in the direction toward the rising sun. The prayer of the old men runs: 'Ng ai pasinai, tadjabage si nanu, njage e magiló = Dear God, also protect me, give me strength! The younger men, the warriors, pray in the morning, before they set out for a meat meal in the forest, and during it in the morning and in the evening. Furthermore, on a war expedition they pray daily, early in the morning before marching off and in the evening after arrival in camp. In doing so they squat close together, while a leader (ol aigwenani) and a benefactor ('n gamnin) go through the group, 796 782 [842] [539] In the songs the following prayer is constantly repeated: 'Ng ai atasaia, 'j' oschiage aomon, kiamon ag' ije kiamon eñ gera, eñ golobi en aischo, i.e., God, I implore you always: I pray, we pray to you alone, we pray for children, for birth for the barren woman.

/209 cont./

Whereas the supplication feasts are usually held on the es sobiaĩn days (from the 18th to the 20th of the month), a joint supplication-prayer, ol dogóm, often takes place on the day of the new moon. The people of the kraal gather in the evening and, from a [272] [237] [415] [824] [539] buffalo or cattle horn, drink a mixture consisting of milk, a cold extract of eñ gaitetojai twigs (Commelina Merkeri K. Sch.), and a white powder obtained from the ol oiboni, while they say the /210/ prayer: 'Ng ai jo ijok eñ giachon, jo ijok ñ gischu, jo ijok eñ gera! That is, may God give us well-being, livestock, and children. If a larger supplication feast is to be held in a month, the joint supplication feast always precedes it on the first day of the month.

782 783 [784] If a small child of one not long detached from the warrior standing dies, he not infrequently sees in it a punishment from God for his having killed a pregnant woman on an earlier expedition, provided that he once killed a woman who might have been in this condition. In order to obtain forgiveness, he offers God a black gravid sheep, and, to be sure, close to the spot where at that time he committed the deed. Before he kills the animal, he prays to God, mentions the purpose of the sacrifice, and asks for pardon. As penance for his misdeed, he throws the blood and amniotic fluid (eñ gepa) of the sacrificial animal, as well as the fetus and uterus, both cut into pieces, upon the spot where it occurred. He takes along neither meat nor skin of the slaughtered animal, but leaves everything lying there when, after the concluded sacrifice, he returns to his kraal.

825 826 775 613 The lineage of the El kiboron believes that the bones of the buried corpses of their married men turn into snakes. They therefore do not kill these animals, like the other Masai, but are happy about their presence in the kraal and by the huts and, as soon as a snake appears, set on the ground a shallow dish with milk and honey as food for it. Snakes in and near El kiboron kraals are not rare.

775
825
826
613

/210 cont./
Allegedly they never bite the El kiboron people: on the other hand the latter often use them as frightening devices against both Masai and Negroes.

776 The Masai are not familiar with devils, but indeed with the -- male -- demon 'Ngnaunir, whose body is hard as stone and therefore invulnerable, who bears the head of a predatory animal and whose feet are armed with claws. He lies in wait on paths and calls passers-by by name, in order then to tear apart and devour those who approach. For most adults 'Ngnaunir is merely a bogeyman [861] for naughty children. "Do not go too far away," the mother says to the children, "otherwise 'Ngnaunir will get you."

754 If a person brings misfortune, illness, or death to another through sorcery (es [illegible]), this is merely the effect of a power inherent in the magic medicine, which is based on the composition of the medicine and is effective through the recitation of certain formulas and 789 the execution of special gestures. The aforementioned amulet ring [751] (ol gerertí) protects one against the effect of magic made by another [754] Masai. Women who go into the neighboring areas of foreign tribes to buy vegetables especially protect themselves from their sorcery. They smear their foreheads and cheeks with cattle dung or wear around their necks a cord on which are strung small, split sticks. Other amulets that I found contained, sewed in leather, a mixture of plant powder (from wood, /211/ roots, barks), after which they are named, and a secret medicine of the ol gniatiki, who alone is able to prepare the whole in such a way that it is effective. The [842] legumojig amulet is worn by women around their necks and is regarded as prompting conception. We have become acquainted with another remedy prized by the women barren up to then in connection with the boys' en gabita feast. The en gogunoi is tied around the ankle and protects one from ailments of the legs. The ol durgel [751] is worn by warriors around the neck or wrist for protection against sorcery. In hand-to-hand combat the powder contained in it is also scattered toward the enemy, whereupon the latter is supposed to be forced to give up his resistance. The en ang protects the husband from the anger of his wife when he has committed some folly, for example, has gone beyond the customary limits on

/214 cont./

628 682 [672] [593] revenge goes first against the murderer or, if he has fled and is not available, against his brother or any man of the family of the murderer. Usually blood revenge is commuted by composition (wergild), the amount of which the murderer negotiates with the avenger through a friend. As a rule it consists of 200-300 cattle -- [613] [614] now fewer in many cases -- which the murderer, together with his people and his fellow lineage and tribal members living in the vicinity, that is, in the same district, gather together. The avenger is free to accept or reject the composition. /215/ Blood revenge is not carried out longer than one or two months after the murder; composition then takes its place.

[678] The kraal of the ol oiboni is regarded as a place of refuge. If the murderer has confessed his deed here, blood revenge may no longer be carried out on him, though he remains obligated for the payment of the composition. Murder committed on a married man, a girl, or a woman is never expiated by blood revenge, but by a fine. Until the payment of the composition or fine the murderer is called [326] [364] ol oikobani (pl. el oikob). The murder of a blacksmith is unpunished. On the other hand, if a blacksmith murders or even only negligently kills a Masai, a band of Masai consisting of married men, warriors, and boys immediately sets out to kill several blacksmiths.

682 613 672 Negligent homicide is expiated only by fines. These are very minor if the perpetrator and the one killed belong to one lineage. If they belong to different lineages of the same tribe, every male member of the lineage (warrior, married man) and every married female member of the lineage must pay a cow. Of this livestock the brother of the one killed receives one half, while the other half [614] is distributed equally to his fellow lineage members. The fine is paid and distributed analogously if perpetrator and victim belong to different tribes. If a woman kills a man through negligence, she will also be killed in most districts. On the other hand, if a man has killed a woman, he either remains unpunished or is given a beating by the brother of the woman killed. In a few districts no 687 639 184 distinction is made as to whether the perpetrator acted intentionally or negligently, for example, in Loita, where blood revenge is also [672] [628] only very rarely used.

/312 cont./

*121 *793 *171 *589 [996] Among the Masai and the ancient Israelites the entire law, the natural and moral order, consists of precepts and interdicts of God. He commands the human beings to do good, he forbids them to do evil. He is the teacher of human beings in the distinction between good and evil, so that this ability to differentiate is one of his foremost characteristics even in the religious view of a primitive people.

The idea of the tree of life presupposes the desire for another characteristic inherent in God, for eternal life not limited by death. Now, however, is such a desire present in the feeling and yearning of a savage, culture-poor man? The extraordinary contempt for human life, the absence of mourning going beyond the customary interment ceremony, the idea that death brings sleep to the aged, rest from earthly life, answer the question negatively. The desire for long life is the result of a higher culture, and, indeed it is the civilized man who wishes for an eternal life on earth, but not the member of a primitive people.

I suspect, therefore, that the Israelitish original conception of paradise knew of only one tree, without any more detailed designation, "the tree concerning which I commanded thee not to eat any of it," as Jahve /Yahweh/ designates it in Genesis 3, 11.

The adoption of the tree of life, which may have come from Babylonian myth, then gave the originally one tree the addition "of the knowledge of good and evil."

In the Biblical presentation and in that of the Masai we find the picture of the tempting of the woman by the snake, which though that is represented as the symbol of evil, of sin. For the Masai this interpretation is still to be found in some of their customs. We saw that the members of the lineage of the El kiboron, peaceful, and therefore particularly beloved of God, do not fear snakes, and, further, they believe that the bones of their interred dead turn into snakes. Proceeding on the assumption that the story of the fall is the primary one, the first-mentioned belief in the naive form of the primitive peoples shows that those living according to God's commands and illuminated by his grace /313/ need not fear the power that evil has over man, whereas the second view demonstrates that what is sinful in man remains on earth and goes on living after his death.

[813] [825] [826]

Ir: Marker--600 C-5 (1895-ca.1908) 1910 FLIP Sheet FLIP

Plate 5

714 531
412

Lineage Emblems on Shields.

1. [illegible]
2. [illegible]
3. [illegible]
4. [illegible]
5. [illegible]
6. [illegible]
7. [illegible]
8. [illegible]
9. [illegible]
10. [illegible]
11. [illegible]
12. [illegible]
13. [illegible]
14. [illegible]
15. [illegible]
16. [illegible]
17. [illegible]
18. [illegible]
19. [illegible]
20. [illegible]
21. [illegible]
22. [illegible]
23. [illegible]
24. [illegible]
25. [illegible]
26. [illegible]
27. [illegible]
28. [illegible]
29. [illegible]
30. [illegible]

/Left side of Plate IVa/

Property marks on the bodies of the cattle, more rarely of the donkeys

/Nos. 11 and 12 are illustrated on p. [illegible]/

/Right side of Plate 3a/

Plate 3a

/Property marks on cattle: see p. 610 for 11 and 12./

[illegible]

/Left side of Plate 3b/

233
482
• 613

Property marks on the bodies of the cattle, more rarely of the donkeys too.

21 [illegible]
22 [illegible]
23 [illegible]
24 [illegible]
25 [illegible]
26 [illegible]
27 [illegible]
28 [illegible]
29 [illegible]
30 [illegible]
31 [illegible]
32 [illegible]

/Nos. 31 and 32 are illustrated on p. 612/

/Right side of Plate 3b/

Plate 3b

233
422
413

/Property marks on cattle: see p. 611 for 31 and 32./

31 /Horns/
32 /Ear-marks/
33 /Decorative wave of hair/
34 /Signs of individual ferritics/
35 /Signs of individual ferritics/

Plate 4

233
422
613

Property marks on the ears of cattle and donkeys.

Sign 13 is also frequently found on twin animals

/For No. 31, ohne Schnitte = without cuts./

18: Marker--814 C-5 (1895-ca.1909) 1910 PL12 Manl PL12

/Left side of Plate V/

422
411
.613

Property marks on arrow points.

/Right side of Plate 5/

Plate 5

422
411
.613

/Property marks on snow points./

/Left side of Plate 6/

422
411
• 613

Property marks on the tang of the arrow points.

1 [illegible]
2 [illegible]
3 [illegible]
4 [illegible]
5 [illegible]
6 [illegible]
7 [illegible]
8 [illegible]
9 [illegible]
10 [illegible]
11 [illegible]
12 [illegible]
13 [illegible]
14 [illegible]
15 [illegible]
16 [illegible]
17 [illegible]

/See p. 617 for the listing of Nos. 23-32 and the illustrations of Nos. 1-17./

18: Merker--617 G-5 (1895-ca.1908) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

/Right side of Plate 6/

Plate 6

422
411
• 613

/Property marks on the tang of the arrow points./

[illegible]

/See p. 616 for the listing of Nos. 11-17 and the illustrations for Nos. 23-28./

[For material on the "il-oshon" ("ol-osho," singular), which may be either a tribal unit or a strictly political territorial unit or even both (discrepancy in the literature between sources # 9 and 13) see also category 634.]

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

claim to belong to them live elsewhere. Merker gives as the principal divisions three provinces, Kisongo, Loita, and Olbruggo. This is perhaps not according to Masai traditions, but is not incorrect as a practical description of the present distribution of the tribe. The Loita and Olbruggo, also known as Elburgon and Purko, are both subdivisions of the Naivasha district, of whom the former acquired importance by refusing to accept the present Laibon, Lenana, and following instead his brother Sendeyu. Besides these districts, there are four clans representing genealogical not territorial divisions: Aiser, Mofgana, Mokesen, and Molelyan. The Aiser seem to enjoy a certain primacy. The medicine men all belong to this clan, which is specially connected with Mount Ngong (to the south of Kikuyu), also called Ol-doinyo loo-l-Aiser, the mountain of the Aiser.

According to the social system of the pastoral Masai the male sex is divided into boys, warriors, and elders. The first stage continues until circumcision, which may be performed any time between thirteen and seventeen, or sometimes in the case of poor people not till twenty. Those who are circumcised about the same time (see p. 261 for details) are said to belong to the same age, and are known collectively by a distinctive name, such as 'the White Swords' or 'the Invincibles.' After circumcision the warriors plait their hair, but, except for a small skin hanging over the shoulders, and their arms and ornaments (which are described by Mr. Hollis), go absolutely naked. They subsist entirely on meat, milk, and blood, and in particular may not smoke or touch intoxicants. They do not live with the married people, but in separate kraals with the immature unmarried girls, with whom they are allowed to cohabit freely. Tradition[1] (see p. 117) ascribes this practice to the fear that if girls were kept away from the society of their own warriors, they would let themselves be seduced by the enemy; but the remedy has been worse than the danger it was to avert. The direct physical evil is considerable, and is partly responsible for the diminishing numbers of the race. Besides this, female morality after such a girlhood was naturally low, even when the Masai kept to themselves. Now that they have come into contact with civilization, prostitution and venereal disease have become deplorably frequent. About the age of twenty-seven or thirty, or nowadays when raiding is forbidden somewhat earlier, a warrior marries and settles down. If he is a man of wealth and importance he may be elected chief[1], in which case he is responsible for the discipline of the warriors and their appearance when summoned to fight, though he does not go to the wars himself. As with most East African tribes an elder's ideal of existence seems to be ease, not unmixed with drunkenness. Proverb No. 64 (p. 249), 'Don't lie with your feet against a post like the father of many sons,' meaning 'Don't give yourself airs,' is a vivid picture of the Masai pater familias taking his ease in the primitive posture of lying on his back with his feet against a post, while his family do all the work for him.

[1] It is said that among the Dinka, Bari, and Shilluk there are similar customs of free love.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Masai women, unlike the men, are carefully dressed in leather garments, but a rare, and according to our ideas most unbecoming, custom forces them to shave their heads. Before marriage they are circumcised, and signalize their change of state by wearing large circular earrings and necklaces of brass and iron wire. Both girls and women have their legs and arms encased in iron ornaments, so that they can sometimes hardly walk.

This military organization of the Masai made them a most effective body for destructive military operations, and explains not only the predominant position which they acquired in East Africa, but also the respect which they inspired and the extent to which their customs were imitated by other tribes. On the other hand, it probably also is the reason why they never founded any state or polity analogous to the kingdoms of Uganda and Unyoro. The centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship and desirous only of military glory. Retirement from this band of warriors as a chief was honourable, but seems to have been recognized as a removal to an inferior sphere of activity. The chiefs arranged the details of the raids which the warriors wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight.

The nearest approach to a central and superior authority among the Masai is the medicine man or Laibon (more correctly Ol-oiboni; see p. 324, &c.). They all belong to the Kidongi family of the Aiser clan, and are said to be descended from a personage called Ol-le-Mweiya, who came down from heaven and was found by the Aiser sitting on the top of Mount Ngong. This was nine generations ago, the genealogy having been preserved. The influence of the

[1] The chief is elected from the warriors, but leaves their ranks at once and becomes an elder.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

[P. 260]

PART IV

'OROT OO-'L-MAASAE

DIVISIONS OF THE MASAI PEOPLE

619 101 The Masai race is divided into two sections, the one entirely pastoral and the other partially agricultural. The pastoral Masai call themselves Il-Maasae, whilst their brethren are known as 'L-Olkop or Il-Lumbwa.

101 614 634 The Masai are further divided genealogically into clans and families, and geographically into districts and sub-districts, as shown in the following tables:

Clans.	Families[1].
'L-Aiser.	'N-Gidongi (the medicine-man's horse), Il-Parkanet (the counters ?), Il-Loghumae, Il-partimaro.
Il-Metigaae.	'L-Aitayok, 'Biria (the designs ?), Il-Marumae (the priests), Il-Makuperia (the flesh on the ribs).
Il-Mokesen.	Il-Mokesen-sate, Il-Partalale (the long-sighted ones), Il-Tartearo, Il-Kiparum (the sears ?)[2], Il-Tanap-dware (the lion-killers).
Il-Mtelyan.	Il-Mtelyan-sate, Il-Mamasita, Il-Pujue, Il-Kipayini, Il-Meshtue, Il-Masaigya, Il-Mokuvera.

Whenever representatives of the four clans take part in a raid, it is usual to refer to the Aiser and Metigaae clans as 'L-oodo-kitabe (the blood-red cattle), and the Mokesen and Mtelyan clans as 'L-ooruk-kitabe (the black cattle).

Districts.	Sub-Districts.
101 634 Kaputiei or Kaptiei.	'L-oodo-kilisai (the blood-red cloths), Matapato, Il-kik-oonyokye (the red trees[3]), Il-dale-le-kutuk (the fat talkers).
Ee-ainoshe (the lake).	'Parke, Kinikop (the burning country ?), Il-dawai, 'L-oita.
Kisongo.	Maipe (the Pangani River), 'M-bambi (the valleys), 'K-oonyokye (the red soils), Ee-bughai (name of a tree[4] and light yellow), Il-kaapi (the mistaken).

[1] Some of these families are again divided into smaller sub-sections.

[2] The members of the family called Il-Kiparum are said to be sub-chiefs and rain-makers.

[3] Probably [illegible], Ollip.

[4] Probably [illegible] sp.

[291]

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

824 [484] ɛitoi, nɛŋgɔrɔ 'n-gujit ɛnɛŋgɔki, ɛnɛ ɛjo nɛtum ɛnɛtiki nɛlo ɛlŋgɔrɔ.

fallen on the road, he pulls up some grass, and throws it on the tree; otherwise he fears that his journey will not be successful.

Ɛnyor Il-Masaae 'n-gujit nɛlɛŋ, ɛnɛ ɛjo: 'Ɛisherua ɛjɔ ɛŋg-Ai 'n-gisku ɛo 'n-gujit, nɛlkɔ́r in-ɛtkitin nɛisheo 'yook ɛŋg-Ai.'

The Masai love grass very much, for they say: 'God gave us cattle and grass, we do not separate the things which God has given us.'

834 [484] Ore 'ɛg-ɛlɛŋgi ɛlkin ɛɛn ɛkɔ́ i-ɛgurɔ́yok in-gisku, nɛitɛn kulle ɛɛ-'ɛn-ɛ́ɔkuri, nɛilɔŋghoo, ɛnɛ ɛjo: 'Ɛnyor ɛŋg-Ai.'

Whenever Masai women milk their cows, they take some milk from the gourd and pour it away, for they say: 'God likes this.'

833 [421] Il-nishiren ɛo 'l-ɛɛnot.

The brand-marks and ear-cutting of cattle, sheep, and donkeys.

Mɛŋgɔr Il-Masaae 'l-nishiren.

The brand-marks which the Masai use for their cattle are not alike.

● [C14] Ɛɛte ɛɛ-kishtɛni ɛl-nishire kɔnyɔ kitok ɛɛ-'n-gishtɛni ɛlkin.

For each clan and family there is one principal mark, and all the cattle belonging to the various members of a family are branded in a special way.

Nɛitiki ɛɛte 'l-gilat ɛl-ɛtwa, ɛlyitɛni ɛɛ-gitɛŋ ɛɛjɔre ɛɛ-ɛ-'n-gishtɛni ɛɛjɔ, kake ɛɛ-ɛ-ŋgɔnin.

There are also small marks by which the actual owner can be recognised.

E-ɛte ɛll 'l-ɛɛnot; nɛtil ɛɛ-gishtɛni ɛɛnɛnɛte ɛl-ɛɛnote kɔnyɔ.

Besides branding, each family has a special method of slitting the ears of their cattle, sheep, and donkeys.

Nɛitiki ɛɛre ɛl-ɛtwa.

They likewise have smaller marks for each individual owner.

Ɛɛn ɛlkil ɛɛ-gitɛŋ nɛlyɔ-ishɛni 'ɛjɔre ɛɛ-ɛ-'l-kinɛr ɛɛnɛ-kitɛŋ, kake ɛɛ-ɛ-ŋgɔnin.

If therefore a cow is seen, it can be recognised as belonging to the Kinɛr clan, for instance, and also to such and such a person.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Naa, ten ɛɛ en-giyi-kerai, naiten 'ɛgɛnɛyɛ aka 'ɛ-dikiin.

If a baby dies, its mother only lays aside her ornaments[1].

Il-tanja oo 'l-mɔnɔtigɔ[2] loo-'l-tuŋganak, oo 'l-aururia.

People's souls and spirits, and snakes[3].

Tɛɛ ɛtaa en-ɛɛk ɔl-tuŋgani, ɛɛji ɛtaa ɛn-ɛɛlɛŋgɔ ɔl-ɛɛn lɛnyɛ. Naa, ten ɛɛ ɔl-tuŋgani, ɛɛ ɛ' ɛɛnɛni, ɛɛk ɛɛ ɔl-ɛɛn lɛnyɛ. Ɛɛji ɛɛlipi naaa 'ɛ-gɔlɔ: nɛɛlɛki ɔl-ɛɛn ɛpin.

When a man is on the point of death, people say he is about to cut his heart; and when he dies and is eaten (by hyenas), his soul dies with him. It is believed that all is over as with the cattle, and that the soul does not come to life again[4].

Kake ten ɛɛ ɔl-ɔlɔni ɛɛkɛ ɔl-kɔrɔŋ, nɛɛnkɛri, ɛɛ pɛ ɛlɛɛ-tyɛ ɛ-ɛɛnɛn lɛnyɛ, ɛɛji ɛɛɛwɛ ɔl-ɛɛn lɛnyɛ, ɛɛaa ɔl-ɛɛnɛni; ɛɛlɛ ɔl-ɛɛnɛni ɛɛŋ-ɛlɛ ɛɛ-'ɛ-gɛɛ ɛɛyɛɛa, ɛɛlɛyɛɛa.

But when a medicine-man or a rich person dies and is buried, his soul turns into a snake as soon as his body rots; and the snake goes to his children's kraal to look after them.

Ti-ɛɛkɛ ɛɛa ɛɛja, pɛ ɛɛtɛɛ ɔl-Masaa 'l-aururia lɛnyɛ. Naa, ten ɛɛkɛ i-ɛɛgɛɛtyɛk ɔl-ɛɛnɛni ti-ɛji, ɛɛnɛkɛ kɛlɛ, ɛɛnɛj ɔl-ɛɛnɛni, ɛɛlɛ.

The Masai in consequence do not kill their sacred snakes, and if a woman sees one in her hut, she pours some milk on the ground for it to lick, after which it will go away.

Ɛlɛ 'l-aururia ɛɛnɛɛk, ɛɛa ɛɛ-'ɛ-gɛɛkɛɛni ɛɛ-'l-ɛɛɛɛr; ɛɛa, ten ɛɛr ɛɛɛa ɛɛlɛ 'l-ɛɛpɛty, ɛɛja: 'Ɛɛɛr, ɛɛɛɛ 'l-kɛɛɛɛɛŋ.'

There is a black snake, which is sacred to the Aiser clan; and if a person of another clan were to strike the snake whilst the owners were present, they would tell him to desist as it belongs to them.

[1] The Dinka, Bari, and other Nilotic tribes follow similar customs (Kaufmann, Schlangen, pp. 130, 132; and Beim Nubia in Central Africa, p. 398, &c.).

[2] Ɔl-ɛɛn, the heart, mind, soul; ɔl-mɔnɔtigɔ, the corpse, spirit, ghost.

[3] The Dinka, Bari, Latuka, and other Nilotic tribes, also pay reverence to snakes (Kaufmann, loc. cit., pp. 127, 128; Schweinfurth, The Heart of Africa, vol. i. p. 22; Gessi, The Fawn, p. 91; Beim Nubia, loc. cit., p. 399, &c.). The Bahr Ghazal tribes also consider sacred snakes are embodied in certain trees and harmless snakes, whose their houses hospitably receive with kindly respect and propitiate with food (Tylor, Primitive Culture, vol. ii. pp. 8, 9).

[4] The Dinka and Bari likewise disbelieve in a life after death (Kaufmann, loc. cit., pp. 129, 130).

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Eata ol on-gidoini naji l-Tarimoro l-aserie lenye menko. Nae, ten ferere el-tadgani loo-l-Tarimoro el-likae, pe moiito, naipoi l-aserie lenyuna, ntjo: 'E-ale o-'ag-ejj e-ytyo, tabekenye!' Nae, ten ainu ekwat lidoiteere, nepwiten, l-aserie nenny.

The Tarimoro family have their own particular snakes, which are of many hues; and when a member of this family fights with some one and gets the worst of the combat, he calls upon his snake, and says: 'The avengers of my mother's house, come out!' If the man with whom he is fighting does not run away, the snake will come and bite him.

Eata ol kulye-dumito l-aserie lenye. Eiti l-aserie enibor, nentii l-nenyokiyo, nentii ali l-nenyori. Eiti l-kulikae enata en-diki nentii e-nwari enna el-kila lo-l-nderue, nenbor kulikae l-kaghenny enna el-nderue kitok.

The other lines and families have their sacred snakes as well. Some are white in colour, others red, and others green. Some have a hood like an old man's head, others again have white heads like very old people.

Eji ol nein l-ellumok l-kulenyuna nentii el-lenna.

The medicine-men are also said to have snakes, which they keep in their bags.

Kiji ten ra kulikae-tadgenak kitook enna 'Il-Ibityany, ere pe enekori, neyeo l-nenje lenye eng-ai.

It is believed that the souls of some big people like Mlatian[1] go to heaven after death and burial.

Ten ainu el-tadgani, nemolenki likae-tadgani ainytyo, Eiaytyo ainii, nere ejj: 'Ilmeki nenilim el-ten lenye ainiyenyo, nik.'

A sleeping man must not be awakened suddenly. He must be roused gently, for it is thought that his soul may perhaps not return and he will die.

Eje l-Kiseere nentii l-nenetiye, nere nenkol; kaire ejj ainii ia-gidoin, nee ten ainyenee 'a-gidoin gidoin e-wejj ainu, ntjj ainii il-nenetiye ereiii el-ereere.

The Masai say there are no such things as ghosts because they do not see them. But it is assumed that cattle see them, and when a herd of cattle all gaze at one spot, they are said to be looking at either a ghost or a beast of prey.

[1] See p. 306.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL.12 Masai FL.12

enaya ake aaje eaku en-aatoje el-oikoni.

Ore ten ñesh el-oikoni en-gidoig, pe ell 'l-tuñgunak enyeiten te-'ng-oiai, ntjiki 'l-tuñgunak: 'Aitgas epai, ano naidoere 'a-gujak en-'l-tuñgunak enyeiten eanak.' Eyile ell ten enyeiten 'l-tuñgunak te-'a-naiakwa.

Ken, ten eleere el-oikoni en-diki, nenere naiñakki 'l-tuñgunak; eenaya ten-'a-gitanyayukot, naiyak il-tuñgunak.

Anno el-oikoni ene ñji Kenya-Ngupe, naiñaakki 'l-nenee le-Kilepe enjyka nenyee en-jore, nenaay, ñje:

'Ferpuri 'l-oiñgok,
Kilepe ñaraki,
Ferpuri 'l-oiñgok,
Naitaeraite en-daiñgoti.'

Kenyee 'l-nenee le-Kilepe en-jore, ntar il-Aiaan, naiten e-naiyee en-'a-gidoo, naiee 'l-kuiñee.

Ntje: 'Eiñaiye en-eyenatije el-oikoni.'

Ore 'l-oikonok pikie il-Aiaar, le-'ng-ejl en-'a-Gidoiñ-el, enje en-a-'l-Ginenje naiki en-a-'l-Ngiriñiki. Ore Gi-Ginenje e Il-Ngiriñiki 'a-gure e-'l-le-Kwaiye.

not correct: they must wait until the medicine-man tells them that the event is about to happen. 787

If the medicine-man is going to prophesy by means of the buffalo or an horn, and there are people on the road, he tells those present that he will wait, as their feet will spoil his prophecy. They always know when people are coming, even if they are also off.

When a medicine-man makes medicine, he gets drunk before he prophesies. He sings in parables, [533] and the people reply.

For instance, when the medicine-man named The father of Ngupe made medicine for the warriors of Kilepe before they went on a raiding expedition, he sang: 787 786 [533]

'The bulls that cannot move because they are so fat,
They will be beaten by Kilepe.
The bulls that cannot move because they are so fat,
Half of them have been captured.'

The warriors of Kilepe went on their projected raid against the people of Kaka[1], and captured half of their cattle.

They said: 'Thus prophesied the medicine-man.'

All medicine-men belong to the Kiloingi family of the Kiloiro clan, and they are the descendants of Gi-Ginenje or of Il-Ngiriñiki[2], the sons of Gi-le-Kwaiye[3]. 791 [193]

[1] A small state near Kilima Njaro.
[2] The son of sickness (?).
[3] The Scorch.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

791 Ore ton-'l-olonok pikin Ol-Ônana ol-kitok loiye. Kiye ngol Il-Maiana pikin, ntjo ol-ntoriani loiye.

791 193 Ntji Ol-Ônana en-gorai e-'M-Ibityany, e 'M-Ibityany en-gorai e-Supet, e Supet en-gorai e-Sitonik, e Sitonik en-gorai e-Kipepite, e-Kipepite en-gorai e-Parinyumbe, e Parinyumbe en-gorai e-Kilodigri, e Kilodigri en-gorai e-'Ilgirisiki.

791 793 614 Ore en-gitarunto ton-'l-olonok ntji enotiki Ol-le-Mwiya eton te-'a-gepar e-'l-doinyo lon-'l-Aiser tinitiun te-'ag-ai. Ketum Il-Aiser, ntjo en-gorai aere oti naletig, nenik ang, enayutiki el-ilomi, naiyenisiko, nelo 'a-gere.

Ore etun en-ntii, ntjiki 'a-gere enyone: 'Enisiko ta-'ane.' Ti-ewki nae ntjo pe nolem Il-Aiser Ile-doinyo.

791 799 Ore ton-'l-olonok pikin Il-epe 'M-Ibityany el-kitok.

Ntji epe etun eton epewton 'l-kinapse kanna-kwapi, ntiaka 'l-ntiipanik: 'Epewton ekinapo 'l-ntiipanik enilaw kulio-ndoro.'

Ore ali inna-kuta etun eton

Of all the medicine-men Lenana is the greatest. All Masai acknowledge him as their lord and pay tribute to him.

It is said that Lenana is the son of Mbatian, who was the son of Supet, who was the son of Sitonik, who was the son of Kipepite, who was the son of Parinyumbe, who was the son of Kilongri, who was the son of Il-Ilgirisiki, the son of Ol-le-Mwiya.

The story of the origin of the medicine-men is said to be as follows: Ol-le-Mwiya came down from heaven and was found by the Aiser clan sitting on the top of their mountain[1]. He was such a small person that he was first of all believed to be a child. He was taken by the Aiser clan to their kraal, where it was discovered that he was a medicine-man. He married and had issue.

When he was dying he said to his children: 'Do not move from this spot.' On account of this the Aiser clan do not go far from their mountain.

Now, of all the medicine-men who lived in olden days Mbatian was the greatest.

It is said that formerly, before Europeans ever came to these countries, he prophesied that white people would arrive.

Again, before he died he told

[1] Commonly known to Europeans as Kenya or Tenyo Lenaiyo. The Masai have three names for this mountain—Ilap-ologi, a 'ne-bagai' (the eye or source of the Athi River), Ol-doinyo lon-'l-Aiser, and Ol-doinyo le-'l-le-Mwiya.

[103]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

[illegible] the temporary residence of unmarried initiates or "warriors", called el-moupatia, pl. i mupat. According to Merker,[illegible] "in every section there is at least one warrior's village which gathers all the warriors of the section". This type of village is closely related to the age-system institution. Therefore it is not a distinct territorial unit, though it shows the inter-relationship of the age-system and territorial organization for its tenants are gathered from different villages. Indeed this is a further instance of the age-system's integrating power.[illegible]

* * *

Masai society is divided into two moieties, en dalobi, pl. in dalobin, which seem to provide a basis for class organization. Every Masai is found in either of the two moieties. These are named after cattle, ene: ewik Iduny — the black cattle, the other: ende mungi — the red bulls. No exogamic restriction is attached to the moieties, but, they seem to have an influence on military organization. "Whenever", writes Hollis,[illegible] "the representatives of the clans take part in a raid", they are organized according to their moiety, and the loot is divided "into two parts, one part for each of these main groups".[illegible] Merker, states that the words ewik Iduny and ende mungi are war-cries shouted by warriors according to their moiety. Fosbrooke,[illegible] writes that the ewik Iduny "are regarded as the right hand of the tribe", and the ende mungi as the "left hand". He adds also that this dual division is typical of the "true Masai".

At the present there is no apparent relationship between the moiety and the territorial system, but a few indications suggest that such a relationship existed in the past. Thus, in Laikipiak section, according to Fox[illegible] there is an equal number of "black [illegible] Merker, l. c., p. 85.

[illegible] Merker, l. c., p. [illegible].
[illegible] Hollis, l. c., p. [illegible].
[illegible] See also Merker, l. c., p. 97; Fox, Further notes on the Masai of Kenya Colony, in J. R. A. I., 46, 1916, p. 407; Merker, Mythology of A-Kamba and other East African tribes, Cambridge 1910, p. 101, who states that the moiety divisions were followed for cattle-branding purposes. Among the Turkana, the moieties or alternations were distinguished by different war songs or other and ritual movements. See Barton, The Turkana of Kenya Colony, in J. R. A. I., 65, 1921, pp. 100 s.
[illegible] Fosbrooke, l. c., p. 46.
[illegible] Fox, l. c., p. 407.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Masai FL.12

cattle" and "red bulls". HOLLIS,[*] recorded two subdivisions of the Uasin Gishu, "the black striped cattle", and "the red striped cattle", which were, very probably, no other thing than the moieties.

The Masai clans, ol piloto, pl. il piloto or en piloto, pl. in piloto, are patrilineal and exogamous. Generally, they do not seem to be totemic. However, HOBLEY,[] and the author of M.S. No. 48 have recorded the names of a few clan totems. FOX,[] refers also to the association of snakes with some clans.

The true exogamic unit of the Masai seems to be any individual unit, either clan or branch of the clan. A Masai may be adopted into another clan than his original one. The same provision applies even to an alien (Kikuyu, Dorobo). The adoption, however, never attains the same social status as a full member of the clan. He is free to leave at any time, provided he returns whatever he was presented by his patrons, such as cattle or any other valuable.

The relationship between clans and their territorial distribution is not very clear. Analysis would suggest that in the past, clans were territorially separated. At present, there is still a tendency for members of the same clan to live close by to one another and occupy neighbouring exogamiets. Some sections are almost made up by members of a single clan. Thus, the Kidilian clan is predominant in Kaplti section; the Ainpuk clan is predominant in Dalalekutuk section. Such facts, however, seem to be the exception. Usually clans are represented at a time in many different sections "There is no rule", writes HOBLEY,[*] "governing the distribution of the various piloti (clans); often members of as many as three piloti will be found in one manyatta (elders' village) or a manyatta (warriors' village)".

Water and cattle are generally clan possession. When new water sources are discovered, they are claimed on behalf of the clan. All clan members who live in the neighbourhood are entitled to make use of them. A foreigner may also be allowed to water his cattle there. If disputes arise, they are settled by the consent of clan-members on the spot. As a matter of fact, these water sources are the centre of ordinary social life, as FOSBROOKE[*] writes: "The

[*] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 400.
[*] HOBLEY, l. c., p. 130.
[*] FOX, l. c., p. 400.
[*] HOBLEY, Eastern Uganda. An ethnological Survey, London 1902, p. 100.
[*] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 46.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

clansmen frequently meet on the water, and other matters — marriage, debts, etc. — come up for settlement before the tribunal". Clan ownership does not exclude individual ownership, which is integrated by the former as a sort of higher supervision. The point is that no clan property must be passed over to other clans without the owning clan's approval. HOBLEY,[illegible] states that cattle used to be marked by a clan brand showing clan-possession, and sometimes by a brand of the individual owner.

The corporate bond arising from clan relationship is confirmed by cases of murder compensation. Even if a murderer is a wealthy man, and might pay all the compensation out of his own stock, "the other branches of the clan would still contribute and they would pay their share". However, "if a Masai kills a member of his own branch of the gilat he pays compensation himself, and the other branches do not contribute".[illegible] LEAKEY, on the other hand, was told by his informants that no compensation is expected when a man kills a member of his own branch. They say: "what would be the use of taking a fine from one's own sub-clan?"[illegible] HOBLEY reports further that "each branch of the gilat to whom the murdered man belongs, receives a share of the compensation: 2-3rds to the murdered's father", and the rest is distributed among the other elders of the clan.[illegible] This is also confirmed by the notes of MAUGUEN on the penal code of the Masai.[illegible]

One should note that the corporate bond formed by clan relationship is of a particularist nature. It ties members to their own clan in opposition to other clans within the same tribe.

* * *

The many efforts of the Administration to identify a native political institution for local government make a very interesting piece of etnographical history. First in Kenya, and also, after 1918, in Tanganyika, one laiko was recognized as the Paramount Chief of the Masai. In Kenya such an office was abolished in 1918, while a graded system of councils was introduced: a Central Masai Council, 14 Native Councils and local Headmen. They acted as tribunals, [illegible] HOBLEY, Ethnology of A-Kamba, p. 128.

[illegible] HOBLEY, l. c., p. 128; FRESCOTT, l. c., pp. 48 s.

[illegible] LEAKEY, Some Notes on the Masai of Kenya Colony, in J. R. A. I., 60, 1930, p. 318.

[illegible] HOBLEY, l. c.

[illegible] MAUGUEN, The Masai Penal Code, in J. A. S., 38, 1938, pp. 13 ss.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Masai FL.12

do not hold their own ceremony come to, or acknowledge, the Kakonyuke ceremony. This is a point to be carefully noted.

Embolosat is preliminary not only to the circumcision ceremony, but also to any other initiation ceremony.

Three different stages make up the whole of the ceremony, namely the election of the master of ceremonies, the contest, and the sacrifice of a bull followed by the naming of the age-unit.

a) The ceremony is organised by the elders. Their first task is to select a youth qualified to be master of the ceremonies (ol opolos ol Kiteng). They also must obtain his father's consent on payment of some heifers.

The transaction is kept secret because the office is not popular with the youths. The elders' nominee is then seized in order that he may not escape, and told what is in store for him.

Not every boy is eligible for the office, but only a member of the Lagumai clan. The ol opolos must wear the garments and the ear-ornaments (surutya) of the elders, whose status he is to be invested with, which seems the reason for the reluctance to accept the office. The status of the ol opolos is ceremonial and, according to FOX, he has no function outside the Embolosat.

The ol opolos has to supply the ceremonial bull, " without blemish, colour black with white breast ", [a] and the ceremony is completed at his village which is enlarged for the occasion. [b]

b) The day of the contest is fixed by the elders. In the morning the bull is taken back to the village, while the elders officially introduce the ol opolos to the other candidates. These are told to look up to him because he is their ol opolos. Then, the elders order the bull into the village and immediately the boys rush in to get hold of it.

Not all the boys enter the competition, only a few from each attending section. [c]

Members of the Kakonyuke section make a point of being victorious. The contest is stopped by the elders as soon as victory is [a] In the Annual Report, NAD, 1936, p. 9, n. 11, we are told that the " black ox is fed one day on milk and native beer, not being allowed to eat grass ".

[b] According to LEAKEY a special new village is built.

[c] LEAKEY writes that " only those candidates for initiation whose fathers took part in a horn-seizing ceremony are allowed to take part; the rest of the candidates cannot do so, but stay at their homes while the ceremony takes place ".

2:Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Masai FL.12

tive as a symbol of the new relationship between the elders and the candidates.

The next stage of Endungore-Enpiloto is the election of the unit leader (olpuromani). This office is not popular with the boys,* and the election is kept as secret as possible from the person concerned. It is not very clear whether the election rest primarily with the boys or with the elders, both have a say in the matter since it is of common concern. The selected person is chosen from the so called ingopior, i. e. "those who have shown ability and strength of character during the many debates already held" (Wayrenovee). This indicates that he must be a man of talent and personality. Some consideration is also given to the clan and family from which he comes. The appointment is forced upon the boy, but only after the approval of his family has been obtained. The insignia of the olpuromani is a black cloth, which is presented to him by the leader of the elders. Prayers are also offered for the new chief.

The naming of the age-unit takes place now with great solemnity. Not all the candidates are present but only a few of them. These are called mojungoma. They take part in the ceremony dressed up in full regalia and painted with red clay and chalk.

On the following day a great sacrifice of two bullocks is also

* For the same reason given for the el epuko.

 Wayrenovee states that "the names of possible candidates are submitted to the il-piron elders for consideration; the elders do not actually select a boy but prevent any unwise choice being made. The responsibility of making a choice rests with the boys thereafter". On the other hand Fox, l. c., p. 480, states that in the first instance the nomination is made by the elders, and if the candidates are dissatisfied with him they may ask for a change. Kenyon, l. c., p. 61, states the boys elect one of their number.

 Particularly, he must not be a member of the Ingidongi clan, the clan of the ladies.

 According to Dawson, the mojungoma must be 49 if the ceremony is for the "right-hand" unit; 48, if the ceremony is for the "left-hand" unit. These boys must be pure Masai, and must never have killed a Masai.

 "The mojungoma", writes Dawson, "assemble in the middle of the village and the Olpuromani, having poured honey beer into a trumpet made out of a kudu horn, blows two blasts on it and shouts the name. There is no answer as this name must never be mentioned by anyone. He again blows the horn and shouts out another name and is answered by a shout of 'Ee' from the mojungoma. He again shouts out the name and is again answered by a shout of 'Ee'". The name is later announced to the other candidates by the leader and the mojungoma.

 The sacrifice of the bullocks (one must be entirely white, the other only black) is ended by great ceremonial. The two beasts are smothered and

3: Hollis G-3 (c.a. 1896-1994) 1910 FL12 Masai FL12

Besides the power of a maternal uncle to stop a fight, he has also the right to take anything which belongs to his nephew. If the uncle desires anything that is the property of his nephew's father, the nephew must buy it from his father, who will or may give it up when he knows for whom it is required. This power of taking property is reciprocal, and in fact applies to all persons who address one another as ol-ngwo, ol-le'ng-ngwi etc. A nephew, for instance, may go to his maternal uncle's kraal, and if his uncle is absent, he may slaughter a goat, or drink his uncle's milk, and nothing would be said. He cannot, however, drive off a cow without his uncle's sanction, but permission would not be refused. Other relatives have likewise some power of taking property. A boy or man may go to his father's or paternal uncle's kraal and take or demand a goat or milk, and in all probability nothing would be said, but if it were done repeatedly the father or uncle would express dissatisfaction or refuse slaughter. A man may also go to his sister's husband or wife's brother (ol-ngwoni) and take anything, but an account is kept and the debt has to be returned. If a man is poor it is customary for him to live with one of his brothers-in-law (ol-ngwoni) and help to look after the stock. He is fed by his relatives, and no payment receives less one of every pair of twin goats born.

Four cousins and second cousins may not marry, but there is no objection to third cousins marrying if the relationship is on same side of the house (ol-ngwo-lalwa). Thus, a man's son's son's son may not marry the uncle's brother's son's daughter, nor may a man's son's son's son marry the sister's son's son's daughter, but there would be no objection to a man's son's son's son marrying the brother's daughter's daughter's daughter or the sister's daughter's daughter's daughter. Likewise though a man's son's son may not marry the man's maternal uncle's son's son's daughter, he may marry the maternal uncle's son's daughter's daughter. These unions are always contingent on the two parties not belonging to the same sub-class.[1] The rules of consanguinity and affinity which regulate marriage also apply to the usual intercourse of warriors with immature girls before marriage and to the rights of hospitality after marriage. No warrior may enter on his

[1] The Masai are divided into two clans: Il-Kisi, Il-Sidipan, Il-Sikiaria, Il-Dikirisi, and Il-Purkeni. Each clan is again divided into sub-clans, e.g., the Il-Kisi contains amongst others the following: Il-gotilyai and Il-Purkeni. No man belonging to the Il-gotilyai sub-clan may take as wife the daughter of a man of the same sub-clan, but he may marry the daughter of the Il-Purkeni or he may marry a daughter of the Il-Sidipan, Il-Sikiaria, Il-Dikirisi, or Il-Purkeni sub-clans. Members of the various sub-clans are usually to be found in all the clansmen and sub-clansmen. Marriages are not affected by geographical considerations, and a man has the same (social) marital relations to all the sub-clansmen as he has in his own home sub-clansmen.

In his same book, The Mythology of the Il-Kaabin and other Masai (Frank Cass [illegible] Cambridge, 1905), Dobley states (p. 101) that the restrictions governing marriage amongst the Masai are far from simple, and he gives a number of complicated instances. As a matter of fact the rules are quite simple if one remembers (1) that though the clans are not exogamous, the sub-clans into which the clans are divided are exogamous; and (2) that a man may marry a cousin relation than a third cousin, and then only if the issue of unions such are ol-le'ngwo and ol-ngwo.

[illegible]

On August 1st, 1916, Dr. S. P. Smeeth was placed in charge of the Maori Reserve. In February, 1918, he submitted a scheme for the administration of the Reserve. This memorandum dealt with the following points:—

Residence and Sub-Districts.—The Maori being a tribe of nomadic habits, scattered over a wide area, and concentrated in no particular localities, he considered that effective administration could not be carried out by officers residing at fixed stations. Constant travelling was necessary, and he advocated the establishment of one central station only, with four or five outposts at each of which a small house could be erected for the visiting officer, with a few beds for his staff. The central station would be situated near the Cross Roads, or on the River Station, and would be the headquarters of the officer in charge. In this way, economy and mobility would be combined with efficiency. He suggested the erecting of outposts in the Ohinemuri near the Angle-Gordon bridge, in the Lower Valley or on the Upper Ruru, on S. Hall's, at Ngaiyo, and among the Lakelands, or in the Rugell Railway area.

Staff would consist of an officer in charge, a Senior Native Commissioner, four Assistant Native Commissioners, one Police and one Veterinary officer.

Equipment.—The relief operations of the Board conducted during [illegible] of the sheep through their own stock particularly valuable. The personnel staff was completed for the whole year, but had months under British protection, to distribute into a more Spartan level. The Native could be non-commissioned officers, Legislative, Reserve, Registrars, and Postal clerks and from the Commissioners, but their sons, through intelligence, were conservative and lacking in energy. A few young and energetic men would be included in the ranks of the police Sergeants, whose functions would be increased, and Mr. Smeeth suggested the following appointments as sufficient for the needs of the office:—

For the Police Force		1 chief and 8 lieutenants.
[illegible]
[illegible]		1 chief and 8 lieutenants.
[illegible]
[illegible]		1 chief and 1 lieutenant.
[illegible]		1 chief or lieutenant.
[illegible]		1 chief or lieutenant.
[illegible]		1 chief or lieutenant.
[illegible]		1 chief or lieutenant.
[illegible]		1 chief or lieutenant.

—a total of 18 chiefs and lieutenants, in addition to the government chief, for the supervision of some [illegible] Maori and [illegible] square miles of territory.

The nine divisions mentioned above were, in fact, geographical divisions overlapping in certain cases, but Mr. Smeeth proposed the demarcation of each division with the restriction of the chief to the tale of the area allotted to them, which would be natural boundaries. The Maori were, he said, agreeable to such an arrangement, realizing their very trouble which might arise could thus be avoided.

Taxation.—While agreeing that the present form of fee tax and capitation levied and backpayment of the dues of the Maori, he considered that the collection of contributions, the distribution that might be secured, and the probable non-payment. Particularly in the remote and serious objections to the imposition of a cattle tax. He therefore suggested a poll tax of 5s. 10 per head per annum, together with a compulsory subscription of 5s. 10 per head per annum towards a fund for development of, and improvements in the country. A revenue of [illegible] or [illegible] would thus be secured, and it was difficult to justify a higher tax. In the alternative, he suggested a tax of one to one-and-a-half per head, on all cattle, irrespective of age or sex.

[illegible]

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
F112 Masai F112

expense; for the dung will be singularly fatal to the woodwork, which, under its influence, drop down paralysed, apparently utterly unable to make the slightest exertion to help themselves. On these occasions you may beat them with a stick till you are tired, but they will simply put their heads between their knees like an obstinate donkey, and whine out, "Si wezi," "Si wezi" (I am not able). On my return month at Mazeri-ni, to the east of Kilimanjaro, one of these storms came on, accompanied with thunder and lightning of appalling fury and violence. The hail fell continuously for hours, and when it ceased the country was actually white, and remained so all night. If we had been caught out in that storm, without huts, I question very much if ten men would have survived. As it was, so utterly paralysed were they that even in their huts they allowed their fires to go out, and they had literally to be compelled to hunt themselves.

So much for Masai Land. Let us now take up the deeply interesting subject of the inhabitants.

In dealing with the manners and customs of this remarkable race, I think I shall best picture them to the reader not by describing them in catalogue fashion, but by setting forth the prominent facts in the life history of a male and female Masai, tracing their career in the various epochs of their savage existence, and trying to understand their views of men and nature, and their sociological relations.

But first of all, let me say a few words more immediately descriptive of the Masai as a race. Learned philologists profess to have discovered from a study of the Masai language—and I suppose the theory may be accepted as correct—that it belongs to the Hamitic family, as does also the language spoken by the tribes of the Nile and South Africa. This seems to be the only clue to their family relationship, and it reveals very little. The reader, therefore, will clearly understand that the Masai are in no sense negroes, or allied to the Bantu tribes with which he is so familiar from the works of our most prominent later African travellers. In their mental development, as in their language, they are widely different from the natives of Central and South Africa, occupying in the former respect a far higher position in the scale of humanity.

The Masai tribe is divided into about twelve principal clans or sub-tribes, with numerous smaller divisions. These vary not all the same position in Masai society, some clans having more "blue" blood, and being endowed of power

(52)

(53)

(54)

(55)

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

GN 515 192 head than others. The most aristocratic of these clans are the Ngujé-Masai, Mellian, Lyawi, and Letoyo. These have the finest physical development, and are undoubtedly superior to the others in the shape of the head, the less depressed nose, and thinner lips. Indeed,—but for the prominence of the cheek-bones, a tendency to a Mongolian shape and upward slant of the eyes, the chocolate-coloured skin, and the hair with a tendency to become frizzy—they might pass muster as very respectable and commonplace Europeans. The Ngujé-Masai are the purest breed, and are to be found chiefly around Kilimanjaro. The most degraded tribe physically is that which is known to the coast traders by the name of Wa-kwafi. They seem to have acquired a strain of negro blood, as will be perceived by an examination of the photograph of the Masai of Lykipia (p. 200). The higher development of the Ngujé-Masai is seen in the photo of an aristocratic woman of Njiri.

GN 634 The country is divided into about ten principal districts, such as Sigiroi, Njiri, Matumbaini, Kapté, Dogilani, Lykipia, Gnar' Ngidoo, &c. The various members of the race are generally designated by their native district. Various clans [GN] may be found occupying the same district, but they usually keep in distinct kraals. Hence they speak of the "El-Masai Matumbaini," or El-Masai Kapté. Each district also is further distinguished by having special heraldic devices on the [GN 634] shields of the warriors, painted with wonderful skill and taste in black, white, red, or yellow colours. Between the various sections of the tribe there is not the slightest cohesion. GN 634 Wars among themselves are of constant occurrence, though when a state of war is not declared, they are on the most friendly terms,—their feuds not being of that deep-seated character which distinguishes those of semi-civilized lands.

GN 194 Of these internal wars none have been so disastrous or so oft-repeated as that between the main name of the Masai and GN 634 the Wa-kwafi (I have use the name for convenience). The original home of the latter was the large district lying between Kilimanjaro, Upare, and Pare on the west, and Teita and U-sambara on the east. This large region is known to the Masai as Mbarawi. Some fifty years ago the Wa-kwafi were numerous and strong, able to hold their own against all comers. About 1830—as far as I can gather—a series of misfortunes fell upon them. In a great war-raid against the Wa-gogo to the south they suffered a severe reverse, and great numbers were slaughtered. The same

[GN 634 continued.—Analysis]

MASAI SOCIAL CUSTOMS.

By L. E. Wannerow.

/01 These notes have been prepared from information collected from the Masai who occupy the south-east corner of the Southern Reserve, between Kilimanjaro and the Chyulu Hills. They belong to a large section of the tribe called I'Sigirari. This section unlike other Masai sections is divided into two sub-sections, the Ingidongi, to which all "medicine" men belong and the Il-Kisongo, the majority of whom live in Tanganyika Territory.

The Kisongo living in Kenya distinguish themselves from those of Tanganyika by assuming yet a third name "Il Ghedichi." This name is undoubtedly derived from that of a spring "Engedichi," meaning "bubbling water." It was in the vicinity of this spring that the Masai settled when first they inhabited that part of the country.

/54 I propose to deal with certain customs and ceremonies connected with the founding of a new age-group. For the benefit of those who may not be conversant with this form of tribal government, may I briefly explain that the Masai tribe is divided into age-groups called il peor or il-ayi. All youths circumcised during a specified period of years are said to belong to the same warrior age and together they form one age-group. In some sections an age-group is formed of two distinct divisions, a senior and a junior, known as the right-hand circumcision and the left-hand circumcision. Later a group passes from the status of warriors to that of elders and thus make way for a new age-group to rise to warrior rank.

/981 Masai boys are circumcised usually between the ages of seventeen and twenty-five. The ceremonies which necessitate about every seven years extend over a period of about five years. When the majority of the youths are circumcised and a warrior age-group of considerable number is secured, a movement is made to prevent any more boys from joining that group. Those responsible for the movement are the elders of the age-group next senior to the warriors at the time. These elders are to become spokesmen and instructors to the members of a new age-group for the formation of which they make preparations.

They first send for a few of the bigger uncircumcised boys and explain that it is proposed to form a new age. In order to do this a ceremony called enkipanyi must be held. The boys receive their instructions and immediately don short shuka made from black calf skins and smear their heads with red earth that they may resemble warriors. They then set off in procession round the country on what

/202

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL.12 Maasai FL.12
Kiwanko

years ago, the latter were located in the area lying to the north and west of Lake Rudolph.

The Maasai themselves carry their history back to a time when they lived in a lowland called Kiaru; this cannot be other than the desert region lying between Lake Rudolph and the Kenya Highlands. The following is the story of their exodus from that area.

An elder, Mamindo, constructed a ladder or staircase up the escarpment, which, till then, had prevented the Maasai from moving south; on the plateau beyond he found good grazing and water. He consequently arranged to migrate, and he and his six sons, followed by the Lukipiak and the Kwori, successfully negotiated the climb with all their cattle and possessions. The remaining Maasai, who had previously been instructed to follow in an agreed order, then cushed the ladder, which broke under them. They were thus unable to follow.

The story is named Endigir on Mamaga (the story of the ladder) and the country at the top Olorja lol dapha (the river of palms). At this latter place Mamindo met with the Lelayok, the Uasingishu and Siria Maasai, and the Kipsiro (Lumbwa).

Mamindo has become the culture hero of the Maasai, to whom numerous legends have been attached. In one it is alleged that a woman, Nalenkeng, came down from Heaven and bore two sons, Mamindo and el Mesh, the latter being the origin of the Maasai and the Sorrio. Mamindo is believed to have ordered the Maasai to live at peace with their neighbours and, in the event of war, never to kill women or children. The invention of branding cattle as a means of identification is also attributed to him.

His six sons are also alleged to have been the founders of the existing Maasai clans, Moranyiro being the founder of the Laiser, Lolkeno of the Molonoo, Loitip of the Mamaitia, Lelyon of the Siddiyan, and Lemeri of the Tarnaro. The name of the founder of the Loghoitoro is not recorded.

The next event in tribal history is the acquisition by the Maasai of the Medicine Man or Laibonok. The legend of the survivors of the Lemgisia finding a lonely-born child on Ngong Mountain is recorded by Hollis, who also gives a genealogy in which Lenana's name is the sixth. If thirty years is allowed for each generation (possibly an underestimate, since primogeniture is not the rule of succession), the first laibon must have been found about the year 1800. This agrees with all my informants, who state that this event took place prior to the earliest remembered age grade, i.e. before the beginning of the eighteenth century.

From the fact that the finding of the laibon took place at Ngong, it may be presumed that the period from the exodus to this event was one of slow penetration southward through the Kenya Highlands.

Contrary to the evidence previously recorded, it appears that the advance guard of the Maasai had penetrated as far south as Uasgori (Mpwapwa District) and made contact with the Hehe by the beginning of the nineteenth century. The story is that when the Maasai were reaching the age of circumcision, two big bones penetrated into Gogo country to a place called Mali (Maasai) or Lali (Gogo) in search of grass. The leaders of the movement were two uncircumcised youths. One of

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kiwoko

There are certain units, which may be termed sub-tribes, whom the "pure" Masai regard as inferior. By "pure" Masai is meant those who regard themselves as descendants of Masindo. It is of interest that the word ol Masindo is frequently used in place of ol Masai as the singular of il Masai. Such socially inferior sub-tribes are the Lukipiyak, Siria, Uasingishu, and Kwavi, with the Laitayok as possibly a sub-tribe absorbed by the "pure" Masai. The nineteenth century witnessed the ascendancy of the Masai over the "inferior" sub-tribes, whilst in the fifty years which have elapsed since the Great Famine the relation of the sections within the Masai themselves have brought about many changes.

By section is meant a territorial unit of the Masai, the members of which regard themselves as owners of their waters and grazing grounds, to the exclusion of other sections. Such a unit is called el oshu, pl. il oshu. Alone or in groups the sections function as units in war, in allegiance to a particular Laiboni, and in the performance of certain tribal ceremonies; in general they possess a sense of solidarity which expresses itself in regarding members of other sections to a certain extent as strangers.

The list of sections in Dalla, divided into districts and sub-districts, is too exhaustive to be of practical value, and for this reason the "Administrative History of the Masai" is taken as a basis for the following list. Those sections which live entirely in Kenya are :—Siria (a sub-tribe?), il Dariai, il Kaloonyiki (see Age Grades), L'Oile Kilusi, Ngorowan (Lumbwa living north of Lake Baringo), il Dala Lekutuk and Kapotei.

Of more immediate interest in Tanganyika is the Sighirori, apparently a section composed entirely of members of the Sighiroi clan. The Administration History refers to Sighirori of Ngong end of Lutukiniak. The area between Kilimanjaro and Moru is also known as Sighiroi, and is probably the original home of this section. When their lands were alienated by the Germans they returned to Kenya.

The Matapato are another purely Kenya section of interest to Tanganyika, since it appears that their original grazing grounds included Longido, Kimirian, Ngaro Nalim, and the numerous small waters to the north thereof. First turned out by the Germans, they again penetrated north at the end of the War, and were again removed by the British, their country being occupied by the Kimangu.

Finally the Lutukiniak are of particular interest to us, in that they are closely associated with the Kimangu, and acknowledge the Mondi laiboni. This section appears to be composed of Laiboni, Laitayok and Matatian elements; here as in other areas the Laitayok do not fraternize with the other clans, but have independent encampments, perform separate fertility ceremonies, etc.

A number of sections are divided by the inter-territorial boundary. Of these the Purko alone have no pre-European claim to inhabit Tanganyika. On their eviction from the Naivasha area a portion of this section moved to the area in the Kenya reserve immediately north of Loliondo. By the end of the War they had penetrated as far south as Ngorongoro, whence they were evicted in 1958. All did not, however, return to Kenya; a number settled in the then unadministered area round Loliondo, where success in war, adequate rainfall, or immunity from disease, both human and bovine. Such a lelem of course retains his private practice. The final stage is when a lelem is invited to supervised and blow ceremonial affecting the whole tribe, such as circumcision, promotion of warriors, standing down, etc. Such a one retains the duties of the two previous stages, and is in fact the Chief Medicine Man of the section or tribe. This is the status which the term lelem popularly connotes, and is the sense in which the word is used throughout this paper, unless otherwise indicated.

9:Fuebrooke G-5 (1934-1948) 1948 FL12 Mossi FL12
Kiwoko

It is very possible that the office of lelem developed by progression through the three stages outlined above. It may further be assumed that the process took two or three generations to complete, before the lelem was fully installed in a position of power. For this reason the considerably pre-European conception of the office was not as old as the genealogy would at first indicate.

It is possible to quote examples of practising lelemsik, representing each of the three types of medicine man. Any member of the Ingidong clan is credited with a certain amount of supernatural power. Not all possess these gifts, but as an example of one who did, Kakoyo, murdered at Longido in 1899, may be quoted. In addition to the Ingidong clan, however, numerous clans, particularly Kikoyo, often build up reputations as private practitioners.

Of the second type, those who cater for various groups, the example of Gwana (B) springs to mind. He probably exercised 'group' functions in the supply of charms for cattle raiding, but was brought to book when he tried to usurp the privileges of the elders in the matters of tribal ceremonial. Tuka (C) was doubtless another member of the clan, supplying raiding medicine to the users of the Longido area. Both these people are of the Ingidong clan, but as an example of one who is not, one can quote ole Shange, of the Ngamagwa Kaplomi area. He is a Kikoyo, and his activities are not fully understood. He was believed responsible for a series of raids in 1933, and has still got a reputation, known beyond the bounds of his particular area, as a powerful lelem.

The third type, the acknowledged lelem of the tribe or group of sections, must always be a member of the Ingidong clan. One frequently hears that in olden times all the Masai acknowledged one lelem, but Wharton (8) had a lelem practitioner, if not a rival, in his brother Mafer (10), and it is more than probable that many other figures, important competitors to the known holders of office, have been lost to the mists of antiquity. The phrase "all Masai acknowledge one lelem" requires also a further qualification, as the rival subtribes, Uasingishu, Kisonko, etc., had their own medicine men.

The office is hereditary, insofar as the holders must be members of the Ingidong clan, and preferably close relations of the deceased lelem. More distant relations confine themselves to activities of the two inferior lelem types. There are, however, no definite rules of succession, the

9:Forbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL18
Kisonko

are in for a bad time." That is sufficient to ensure that a deputation from Matiko will visit him without delay.

Apart from specific payments for age grade matters, and the ceremonies demanded thereby, all the elders of an area are supposed to benefit from the performance of these local ceremonies, and consequently are expected to pay. It is an accepted practice that the Dalala age should not give cattle to be taken to the laibon, but are expected to provide hospitality for the meeting which is called to decide who shall contribute. At the meeting proceedings may begin by a man being denounced for refusing hospitality to an age-mate, and so to effect final. Otherwise the matter is ripe for general discussion, X pointing out that he gave a heifer last time, Y drawing attention to the fact that Z has not helped for many years, and so on.

These details have been included under the heading "Modern Adaptations," since one is so frequently assured that in the old days no such levies were made. It is asserted that the only occasions on which levies to laibon levies were made was when a party of moran returned from a raid empty-handed, and were so ashamed that they collected beasts from amongst themselves to take to the laibon.

Another demand which a laibon makes on his followers is that he should be provided with wives. Some elders say that this is an age-old institution, others that it is a recent innovation. By this as it may, moran support is an innovation, and by getting round the country moran, the laibon sees a greater number of suitable women, and consequently increases his demands. Parit (2) is credited with collecting five girls as a result of his safari to west round South Mamelland where the boundary was demarcated. He (Parit) paid the dowry and arranged the weddings. Mbatyo (3), on a safari to Kibaya in 1937, demanded and was given the daughter of Lomanna, although she was engaged to another; Kaparwa (5) paid one heifer towards the dowry and contributed the calendas for the wedding garment. When the girl was brought to Monduli, a number of calabashes were presented to Siya the mother of her hand. On the same day, Mbatyo demanded and was given one girl from Simanjiro and another from Longonot. Tulia (10) is also alleged to have tried his hand at the same game, demanding the daughter of an old man at Sanya; the laibon asserted that it was just an ordinary marriage, but local Masai opinion thought otherwise. For when a girl is married to a laibon, she is regarded as lost to her family and clan. The usual relationship which marriage sets up between in-laws does not exist, one cannot approach a laibon for assistance as one can to ordinary son-in-law, nor can one expect a laibon to let either son's daughter or her children go home on protracted visits.

The introduction of Pax Britannica and of motor transport, makes contact between the Masai medicine men and elders with doctors much more possible. There always seems to have been a close association between the Kibaya and the Kaplelong clan, so much so that we may reasonably suspect that the Ilmoruoni child sub-division was merely a Kibaya importation. But if, in her gallows, the Masai and Kibaya were

9:Footnote G-5 (1936-1948) 1968 FL12 Maori FL12
Kinaoka

561
634

But the lauwo is held in great respect by his age-mates, and any demands that he makes on them must be fulfilled. It is stated that he is the only official whose order must be obeyed. In discussing this with an elder, I pointed out that this should give the office great political importance, in reply to which the elder indicated that such did not necessarily follow, as " we can always tell the lauwo what order to give !"

While states that the lauwo is responsible to the lalwo for the appearance of the morua in case of war; this may well have been so in the old days, for it is generally admitted today that he is responsible for the smart turn-out of the morua. Thus unlike in cases of sickness or mourning, a morua is not supposed to cut off his pigtail without the lauwo's permission. It is alleged, however, that the office is losing its status and authority, for whereas the Dawra age lauwo is supposed to have gone on frequent "tours of inspection" and to have inflicted many fines, nowadays many Kisaka shave their heads without consulting their lauwo.

During elderhood, by virtue of his previous position, the lauwo is still held in respect, though no specific duties seem to attach to him. He may perhaps play some part at the ceremonies and opulent ceremonies of the age next-but-one- before, by virtue of the al pinna relationship.

Another official chosen at the ceremonies is called al bara engaua, who spins the skin of the ceremonially slaughtered ox. He is given four or five cattle as a fee, and in after life is held in respect, but appears to have no duties.

At the opulent ceremony, an official, the Lauwalya, is chosen in respect of the whole generation, whose position corresponds to that of the lauwo at the ceremonies. As there is only one opulent ceremony for all sections of the Maasai, so there is only one lauwalya. He duties, but considerable respect, appear to attach to the office in after life.

CLAN ORGANIZATION CHART.

561
619
616

GROUPS	CLANS	SUB-CLANS
Dodoinoki	Enghakonoo	Olgilata

I. Engaja Maasai.

9:Fuebrooke G-5 (1936-1968) 1968 FL12 Masai FL12
Kiesoko

(2) 2 Wingers. (Lemuyo)

Square brackets indicate exogamous groups; which not shown, sub-clans may inter-marry.

CHAPTER V. CLAN AND FAMILY MATTERS.

A. Clans — the clan chart — ownership of women — cows peculiar to certain clans — clan responsibility.

The chart reproduced above explains the system more clearly than a lengthy description, but a few explanatory notes are necessary. The true Masai, i.e. those who regard themselves as descendants of Maasitoki, divide themselves into two main groups (moiieties, sing. moiieties), the Laiser or Lumsiring (black bullock) who are regarded as the right hand of the tribe, and the Molelian or Loodoongi (blood-red bull), the left hand.

These main groups are in turn divided into clans and sub-clans, called in the chart singletons and eighths respectively. Some informants however reverse the terms. The clans are patrilineal, i.e. a child takes the father's clan. They are also exogamous, i.e. a man may not marry a woman of his own clan. But in certain cases groups of sub-clans within the clan may inter-marry (as shown on the chart), but when this occurs certain payments called engagit are made.

9.Fieldfolder G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Maasai FL12
Kiwanja

The true status of the Loiayok is discussed elsewhere (Part. 2) their clans are shown on the chart separate from the main body of Maasai clans.

One of the most important aspect of the clan system lies in the ownership of waters. It appears that in the old days, when a new country was conquered, each woman, as far as he was able, claimed a water on behalf of his clan. Thus all the Naberera and other Central Maasai wells are in clan ownership, as also are the springs round Longonot, Elmaya, etc. The senior member of the clan resident on the water is to control, and, in consultation with the other local clansmen, determine the order of watering.

The main practical application of this knowledge is that in effect the users of the water form a council for the settlement of disputes, under the 'chairmanship' of the owner. For example at Landanai a dispute arose as follows:—

A migrating Maasai may demand, and must be given, water at any well or spring, when actually on the move, drinking in priority to any local cattle. A woman claimed the privilege at Landanai, the elder who was watering his cattle refused, and a fight ensued. The local users of the water reached one decision in the matter in the absence of the 'owner' of the water; when he heard of this he was furious, called another meeting, and the original decision was reversed.

In other words, where waters are in clan ownership, there is a definite system of settling disputes arising from the use thereof; further, as the clansmen frequently meet on the water, other matters — marriage, debt, etc. — come up for settlement before the tribunal.

The value of these tribunals should not be overlooked, since in many cases waters are not in clan ownership, where water is abundant, as in a river or furrow, the water is communal, (engare kongaliko). In other areas where recent migration has ousted the original owners, the clan system does not apply.

In certain areas clan feeling manifests itself in other ways. For instance at Loitokitok in Kenya the Wakifuo and Loiayok have separate meetings, and act independently in certain tribal matters. Near Loitokitok it was found to be of great political advantage when the Loiayok were given a headman of their own. In the course of this survey, only one other clan concentration was discovered, namely the Loiayok at Engamaani, where the clan forms two-thirds of the total population. Local government can, therefore, be given a strong clan bias in that area, and in other areas which may be found in future to contain large numbers of a single clan.

The feeling that the clan owns jointly all cattle in possession of the clansmen manifests itself in numerous ways. For instance, members of the Engidong clan are not supposed to contribute to the cattle taken by deputations to the tribes — himself an Engidong — but may sell a cow present of their own. When blood-money is paid, it is less when the

9:Fosbrooke G-S (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kinship

When blood money is paid, it is less valued [illegible]

payment is between clansmen. The logical extension of this principle is that when cattle are due from one member of the clan they may be taken from any of his clansmen. This is in fact the rule for payment of compensation amongst the Masai, though the offender and his near relatives normally pay most. In the one case of blood money in which details were obtained, members of subclans other than that of the murderer contributed, and it is, therefore, safe to estimate that clan responsibility and cohesion applies to the whole clan to greater degree than it does to the subclans.

3. Family unions — the boma system — the 'gate' — polygamy — marriage stipulations — number of cattle to each gate — relations in law — breeding — adoption — economy.

Briefly, the Masai live in groups of families, usually three, four or five together, in a village comprising a ring of bomas, built immediately inside a circular fence, which thus forms an enclosure for the cattle. Such villages are usually built some two or three miles, frequently more, from the water which the cattle use, so that it is unusual to find more than two or three bomas in close proximity. Frequently a boma is a mile or more from its nearest neighbour. In the village each family possesses a separate gate, engaiboma, round which its members are grouped.

It is difficult to define a typical family or 'gate' unit. The ideal of a Masai elder is to possess half a dozen wives with many children, ranged on either side of his gate. As he marries, he places the first on the right of the gate, and the second on the left; when a third wife comes to the bachelor her but immediately to the right of the gate, and the fourth immediately to the left, the earlier wives moving round accordingly. Each wife on arrival is given a number of cattle, which are here to hold in trust for her children. She is also given, for tending, some of the unalienated cattle which the elder holds in reserve for future marriages, such cattle are termed engitu e ilei. Those living to the right and the left of the gate form two distinct groups, inlaiyiok, and for the purpose of inheritance, should a wife on the left die without male issue, her cattle will be inherited by the senior male on the left of the gate; they may in no circumstances be taken by an heir on the right so long as there is a son on the left to inherit.

When the sons are circumcised, they normally take over the guardianship of their mother, and of the cattle allocated to her. In the old days they would move off with her to the moranta, warrior village, but this is less frequent now. As they approach childhood, however, in polygamous families the sons at times share their patrimony and move off with their mothers, to form a separate gate in some other boma. More frequently they show little desire for this responsibility, and spend the greater part of their period of uncircumcised wandering round the moranyata, or living in endeavour to the bachelor pen. Once they become elders it is exceptional for a son to continue to live with his father, except when the latter has married another.

This is the theory of the gate system, but in practice it varies very considerably from the ideal. Polygamy (see below) is limited by the [illegible] and also provided they avoid such young girls as are attached to men in the warrior classes. Thus these young uninitiated boys may try to have intercourse with married women in certain, as there is a special penalty provided for women who so debase themselves. (See Marriage.)

[illegible] Preparation for Initiation.—On boy is allowed to think about preparing for initiation until he can show a growth of facial hair indicating puberty. Boys are always very anxious to be initiated as soon as possible, and as soon as they consider that they can make a reasonable claim that they are of age, they form themselves into groups of anything from six to a dozen, dress themselves in new skin skins, and, riding with them bows and arrows, go out on a tour of all the villages of the district announcing that they are candidates for initiation and demanding presents. These groups are called ilmoran, and by long custom they must be given anything they ask for which is within reason.

[illegible] Custom decrees that they shall ask especially for honey and lyrate skin harness, and these they take and present to senior and influential elders belonging to various circumcision groups, at the same time requesting them to bring up the question of their initiation at the council, and to make all the necessary arrangements. There is often a delay of anything from six months to a year before the consent of the council is obtained and arrangements are set on foot. In the meantime the groups of boys continue on their visiting tours collecting more presents as further persuasion to the elders to do as requested, and both groups of boys are formed and will themselves be the number of the candidates for initiation.

[illegible] During the whole time that these ilmoran groups are wandering about from village to village they may sleep with any of the uninitiated girls in the villages which they visit, even those who are attached to young warriors, provided that they observe the normal restrictions of the warrior classes.

[illegible] Ceremony of Driving the Ox by the Horns.—When at length the elders have consented to proceed with the initiation ceremonies, those elders to whom the presents of honey and lyrate skins were given make the necessary arrangements for the ceremony of seizing the horns of the black ox. These elders select a village of some elder of the Lukumai sub-clan (the ox must always be supplied by a member of this sub-clan), and demand a black ox without any white and straight very horns of other colour on any part of its body. Should the owner of the selected village not possess such an ox he must obtain one from another member of the Lukumai sub-clan, and if he cannot do so he must obtain it from another clan by purchase or exchange, and present it to the elders. This ox is called ongolong.

When the ox has been presented, a special village in both cases where the ox was obtained, and a day is fixed for the horn-seizing ceremony. Only those of the candidates for initiation whose fathers took part in a horn-seizing ceremony are allowed to take part; the rest of the candidates cannot do so, but stay at their homes while the ceremony takes place.

Those candidates who are eligible to take part in the ceremony assemble on the day fixed for the proceedings. They come from all parts of the Mawai country, north, south, east, and west, so there is only one co-mining ceremony in the whole of Mawai country before a new age-group proceeds to initiation and circumcision. They wear ordinary everyday dress and carry sticks. The ox is brought into the village by the elders in charge of the ceremony, and the boys are lined up some distance away. A signal is given, and immediately the boys race to the ox, each boy endeavouring to get a firm grip of the ox's horns or of the hump. As soon as two boys have succeeded in gripping these parts firmly, all those boys of the same clan present join with their sticks, while all the others endeavour to force the boys to release their grip. Should they do so and should boys of another clan succeed in taking their place, they in their turn are attacked by the other clans and defended by their own. After a time the elders stop the contest, and those who succeeded in keeping their grip are greatly lauded. The two boys who actually held the horns and hump respectively will be renowned for their success for the rest of their lives. It is a recognized thing that during the contest very many individuals receive more or less serious wounds.

As soon as the contest has been stopped, the ox is slaughtered and eaten by all present at the ceremony, and the hide is cut up into small strips, in each of which a hole is cut, and a strip put as a ring on the middle finger of the right hand of each of the boys who participated in the contest. If any skin remains over after each boy has been thus decorated, it is cut into a long thin thong, which is given to a boy candidate of the Lulumai sub-clan (i.e. the sub-clan who provided the ox). This boy is called ulukhani ulyamay. This thong must never be lost or parted with, but the small strips of skin placed on the boys' fingers must be removed a day or two later and thrown down in that part of the boy's mother's house where the calves sleep.

When this ceremony is over the boys go to their own homes to await their turn for circumcision.

Circumcision.—The candidates are not circumcised in groups at local centres, but individually at their own homes, and as the number of operators is limited, candidates may have to wait for anything up to two years before their turn comes. The operators travel from district to district, visiting all the villages where there are candidates, and circumcising them at their own homes. During the interval between the end of the co-mining ceremony (before which none of the candidates may be circumcised) and the time when his turn to be circumcised arrives, each boy goes back to his ordinary herding and carries on with the normal routine life of an uninitiated boy.

The operators who circumcise the boys are never true Mawai, but invariably "Wambondo" living in Mawai country, but no explanation of this could be obtained except that it had always been so from the beginning.

from having the honour of the host of her initiation." Should the man decide to marry the girl, this latter is counted as one of those which must be handed over for the marriage transaction (see Marriage).

Girls' Initiation.—Among the Mawai girls are initiated singly and not in groups, nor are they initiated until a ghost many years after puberty, for as soon as a girl is initiated she must be married, and cease to have any intercourse with the women or boys. Except under the circumstances described above, a girl is not initiated until her breasts begin to droop to a marked extent. As soon as this is noticeable, her mother informs the father, who makes the necessary arrangements. If the girl's mother is living at the time at a mungate with one of her sons, then the girl's initiation will take place at the mungate, otherwise it will take place at the home village. The essential point is that initiation must take place in the mother's hut (or in the hut of another of her father's wives, should her own mother be dead). The father comes to the place when the day of the ceremony has been fixed and here is prepared. A ram called ekidogoko is slaughtered either before the actual operation or just after it. This is the "ram for childbearing," and is supposed to insure fertility. This ram is eaten by all those present at the ceremony. The actual operation is performed by an old woman, who is a skilled operator (she may be either a Mawai or a Dorobo), and the girl sits on a skin inside the hut during the operation. The operation is said to be the same as that used by the Elkeyo on their girls, and there is a form of circumcisionary, but exact details cannot be obtained from the men. As soon as the operation is over the operator washes the girl in "cleanse but of the blood split" and a ram is then slaughtered and given to the operator. This ram is called ekingoni. Then a ram is killed called ekidomar to provide meat and fat for the girl during convalescence.

Shaving Ceremony.—Finally after the girl is healed and before she can go to her husband's village, a ram is killed called ekiwoni, which is the "ram for the shaving," and at the same time the girl's head is shaved by her mother.

Part V.—Kinship.

Exogamy.—Marriage is always exogamous as far as sub-clans are concerned, but marriage within the main clan is allowed. This rule not only applies to marriage but to all forms of sexual intercourse. No man, whether a boy, warrior, or a married man, may at any time ever have sexual intercourse with any woman, girl or child of his own sub-clan. This is the strictest rule of all Mawai sex regulations, and the penalty for any breach of this rule is very severe (about (see below).

A woman remains a member of her own sub-clan even after marriage, but her children belong to the sub-clan of her husband.

Juvenile.—Amongst the Mawai there are two usual methods of juvenile:—

(1) Juvenile of unborn children.
(2) Juvenile of infant girls.

[illegible] L. S. B. Leakey.—Game Fence on the Maasai of Kenya Colony.

[illegible] Women possess no property save their ornaments. Of these the beads and the necklaces become the property of the daughters, but the wire ornaments are thrown away.

[illegible] Spirit Life.—My informants declared that the Maasai had no belief in a spirit life after death, or in spirits of any kind, but I am not satisfied on this point. For some reason (probably a restriction with a heavy penalty attached) they were unwilling to discuss this subject.

[illegible] Curses.—The death bed curse is considered very terrible, as there is no possible way of escaping its evil effects, for a curse can only be removed by the parent who uttered it. A man who has been cursed will use every possible means to have the curse withdrawn immediately lest the utterer of the curse should die. (A curse uttered during life is supposed often to remain inactive until the death of the utterer, and this in itself seems to indicate a belief in some sort of spirit activity.)

Page VIII.—Clans.

[illegible] The following is a list of the clans and sub-clans among the Maasai (it is as nearly complete as possible):—

Main Clan Name.	Sub-clans.
No. 1. Laimer	(1) Laimer (2) Lengiroi (3) Lemiya (4) Lekiwani (5) Lemerilani (6) Lilorkiani (7) Loigon
No. 2. Siankolo	(1) Siankolo (2) Lemiligumu
No. 3. Molelian	(1) Molelian (2) Sheneldiani
No. 4. Magumu	(1) Magumu (2) Lemiya

Page IX.—Games and Sports.

[illegible] As a pastoral people the Maasai have many very interesting customs connected with their herds, but information on this subject is very hard to obtain, as details of the greatest interest to anthropologists are often not given because they are considered too trifling or too well known to be worth discussion. A few interesting notes were, however, obtained.

[illegible] (I do not know the scientific name) not to please bagbeetles (Maasai call them Il Ingoro). The mixture is put in a warm place to ferment for two, three, or four days. The alcoholic content varies according to the time it has fermented and the proportion of honey to water. It is sometimes very potent. The Il Ingoro are removed when it is fermented enough. An inferior quality of wine can be made by substituting sugar for honey. 975

Clans.—The Maasai clans are patrilineal. The clan organization governs marriage, adoption, and inheritance. The two last will be discussed later. The clans are therefore of domestic rather than political importance. The clan organization extends throughout all the Maasai, largely independent of the territorial section organization. The following instances, however, would seem to indicate that they follow territorial grouping to a slight extent:— 414

Loitokitok contains about equal numbers of 'Loorok Kiteng and 'Loodo Mempi (terms explained below). The Kaboni are predominantly Il Molelian, but the other clans are represented. The Il Dalalgatok are nearly all of the Loitoyok clan. In the Parbo the Loitoyok clan is unrepresented.

The clan name Loitoyok may or may not have a connection with the small territorial section of the same name situated in Tanganyika Territory. In Kenya Loitoyok is a true clan which divides into sub-clans, and it is as such that I propose to treat it.

All the Maasai clans are mentioned within two main groups called 'Loorok Kiteng, meaning "the [people] of the black ox," and 'Loodo mempi, meaning "the [people] of the red leopards." (I do not know the origin of these terms.)

If the warriors make a successful raid the raided stock is first divided into two parts, one part for each of these main groups, which then subdivide the spoil amongst themselves.

The 'Loorok Kiteng are comprised by the following main clans:—'L. Aiser, 'Laghoroto, 'L. Aiteyoki, Il Purtimoro. Sometimes these are loosely grouped together and all called 'L. Aiser.

The 'L.Aiser clan proper has the following sub-clans:—'Il Ishongi, Il Parkonoti (?), Il Lolerai, Ilnyoji Nanyoki, 'Loodo Kiteto.

The 'L. Aiteyoki subdivides as follows:— Ilaia, Il Pajas, Il Molopania, Il Kaboni.

I cannot remember the sub-clans of the 'Laghoroto or the Il Purtimoro.

The 'Loodo Mempi contains the following main clans:—Il Molelian, Il Dorowaro, Il Magwaro. I cannot subdivide these from memory.

I once wrote down a table of clans and sub-clans, but have not got it to hand. It required considerable labour, because a Maasai himself seldom knows to which main clan he assigns sub-clans other than his own.

* Cf. Hollis, p. 300. But the information there given is only partially correct.

[64] The name of the main group 'Loodo mongi' is very liable to be confused with that of the sub-clan 'Loodo 'Kidra because the former means "the blood-red bullocks and the latter the blood-red cattle."

It is further difficult, if not impossible, to know whether to treat some of the divisions as clans or sub-clans.

The two words used by the Masai are Ol piloto (the clan) and Enkishomi (the sub-clan). But these words are not much help to the enquirer, because the Masai use each to some extent interchangeably.

Hollis, p. 280, speaks of a group of Masai called 'L-Oikop or Il-Lumbwa. I have been unable to discover these people. The tribe called Lumbwa, which lives to the west of the Masai area, is quite different in language and customs from the Masai, being similar to the Nandi.

[61] Some clans are associated with certain snakes as under :—

'L Aiwo of Oromome Orok (the black cobra ?), 'Laghormo of Amurai Rongai Orok (the thin black snake), Il Dwarero of Amurai Sero (the brown snake), Il Molelian all snakes.

[97] Adoption.—The Masai like to adopt children, and even grown men, of other clans and other tribes, who may help them to herd their cattle. Of recent years they have also shown a tendency to adopt Kikuyu cultivators to plant maize for them in the more fertile areas Naivasi Kagare and Il Molili, west of the Rift valley. [56] [60] An adopted person is called O-Kiaga. Having been adopted he is regarded as being a member of the family and clan of his adoption and has nothing to do with his former clan. He may even marry a woman of the sub-clan of his natural father, provided that it is not also the sub-clan of his adoption. But he may not marry or have sexual intercourse with a woman of the sub-clan of his adoption. Accordingly, an adopted Kikuyu may call himself a Masai, and even though he may be unable to speak the Masai language he is not telling a lie according to Masai ideas.

When a man or boy is adopted as a herdsman he is treated by the head of the family as one of his own sons. He is given his herd of cattle and is helped to marry a wife. But if or when he elects to leave his adopted family he must go empty handed as he came, leaving behind him such cattle, wives and children as he may have acquired under adoption.

[55] An adopted man takes an inferior position socially to a well-born Masai. He would not in practice hold any important position in the tribe nor be able to marry a well-born Masai woman.

[34] [42] Inheritance. Arrangements of Wives' Huts.—Before dealing with inheritance it is necessary to explain briefly the arrangement of huts in a village in order that the terms "right of the gate" and "left of the gate" may be understood.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL.12 Masai FL.12

Betrothal

584 A man usually chooses his wife himself and, after obtaining the girl's consent, asks his father to approach her parents; if they agree the girl's head is smeared with fat, and she may no longer live in the same kraal as her betrothed. According to Hollis, a man makes the first approach to the girl's father himself, giving him first tobacco, and later on when the girl is older, more tobacco and honey. It is considered wrong for a girl to become pregnant during the betrothal period, and the engagement may be broken off, a custom of which advantage is taken by girls who are betrothed to a man they do not wish to marry, since betrothals are sometimes arranged without the girl's consent. Fathers, for instance, sometimes arrange betrothals between their young sons and daughters in order to strengthen the bonds of friendship between them (as also among the Nandi); and betrothals may take place between warriors and babies, and even unborn girls.

Regulation of Marriage

582 614 This depends on three things: clan, age-set, and kinship. (a) According to Hollis, marriage between clans is allowed, but sub-clans are exogamous groups (see below, p. 119); a man may marry a woman of another sub-clan of his own clan. Merker says he may not marry a woman of his mother's sub-clan. Tomlin ole Mbasi, however, says that though intermarriage between clans is allowed, each clan is an exogamous group; Foubrooke agrees that the clan is the exogamous group (see p. 120). (b) A man may not marry a woman who is by custom considered as belonging to the age-set (ol-poron) senior to his own, to his own age-set, or (if he belongs to the Right-hand Circumcision) to a woman of the Left-hand Circumcision. But he may marry one of the same generation[19] (ol-ayi). See below, p. 117, for details of the age-set system. (c) A man may not marry a woman whose relationship to him is closer than that of third cousin, and then only if they call each other o-le-ostua and en-e-ostua.

Bridewealth

583 Payment of bride-cattle establishes the husband's rights in his wife's procreative faculties and over the children she bears him. The numbers of stock paid seem to vary slightly. Merker gives them as three cows and one ox to the girl's father (the ox being eaten at the marriage feast), and a ewe and ram to her mother (the ram also being eaten). Hollis says the bride's father is given three heifers and two oxen, one of which is slaughtered "at the door of the hut"; on account of the other ox the man and his father-in-law call each other pa-kitap, "giver and receiver of an ox." To the bride's mother are given two rams, which are slaughtered, and a ewe, on account of which he and his mother-in-law call each other pa-kar (sheep). Foubrooke gives the number as two oxen and three cows or heifers, including the "pa-kitap" ox.

Marriage

585 There appears to be little ceremonial at a wedding. The chief occurrence is a feast at the bride's home, of which the bride and bridegroom do not partake. This is followed by a ceremonial journey of the bride to her husband's home; she wears a freshly oiled garment, carries a gourd ornamented with cowries, and is accompanied by two men and two old women; on her arrival, she is given a child to feed. [291] Thomson says that on the day of marriage and for a month afterwards (if I understand him aright) the husband wears female dress.[20] If the husband is still a warrior he may not have sexual intercourse with his wife, though they may live together at

[19] Merker, p. 47.

[20] Discrepancies between authorities may sometimes be due to difference of tribe, and not always to incorrect information or mere misunderstanding.

The members of each el-poror are circumcised in batches. Each batch forms an initiating group throughout Maasailand (like the moran of the North), and has a permanent name which varies in each age-set, and in each generating age-set. There are four such groups in the Right Hand. They are called Il-oshoshi, "the big ones," Il-kiruki, "middle," Il-ayiok, "the little ones," and Il-kipuko, "the [illegible]." The Left Hand, being smaller, has, according to Fosbrooke, only the last three of these groups. Women have no age-sets, but are considered to belong to the el-poror which was in formation at the time when they were circumcised.

The main function of the age-sets was to provide a permanent source of man-power for fighting, and though these are still taught discipline and respect for elders, they lose other behaviour patterns. An attitude of respect is required of junior to senior age-sets, while between members of the same set there is a relationship of equality and a sense of solidarity in their relations with other sets. Moreover, ship of a set also involves restrictions on both pre-marital and marital relations, of which mention has already been made. In the old days, the duties of warriors were chiefly to raid, in order to maintain as well as to increase the numbers of cattle; and to defend the country. Warriors were not allowed to drink intoxicants, but they had a number of privileges, which included access to the uncircumcised girls, and the right to demand milk at any homestead, and to eave for eating. Though officially their fighting duties have been replaced by certain aspects of cattle management, mainly watching and night herding, there is a constant tendency to some tribal services to raid their neighbours.

Clans

Clans (in-kiboroto, sing. en-kiboroto) are divided into sub-clans or primary divisions, il-ghot, sing. el-ghot. They are dispersed throughout Maasailand, cutting all the tribes (il-oshoi), and are totemic and patrilineal.* It is not certain how many clans there are, and this uncertainty seems to exist among the Maasai themselves. The component unit is probably the el-ghot, though Tomlin ole Mbaai says that

	Il-Ala	Matkor	Fosbrooke
Clan: Sub-clans:	Il-Aiser In-Kidogi Il-Parkimoi Il-Lekumai Il-Purtimaro	Il-Aiser En-Kidogi (?) Il-Parkimoi (?) Il-Lekumai (?) Il-Purtimaro (?) Il-Purtimbo (?) Kob-ej ewuyoka (?)	Il-Aiser En-Kidogi Il-Parkimoi Il-Purtimaro Il-Purtimbo Kob-ej ewuyoka
Clan: Sub-clans:	Il-Lekumai (According to Tomlin ole Mbaai)	Mbayio (?)	Il-Lekumai Kuria-kuria Mbayio
Clan: Sub-clans:	Il-Molelian Il-Molelian-sero Il-Mamasin Il-Pajas Il-Kipuyiani Il-Kishili Il-Mungaro Il-Molelian	Il-Molelian Il-Mamasin (?) Il-Kipuyiani (?) Il-Mungaro (?) Il-Molelian (?) Il-Kishili (?) Il-Purumbio (?) Il-Purimbo (?)	Il-Molelian Il-Kipuyiani Il-Mungaro Il-Molelian Il-Kishili Il-Purumbio Il-Purimbo

[continued]

* In Nandi the senior sect is called Cepsoyin, usually shortened to Cepsioik.
* On the authority of Tomlin ole Mbaai.

	Hollis	Merker	Fadiman
Clan: Sub-clans:	D-Kokwanu D-Kokwanu-nanu D-Kwenkule D-Kipanyo D-Takaq-ormoru ?	D-Kokwanu (1) D-Kwenkule (2) D-Kipanyo (3)	D-Kokwanu [Dodo] D-Kipanyo [Ormoru] [Lukgai]
Clan: Sub-clans:	D-Ormoru D-Takaq-ormoru ?	D-Ormoru (1) D-Mokoni (2) D-Kulugu (3)	D-Ormoru D-Takaq-ormoru [Lula]
Clan: Sub-clans:	D-Siqoyo D-Ariyook i-Kore D-Marumuo D-Mokogoria	D-Siqoyo D-Ariyook (1) i-Kore (2) D-Marumuo (3) D-Mokogoria (4) D-Kiyo (5) [illegible] (6) [illegible] (7) [illegible] (8) [illegible] (9) D-Pamela (10)	D-Ariyook D-Mokogoria D-Kiyo [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
Clan: Sub-clans:		D-Marumuo (1) [illegible] (2) D-Mamori (3)	D-Marumuo [illegible] D-Mamori D-Pamela

the main clan itself, en-kiboni, is the enguenoo unit." The D-Aiser clan is that to which all the principal informs, il-oiboni, belong throughout Masailand. (See below, p. 152.) The above table of clans is compiled and adapted from the lists given by Hollis, Merker, and Fadiman.[*] The numbers 1, 2, in brackets in Merker's list denote the groups which Merker calls gon-kin-ki and enengon-kin-ki respectively.

Fadiman has also D-Mamoria as a separate clan: the others give it as a sub-clan of D-Mokogoria. Merker and Fadiman further group the clans as (1) those of Kok-ai I-Mamoo, "the home of the Masai," D-Aiser, I-Lukumai, D-Kokwanu, D-Tarnoro, D-Mokoma, and D-Mamoria; and (2) those of D-Siqoyo, which are D-Ariyook and D-Marumuo. Fadiman has yet another grouping, this time by cattle-colour: I, D-ene-nok-kiteg, "the black ox," or Right Hand, comprising the D-Aiser and I-Lukumai; II, D-ene-da-mung, "the red ones," or Left Hand, comprising the D-Kokwanu, D-Tarnoro, D-Mokoma, and D-Mamoria; and III, D-Ariyook, attached to the Right Hand, and comprising the D-Ariyook and D-Marumuo.[] It is to be emphasised that there is a constant duality in the structure of Masai groups, largely expressed in terms of cattle-colour. It is found not only in an antagonistic setting, as when cattle are divided after a raid, but also in the sections into which a tribe may be divided. Thus, the D-Wamia-kidoo were divided into D-wamia-kidoo en-nok, "the black striped cattle," and D-wamia-kidoo en-nyokia, "the red striped cattle"; and the Sambur into D-en-nok-kidoo, "people of the black cattle," and D-en-ilaw-kidoo, "people of the white cattle."

[*] He thus confirms Merker's statement (pp. 16, 46-7) that the main clan was the enguenoo unit.

[] Spelling brought into uniformity with the Tucker system; uncertain spellings in [ ].

[] Hollis noted that when all clans combined in a raid, the D-Aiser and D-Siqoyo formed the D-en-ilaw-kidoo, and the D-Kokwanu and D-Kokiboi the D-en-nok-kidoo.

13.Huntingford E.-4 (see date) 1953 FL.12 blank FL.12

[illegible] each other's bullies. There are [illegible] 318

[illegible] Nandi when the Masai [illegible] [illegible] 319

[illegible] 320

[illegible] 321

[illegible] 322

[illegible] 323

[illegible] 324

[illegible] 325

[illegible] 326

[illegible] 327

[illegible] 328

[illegible] 329

[illegible] 330

[illegible] 331

[illegible] 332

[illegible] 333

[illegible] 334

[illegible] 335

[illegible] 336

[illegible] 337

[illegible] 338

[illegible]

001	810	[The mythological accounts of the origin of:
000	* 814	livestock and dogs	see category 100, p. 200
000	840	honey as a source of food	000
004	701	board game	001
411	704	club carved of wood	000
004	700	blood as a source of food	000
004	000	blacksmiths	004
000	000	clans and lineages	000-000
		counting and number words	000
		7-day week	000
		polygamy	000
		ni ribbons and chief	000
		circumcision	000
		double-edged knife	000
		women	000
		physicians	000
		quandaries for war on non- blacks	000-000.]

/15 cont./
the El will also have their own tribes, which will be briefly discussed at a later place.

Corresponding to the uniformity in language, the number words are the same among the Manuel and Wehnell, whereas the Ewé and El will have their own words for only a few numbers, but in general always make use of the ones used by the other two branches. One finds a complete correspondence for all these branches in their religious views, and the manner of circumcision ceremony among both sexes. The peculiar circumcision of the boys is practiced by no other people at all, with the exception of one lineage of the Twaga, closely related to the Manuel people. In birth and death, too, all these have the same customs, while in the rest of their customs one finds only unessential differences which are based solely on the difference in their external way of life. The most striking proof for the these branches' belonging together, however, lies in their dances.

The people as a whole are divided into three large tribes, the Ewé, the El ondolyon, and the El ondagaon, each of which is made up of a number of lineages, and every Ewé, as well as every El Ondi and El Ondagaon, is a representative of one of these lineages.

If we now concern ourselves further with the ethnography of the Manuel in particular, which is at the same time that of the Wehnell, we are thereby including the ethnographic traits of the entire people the showing of individual differences that have developed among the Wandembo in the course of time and under the influence of changed conditions will be reserved for the third part.

/16/ Second Part

I.

Tribes, lineages, sublineages. -- The El gbleh lineage. -- The chief: his rule and policy, magic medicine, genealogical tree, village, ceremonies, feeds. -- The sorcerer. -- The El kiboolo lineage. -- The rainmakers.

Every tribe (ná gbehoon) is divided, as has already been mentioned, into a number of lineages (ní gbeto, ní gbet). Among these, in turn, one distinguishes principal lineages (ní gbeto kook)

[illegible]

[illegible]

/[illegible] [illegible]/

• [illegible] and subclansman (or guest) gets. According to the religious legend, the relationship of the three tribes to one another is that of brothers, whereas the lineages of a tribe stand in relation to them as one to the father. This is the basis for the view that the persons belonging to a tribe stand in a kindred relationship to one another, for which reason, for example, marriage between members of the principal lineage and of one of its subclansmen, as well as between those of the subclansmen of the same principal lineage, is not permitted.

The division that seems to have the greatest claim to accuracy, according to continuous reports of the Ada, Wahsah, and Ideni, is the following:

Tribe: 'A-ada.

- Lineage: [illegible] gidah or [illegible] ulbanah.
  - [illegible] bangamah.
  - [illegible] bantimmi.
- Subclansmen: [illegible] bedja.
  - [illegible] ababu.
  - [illegible] ngalu.
  - [illegible] bandanga.
  - [illegible] ambijanu.
  - [illegible] bandja.
  - 'A-ang-ndji-ambagi.
  - [illegible] gamala.
  - [illegible] bandja.
- Lineage: [illegible] ngamali.
- Subclansmen: [illegible] ababu.

/[illegible]/ Tribe: [illegible] ulbanjau.

- Lineage: [illegible] ndjambu.
- Subclansmen: [illegible] bambali.
  - [illegible] bamandja.
  - [illegible] bandjau.
  - [illegible] bamalu.
  - [illegible] ndbajari.
  - [illegible] bambagau.

[illegible]

- [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Attached to the [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

- [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

- [illegible], also called [illegible].

Other [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible] or [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible] (see later IV, [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]
- [illegible]

[illegible]

The 'i ciuh and Ø ellerijan ro a certain extent tend to revert to the Ø ambgoon, whom they half-seriously, half-playfully also call 'Ø ddawe-gawk (1)

[illegible]

> 1. 'Ø ddawe, glossed, ro gawk, the mantle by joining the two words together the idea of the fire is supposed to be invoked.

or Big-with-rough-skin (2).

[illegible]

> 2. ; the lenes of the hard mutation rough = hard, of skin, the mark.

and, in contradistinction to them, designate themselves as Big with of mark. As the reason for this, rumbleh relates that the Ø ambgoon were once separated for a longer period of time from the other two tribes and, upon reuniting, made a bad impression because they no longer observed the divine commandment forbidding the killing of female animals for consumption. This gave rise to the above nicknames, which, freely translated, mean "greedy glutton."

The Ø badje and Ø gwd are not inherently designated as Ø ambgoon, a name formed after that of a war leader, Ø ambgo. As the reason for the combination, it was said that members of the two subtribesgroups were once notorious cattle thieves.

The most outstanding lineage, not only of the 'i ciuh tribe, but of the whole blood people, is the Ø ciuh, because both the family of the chief (ni ciuh) and that of the sorcerer (ni gawgh) belong to it. The designation "chief" is actually not quite correct, since the ni ciuh does not rule directly and does not exercise any real executive power. He rules only indirectly: the firm belief of his subjects in his prepotence and in his supernatural ability of sorcery gives him an influence over the decision of the people. Despotism and cruelty, such as we find among all Negro rulers, are foreign to him. He is less a ruler than a national saint or a patriarch, in whom the Wakanß and Ani also see their head. The people speak of his saintly person in timid awe, and no one would [illegible] [illegible] and then the [illegible] are also replaced by two possible pack-holders [illegible] [illegible], one tied on the other. These have the oval shape of a shield and consist of a wooden frame that is covered with a fitted sack of leather thongs or ropes. Otherwise they serve to bind the pack loaded on the donkey and everyone who [illegible]. Men are subjects; domed mat-rides take their place. Women are also unknown.

[illegible]

III.

(1010) Clans: family relationships. — Kinship designations. — Terms of address for relatives.

[illegible] Here every tribe and every lineage are descended from a tribal ancestor. Its tribal and lineage members consider themselves more or less distant relatives. The family, and's own as well as, [illegible], those of the father and of the mother, forms the closer relationship. The child follows the father's family (father right). Relatives are not responsible for punitive offenses, fines, or debts of a relative. Legally they need not support them either in connection with imprisonment or release from captivity; it is such a general custom. However, that probably no one ever evades it.

(1011) [illegible] The Maori language is poor in particular kinship designations: most of them are made up of words for father, mother, brother, sister, son, daughter, etc.

Father: [illegible]
Mother: [illegible]
Another wife of the father: [illegible].
Principal wife: [illegible], that is, the great woman, or [illegible], that is, the first in the bed.
Every other wife: [illegible].
Brother (1):

1. Brother and sister come from the same wife, half brother and half sister from different wives of the same father.

/[illegible]/

[illegible] father-in-law must return the bride price if he grants his daughter admission. If the woman who has run away has had children, her husband keeps them. In this case the woman's parents do not pay back anything.

[illegible] On the day the parents-in-law receive the bride price, the bridegroom gives the elder brother of the bride a year-old heifer, each of her other brothers and each sister of the bride a male head of cattle. This is only a gift of friendship and has nothing to do with the bride price. Exchange of wives occurs, but does not result in a valid marriage, any more than does wife stealing. On the other hand, it is not infrequent that the girl flees from her convent but as soon as she reaches marriageable age and runs to her lover. It often happens then that the girl's father sends a band of boys armed with sticks after her so that through the beating she will be induced to return. Since the boys act at the command of the old man, neither the bridegroom nor anyone else may hinder them. In order to protect the girl from such violence, only one course remains to the bridegroom, to leave the kraal with her immediately and move into the forest for a few days. With this he makes it understood that he will oppose with weapons anyone who might still venture to take his bride from him and at the same time he deprives the girl's father of any further right to object. As soon as the couple in the forest have consumed a cow, they return to the kraal, where, without further ceremony, they are recognized as married. Only the girls of the El magamo and El ilmelle do not have this possibility of self-help, for both lineages believe that a girl who goes to her lover in order to remain with him as his wife without her father's consent will die in only a few days after the flight.

[613]

In olden times the bride was not supposed to belong to the tribe of her bridegroom. The livestock epidemics of the last 25 years, however, which resulted in the death of many thousands of Masai, have modified this law somewhat. Accordingly, /[illegible]/ a man may marry a woman who belongs to his tribe, but not to his lineage, whereby in individual districts there is the further prerequisite that the girl came to him of her own free will and, after being sent back

[731]

[613]

[illegible]

[illegible] /

by him one or more times, returned to him again. Although such a legally perfectly valid marriage takes place, the bridegroom in this case often pays no bride price. Moreover, the bride is not supposed to be from the lineage of the bridegroom's mother, nor should her mother belong to the lineage of the bridegroom, or her father to his age-class (5)

5. Cf. Chapter 18 of this part.

[illegible] or of his age-class associates [illegible]. The bride may not be from an older age-class or the same one, or a much younger one than the bridegroom.

Younger brothers are not supposed to marry before the older brother, younger sisters not before the older sister, but as a rule they can buy permission for the marriage from them by paying one or a few head of cattle, in the place of which now, when the blood no longer is livestock, a couple of pots of honey often appear. A marriage between same brother and sister is not permitted; this is regarded as incest. Moreover, the man may not marry two women from the same lineage; it is perfectly in consistently to the same lineage that consanguinity is seen, and wives of a man may not be consanguineously related.

Moreover, a marriage between relatives of Mechemitiko and those of mechichemitiko is not permitted.

Widows [illegible], [illegible] or divorced women who have living men may not marry again, but live with men who belong to the age class of their deceased husband, if there is no other obstacle to marriage between them. Difference in standing is in practice an obstacle to marriage insofar as the poor man does not have enough livestock to pay the bride price for the daughter of a wealthy man. The man may not enter into a further marriage until at least two months have elapsed since his last wedding.

585 The wedding feast, allegedly in accordance with an ancient custom, is popularly set for the third day of the month. The wedding company consists of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple and the inhabitants of the kraal in which the bride's parents live.

[illegible]

/[illegible]/
of the fight, or until one party reaches the stone two or more times in succession. The fight ceases quite discontinue if the two district belonged to different lineages or even different villes. These

[illegible]

Ill. 92. Dance in the warrior kraal 5.

the two lineages or the two villes make war on each other (whether or they live in one district) a conflict that is equivalent to a small civil war arises. Members of these lineages or villes who live in a more distant district do not take part in the fight.

A war in which kraal kraal against kraal is called ol [illegible] (pl. ol [illegible]), war on [illegible] (o [illegible]) or a war between kraal and lineage ville is called.

/[illegible]/ In peacetime the warrior spends only the least time in his own kraal: for the most part he gads about on visits to neighboring ones, often several days' march away. Never may all leave the kraal together in peacetime: a guard of at least ten men always remains at home for the protection of the girls and the livestock, while the rest stop to visit at an ol [illegible] (farm kraal, see p. 111 above) or with other people.

[illegible]

[illegible] to divide as equal as possible; one section receives as much as the other, for Indians that a few head of cattle are distributed as a special reward and first to those warriors who killed as many as twelve, then to the brave[illegible] (if possible). Then to the one who captured the last head of cattle and to the [illegible] who were slaved [illegible] and finally to the wounded, each of others is entitled to the head of cattle that he carried with the blood gushing out of the wound. The number of cattle that the individual of the one mentioned receives, except for the last who is entitled to only one head of cattle, is determined by the size of the heavy and the proportion of the size of the heavy's parts according to the above order of succession. /[illegible]/ Every warrior strives as quickly as possible to drive off from the others his share of the heavy, for each one also tries to take along with it one or more head not belonging to him. This, of course, gives rise to another brawl, in which there are almost always several wounded men. If the heavy is too small for an equal division, the warriors form two parties, on the one side the Ki warriors, on the other the Ts'ai and Ki [illegible]. The former have as slaughtering cry the word [illegible] = the red cattle, the latter the word [illegible] = the black cattle, after which they are also sometimes named (for example, I heard it in magic). Ki fight decides which one of the two parties receives the entire heavy.

At home in the lewis it was very quiet during the warriors' absence. After the farewell, those remaining behind were home, each somewhat heavy-hearted in the society about a [illegible] or lover, which, however, we were more or less pacified into the background by the expectation of the spoils that they would bring back. Soon after the farewell the old man was again observing in quiet contemplation in front of his hut and chasing away from his face and head, also as before, with a fly switch [illegible] [illegible] (Fig. [illegible]) consisting of a [illegible]'s tail, the flies constituting a verbatim plague in the lewis hut. Then he took a hair from the switch and made a knot in it for each of his sons who had gone to war.

Fig. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] When one is alone one lose the exercise
[illegible] lose the letter are brought with the lessen, [illegible] characters of expressions of weakness. He [illegible] was not to be seen. The only per sense that [illegible] girl is present at a my darling, while the gi
[illegible] my friends, so she was high social. I love [illegible] the exercise explained. Not the of growth. a [illegible] (illegible) I don't see or sight).

[illegible] Out with the girls out
[illegible] one would expect so [illegible] here, too. this does not [illegible] the exercise gives the [illegible] of cells less of class but a [illegible] you very much, to which [illegible] we don't see (loosely

[illegible]

[illegible]

The blackbirds. — Their very breeds. — [illegible] social position. — Attitude toward the blackbirds. — Wrong [illegible]. — Tools. — Low connection. — Exclusion. — Blackbirds' [illegible] prefers their prices. — Wise dressing.

The breeds of the blackbirds be [illegible] lower breeds. It is not correct to designate [illegible] cities, since there are blackbirds [illegible] cities and also in all towages, except the [illegible] single cities are a single towage counter [illegible]
They form a caste of their own and are the [illegible] despised and detested, the [illegible], where [illegible] whenever if one did not need them so urgently [illegible]
the trade has been handed down from father [illegible] upon the calling after his marriage, [illegible] day dreamt oneself from the caste by our [illegible] one who comes from a blackbirds family [illegible] no matter whether he works as a blackbirds [illegible] land — which happens only very exceptional [illegible] not belong to the blackbirds caste permission [illegible] since the blackbirds's trade, he will, so he [illegible] with work, but neither he himself nor his [illegible] as blackbirds or counted to the blackbirds [illegible]
[illegible] in the vicinity of other [illegible]

[illegible] apart from the true [illegible]
[illegible] as a blackbirds [illegible]
[illegible] to all these [illegible]
[illegible] and neither a [illegible]
[illegible] of blackbirds. [illegible]
[illegible] of the blacks, the [illegible]
[illegible] would prefer not to [illegible]
[illegible] Poor ancient times [illegible]
[illegible] to see, who only pra[illegible]
[illegible] as [illegible]. One con[illegible]
[illegible] the trades [illegible]
[illegible] ways remain [illegible]
[illegible] or not. If, on the other [illegible]
[illegible] — a blacks who does [illegible]
[illegible] or temporarily pra[illegible]
[illegible] case, also be regarded [illegible]
[illegible] weakness will be despised [illegible]
[illegible] case. A blackbirds level [illegible]
[illegible] bring the lower bad

[illegible] /

[illegible] revenge goes first against the murderer or, if he has fled and is not available, against his brother or any one of the family of the murderer. Usually blood revenge is terminated by compensation (weqidi), the amount of which the murderer negotiates with the avenger through a friend. As a rule it consists of [illegible] cattle — now fewer in many cases — which the murderer, together with his people and his fellow lineage and tribal members living in the vicinity, that is, in the same district, gather together. The avenger is free to accept or reject the compensation. /[illegible]/ Blood revenge is not carried out longer than one or two months after the murderer compensation has taken to place.

[illegible] The head of the ol ellemi is regarded as a place of refuge. If the murderer has reached his dead here, blood revenge may no longer be carried out on him, though he remains obligated for the payment of the compensation. Murder committed on a married man, a girl, or a woman is never expiated by blood revenge, but by a fine. Until the payment of the compensation or fine the murderer is called el ellehari (pl. el ellehi). The murder of a blacksmith is unpunished. On the other hand, if a blacksmith murders or even only negligently kills a blood, a band of blood consisting of married men, women, and boys immediately sets out to kill several blacksmiths.

[illegible] Negligent homicide is expiated only by fines. There are very minor if the perpetrator and the one killed belong to one lineage. If they belong to different lineages of the same tribe, every male member of the lineage (women, married men) and every married female member of the lineage must pay a cow. Of this livestock the brother of the one killed receives one half, while the other half is distributed equally to his fellow lineage members. The fine is paid and distributed analogously if perpetrator and victim belong to different tribes. If a woman kills a man through negligence, she will also be killed in most districts. On the other hand, if a man has killed a woman, he either remains unpunished or is given a beating by the brother of the woman killed. In a few districts no distinction is made as to whether the perpetrator acted intentionally or negligently, for example, in Lehs, where blood revenge is also only very rarely used.

[illegible]

[illegible] A person who arranges outside man, in some direction, pay a head of cattle to the one who permitted him been carrying out his intention.

[illegible] Kidnapping and sale do not occur. Theft of cattle often leads to a fight if the thief and the person robbed belong to different bands lying far apart and at the same time to different tribes. Among fellow tribal and local members the theft of a head of cattle is avenged for with a fine of up to ten head of cattle, that of a sheep or a goat with the payment of a head of cattle. Anyone who has eaten meat of a stolen head of livestock, even if he did not know that it was stolen, must contribute to the payment of the fine. If the stolen head of cattle is found still alive and is returned to the owner, this acts in such a mitigating way that in most cases no punishment at all takes place (8).

> 8. Sad tekere /Tiwalen/ Ili, 1 and 4: If anyone steals an ox or a sheep and slaughters it or sells it, he shall remove five head of cattle for an ox and four head of small livestock for a sheep. If the one stolen is actually found alive in his hands /the Ger. Hand, "skin," here evidently should be Hand, "hand"/, from an ox donkey to sheep, he shall remove double.

One who acts as accomplice in a theft pays half the fine, while the thief has to raise the other half. One who steals a spear must return it and is given a beating as punishment. If the spear had already been sold before the one robbed discovered the thief, the latter must pay the former a cow, while the spear remains with the present owner. Theft of a shield is punished with the payment of a female goat. One who kills a stranger's livestock without stealing it must provide a replacement.

[illegible] The death penalty is given for treason in war and for deliberate incendiarism. Negligent incendiarism is not punished.

174 160-200 miles airline north of Western Masailand, and 174 it is a desert at present. A tribal elder called 773 Maasinda found a way to climb the escarpment at the south of Kieru and some of the tribe then moved into the Kenya (174) Highlands. The legendary Maasinda had six sons who became the founders of the present six Masai clans.

The tribe gradually moved south. At Ngong, near Nairobi, according to their traditions they found a Heaven-born child who became their first Laibon 174 or Medicine Man (Hollis, 1905). Fosbrooke (1948) dated the arrival at Ngong at 1640 on the basis of the geneology of the Laibons founded by that legendary first child. During the next 150 years the Masai moved over 300 miles airline southward.

131 1800-1890: By 1800 a few Masai had made what 175 proved to be the tribe's maximum penetration into Tanganyika but it was not until about 1880 that they had completed their occupation of what is now the Masai Steppe in Tanganyika (Fig. 1). [1] There had been constant warfare and raiding involved in this settlement, and the margins of Masailand fluctuated somewhat. For a time the Masai occupied the area immediately south of the Ngorongoro Highlands, as well as lands near Mt. Kilimanjaro and Mt. Meru that are now in other hands.

[1] [See p. 9a.--Analyst]

Their!
*233 livestock, described below, consist of herds of cattle, [231] sheep, goats and donkeys. The Masai way of life revolves around the grazing and water requirements of their livestock.

621
561 Their principal units of social organization, as they affect this discussion, are sections, age grades,
614 villages, and families. Clans have an important place
177 in ethnological discussions and in some areas they
178 determine matters such as water rights (Fosbrooke, 1948). Our impression is that throughout most of Western Masailand the concept of clans is of more ethnological than ecological interest. One basic reason for this is the effect of the Government administration in Western Masailand.

..... With the physical and social upheavels in both Kenya and Tanganyika from the 1880's through about 1920, the establishment of African District Councils (District-wide governing bodies), creation of the park and conservation unit, and various development projects, the clan and other social units have been greatly disrupted. Grant (1954, 1957) describes this effect in some detail for the Masai in the former boundaries of the Serengeti National Park.

[i.e., the Masai.--Analyst]

614 634 (a) Section: A section is defined by Fosbrooke (1948:7) as: "a territorial unit of the Masai, the members of which regard themselves as owners of the waters and grazing grounds, to the exclusion of other sections. Such a unit is called ol oshe, pl. il oshon. Alone or in groups the sections function as units in war, in allegiance to a particular Laibon, and in the performance of certain tribal ceremonies; in general they possess a sense of solidarity which expresses itself in regarding members of other sections to a certain extent as strangers."

131 614 634 Most of the Masai in Western Masailand in Kenya are of the Purko section. The Loita section live on the Loita Plateau. Three small sections, the Moitanic, Uasin Gishu, and Siria, live above the Siria [433] Escarpment. The first two are at least partly cultivators. In Tanganyika, the Serenget section occupies the Serengeti Plain (which was named for them), and the Salai section lives in the area between the Serengeti Plain and the Rift, including the Ngorongoro Highlands and the 614 634 southern Loita Plateau. There are a number of sub-sections and divisions of these main sections. The original section organization has been much altered. Grant (1954) describes in detail these alterations for Tanganyika.

221 *233 Masai was not an unoriented wandering but it was instead a regular seasonal movement from one established area to another, and back. In this sense the movements of the Masai fit the definition of animal migration -- "seasonal and regular passages..." given by Bourlière (1955:203). Each social group apparently had a dry season water supply near which they maintained bomas, as described above. In the wet seasons some of the tribe took the livestock away to take advantage of the more abundant [614] grass, and water in other areas. Since there were well defined areas belonging to or controlled by different clans or sections (Hollis, 1905), the wet season movements of the individual Masai must have been relatively circumscribed. This is the case at present in Western Masailand. Each village has an area where it sends its livestock during the wet season in addition [628] to the water near the base boma. Although these wet season areas may be changed periodically, there is some sort of agreement between different villages regarding division of available grazing, and disputes arise when one village's area is invaded by another.

*233 It appears to us that both in former times and at present the absolute limits to the numbers of livestock a Masai could keep and the pattern of his grazing

12:Dundas G-5 (ca. 1900) 1908 FL6 Dorobo FL6
Kikuyu FL10
Masai FL12

seen amongst them, and it is not difficult with a little practice to tell the particular division to which a Kikuyu belongs. Thus the people of Iriaini* have pronounced Masai features, and many of their chiefs are pure or half Masai by birth. This is due to the fact that when the Kikuyu invaded that district about forty years ago they found it occupied by the remnants of the Aikipiak and Dala-le-kutuk Masai, who owing to famines, raids, and other causes were too much weakened to resist them. The two tribes therefore settled down peaceably side by side, and by intermarrying formed one people.

Again, many of the Kikuyu clans claim descent from certain particular tribes; thus, the Anjiro and Chakameyo clans say they are descended from the Shuka, the Akkachiko and Achera from the Kamba, the Aesaka from the Chaga of Kilimanjaro. Anyone enquiring into the descent of those present at a meeting of Kikuyu elders will find an extraordinary number of different tribes represented. One is a Maeru, another a Chaga, a third a Masai, a fourth a Shuka, a fifth a Dorobo, and so on.

The actual Kikuyu themselves are said to have come from two tribes called the Shagishu and Ngembe, both of which still exist as tribes somewhere beyond the Maeru country, north of Mount Kenia.

I cannot speak from experience of the Shagishu, but I have met a native of Ngembe whose appearance reminded me strongly of a Kikuyu. This man, who said he had never seen a white man before, told me that his country lay beyond Maeru and that he had come here to visit relatives. These same Ngembe are believed to have been originally Dorobo, and Karuri, one of the paramount chiefs of the Kikuyu, who is himself a Dorobo, claims descent from them. The Ngembe of the present day are probably analogous to the Kikuyu, i.e., they are a mixture of Dorobo and some other tribe or tribes.

Many absolutely foreign tribes have had colonies in Kikuyu for shorter or longer periods. A tribe of coast people called Digo are stated to have lived for many years on the Tana River, in what is now known as the Fort Hall District.† Somali, Galla, Borana, or some other similar people effected a very strong footing in Kikuyu some fifty to seventy years ago. According to tradition they belonged to the Barabio Lokulala, Sigirai, and Endaramuroni clans,‡ and they had settlements at Nyeri, Naivasha, Kijabe, Punda Milia, and generally all over the Kikuyu country.

In those days the Aikipiak Masai occupied the Laikipia Plateau, the Purko Masai were at Naivasha, the Kaputiei in the Kidong Valley, and the Tarosero at Iriaini. The Dorobo, who were still the dominant tribe, occupied with the Kikuyu the present Kikuyu country.

With all these tribes the Somali or Galla lived in a state of chronic warfare.

The Laruesa, a Kikuyu clan, and the Atwa, a Dorobo clan, unable to hold out any longer, migrated. The former have, it is said, preserved to this day their tribal identity and customs, and are still to be found somewhere in the vicinity of Kilimanjaro§; the latter near Mombasa.‖

The remaining tribes appealed for assistance against their oppressors to a great medicine man called Supi (or, to give him his correct name, Supeet), the grandfather of Lenana, the present Masai chief.

---

* The name Iriaini is said to be derived from 'N-Darosero ainei, my Tarosero women. Tarosero is the name of the most important clan in this particular section of the Masai.

† Mr. Hollis informs me that the Segeja, who have intermarried with the Digo, a sub-tribe of the Wa-Nyika, have a tradition to the effect that they once lived on the Tana River.

‡ Barabio is the Kikuyu, Sigiriaish the Masai for Somali and Galla.

§ Possibly the Arusha, who live on Mount Meru in German East Africa.

‖ By Mombasa the up-country native often means the coast generally. According to Mr. Hollis the Wa-Sanya call themselves, and are known to the Galla as, Watwa; sing., Wanya.

● 616

[The "Black Cattle" and "Red Bulls" have previously been referred to as sub-clans (see 1: Hollis, this file); therefore all data in this source pertinent to these groups will be found in category 614, even though Bernardi refers to them as moieties.]

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

561
624

But the launon is held in great respect by his age-mates, and any demands that he makes on them must be fulfilled. It is stated that he is the only official whose order must be obeyed. In discussing this with an elder, I pointed out that this should give the office great political importance, in reply to which the elder indicated that such did not necessarily follow, as " we can always tell the launon what order to give !"

Hollis states that the launon is responsible to the laibon for the appearance of the moran in case of war; this may well have been so in the old days, for it is generally admitted to-day that he is responsible [302] for the smart turn-out of the moran. Thus unless in cases of sickness or mourning, a moran is not supposed to cut off his pig-tail without the launon's permission. It is alleged, however, that the office is losing its status and authority, for whereas the Dareto age launon is supposed to have gone on frequent 'tours of inspection' and to have inflicted many fines, nowadays many Kisale shave their heads without consulting their launon.

During elderhood, by virtue of his previous position, the launon is still held in respect, though no specific duties seem to attach to him. He may perhaps play some part at the unoto and ngeherr ceremonies of the age next-but-one- below, by virtue of the ol piron relationship.

Another official chosen at the unoto is called ol buro engene, who splits the skin of the ceremonially slaughtered ox. He is given four or five cattle as a fee, and in after life is held in respect, but appears to have no duties.

At the ngeherr ceremony, an official, the Losorutya, is chosen in respect of the whole generation, whose position corresponds to that of the launon at the unoto. As there is only one ngeherr ceremony for all sections of the Masai, so there is only one losurutya. No duties, but considerable respect, appear to attach to the office in after life.

CLAN ORGANIZATION CHART.

561
614
616

GROUPS	CLANS	SUB-CLANS
Endaloshi	Englishome	Olgilata
	1. Engaje Masai.
LAISER or L'OOROKITENG (right hand)	LAISER	Engidong Parkinet Parsingo Engaje-Nanuki or L'oodo-gishu Partimaroi Parsa Buko
	LUGHUMAI	Sitayo Keri-ngishu

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

561
614
616

MOLELIAN or L'OODOMONGI (left hand)	MOLELIAN	Masangwa Moingo L'oorok-kishu Parserengo Mukulere Parsindei Kivuyuni
	TAROSERO	Nanaapowaru Lais
	MOKASEN	Loiger Kiveron Pirda
	MAMASITA	Munai Jagei Kuyuni Paralangat Maravashi

II. Il Mingana. (Laitayok)

LAITAYOK (attached to right hand)	LAITAYOK	Sesoikineji Kisikon Parsais Paramangi Makuperia Lema Mosejwa Pojos Mohono
	MARUMAI	Parsele Maraani Leberet

Square brackets indicate exogamous groups; when not shown, sub-clans may inter-marry.

SECTION V. CLAN AND FAMILY MATTERS.

A. Clans — the clan chart — ownership of waters — areas peculiar to certain clans — clan responsibility.

The chart reproduced above explains the system more clearly than a lengthy description, but a few explanatory notes are necessary. The true Masai, i.e. those who regard themselves as descendants of Maasinda, divide themselves into two main groups (indaloishin, sing. endaloshi), the Laiser or Loorokiteng (black bullock) who are regarded as the right hand of the tribe, and the Molelian or Loodomongi (blood-red bull), the left hand. [619]

These main groups are in turn divided into clans and sub-clans, called on the chart engishome and olgilata respectively. Some informants however reverse the terms. The clans are patrilineal, i.e. a child takes the father's clan They are also exogamous, i.e. a man may not marry 614

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

The influence of the

791 medicine man is due to his supposed power of prophecy and
787 divination. No explanation is offered of this power, nor does it appear that the Laibons are believed to enjoy the acquaintance and assistance of definite spiritual beings; but they can foretell the future by such methods as throwing stones out of a horn, inspecting the entrails of slaughtered animals, interpreting dreams, and delivering oracles when intoxicated with honey wine. Great, however, as is their influence, it does not appear that either among the Masai or [171] the Nandi, where similar institutions prevail, they have ever attempted to assume a position like that of the various small sultans of the coast or the kings to the west of Lake Victoria.

791 The most celebrated of these medicine men was Mbatian, the father of the present holder of the office, Lenana, who died about 1890. He is celebrated for having prophesied outbreaks of cattle plague and small-pox, which duly came to pass; and also for having foretold the arrival of white people. It is generally said that he bade the Masai be friendly to them, but Mr. Hollis could not find any corroboration of this statement. His death was followed by 173 a disputed succession. There is considerable discrepancy as to 791 the details of the story, but, according to the versions taken down by Mr. Hollis (p. 327), Mbatian told his eldest son
662 Sendeyo that on the morrow he would invest him with the insignia of a Laibon, of which the principal is an iron club. Lenana, the younger son, overheard, and presented himself before his father very early the next morning. Mbatian, who was very aged and had only one eye, behaved much like Isaac in similar circumstances, and gave his younger son the insignia, saying 'Thou shalt be great among thy brothers and among all the people.' In any case, Lenana succeeded,
791 and was accepted as Laibon by all the Masai except the Loita.
578 This created a division in the tribe, and as it roughly corresponded with the division between British and German 619 territory, Sendeyo was long regarded as the chief of the German Masai and Lenana of the British. But in 1902 Sendeyo quarrelled with the German administration, made his peace with his brother, and came over to the British Protectorate.

776 The religious ideas of the Masai, as collected by Mr. Hollis, are vague and unformulated. The commonest word for God is Eng-aï, which it will be observed is a substantive with a feminine article. Eng-aï appears to be used either quite indefinitely and impersonally of remarkable natural phenomena

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

[P. 260]

PART IV

'OROT OO-'L-MAASAE

DIVISIONS OF THE MASAI PEOPLE

619 101 The Masai race is divided into two sections, the one entirely pastoral and the other partially agricultural. The pastoral Masai call themselves Il-Maasae, whilst their brethren are known as 'L-Oikop or Il-Lumbwa.

101 614 634 The Masai are further divided genealogically into clans and families, and geographically into districts and sub-districts, as shown in the following tables:

Clans.	Families[1].
'L-Aiser.	'N-Gidoñgi (the medicine-man's horns), Il-Parkeneti (the counters ?), Il-Lughumae, Il-partimaro.
Il-Meñgana.	'L-Aitayok, 'Siria (the designs ?), Il-Marumae (the priers), Il-Makuperia (the flesh on the ribs).
Il-Mokesen.	Il-Mokesen-aate, Il-Partalale (the long-sighted ones), Il-Tarōsero, Il-Kiporon (the scars ?)[2], Il-Tanap-ōwaru (the lion-killers).
Il-Mōlelyan.	Il-Mōlelyan-aate, Il-Mamasita, Il-Pojos, Il-Kipuyōni, Il-Moshōno, Il-Masañgua, Il-Mokorere.

Whenever representatives of the four clans take part in a raid, it is usual to refer to the Aiser and Meñgana clans as 'L-oodo-kīshu (the blood-red cattle), and the Mokesen and Mōlelyan clans as 'L-oorook-kīshu (the black cattle).

101 634

Districts.	Sub-Districts.
Kaputiei or Kaptiei.	'L-oodo-kilani (the blood-red cloths), Matapato, Il-kūk-oonyokyo (the red trees[3]), Il-dala-le-kutuk (the fast talkers).
En-aiposha (the lake).	Purko, Kinūkop (the burning country ?), Il-damat, 'L-oita.
Kisongo.	Moipo (the Pangani River), 'M-baashi (the valleys), 'K-oonyokyo (the red soils), Em-bughoi (name of a tree[4] and light yellow), Il-launyi (the mistakes),

[1] Some of these families are again divided into smaller sub-sections.

[291] [2] The members of the family called Il-Kiporon are said to be snake-charmers and rain-makers.

[3] Embelia kilimandscharica, Gilg.

[4] Terminalia sp.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

II – TRIBAL DIVISIONS AND OTHER SOCIAL ELEMENTS OF THE MASAI

101 619 The name Masai covers a group of related tribes in British East Africa. The linguistic classification of BRYAN (see Bibl.) distinguishes five Masai tribes:

1. The Samburu, north east of Lake Baringo, in the Rift Valley and Northern Frontier Provinces of Kenya. They are sometimes called Burkeneji, a derivative from il-loo-iboor-keneji, the people of the white goats. They are pastoral. We know very little of their social organisation as they have never been studied on the field.

2. The Njamusi or Njempe. They live close to Lake Baringo, and are mainly agricultural. DUNDAS,[1] states that " they are survivors of a Samburu tribe called Il Digio ". What we know of the Njamusi is practically limited to the fact that they exist.

3. The Kapiti or Kaputiei. They live mainly in Kenya around Narok, Ngong and Kajiado. Some are found in Tanganyika. All are pastoral. HOLLIS' standard work on the Masai refers mainly to this tribe.

4. The Kisongo, found mainly in Tanganyika around Loliondo and Mondul. There are a few in Kenya. All are pastoral. The other standard work on the Masai by MERKER describes, for the most part, the Kisongo.

5. The Lumbwa. The name means " farmers ", and is correctly applied only to the agricultural Masai. It is wrongly used also for the Kipsigis. The Lumbwa are found mainly in Tanganyika near Lake Natron, Lake Manyara, and around Arusha and Mt. Meru. They are called by the other Masai Il-Oikop, a name of despisal.[2]

197 According to BRYAN and TUCKER, all these Masai tribes are linguistically distinguished by " very slight dialectal differences ".

[1] DUNDAS, The Wamanga and other Tribes of the Elgon district, British East Africa in J. R. A. I., 43, 1913, p. 50.

[2] There are other names which do not indicate any special tribe, such as Il-Arusha, applied to the Masai living in or around Arusha. They are called Wa-Arusha by the neighbouring Bantu. Meru is the name for the Masai living on the slopes of Mt. Meru. They should be distinguished from the A-Meru of Kenya, Central Province. Kwafi is the Swahili term for the Masai, but it is especially applied to the Lumbwa of Kilosa District in Tanganyika. We may add that the Kikuyu and the A-Meru speak of the Masai (Mathai, Matae, respectively) as Okabi.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

175 permanent by the present administrative arrangement, but were not established by it. The land which divides the Samburu in the north from the Kapiti in the south of Kenya, was once the home of the Laikipiak and the Uasin Gishu Masai. In those days, Masailand was a continuous strip of land stretching over the plains south of Mt. Kilimanjaro and Mt. Meru up to the shores of Lake Rudolph. At the end of 19th century a great cattle plague and, even more, civil wars (the Kapiti versus the Laikipiak and Uasin Gishu) wrought havoc among the latter, who were almost destroyed. The few remnants have been absorbed by other Masai tribes, especially the Kapiti and the Kisongo. The Laikipiak plains west of Nanyuki which in 1904 had first been set aside as a special reserve (the Northern Masai reserve), were subsequently declared open to European settlement, and by 1911 Agreement the Southern Masai Reserve was enlarged into what is now the Extra Provincial District of the Masai in Kenya Colony. [6]

[131] [235] [669]

* * *

631 A comparative analysis of the literature shows the existence of three graded territorial units, the major and the minor territorial sections, and the village. A character common to the first two sections is the absence of a clear limit or boundary. The sections are spoken of in terms of watering and grazing rights. The nomadic aspect of Masai life is chiefly responsible for this territorial vagueness. The absence of any centralised authority to check people and cattle's transhumance is another important cause of the vagueness of Masai territorial organisation.

634 101 619 The major territorial section is made up by the area in which the movements of a full tribe usually take place. The existence of [6] SANDFORD, An Administrative and Political History of the Masai Reserve, London 1919, Appendix; K. L. C. E., p. 188. One may note that the Uasin Gishu and the Laikipiak, together with the Siria and the Lumbwa were despised as inferior, for they were not considered as "pure Masai" by the other tribes who regarded themselves as descendants of Maasinda. See FOSBROOKE, p. 7. This ill-feeling may explain in part, the fury with which the Kapiti fought against the Laikipiak and the Uasin Gishu.

[186]

In December 1950. I visited the Ndigirri Dorobo at Dol Dol on the Mukogodo Hills, some 50 miles north west of Nanyuki. They claim to have been dependent on the Laikipiak Masai, and they survived the slaughter thanks to their seclusion in the forests. Their present outlook seems to be entirely Masai. The names of their age-classes are consonant with those of the Masai.

2; Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

634
101
619

these sections is evidenced at a superficial level by the adoption of a common tribal name. But members of a major section are more closely bound by their social, ceremonial and military relationships based on their common age-system. FOSBROOKE, [7] who did not consider the major territorial section as a unit of Masai territorial organisation, tries to explain as follows the Kisongo major section: "the majority of the Masai in Tanganyika regard themselves as Kissongo, but Kissongo is a very difficult term to define, for it is neither a sub-tribe, nor yet, strictly speaking, a section. The nearest definition is probably "that group of sections which follows the Mondul laibon". [8] See: below laibon's relationship to Masai social organisation. The early fieldresearchers, MERKER and HOLLIS, recorded the major territorial sections which they calle 'Provinzen' and 'Districts', respectively. MERKER, [9] gave their number as three: Kisongo, Loita and Ol Bruggo. HOLLIS, [10] counted five: Kaputiei (Kapite plains) En aiposha (Naivasha), Kisongo (south and West Kilimanjaro), Uasin Gishu and 'L-Aikipiak. He noted that the last two had practically ceased to exist. The point is also confirmed by S. L. HINDE. [11] The term en-gop, pl. in-gwapi, which HOLLIS translates as "the land, the country", seems to apply to these major sections. Their number corresponds, at present, to the linguistic groups we have reported.

The minor territorial section has been made the subject of special analysis by FOSBROOKE. He defines it as "a territorial unit of the Masai, the members of which regard themselves as owners of the waters and grazing grounds, to the exlusion of other sections. Such a unit is called ol osho, pl. il oishon. Alone or in groups the sections function as units in war, in allegiance to a particular laibon, and in performance of certain tribal ceremonies; in general they possess a sense of solidarity which expresses itself in regarding members of other sections to a certain extent as strangers". [12]

The absence of definite geographical limits and the stress on water and grazing rights have been noted. The laibon's or prophet, [791]

[7] FOSBROOKE, An Administrative Survey of the Masai Social System, in T. N. and R., 1948, p. 9.

[8] See below laibon's relationship to Masai social organisation.

[9] MERKER, Die Masai: ethnographische Monographie eines ostafrikanischen Semitenvolkes, Berlin 1904, p. 8.

[10] HOLLIS, The Masai, Oxford 1905, pp. 260, 290.

[11] HINDE, The Last of the Masai, London 1901, pp. 91, 97.

[12] FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 7 ss.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

634 791 position in connection with the nature of the major and minor territorial sections is questionable. FOSBROOKE has put into evidence the marginal significance of the laibon for Masai social organisation. He has also shown how wrong it is to ascribe to the prophet's institution a political function. The prophet can only obtain a personal political influence which is his, and not of his office. Now, to describe the laibon's institution as the point of allegiance of territorial sections' members is tantamount to making the prophet a central political authority which he is certainly not. The important point in the nature of the territorial sections is members' consciousness of their strength and sufficiency as to be entitled to keep tribal ceremonies of their own.[13] In studying the Laitayok minor section FOSBROOKE brings that home: "in some areas they (the Laitayok) have been absorbed by the section amongst whom they resided, and thus eventually they came to be regarded as a clan; in other areas they were sufficiently numerous to enable them to retain their own grazing grounds, and to justify their holding tribal ceremonies of their own". FOSBROOKE insists on the fortuitous origin of the territorial minor sections. The point becomes obvious if the nomadism of the Masai and the abselce of any centralised authority are kept in mind. People remain in a definite place only for as long as [221] they find good grazing and water for their cattle, but they move as soon as these fail, thus breaking up their territorial allegiance.

634 101 619 The following is a tentative list of minor territorial sections deducted from the literature:

SAMBURU.	1. Pusigishu	4. L'Orogishu	7. Longeli
	2. Masola	5. Doiju	8. Nyabarei
	3. Lukumai	6. Mwesi	9. Loimusi

NJAMUSI. According to DUNDAS,[14] there are only two villages: Njemps Kubwa or Njemps Liabori – down stream; and Njemps Ndogo or Njemps Lekepir – up stream.

KAPITI.	1. Kaputiei or Kapiti	3. Ladokilarsi	6. Purko
		4. Kakonyuke	7. Loita
	2. Damat	5. Dalalakotok	8. Matapatu

[13] One should note here that tribal ceremonies are ceremonies connected with the institution of age-sets, a fact wich sleds light on the integrating power of the age-system. See BERNARDI, The age-system of the Nilo-Hamitic Peoples, in Africa, 22, 1952, pp. 316 ss.

[14] DUNDAS, Notes on the Tribes inhabitating the Baring district, in J. R. A. I., 1910, p. 49.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

 634

KISONGO.	1. Kisongo	2. Sigirari	5. Salei or Saleh
	a. Kiteto	3. Laitokitok	6. Laitayok
	b. Moiba	4. Siria
LUMBWA.	1. Nguruman	2. Serenget	3. Engaruka

101
619

The villages, eng ang, pl. ing angite, is the minimal territorial unit. Villages are distributed within the minor sections. JOHNSTON,[15] had already noted that "they generally range within certain districts". A village is the residence of one or more elders with his or their wives and cattle. A man after his marriage does not live in the same village as his father, unless the latter has become senile and unable to cater for himself. 621 [591] [888]

The internal structure of the village is based on the gatesystem. This consists in a proper arrangement of the house on the sides of the village's gates. The village consists of a large yard enclosed by a thorny fence with gates opening at opposite sides. The house are built on the right and left sides of each gate, every gate with its houses belonging to a single elder. The usual arrangement is as follows: the first house on the gate's right is the dwelling of the owner's first wife; the first house on the left side is that of his second wife; the second house on the right side is that of his third wife; and the same alternating order is followed if marries more wives. The central yard is reserved for cattle. The elder's cattle are allotted to each of his wives according to her rank in the house. Cattle in possession of one side of the gate cannot be inherited by the other side. When inheritance takes place it is with great care that one tries to avoid cattle interchange.[16] The gate system, observes FOSBROOKE,[17] is an ideal, and "a symmetrically arranged gate is seldom found in practice". When people move in search of better grassland, the village is not destroyed, but simply evacuated. During the owner's absence the houses may be occupied by other temporary tenants. At the reverse migration the owner comes back to his old village if this is not irreparably decayed, and it is agreed by custom that any foreigner who might have found shelter in the house must vacate the place to the original owner. 621 361 [928] [166]

Another type of Masai village should be mentioned here. It is 621

[15] JOHNSTON, The Uganda Protectorate, London 1904, p. 810.
[16] See especially MERKER, l. c., pp. 27 s.
[17] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 44.

where unarmed natives of the neighbouring tribes, whose duty or pleasure took them into the Masai Reserve, have been wantonly murdered, and the catalogue also includes numerous instances of thefts of stock from neighbouring farms and territories. An investigation of the record of each of these cases will show that in a small number only of incidents has the perpetrator of the crime been brought to book. The probability that the commission of a stock-theft or a murder can be performed by a Masai of the "Muran" class without the knowledge of his associates is so slight that it has been found necessary to accept the principle that the responsibility for the surrender of criminals traced to any particular area rests on all the members of the section inhabiting that area. This system is in vogue throughout all the native districts of the Protectorate and is generally employed with a fair measure of success, but a similar success does not attend its application to the Masai Reserve, and this reserve is, in fact, the area to which the great majority of impositions of fines under the Collective Punishments Ordinance, 1909, have been applied, the refusal of the Masai to assist in tracing the criminal rendering it necessary to utilise the provisions of the Ordinance to effect the punishment of the whole section involved. The blooding of a spear by the murder of an unprotected wanderer or the theft of stock guarded perhaps by children is a survival of the traditions which necessitated the "Muran" to prove their manhood during the period in the standing army or the "L-Ayok" to prove their worth before circumcision. Such acts may not be regarded at the present day as valiant, but it seems that the criminal's associates have not yet come to look on them as reprehensible, and the Masai, on account of their wealth, do not possess the same dread of a collective fine as is felt by certain of the poorer tribes. Under any circumstances, the "Muran" offer no assistance in the tracking down of the criminal and the elders, though professing detective zeal, are powerless to intervene. The attitude of the section involved in such cases is one of surprise and listlessness—they never know anything—and the collective fine which may ensue has not hitherto had the result of discouraging the adoption of such an attitude.

698* 694 698* 694 692 561 681

It will generally be found that fines of this nature have been levied on Companies or "Sirits" of different clans, and, sometimes, on all the members of a clan or division. There is no case on record in which a collective punishment has been imposed on the Masai tribe as a whole. It is therefore necessary to refer shortly to the divisions into which the Masai, who are all of one tribe, are divided by their traditions and customs, and to note also the divisions into which they are divided in practice for the purposes of the administration of the reserve. A description of the traditional divisions of the Masai people is given in Mr. Hollis' Book on the Masai, pp. 260 and 261, but the names which are now in use to denote the divisions of the tribe within the reserve do not exclusively follow either the genealogical or the geographical divisions which are there set out. The Officer-in-Charge of the Masai reserve is endeavouring to confine the members of each division to certain areas set apart for them as locations, and this step will have the effect of reconciling the name given to a division with the locality in which it is found, thus tending to perpetuate a convenient form of nomenclature. Divisions.

619 621 634

Whatever may have been the original system on which these divisions were formed, it appears that there is a really marked clan feeling between them, and several incidents are recorded which disclose the presence of mutual distrust and strained relationship between the divisions, while interference by one division with another is keenly resented. These divisions form the basis of the tribal organisation of the Masai as it exists to-day and each division has its own Council of Elders. In the recently constituted "Masai Council," one elder, or more, has been chosen to represent each division and the Council so formed has been accepted as representative of the whole tribe. It will thus be seen that the division system presents an admirable method of dealing with the tribe, closely allied to the location system employed in other Native Reserves in the Protectorate, and has enabled unrest or crime to be so localised as to limit the liability for offences committed to certain definite sections of the Masai. Nevertheless, there is not sufficient difference in the behaviour or customs of the members of each Masai Council.

634 [628] [623]

6: Thomson K-3 (1883-1884) 1887
FL12 Masai FL12

614 breed than others. The most aristocratic of these clans are 565 the Ngajè-Masai, Molilian, Lyserè, and Leteyo. These have the finest physical development, and are undoubtedly superior 142 to the others in the shape of the head, the less depressed nose, and thinner lips. Indeed,—but for the prominence of the cheek-bones, a tendency to a Mongolian shape and upward slant of the eyes, the chocolate-coloured skin, and the hair with a tendency to become frizzy—they might pass muster as very respectable and commonplace Europeans. The Ngajè-Masai are the purest breed, and are to be found chiefly around Kilimanjaro. The most degraded tribe physically is that which is known to the coast traders by the name of Wa-kwafi. They seem to have acquired a strain of negro blood, as will be perceived by an examination of the photograph of the Masai of Lykipia (p. 205). The higher development of the Ngajè-Masai is seen in the photo of an aristocratic woman of Njiri.

634 The country is divided into about ten principal districts, such as Sigirari, Njiri, Matumbato, Kaptè, Dogilani, Lykipia, Guas' Ngishu, &c. The various members of the race are [614] generally designated by their native district. Various clans may be found occupying the same district, but they usually keep in distinct kraals. Hence they speak of the "El-Masai Matumbato," or El-Masai Kaptè. Each district also is fur-[514] ther distinguished by having special heraldic devices on the [531] shields of the warriors, painted with wonderful skill and taste in black, white, red, or yellow colours. Between the 619 various sections of the tribe there is not the slightest cohesion.
628 Wars among themselves are of constant occurrence, though when a state of war is not declared, they are on the most friendly terms,—their feuds not being of that deep-seated character which distinguishes those of semi-civilized lands.

174 Of these internal wars none have been so disastrous or so 628 oft-repeated as that between the main mass of the Masai and the Wa-kwafi (I here use the name for convenience). The original home of the latter was the large district lying between Kilimanjaro, Ugono, and Parè on the west, and Teita and U-sambara on the east. This large region is known to the Masai as Mbaruvui. Some fifty years ago the Wa-kwafi were numerous and strong, able to hold their own against all comers. About 1830—as far as I can gather—a series of misfortunes fell upon them. In a great war-raid against the Wa-gogo to the south they suffered a severe repulse, and great numbers were slaughtered. The same

[not processed.—Analyst]

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

174 It is impossible here to digress at length into the realms of pure archaeology, with reference to the Olduwai man, obsidian flakes, etc., but 172 any evidence which throws light on the type of life that the country supported prior to Masai occupation is of interest in relation to the type of culture which the Masai may be expected to attain.

Briefly, then, the evidence shows that immediately below the Rift Wall cultivation under irrigation was practised, and that east of the Rift the country had at one time been inhabited by a tribe fully acquainted with the arts of well-digging and dam-building. These people may have practised agriculture, but there is no evidence to show that they did; their water conservation measures certainly show them as being cattle keepers, since no agricultural community, drawing domestic water only, would sink 50 or 60 wells in one small area, as at Naberera. That a cattle owning community requires such numbers is obvious from the fact that the Masai use nearly every prehistoric well, and have opened many new ones in addition. These same people were possibly responsible for the dams on the south-east flank of Monduli mountain, and perhaps they constructed the irrigation system which the Chagga are alleged to have found on Kilimanjaro.

But the people who dug the Naberera, Makami, Ndedo, Ngasumet and Londergess wells were most certainly pure pastoralists, and were probably responsible for the construction of the rain ponds in this area. A rain pond, liable to dry up, is obviously as useless to a settled agricultural population, as a group of twenty or thirty wells in a confined area. But to a pastoral people two such sources of water in conjunction enable an otherwise inhospitable country to carry a large cattle population.

The only available evidence of settled habitation in the southern area is found near Makami and Londergess. In concentrated areas, one at each of these places, are to be found numerous large kitchen middens, composed of ash and refuse, and containing numerous pot-sherds, bones, and — most important of all — the clay mouths of native bellows, and the clinkers formed when iron ore is smelted.

Thus, throughout the whole of Masai District, the only signs of settlement are associated either with agriculture under irrigation, or with metal work. The rest of the evidence points to the fact that the country was inhabited by nomadic pastoralists. For this reason any other mode of living cannot be expected from the Masai unless by the provision of water a radical change is made in the environment.

B. Sub-tribes and Sections: Sub-tribes — Sections — Kenya Sections — Sections common to Kenya and Tanganyika — Laitayok, clan or section? — Salei — Serenget — Engaruka — Kissongo — Kitcio — Molbo.

619 The early history of the tribe has been summarized above; before turning to recent history, i.e. events occurring within living memory, it is necessary to define the sub-tribes and sections of the Masai, as a record of recent events is mainly a chronicle of civil war and strife between such units.

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

561
614
616

MOLELIAN or L'OODOMONGI (left hand)	MOLELIAN	Masangwa Moingo L'oorok-kishu Parserengo Makuiere Parsindei Kivuyuni
	TAROSERO	Nanaapowaru Lais
	MOKASEN	Loiger Kiveron Pirda
	MAMASITA	Munai Jagei Kuyuni Paralangat Maravashi

II. Il Mingana. (Laitayok)

LAITAYOK (attached to right hand)	LAITAYOK	Sesoikineji Kisikon Parsais Paramangi Makuperia Lema Mosejwa Pojos Mohono
	MARUMAI	Parsele Maraani Leberet

Square brackets indicate exogamous groups; when not shown, sub-clans may inter-marry.

SECTION V. CLAN AND FAMILY MATTERS.

A. Clans — the clan chart — ownership of waters — areas peculiar to certain clans — clan responsibility.

The chart reproduced above explains the system more clearly than a lengthy description, but a few explanatory notes are necessary. The true Masai, i.e. those who regard themselves as descendants of Maasinda, divide themselves into two main groups (indaloishin, sing. endaloshi), the Laiser or Loorokiteng (black bullock) who are regarded as the right hand of the tribe, and the Molelian or Loodomongi (blood-red bull), the left hand. [619]

These main groups are in turn divided into clans and sub-clans, called on the chart engishome and olgilata respectively. Some informants however reverse the terms. The clans are patrilineal, i.e. a child takes the father's clan They are also exogamous, i.e. a man may not marry 614

/7 cont./

000 against the former. The El kuafi recognized the chief (ol oiboni)
174 of the Masai as also their own and seem for a long time to have 184 been on the best of terms with them. Then -- so the tradition
669 tells -- a girl named Matangó, from the family of the ol oiboni 619 Sitonik -- she is usually designated as his sister, more rarely as 726 his aunt -- took a fancy to a member of a legation of El kuafi [173] warriors sent to Sitonik and went away with her lover. When she bore him a son, the El kuafi proclaimed him their ol oiboni and at the same time refused to obey Sitonik. With this the wars began between Masai and El kuafi. They lasted -- so it seems -- the entire first half of the nineteenth century and occurred sporadically even in the second half of it. One of the decisive battles was at Kisongo, a six-hour march west of Meruberg /Mt. Meru/, where later on the chiefs of the Masai took up their permanent /8/ residence. The ones driven away went into the rugged forests of [466] Meruberg, where they lived for a long time in constant strife with the Masai, until the chief Mbatyan completely subjugated them and forced them into compulsory service. Other battles took place near Ngurumán, north of Lake Natron; the rest of those conquered still live there, mixed with Wasegedju from nearby Sonjo. The [361] remnants of the ones defeated in the Serengeti steppe are still to be found in Taveta, Kahe, Aruscha-tschini. The first battles between Masai and El kuafi probably took place in the vicinity of Kenia /Mt. Kenya/, and led to making the latter sedentary.

One of the last great clashes was in the steppe area Sogonoi; the ones conquered fled to Ngujuka and then farther to Useguha and Mahga, where they founded a settlement under the chief 'Lemá.

174 The Masai took a few individuals from among the defeated 184 into their community. The rest split up. One -- larger -- part 619 became sedentary and formed some colonies in the vicinity of [361] foreign tribes or merged with other tribes. Another -- smaller -- [721] part at first made a living for a time from hunting, until it
[231] succeeded, by means of raids against sedentary peoples, in coming [101] into the possession of livestock again. Today they again live wholly as before and are distinguished from the Masai only by the name El muli. Those who became sedentary, however, are designated by the Masai as El lumbua and also as El kuafi -- probably because they constitute the main part of the old El kuafi. The caravan people, accordingly, call them Wakuafi, while they make no distinction between El muli and Masai and even impose on the former the name of the latter.

M 174 184 619 [101] [361]

/8 cont./

M [144]

In contrast to the El muli, who have remained pure, the El lumbua of all the settlements are more or less strongly mixed. In places the degree of mixture is so great that at first glance one scarcely recognizes the somatic features characteristic of the Masai people; in places, however, it is also still so slight that any mixture at all can only be determined by thorough investigation.

D 174 M 174 184

A last group,[1] finally, became hunters, the El asiti. This is the second branch of the Wanderóbo; the third and most recent, the El gasurek, arose from the Masai themselves, in that those impoverished by livestock epidemics were forced to a new means of subsistence.

M 634 635 [648]

Even up to 17 years ago the Masai were the lords of the vast steppes in German and British East Africa, when the European occupation brought about a change. The entire land inhabited by them is divided into three provinces. The Kisoñgo Province embraces those steppe regions that lie south of the line, extending east-west, connecting the peaks of Kilimandscharo and Meru. North of this lies the province of Loita, and still farther north, embracing the region of Lake Naiwascha, the province of Ol bruggo. In earlier times a part of Loita called Es sereñget seems /9/ to have temporarily formed a province by itself. Each province (ol oscho 'bo = a province) is divided into districts (eñ gob = the land), and these again into areas. Most of their names are proper names that can not be translated; others are chosen from local peculiarities, for example, springs, brooks, hills, mountains, trees, etc. The inhabitants often name themselves after the individual provinces or districts and then speak of Kisoñgo-Masai, Loita-Masai, Sereñgeti- or even Kiteto-, Moibo-, Sogonoi-Masai, etc. Earlier travelers often mistakenly took this designation for tribal names. Similarly, the word ol oikob has been misinterpreted,

M [101]

M 192 101

1. [The reference is to the last group of the original Kwafi--Analyst]

M /9 cont./
192 in that it was taken as a tribal name, and people spoke of ol oikob-
101 Masai and ol oikob-Wakuafi. El oikob (sing. ol oikobani) means killers, rough, brutal persons, and is an invective with which the Wandoróbo, Wakuafi, and the Masai blacksmiths (el konono) designate their oppressors, the Masai. Fischer mistakenly translates the word as "owners of the land"; this, however, would be called: ol opén l eń gob.

M The Wakuafi live in their colonies as more or less peaceful,
• 619 sedentary cultivators. Wherever they found peaceful neighbors after 184 their defeats, they too became calm. On the other hand, where 181 they remained in close contact with the Masai and were exposed to their constant raids, the old bellicosity remained in them. An example of this is the population of Meruberg /Mt. Meru/ in the M Great Aruscha /Arusha/ and Meru areas. In spite of a very con-[144] siderable mixture with Wadschagga from nearby Kilimandscharo, they have completely kept their original character traits. Their
M imperiousness, rapacity, and cunning equal that of the Masai; in [648] courage, on the other hand, they even surpass them. Their numerous attacks on the camps of Europeans and trade caravans reveal them as brigands. The relationship between Wakuafi and Masai
M is in general not bad. The latter regard the former as fellow tribes-
• 829 men, even though as inferior ones, because they work the soil 619 and own only a little livestock. They are foes one minute and [241] friends the next! And both must always reconcile themselves to [231] each other, for the Masai cannot do without them as suppliers of [438] vegetable foods, after the rinderpest at the end of the eighties [731] again raged so destructively among their herds.

D While among the Wakuafi one can still clearly recognize 105 their one-time power and greatness, this is no longer the case at all among the Asá. Most of them, just like the El asiti, timidly and concealed in the bush of the steppes, live in miserable little grass and leaf huts which can be reached only by hidden paths. Their food consists of game, which they kill with poisoned arrows and poisoned javelins, honey, agricultural products which they obtain in barter, various wild berries, roots, and herbs. Where they dwell in the vicinity of the Masai, they live in a certain

/11 cont./

142
301 302
291

Emil Müller phot.

Ill. 1. Masai woman from below Kibongoto.

177 That various customs of theirs and words of their language also found entry among the Negroes follows automatically.

• 619 While some travelers recognize at least a certain relationship 144 between the three branches, others claim to have observed such 142 great somatic differences between them that one might be doubtful 114 about their racial unity and ask oneself whether the Wadoróbo and the Wakuafi of certain colonies should not be counted among the Negroes. This error is explained by the fact that those travelers have come into contact with them only superficially. /12/ drew conclusions going too far from isolated individuals to the generality, so that they regarded the Wakuafi, strongly mixed with Negroes, as pure, and Negroes strongly mixed with Masai blood as Wakuafi.

/12 cont./

619 142 144 In connection with the somatic view of the three Masai branches the following is to be considered. The band that immigrated last, the true Masai, have kept themselves quite pure as a race. They [727] [171] [582] [563] practically never subscribed to the kidnapping of women and children in war, otherwise customary everywhere in Africa, they did not marry Negresses and did not take Negroes into their community.

291 301 142

Fonck II phot.

Ill. 2. Three Masai women.

619 142 144 Therefore they most clearly show the racial characteristics peculiar to the Masai people. The same was true of the Wakuafi until the [178] [361] time when they became sedentary. Then, however, they needed not only replacements for their lost cattle, but also many hands trained in the cultivation of the soil. For this reason on war expe- [727] ditions they dragged off, not only the livestock of the enemy, as before, but also the women and children. The degree of mixture between Wakuafi and Negroes is very different in the individual [i.e., the Masai, Wakuafi and the Wandorobo --Analyst]

M /12 cont./
• 619 Wakuafi settlements. In general, naturally, the mixture is greatest 142 where the Wakuafi have already been sedentary longest, least and 144 often scarcely /13/ noticeable or even not at all where they did [361] not become sedentary until the last half of the nineteenth century.
M The cattle epidemics, which constantly brought new Masai elements [731] to the Wakuafi, had a restraining effect on the mixture. In many cases one can quite accurately determine whether and what kind of foreign blood a single individual has by careful questioning about D the family tree. Among the Wandorobo who live far from the 144 Negroes, in the midst of the most inhospitable bush of the steppes, for the most part probably no mixture with Negro blood has taken place, at all, against which, to be sure, such with the Saoska, belonging to the tribally related Tatoga, must be assumed with certainty on grounds of a historic and linguistic nature, as well as according to the tradition. Degeneration through inbreeding also seems excluded from the outset, for they constantly had an influx of Masai women and children, whose husbands and fathers had perished in the famine following a cattle epidemic.

M If one examines the somatic characteristics of the three Masai
D branches from these points of view and with the elimination of all 142 cases in which a mixture has been proved or is not excluded, one [144] comes to the conclusion that one has before one a homogeneous race. Their characteristic traits are the following: the bodies are tall and slender. They do not, however, appear unattractively thin, but rather give the impression of elegant, flexible mobility. The thin, fine bones are surrounded by well-developed muscles, which, to be sure, stand out clearly, but, in conformity with the slenderness, not obtrusively. One sees especially beautiful forms among young girls. They are gracile, slender figures whose limbs show only just enough roundness in order to make them appear comely. Shapeless, unlovely ampleness one really finds only among older women. The skin color varies between deep dark-brown and light chocolate-brown. The heads are high and narrow, the oval face often has finely chiseled, attractive features and is less prognathous than among Negroes, not infrequently even orthognathous. The high, narrow forehead is well arched, the eyes are almond-shaped, straight or somewhat slanted. The nose is extended, narrow, and, at the root, flat or very moderately deep-set compared to the forehead. The alae are narrow and very flat, the nostrils roundish to longitudinally oval, less often transversely oval. The bridge of the nose is straight, sometimes slightly convex. The lips are full, without appearing actually protruding. Protruding, thick lips are something so rare and striking that they earn their owner the name Lebeleb -- thick lip (or actually: uproar, loud noise). The ears are small, except for the hyperplasia of the upper edge of the ear and ear lobes caused by the wearing of heavy ornaments. The hair is evenly distributed over the scalp, which is most clearly shown on recently shaved heads. The hair often appears "tufty," but this is artifically produced. Only at a length of from one to three centimeters does it curl slightly and /14/ almost never becomes completely curly. The arms and especially the legs are very long, the wrists thin, hands and feet, especially among female individuals, small, narrow, and delicate, the fingers are slender and often strikingly long and narrow, the fingernails long, narrow, and slightly arched.

/13 cont./

M D 142

M D • 619 174

Even if the racial membership of the three branches were to be traced anthropologically, one can determine an even closer connection ethnographically, which must lead to the conviction that all three belong to the same people. The difference in their principal occupations, to be sure, seems at /Ill. 3 appears here/ first glance to indicate a sharp division. As has already been pointed out above, however, one can easily explain these differences by the consistent behavior of a people of similar customs and habits under unlike external circumstances. The predilection for stock raising, based on the eagerness for a meat diet, and the nomadic life necessarily growing out of it were common. While the Wandorobo had to endure it when their livestock fell victim to epidemics and raids of the strong Wakuafi, the latter, under pressure from the still mightier Masai, had to flee from the open plains to fixed residences in the mountains. The Wakuafi protected

M D 174 619 233 262

/14 cont./

M 142
301 302
291
144

Emil Müller phot

1 2 3 4

Ill. 3. Young Masai. 2 and 4 pure-blooded, 3 mixed with Negro blood, 1 doubtful.

M
174
619
233
262

The Wakuafi protected what remained of their livestock by giving up their roving life, whereas the Wandorobo, by sacrificing their herds, were able to continue their fancied nomadic life as hunters; and neither of them needed to forgo the meat diet.

M
174
619
197

/15/ Even though, in general, one should be very careful in ethnology about drawing conclusions from linguistic bases, it seems permissible here, on behalf of the three branches' belonging to one people, to point to their language as well.

As a matter of fact, we find the same language among the Masai and Wakuafi, with the limitation that for the latter, with the great number of Masai dialects, sometimes this one, sometimes that one is their own, according to the location of their area, whereas the very widely ranging Masai probably understand almost all the dialects. In addition, for the Wakuafi, in places, according to the degree of their mixture with Negro tribes, a language of the latter's is more or less familiar. Of the Wandoróbo, the El gamurek speak only the language of the Masai, whereas the Asá and

D
197

D /15 cont./
197 the El asiti also have their own idiom, which will be briefly discussed at a later place.

M Corresponding to the uniformity in language, the number words
197 are the same among the Masai and Wakuafi, whereas the Asá and El 802 asiti have their own words for only a few numbers, but in general 184 always make use of the ones used by the other two branches. One
D finds a complete correspondence for all three branches in their reli-197 gious view, and the manner of circumcision customary among both 802 sexes. The peculiar circumcision of the boys is practiced by no
D other people at all, with the exception of one lineage of the Tatoga,
M closely related to the Masai people. In birth and death, too, all 771 three have the same customs, while in the rest of their customs one 304 finds only unessential differences which are based solely on the dif-619 ference in their external way of life. The most striking proof for [197] the three branches' belonging together, however, lies in their D descent.
M
174
[844] The people as a whole are divided into three large tribes, the [96] Laiser, the El mulelyan, and the El mengana, each of which is D made up of a number of lineages, and every Asá, as well as every
M Ol kuafi and Ol massani, is a representative of one of these lineages.
614
613 If we now concern ourselves further with the ethnography of the Masai in particular, which is at the same time that of the Wakuafi,
D we are thereby including the ethnographic traits of the entire people;
M the stressing of individual differences that have developed among 128 the Wandorobo in the course of time and under the influence of changed conditions will be reserved for the third part.

/16/ Second Part

I.

000 Tribes, lineages, sublineages. -- The En gidon lineage. -- The chief: his rule and policy, magic medicines, genealogical tree, village, ceremonies, foods. -- The sorcerers. -- The El kiborōn lineage. -- The rainmakers.

M Every tribe (en gischomi) is divided, as has already been men-614 tioned, into a number of lineages (ol gelata, el gelat). Among 613 these, in turn, one distinguishes principal lineages (ol gelata kitok)

791 /19 cont./
175 was followed by Subet and the latter by Mbatyan. After the latter's [619] death the Masai split up. One part placed itself under Lenana, the eldest son of the principal wife, who was born before the accession of Mbatyan, the other under Zendeo, who was the old man's favorite son and named by him to be his successor. The people relate that Lenana cheated Zendeo out of the succession in a way similar to how Jacob cheated Esau out of the right of the first-born. Whereas the deception was achieved in the latter case through the tied-on goatskin, it was made possible in the former case by the gloom of the hut in which old, weak Mbatyan was lying on his sickbed. He thought he had Zendeo before him and instructed Lenana in the secret arts of the ol oiboni. The two are now bitter enemies, [669] who maintain a continuous civil war, to the misfortune of the Masai people. Lenana, now a man about 49 years old, lives with his followers in British East Africa, in the vicinity of the railroad station Nairobi, whereas Zendeo, ten years younger, inhabits, with his hordes, the steppes of German East Africa. Both are merely phantom figures in comparison with their father, who had occupied an 175 outstanding place in the succession of chiefs. Under him the Masai 619 experienced their last golden age. After his forefathers Sitonik and 791 Subet had subjugated the Wakuafi, it rested upon him to keep down
726 their constant uprisings and to weaken and enslave them so that no [669] danger from them could threaten the Masai any longer. Through a well-organized spy system Mbatyan kept himself continuously informed about the conditions of his opponents, so that the rapacious warriors could always attack those very Wakuafi settlements in which a war expedition /20/ against the Masai was being prepared. The most trouble here was made by the Wakuafi of Meruberg /Mt. Meru/, who found safe hiding places for women and livestock in the clefted mountain forests, while the men undertook raids on 175 neighboring Masai kraals. Finally, however, the Meru people were 619 successfully mastered; indeed, they even became so pliable that 791 they performed compulsory labor for their oppressors. One must 729 bear in mind with what deep contempt all men of the Masai people 466 look upon any kind of work, which they regard as something dis-461 graceful, not compatible with a man's dignity, in order to 175

619 /20 cont./
791 understand what such a success meant. Mbatyan demanded thou-727 sands of workers, and they moved obediently, in endless long lines, 466 men, women and children, toward the steppe area of Kisongo, lying [466]

Merker phot.

Ill. 4. Zendeo, the present chief of the Masai.

175
619
791 west of the mountain, where the mighty one resided, like his 727 ancestors. There they had to dig a long water channel, whereby -- 466 a further particular humiliation -- the men had to work in rank [462] and file with the women. Encouraged by these and other successes, 175
648 the Masai became more and more arrogant, and they extended
721 their war expeditions farther and farther. It was not only the Negro tribes of the interior who had to suffer under their lust for robbery and murder, they even penetrated into the immediate hinterland of the coast and directly approached the coastal cities of Mombasa, Tanga, Bagamoyo, and others.

175 The belief in the magic means for healing purposes which 791 Mbatyan gave those seeking help, and whose chief ingredient 755 quantitatively was the vanilla-scented, pulverized wood of the ol mogongora liana, was so deep-seated in the people /21/ that it was often supposed to have actually brought to the people

/103 cont./

619 After a battle of the Masai among themselves, the conclusion of 728 peace is that the speakers, in the presence of a number of warriors of both parties, exchange their skin capes and sandal thongs. This is called etabaschage megitin = exchange of skin capes.

726 The length of the stretches covered on war expeditions, in com-
701 parison to that of their neighbors carrying on agriculture, is often 484 astonishing. Performances of 60 to 80 kilometers a day, three or four days in succession, are by no means exceptions. If one considers,
[702] however, that the training of warriors consist only of marching, that,
[276] aside from their weapons, they carry nothing heavy, and before their marches, as well as during them, they partake copiously of stimulants, their performances in no way exceed those of a German infantry 701 troop. The tales of the caravan people relate miraculous things about 182 the speed and endurance of the Masai warriors, and even European 147 travelers have contributed to the spread of this legend in that they 271 compare the physical performances of the Masai with those of the Europeans in the tropics. The untenableness of such a comparison is obvious. One also often hears how the Masai are admired for their alleged ability to be able to give up the drinking of water on their marches. Presumably this rumor arose from the fact that these people, in contrast to other tribes, never carry a gourd bottle of water on their 701 long migrations. The Masai, however, knows perfectly every little 182 spot of the steppes, he knows every rocky basin, every tiny spring,
271 he also knows where an apparently dry brook bed carries subterranean
[823] water. Where water has collected in old hollow trees, and especially in baobabs, this is accessible to him through a series of steps made [824] out of foot-long taps bored in horizontally. Finally, there are a number of water-rich roots and tubers, which, chewed, are very well suited 701 by their water content to quench thirst. They serve him, /104/ just as 182 the wild honey, not infrequent in the steppes, also serves as food on the 222 march. A cuckoo bird, the honey indicator (Cuculus indicator, called [825] eñ johoroi by the Masai), leads the Masai to the concealed honey holes.
[136] As soon as it sees human beings it calls with a strident sound and then flies slowly to the nearest honey place, to which the people follow it
[825] in order to take out the honey. If the amount found is still not sufficient for the warriors, they bury the chewed comb, whereupon the bird, after

/211 cont./

XXII.

000 Law. -- Concerning family and personal rights, cf. 2nd Part, II, IV, and XX. -- Property rights. -- Things found. -- Barter or purchase. -- Liability of the relatives for debts, gift. -- Penal law. -- Murder and manslaughter. -- Revenge. -- Composition. -- Negligent homicide. -- Bodily injury of various degrees. -- Accomplices. -- Immoral offenses. -- Suicide. -- Kidnapping. -- Theft. -- Treason. -- Arson. -- Cowardice in war. -- Death penalty. -- Fines. -- Degrading punishment of warriors. -- Compensation for innocent accused persons. -- The mentally ill. -- Warning. -- Legal proceedings. -- Courts. -- Example of a /212/ criminal case. -- Inquiry about an unknown culprit; -- Pleading. -- Swearing to the truth. -- Torture for exacting the truth. -- Ordeals in the search for truth. -- Sorcery procedures. -- No international prosecution of criminal deeds.

671 An awareness and understanding of justice are very little developed among the Masai. Therefore only a small number of customary [184] legal provisions exist, which are by no means uniform for all Masai, but rather often enough vary in the different districts. As nomads, [361] among whom individual families frequently live alone or with their closest relatives in a kraal, by themselves, without having neighbors in the larger vicinity, they make do with fewer laws than another tribe whose numerous members are supposed to live within definite fixed limits in permanent order and peace. Furthermore, the nomadic life in and of itself leads to a freer conception of life, which opposes tutelage through laws and often prefers to let might [593] come before right. But in order to understand the great inconsist- [619] ency in individual legal decisions, one must above all take into [186] consideration the feeling of solidarity, which is strongest in the family and always still strong enough in the tribe to arouse from the first great prejudice against anyone who does not belong to the 593 tribe. The questions concerning family and personal rights have

/349 cont./

178 that are started with as a rule and which one therefore finds in all the 241 settlements. Yet despite the ease of production of the field crops, the transition to agriculture nevertheless is taking place in a way 178 that is reducing the population in extraordinary fashion. First of all,
182 the acclimatization process slowly being accomplished demands a 164 great sacrifice of human lives. The Masai, little afflicted with 165 fever in the dry steppes, suffers with it quite seriously in the moist regions in which mosquitoes are permanently at home. Thus on two occasions in the same new settlement I found all the adults and many children sick with fever. Another one had just been abandoned by its inhabitants, leaving the sick behind. The ones left behind, principally men and boys, were badly reduced by fever and, in addition, suffered to a great extent from virulent leg ulcers, whose great extent -- in many cases they covered the entire lower leg, from knee to ankle -- probably is to be traced back to a general weakening of the body by fever and lack of food; for such ulcers are not common among nomadic Masai, and, where they occur, /350/ they remain smaller and show a tendency to heal rapidly.
Other illnesses arise from the unfamiliar diet. The rapid transition [262] from an almost pure meat diet to an almost pure vegetable diet makes demands on the stomach and intestines that a body weakened by fever is seldom equal to. Sickness and death from this cause are frequent and are increased further by the consumption of bad water. Thus, more than half the people in one settlement complained of painful diarrhea and bloody stools. All these acclimati-[842] zation illnesses seem also to manifest their effect in decreased [163] fertility of the women and increased child mortality. I was repeatedly struck by the small number of sucklings (two-year suckling period) and older children. Thus early in 1902 in Ngaruka, between Lake Manyara and Lake Natron, among a number of about 50 women, I found only twelve children, three of them babies. According to the statements of the parents, very many children had died of various ailments, especially fever, stomach and intestinal affections, several 178 also had perished in Masai attacks. For the Masai who are becoming 619 sedentary, the ones still living among the "people" as nomads are 721 a scourge that scarcely falls short of the illnesses just mentioned in

/350 cont./

178 its effect. Hated as faithless and despised as agriculturalists, the
• 619 sedentary ones are constantly plagued by raids that not only cause
721 them great loss in human lives, but also take away any possibility [829] for them to arrive at any improvement in their way of life by keeping livestock for the attainment of the meat and milk diet so necessary [177] for them. Moreover, the frequent intercourse with sedentary Negroes
[164] and caravan people leads to an increase in the cases of venereal 582 diseases. Premature marriages of girls, which can not happen among 178 the Masai still living as nomads, is not rare among the sedentary 184 ones and often enough leads to the death of the young woman who 165 is scarcely more than a child and whose bony structure, despite her attained capability to conceive, is not yet developed. Finally, it 178 must still be mentioned that no doubt the longing for the formerly 182 free life in the broad steppes and the feeling of humiliation over having become a so deeply despised cultivator of the soil oneself [186] are factors that have a wasting effect. The latter circumstance also [177] brings with it a decrease of national pride. The barrier that kept [144] Negroes out of the community of the Masai has fallen. A disadvantageous race mixture hurting the people is slowly taking place.
[648] Among the Wakuafi this process was more rapid in their period. At [721] that time no European administration prevented their raiding expeditions in Negro regions, from which they brought home livestock and women experienced in agriculture.

177 In frequent -- almost daily -- intercourse that soon springs up
178 and then continues to exist between the Masai who have become sedentary and the settled Negroes, the Masai naturally also share in the disadvantages that /351/ come to the Negroes through the encounter of their lower culture with our higher one.

178 We have seen how many difficulties sedentation brings to the 177 Masai, and it is therefore not surprising that a part of those who 361 have already become sedentary give up their fixed residences again after repeated failures. These then often join the Wandorobo, to live by hunting, and call themselves this.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

 634

KISONGO.	1. Kisongo	2. Sigirari	5. Salei or Saleh
	a. Kiteto	3. Laitokitok	6. Laitayok
	b. Moiba	4. Siria
LUMBWA.	1. Nguruman	2. Serenget	3. Engaruka

101
619

The villages, eng ang, pl. ing angite, is the minimal territorial unit. Villages are distributed within the minor sections. JOHNSTON,[15] had already noted that "they generally range within certain districts". A village is the residence of one or more elders with his or their wives and cattle. A man after his marriage does not live in the same village as his father, unless the latter has become senile and unable to cater for himself. 621 [591] [888]

The internal structure of the village is based on the gatesystem. This consists in a proper arrangement of the house on the sides of the village's gates. The village consists of a large yard enclosed by a thorny fence with gates opening at opposite sides. The house are built on the right and left sides of each gate, every gate with its houses belonging to a single elder. The usual arrangement is as follows: the first house on the gate's right is the dwelling of the owner's first wife; the first house on the left side is that of his second wife; the second house on the right side is that of his third wife; and the same alternating order is followed if marries more wives. The central yard is reserved for cattle. The elder's cattle are allotted to each of his wives according to her rank in the house. Cattle in possession of one side of the gate cannot be inherited by the other side. When inheritance takes place it is with great care that one tries to avoid cattle interchange.[16] The gate system, observes FOSBROOKE,[17] is an ideal, and "a symmetrically arranged gate is seldom found in practice". When people move in search of better grassland, the village is not destroyed, but simply evacuated. During the owner's absence the houses may be occupied by other temporary tenants. At the reverse migration the owner comes back to his old village if this is not irreparably decayed, and it is agreed by custom that any foreigner who might have found shelter in the house must vacate the place to the original owner. 621 361 [428] [166]

Another type of Masai village should be mentioned here. It is 621

[15] JOHNSTON, The Uganda Protectorate, London 1904, p. 810.
[16] See especially MERKER, l. c., pp. 27 s.
[17] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 44.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

621 the temporary residence of unmarried initiates or "warriors", called ol manyatta, pl. i manyat. According to MERKER,[18] "in every [634] section there is at least one warrior's village which gathers all the [561] warriors of the section". This type of village is closely related to the age-system institution. Therefore it is not a distinct territorial unit, though it shows the inter-relationship of the age-system and territorial organisation for its tenants are gathered from different villages. Indeed this is a further instance of the age-system's integrating power.[19]

* * *

614 Masai society is divided into two moieties, en daloshi, pl. in daloishin, which seem to provide a basis for clan organisation. Every Masai is found in either of the two moieties. These are named after cattle, one: orok kiteng — the black cattle, the other: oode mongi — the red bulls. No exogamic restriction is attached to the moieties, 701 but, they seem to have an influence on military organisation. "Whe- 614 never", writes HOLLIS,[20] "the representatives of the clans take part in a raid", they are organised according to their moiety, and the loot is divided "into two parts, one part for each of these main groups".[21] MERKER, states that the words orok kiteng and oode mongi are war-cries shouted by warriors according to their moiety. FOERBOOKE,[22] writes that the orok kiteng "are regarded as the right hand of the tribe", and the oode mongi as the "left hand". He adds also that this dual division is typical of the "true Masai".

614 At the present there is no apparent relationship between the 634 moiety and the territorial system, but a few indications suggest that such a relationship existed in the past. Thus, in Laitokitok section, according to FOX[23] there is an equal number of "black

[18] MERKER, l. c., p. 82.

[19] BERNARDI, l. c., p. 225.

[20] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 280.

[21] See also MERKER, l. c., p. 97; FOX, Further notes on the Masai of Kenya Colony, in J. R. A. I., 60, 1930, p. 487; HOBLEY, Ethnology of A-Kamba and other East African tribes, Cambridge, 1910, p. 121, who states that the moiety divisions were followed for cattle-branding purposes. Among the Turkana, the moieties or alternations were distinguished by different war songs or cries and tactical movements. See EMLEY, The Turkana of Kaloeia District, in J. R. A. I., 63, 1937, pp. 164 s.

[22] FOERBOOKE, l. c., p. 43.

[23] FOX, l. c., p. 487.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL.12 Masai FL.12

great political importance, in reply to which the elder indicated that such did not necessarily follow as "we can always tell the lawata what order to give". 561 624

c) The sacrifice of a bull is then performed with great ceremonial. HOLLIS,[] describes the contest in which the candidates compete in getting hold of a horn which was previously thrown into a fire. [187]

With reference to this sacrifice a special officer is appointed. He is called aborwengwe; he has a ceremonial status and must prepare the hide-rings from the skin of the bull. He is also described by the author of MS. 48 as "the official charmmaker of the moran". His function, however, seems to be limited to Unoto.

Great emphasis is laid by WHITEHOUSE,[] on what he calls "the fire-drilling ceremony", which as Foxbrooke also says, "must in fact be the unoto". The ceremony is described by Whitehouse in connection with the first erection of the segregated village of the initiates or manyalla.[*] [621]

The fire is ceremonially lighted by the elders, and it must be carried into the new awellings of the village. The next morning after this ceremony, the candidates who have become senior initiates are blessed, and prayers to the black God are offered for them.[*]

At the unoto, the ewuon first, and then the other initiates, shave their hair. Pig-tails, however, are again fitted after the ceremony. 884 721

Some (four or five) months after the ceremony, when the senior 561

[] HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 300 sq.

[] WHITEHOUSE, l. c., p. 183.

[*] This circumstance supports MERKER's statement that one of the privileges demanded by the junior initiates is the building of their own segregated village, l. c., pp. 33 sq.

[*] It is of some interest to reproduce here from WHITEHOUSE, the prayer recited by the elders on this occasion. It shows clearly how the senior initiates are about to enter the most important stage of their life as members of Masai society. This is the prayer: "Be trustworthy, Ok, return safely, O God. — Become ye ours and of God. — May the illness pass you by. — Wish those who hate us that they may find dry river on their journeys. — Lenana and Sufeit and Mbatian wish the safe return. — Grow up. Become possessed of wise heads. Become as great as the Kilimanjaro. — Be the fathers of my children, and bring them up well. Have many wives. — May God love you. May the red bull of the night guard thee. May our age be the bravest". The expression of the first verse "return safely" probably refers to the raid which follows unoto. Lenana, Sufeit, Mbatian were prophets. [182]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 when the aigwenani loongishu pokin was recognised as a general
624 leader.[119]

Judicial activity is not a real part of the aigwenani's office. It
[692] all depends on his personality and on how much he is favoured by his age-mates, who may ask him to arbitrate and settle their disputes.[120]

The election and the status of the aunoni-otuno as the ceremonial leader of the age-unit has already been described. A peculiar duty of the aunoni's office is the responsibility " for the smart turn-out of the moran (initiates) ".[121] MERKER,[122] and HOLLIS,[123] state that the aunoni was responsible to the prophet (laibon) for the organisation of raids. The anonymous author of MS. 48, p. 4, describes [977] him as the mascot of the unit when this was at war: " as long as he is alive they (the unit-members) cannot be beaten by the enemy... For this reason they take him on their raids ".

The relationship between the aigwenani and the aunoni is not clear. It seems certain that the latter has a more ceremonial and ritual character than the former.

The term of office for all these officers is limited to the existence of the age-unit as such; but they will always be distinguished and sought for their opinion.

561 The analysis of the unit's leaders does not offer a complete pic-621 ture of the internal structure of the age-unit. This structure rests
701 on two other institutions, namely the manyatta, which is the proper

[119] The aigwenani was not epected to take part in the actual fighting; he had to be in the rear to govern the action or, as FOSBROOKE, p. 38, puts it, " probably because the laigwanan wore the charm which had been obtained from the laibon, and its loss could not be risked ". At present, adds FOSBROOKE, p. 39, " the relations between senior laigwanak and their juniors are very lax. It is probable that this is due to the prohibition of raiding and consequent reduction of the occasions on which large-scale common efforts are required. In the old days when large groups of moran (initiates) came together for raids the senior laigwanak (sic.) must of necessity have asserted his position, and the others must have obeyed him, to ensure the success of the venture ".

[120] " It appears ", writes FOSBROOKE, p. 38, " to be the privilege of the aggrieved party to select his judges... If a local laigwanan han a reputation for fairness and justice, he will be called even from a distance, but proceedings are not invalidated if no laigwanan is present ".

[302] [121] FOSBROOKE, p. 40. So, no initiate was supposed to cut off his pig-tail coiffure without the permission of the aunoni.

[122] MERKER, l. c., p. 122.

[123] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 290 n. 1.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

residential place of the initiates, and the sirit which is a manifold grouping of comradeship. 56 62 70

The manyatta is the village where the initiates live in segregation from other people. Externally it does not differ from any ordinary village. 62 Some authorities state that there is only one manyatta for each territorial section.[124] But FOX,[125] qualifying LEAKEY, states that this is only true for some special occasions as when all the initiates of one section come together to perform some special ceremonies, as, e. g., Unoto.

In the manyatta the initiates are assisted by their mothers who do the housework, and by some unitiated girls (na sandja or ditto)[126] who are there mostly for their sexual pleasure.[127] Uninitiated boys may also live in the manyatta for the menial works and for tending cattle.[128]

The groupings named sirit, pl. isirit, are formed, according to WHITEHOUSE,[129] at a meeting called by the ingobir when it is decided to build the manyatta. 70 Membership of the sirit is a matter of free choise. An initiate is free to join any sirit, and he is free to change it for another soon after his first election. But if he does so when the manyatta has been formed, he "incurs the bitter resentment" of his sirit-mates, and he may even be fined for that.

As far as numbers go, WHITEHOUSE states that "groups of 5 (initiates) will go together to join the same company" (sirit).[130] 70 62 MERKER, however, says that the inhabitants of a single manyatta

[124] MERKER, l. c., p. 82; LEAKEY, l. c., p. 192; HINDE, l. c., p. 91 writes that "every section has usually some three favourite districts, in each of which is a village, called 'mangatta'".

[125] FOX, l. c., p. 451.

[126] MERKER, l. c., p. 83.

[127] Although the sexual life of the initiates with these girls is promiscous and free, full sexual intercourse is strongly condemned. [83] [83]

[128] According to MERKER, l. c., p. 110, the initiates who belong to the smith trade usually do not share the village with the other initiates, but have their own villages and the girls who live with them are from families of the same trade. The smith initiates organise their own raids, but because they are few their booty is always small and they are easily deprived of it by other warriors. [564]

[129] WHITEHOUSE, l. c., p. 150.

[130] WHITEHOUSE described the sirit as based on the clan. The MS, 46, p. 8, states that "emanyata is inhabitated by the moran of one particular clan". It seems, however, that this is not a fixed principale, and certainly does not obtain with the Kisongo. Cf. FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 28. [114]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

701 may be from 50 to 100; and the anonymous MS. 46, p. 8, records
621 that in a manyatta there may be from 20 to 30 huts. The extension of the term is not clear. It may be applied alternatively to the whole group forming a manyatta, and to a subdivision of this. Thus, we find in MS. 48 that each sirit is said to have its own 'portion' of the manyatta. Similarly, Fox says that each sirit is commanded by a
[624] captain (il aigwenan loo sirit), and that the manyatta is ruled by a special leader (il aigwenan 'l ol poror = the leader of the age-unis), who is at the same time the captain of his own sirit. [121]

The fact that the members of the sirit " as a rule quarrel pretty regularly with other sirit of their mannyata " is emphasised by MS. 48, p. 3. There is no indication that the internal organisation of the manyata is based on the seniority of its members. We may, however, assume quite safely that that is the main principle which regulates the relationship of the manyatta's of the two age-units existing at the same period. No special information is available on this point, but it is obvious that members of the two age-units have their own manyatta's and we also know that they unite in time of war, the juniors being trained by the seniors.

Seemingly the sirit division has a military function and serves to readily organise warriors for raids. MERKER, [122] however, applies the term to a special partnership which two age-mates contract
[572] on their way to the battle-field. They pledge themselves to assist each other while fighting. They refer to each other as 'my companion' (os sirit ai), and if one of them falls, the other has to rescue his arms. [123] Ten or twelve such companions form a company.

527 The term sirit is further applied to the grouping of initiates
561 who come together for a meat festival (es sirit ol bul). This group consists according to MERKER, [124] of five or six age-mates who go to a segregated place where they revel on ox-meat.

The meat festivals (ol bul, pl. e buli) are held once or twice a month;

[121] Very probably this leader of the manyatta is no other than the aigwenan lol kuma erok, as indicated. The two different expressions may be taken as describing two different functions exercised by the same person. Aigwenan lol kuma erok means lit. " the speaker with the black club ", and 'l aigwenani 'il ol poror, " the speaker of the age-unit ".

[122] MERKER, l. c., p. 73.

[123] MERKER, l. c., p. 93: " Die Aufgabe der Gefahrten ist es, dem andern im Kampfe beizustehen und, wenn er fällt, seine Waffen in Sicherheit zu bringen ". The spirit as a military company is also mentioned by MS 48.

[124] MERKER, l. c., p. 84.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

721
701 system. Unfortunately, no such information is available. MERKER,[141] describes the actual action in detail but from a purely tactical or strategical point of view.

701
554

Special distinctions may be attained by the initiates either in military actions or in social life. Thus, if a warrior is outstanding in war for his courage and he " kills many savages " (HOLLIS (a) he is called " the bull ", ol oingok; if he is liberal and through the assistance of his father " frequently slaughters bullocks " for his comrades, he is called " the benefactor ", N-gamini. These distinctions as described by MERKER,[142] would suggest the existence of special offices with structural significance. He states that " the bulls " play a leading role (eine führende Rolle), and are the leaders in the fight (" Sie sind die Anführer im Kampf "); " the benefactors " retain a special position (eine besondere stellung). It seems, however, that there are no such institutionalised office as " the Bulls " and " the Benefactors "; they represent two different distinctions which may be attained by any of the initiates. This seems to be the opinion also of HOLLIS,[143] when he states that " the warriors are fond of the titles 'L-oingok (the bulls) and 'N-gamini (the generous people), for they may then wear bells or a bracelet called il-torongen ".

561

The internal structure of the age-unit, we may now conclude, is based on various principles, which give shape to different groupings.

The essential principle is the contemporaneity of initiation either during the same season in which the minimal age divisions are instituted, or during the same initiation period in which all the minimal divisions merge into a single age-unit.

[621]

A second principle is the residential principle, on which the manyatta and the sirit are organised. The sirit ol bul, or the grouping for the meat festival in special segregated huts also seems to be due to this principle.

[701]
[572]

The military principle seems to give a special military aspect to the sirit proper, as found in the manyatta, and, apparently, the same principle extends to the temporary capillary formation of special partnership between two fighting warriors.

[624]

Corresponding to these various groupings there are leaders, as mentioned above, who organise their age mates in the performance of the various ceremonies and functions of the age-unit. It is very

[141] MERKER, l. c., pp. 93 ss.
[142] MERKER, l. c., p. 86.
[143] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 298.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 riors to the exclusion of other classes above them. Their status is 701 that of trainees in the case of junior initiates, and of full warriors in the case of senior initiates. Although it is not incorrect to state that they are in a condition of conscripts it is wrong to say that military activity is solely their privilege.

Residential segregation is generally connected with the military [621] activity of the initiates. MERKER states that the manyat were ordinarly situated in the strategic positions of the country.[146]

561 But there are other points to show that this segregation was not intended only for military purposes. Thus the initiates are not allowed to form their own family until they are elders. They are [262] also forbidden to eat meat "seen by women", and because their mothers and girls reside with them in their village, the initiates hold their meat festivals on their own in a secluded place. Similarly, they are not allowed to have milk unless they are in groups of two or three at least.[147]

It is difficult to see any relationship between these restrictions and the initiates' military activity. It seems evident that members of the age-units are still considered not sufficiently qualified to deal with cattle, and matters connected with them such as meat and milk, with complete freedom. Apparently, they do not have the [421] full possession of any cattle; the share of their mother's cattle to which they have right remains the property of their fathers' until [121] they get married. And to the father goes the best part of the booty which they take from a raid.[148] Since cattle are the primary source [593] of wealth and food, we must conclude that the initiates are still in a state of dependence on their fathers socially and economically.

This conclusion is corroborated by the fact that an analogous dependence holds true of their political activity. On this they depend entirely on their piron-elders.[149]

[146] The statement is confirmed by HINDE's description l. c., p. 91. He [361] says that the manyat were always built free from any kind of cover, "if possible on a plateau overlooking a good water supply", and "commanding many miles of plain".

[147] The initates have a right to ask everybody for milk which cannot be refused. Generally they address themselves to their piron-elders.

[148] MERKER, l. c., p. 30: "Das Verdienst der zu Kriegern herangewachsenen Söhne besteht in erbeuteten Vieh und fliesst in der Hauptsache zur Herde des Vaters".

[149] Other restrictions such as the prohibition against snuffing and drin-[554] king beer, both privileges of the elders, confirm the general status of inferiority of the initiates with relation to the elders.

where unarmed natives of the neighbouring tribes, whose duty or pleasure took them into the Masai Reserve, have been wantonly murdered, and the catalogue also includes numerous instances of thefts of stock from neighbouring farms and territories. An investigation of the record of each of these cases will show that in a small number only of incidents has the perpetrator of the crime been brought to book. The probability that the commission of a stock-theft or a murder can be performed by a Masai of the "Muran" class without the knowledge of his associates is so slight that it has been found necessary to accept the principle that the responsibility for the surrender of criminals traced to any particular area rests on all the members of the section inhabiting that area. This system is in vogue throughout all the native districts of the Protectorate and is generally employed with a fair measure of success, but a similar success does not attend its application to the Masai Reserve, and this reserve is, in fact, the area to which the great majority of impositions of fines under the Collective Punishments Ordinance, 1909, have been applied, the refusal of the Masai to assist in tracing the criminal rendering it necessary to utilize the provisions of the Ordinance to effect the punishment of the whole section involved. The blooding of a spear by the murder of an unprotected wanderer or the theft of stock guarded perhaps by children is a survival of the traditions which necessitated the "Muran" to prove their manhood during the period in the standing army or the "'L-Ayok" to prove their worth before circumcision. Such acts may not be regarded at the present day as valiant, but it seems that the criminal's associates have not yet come to look on them as reprehensible, and the Masai, on account of their wealth, do not possess the same dread of a collective fine as is felt by certain of the poorer tribes. Under any circumstances, the "Muran" offer no assistance in the tracking down of the criminal and the elders, though professing detective zeal, are powerless to intervene. The attitude of the section involved in such cases is one of surprise and listlessness—they never know anything—and the collective fine which may ensue has not hitherto had the result of discouraging the adoption of such an attitude.

648* 674 648* 674 672 561 681

Divisions.

It will generally be found that fines of this nature have been levied on Companies or "Sirits" of different clans, and, sometimes, on all the members of a clan or division. There is no case on record in which a collective punishment has been imposed on the Masai tribe as a whole. It is therefore necessary to refer shortly to the divisions into which the Masai, who are all of one tribe, are divided by their traditions and customs, and to note also the divisions into which they are divided in practice for the purposes of the administration of the reserve. A description of the traditional divisions of the Masai people is given in Mr. Hollis' Book on the Masai, pp. 260 and 261, but the names which are now in use to denote the divisions of the tribe within the reserve do not exclusively follow either the genealogical or the geographical divisions which are there set out. The Officer-in-Charge of the Masai reserve is endeavouring to confine the members of each division to certain areas set apart for them as locations, and this step will have the effect of reconciling the name given to a division with the locality in which it is found, thus tending to perpetuate a convenient form of nomenclature.

619 621 634

Whatever may have been the original system on which these divisions were formed, it appears that there is a really marked clan feeling between them, and several incidents are recorded which disclose the presence of mutual distrust and strained relationship between the divisions, while interference by one division with another is keenly resented. These divisions form the basis of the tribal organisation of the Masai as it exists to-day and each division has its own Council of Elders. In the recently constituted "Masai Council," one elder, or more, has been chosen to represent each division and the Council so formed has been accepted as representative of the whole tribe. It will thus be seen that the division system presents an admirable method of dealing with the tribe, closely allied to the location system employed in other Native Reserves in the Protectorate, and has enabled unrest or crime to be so localized as to limit the liability for offences committed to certain definite sections of the Masai. Nevertheless, there is not sufficient difference in the behaviour or customs of the members of each

Masai Council.

634 [628] [623]

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

B. Junior Warriorhood. — circumcision — subdivisions of age — formation of Manyattas — relations between junior and senior warriors — promotion (Unoto).

881 304 561 As in the case of other ceremonies, it is not the details but the wider significance of the operation which claims our attention. The first most important point is that circumcision is the visible sign of admittance to full membership of the tribe, and that anyone desirous of becoming a "Masai" must be operated upon. After admittance there are many ceremonies of promotion but it is not essential that every member of the tribe should attend; it is essential, however, that he should be circumcised. Prior to circumcision no youth may have intercourse with a circumcised woman. This is a rule most strictly adhered to. Further, the moran, whose perquisite the mature girls are, deny the youths' access to their girls. Consequently circumcision and its attendant ceremonies admit the youths to a full sex life.

881 304 428 561 Hollis states that circumcision usually takes place between the ages of 13 and 17, though orphans and the children of poor parents frequently wait until they are twenty. My own observations would indicate that 16 or 17 is the lower limit, except in the case of youths whose fathers have died, who want to be in a position to inherit. The existence of this latter custom, circumcision to permit inheritance, is a good example of the meaning of the ceremony. If it has not been performed, the youth whose father dies cannot inherit; the cattle, wives, etc., must all be taken over by a paternal uncle as guardian pending the circumcision of the eldest male child. But if permission can be obtained for his circumcision a youth of ten or twelve can assume control of a boma, to the exclusion of all other relatives. In other words, as stated above, circumcision is the mark of full membership of the tribe.

561 When the initiation of a new age has been sanctioned circumcision takes place singly or in groups of two or three in the father's boma. The ceremony is usually performed during or at the end of the rains, a time of plenty amongst the Masai, and is suspended during the dry season. Four successive years are taken up with the circumcision of an age, and it is natural that those circumcised in one season possess a marked feeling of affinity towards one another. This shows itself in the possession of a group name for each batch, the same names being employed from generation to generation. They are, for the first batch, il Changen opirr or il Kiperen, followed by il Paringotwalang, il Kirimbot and finally il Tareto. The above refers to a right hand age; a left hand age, being fewer in number, possesses only the three last-mentioned divisions.

561 621 When all of one age have been circumcised they divide themselves into companies (isirit) each of which forms a warrior village or barracks (emanyatta). In Tanganyika the manyattas are usually formed on a territorial or sectional basis, e.g. Engasumet, Olmolog, Mferegi (areas) or Selei, Purku, etc. (sections), though Whitehouse describes a ceremony whereby the warriors, presumably of one area, divide themselves up, frequently on a clan basis.

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

When blood-money is paid, it is less when the payment is between clansmen. The logical extension of this principle 614 is that when cattle are due from one member of the clan they may be taken from any of his clansmen. This is in fact the rule for payment 672 of compensation amongst the Masai, though the offender and his near 681 relatives naturally pay more. In the one case of blood money in which details were obtained, members of sub-clans other than that of the murderer contributed, and it is, therefore, safe to calculate that clan responsibility and cohesion applies to the whole clan in greater degree than it does to the sub-clans.

B. Family matters — the boma system — the 'gates' — polygamy — marriage statistics — number of cattle to each gate — relations in law — travelling — adoption — economic.

Briefly, the Masai live in groups of families, usually three, four 361 or five together, in a village comprising a ring of huts, built immediately 621
inside a circular fence, which thus forms an enclosure for the cattle. Such villages are usually built some two or three miles, frequently more, from the water which the cattle use, so that it is unusual to find more than two or three bomas in close proximity. Frequently a boma is a mile or more from its nearest neighbour. In the village each family possesses a separate gate, engishome, round which its members are grouped.

It is difficult to define a typical family or 'gate' unit. The ideal of 592
a Masai elder is to possess half a dozen wives with many children, ranged 595
on either side of his gate. As he marries he places the first on the right of the gate, and the second on the left; when a third wife comes in she builds her hut immediately to the right of the gate, and the fourth immediately to the left, the earlier wives moving round accordingly. Each wife on arrival is given a number of cattle, which are hers to hold in trust for her children. She is also given, for tending, some of the unallocated cattle which the elder holds in reserve for future marriages; such cattle are termed engishu e boo. Those living to the right and the left of the gate form two distinct groups, indaloishin, and [428] for the purpose of inheritance, should a wife on the left die without male issue, her cattle will be inherited by the senior male on the left of the gate; they may in no circumstances be taken by an heir on the right so long as there is a son on the left to inherit.

When the sons are circumcised, they nominally take over the 591 guardianship of their mother, and of the cattle allocated to her. In the 592
old days they would move off with her to the manyatta, warriors' village, but this is less frequent now. As they approach elderhood, however, in polygamous families the sons at times claim their patrimony and move off with their mothers, to form a separate gate in some other boma. More frequently they show little desire for this responsibility, and spend [361]
the greater part of their period of warriorhood wandering round the countryside, or living in meat-camps in the bush (ol pul). Once they become elders it is exceptional for a son to continue to live with his father, except when the latter has reached senility.

This is the theory of the gate system, but in practice it varies very 595 considerably from the ideal. Polygamy (see below) is limited by the

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 place until the two senior groups move out together into the elders' class. The result of this arrangement is that no group which enters the warrior class as murategedienye ever stays in the warrior class for as long as any jangienobur group.

561 62 591 [361] [634] Manyattas.—During their time of service in the warrior class the members of each age-group live in special villages built away from the main married men's villages. These villages are territorial, in that all the warriors of a single age-group in a single area live in one such village. Warriors of different age-groups never live in a single manyatta, as each manyatta is essentially the headquarters of the members of a single age-group in the warrior class in a given area. Manyattas are moved about from place to place when fresh grazing is necessary.

62 561 A manyatta consists of a number of huts each one of which is built, and lived in, by the mother (or another married woman relative) of one of the warriors of that manyatta. Normally each warrior has his own mother living in the manyatta and she is accompanied by her children, especially by some of the man's uninitiated sisters and half-sisters. The elder women are there to do the work of the manyatta, [462] such as milking, fuel gathering, water drawing, etc., and in this they are assisted to a certain extent by the girls, but the latter are chiefly in the manyattas as companions and lovers for the warriors. No girl can live at a manyatta at all unless her brother or half-brother is a member of that manyatta, and each warrior living at a manyatta is expected to bring two or three of his sisters or half-sisters to live at the manyatta, and if possible some of these should be fairly grown up and others quite children who will grow up at the manyatta.

836 561 Sex Life.—During the warrior stage no man may have sexual intercourse with any initiated girl or with married women, but on the other hand, there exists in the manyattas a system of sex life which is decidedly interesting. The warriors, whenever they feel like it (which, as my informant pointed out, is "very, very often"), invite one of the girls (sisters of the other men in the Manyatta) to sleep with them. [201] This is done by a method and formula which corresponds in some ways to the [832] umbani of the Kikuyu peoples, but has certain marked differences. [971]

A group of warriors at any time of the day will stand outside the village and call to any of the girls whom they see about, and when they come they say to them tasiukiu, and the girls then each select one of the men, and say "I choose so-and-so," not mentioning the man by his own name but as "the son of so-and-so." By so doing the girl binds herself to go and sleep with the man so chosen that night. It is a point of honour and etiquette that no girl so called upon to choose a man may refuse to do so unless she is (a) actually at a menstruation period at the time, or (b) has already promised herself to another man for that night, but she may make her choice from any of those men who were in the group that called to her.

175
791
/21 cont./
[165]
[232]
[173]
[787]
[648]
recovery from their pains. Mbatyan eamed outstanding merit through the discovery of a protective vaccination against lung disease of cattle. According to the corresponding accounts of Zendeo and four old Masai, Mbatyan, several years before his death, had already prophesied the appearance of rinderpest that did not take place until after it and the subsequent subduing of the Masai by Europeans. In the outward appearance of this man nothing divulged his power. On a thin, average-sized figure sat an ugly head whose face was disfigured more particularly by the lack of one eye -- allegedly a birth defect. This latter circumstance led to the origin of the legend that the chief must always be one-eyed and that the father should destroy in childhood one eye of the son later following him. The face was even more repulsive because of a scanty, slightly gray full beard. That is, in contrast to the other men, neither the ol oiboni nor the el goiatek and el kiborõn mentioned farther below may pluck out their beards, because they would lose their supernatural power through the removal of the beard hairs.

[826]
[302]

791
621
[361]
[595]
[623]
The chief's village consists of a large number of kraals lying close together, several of which serve as the dwelling of the ol oiboni with his numerous wives. Mbatyan had about 200 wives; the still young Zendeo has only 20 of them. No strange man may enter these dwelling kraals of the chief and his wives or appear in their immediate vicinity. Close by are found the rest of the kraals, one of which is intended for conferences and receptions and in which a few older men close to the chief as helpers and advisers (el dunganak oirorie ol oiboni) live with their families, whereas the others are occupied by warriors who form the defense of the village and, on the marches of the chief, his bodyguard. In his last years of life, when Mbatyan was mentally disturbed, he often spent months on the open steppes in a small hut made of branches, around which the warriors accompanying him camped in a large circle. The ceremony in the chief's camp is very simple. One of the men wandering about idly in the village leads the newcomer into the conference kraal, where he waits for the chief. As soon as the latter appears, the stranger

791
576
609

361 /26 cont./
417 are separated from one another by thorn barricades, and the huts
35 are often protected from damage by the cattle by means of thorny 824 branches placed around them.
233

One distinguishes between kraals for the married (eng an el • 621 moruak) and such for the warriors (ol manjata). In the former live 361 the married men (ol moruo, el moruak) with their families, in the latter the warriors (ol morani, el moran) with their mothers and the half-grown, uncircumcised girls /27/ (en dito, n doje). One sometimes also finds several kraals built together into one. The author found a village that consisted of five kraals built next to one another, three of which were El moruo kraals. A dense thorn-barricade extended around the entire kraal complex.

595 The married man on the average has five to six wives, wealthy [556] men have in addition also a few secondary wives to whom they [736] are not legally married. The secondary wives are made up of widows who may not marry again or who have not remarried and

342
417
291

Merker phot.

Ill. 8. Small pen beside the hut.

/31 cont./

517 For the most part an atmosphere of dullness and boredom lies 535 over the kraal of the married (eng an el moruak). Only on moon-
[533] lit evenings /32/ do the women amuse themselves with song, especially if a few warriors are there on a visit and give the impetus for the gaiety. Women and warriors dance in separate groups. For dancing the women station themselves in a row, move forward a short distance, then make a "right turn" and, with short steps, dance in a row back to the former place. The married men dance only on festive occasions, but by themselves. The text of the accompanying song naturally refers to the life prevailing here.

517 Otherwise quiet prevails in the family kraal after darkness has 521 set in; in good weather the people will sit for a while in front of 513 the huts, silently or softly conversing, and go to rest already at 8:00 o'clock or 8:30.

• 621 Even 12-14 years ago, before the Massai lost their huge 592 livestock-holdings in two great epidemics, each family had its 178 own kraal; now, on the other hand, almost everywhere several 233 families live together.
731

In the morning life begins around 4:00 o'clock, at which time
512 the women fetch the quite young calves from the compartments
[462] and take them to the cows, where they remain for the driving out
[233] to pasture. At daybreak the milking commences, for which all [234] the women appear. After it is finished, breakfast, consisting of 264 fresh milk, is taken. Milk, soups, and thin porridge are drunk
[512] from gourd bottles; foods of greater consistency are put in the [262] mouth with the fingers. Meat is partially cut up with a knife and [415] completely torn into bits with the teeth. The hands are not washed [412] before a meal. Smacking and belching while eating show good breeding. Men and women eat apart and have their separate vessels for eating and drinking. Those of the latter are shared by the children. If the man wishes to eat in the hut, the woman has to leave it beforehand.

[Warrior Kraal]

/83 cont./

XI.

000 Warrior kraal. -- Its inhabitants. -- Work. -- Foods of the warriors. -- Forest meals. -- Organization: the speaker, his badge and tasks; leaders; benefactors. -- Dueling. -- Daily life. -- Mealtimes. -- Dance and song. -- Wart permission for it, preparation, forest meal, marching off, march, camp, surgeon, spies. -- Formation of the war march for the attack. -- Battle. -- Booty. -- Captives. -- Distribution of the booty. -- Return of the warriors. -- Defense procedures. -- Attack on caravans. -- Concluding peace. -- March performance. -- Retirement from the warrior standing.

• 621 701 [361] [634] In each district one usually finds only one warrior kraal, which quarters all the warriors of this area. It lies in the spot from which the district can best be protected from enemy attacks. The warrior kraal (ol manjata or manjada) is not externally differentiated from other kraals by anything. It is inhabited by 50 to 100 warriors, sometimes almost double that number of young girls, the mothers and several younger brothers /84/ of the warriors. In every hut there is a large sleeping place for a warrior, and usually, at the other end of the hut, a small one for one of the mothers. The huts of those who are staying abroad for the time being are common property, and anyone who wants one takes it as quarters for the night by sticking his spear in the ground in front of it toward sundown. The others then often sleep three or four in a hut, as do the mothers.

[342] [513] [423]

621 701 462 [351] [356] The kraal is laid out by the old women, they build and maintain huts and thorn fence. Together with the girls they milk the cattle, clean the kraal every day in that they spread the cow dung, while the former sweep up and carry out the goat dung, fetch water, and keep the huts clean.

Their!

#233 livestock, described below, consist of herds of cattle,
[231] sheep, goats and donkeys. The Masai way of life revolves around the grazing and water requirements of their livestock.

621
561 Their principal units of social organization, as they affect this discussion, are sections, age grades,
614 villages, and families. Clans have an important place
177 in ethnological discussions and in some areas they
178 determine matters such as water rights (Fosbrooke, 1948). Our impression is that throughout most of Western Masailand the concept of clans is of more ethnological than ecological interest. One basic reason for this is the effect of the Government administration in Western Masailand.

With the physical and social upheavels in both Kenya and Tanganyika from the 1880's through about 1920, the establishment of African District Councils (District-wide governing bodies), creation of the park and conservation unit, and various development projects, the clan and other social units have been greatly disrupted. Grant (1954, 1957) describes this effect in some detail for the Masai in the former boundaries of the Serengeti National Park.

! [i.e., the Masai.--Analyst]

561 He may marry when he is a senior warrior. When he becomes 593 an elder he may take his mother (if he wants) and her 591 share of the family cattle (for each wife has a given [582] share of cattle) and move off to join others in a village [422] (Fosbrooke, 1948).
[562]

561 The unmarried girls of the tribe live in the 836 warrior's manyattas and normally each moran has one [583] favorite girl who becomes his concubine. They told us that usually that girl became the warrior's first wife.

621 (c) Villages: Villages consist of a group of families, often about five but sometimes more or less. The villages are commonly called bomas or 361 (improperly) manyattas. Each boma consists of an outer
*233 circular thorn fence with a series of gates, one for [417] each Masai elder. Within the gates there are a series of huts. Often around the huts are small thorn fences in which young livestock are kept. The cattle of the village are normally herded into the space in the center of the boma each night for protection from two and four legged predators, and in the morning they are taken back out to graze.

595 When a Masai marries, his first wife builds on the right of his gate, his second on the left,

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

If he is a man of wealth and importance he may be elected chief[1], in which case he is responsible for the discipline of the warriors and their appearance when summoned to fight, though he does not go to the wars himself. As with most East African tribes an elder's ideal of existence seems to be ease, not unmixed with drunkenness. Proverb No. 64 (p. 249), 'Don't lie with your feet against a post like the father of many sons,' meaning 'Don't give yourself airs,' is a vivid picture of the Masai pater familias taking his ease in the primitive posture of lying on his back with his feet against a post, while his family do all the work for him.

Masai women, unlike the men, are carefully dressed in leather garments, but a rare, and according to our ideas most unbecoming, custom forces them to shave their heads. Before marriage they are circumcised, and signalize their change of state by wearing large circular earrings and necklaces of brass and iron wire. Both girls and women have their legs and arms encased in iron ornaments, so that they can sometimes hardly walk.

This military organization of the Masai made them a most effective body for destructive military operations, and explains not only the predominant position which they acquired in East Africa, but also the respect which they inspired and the extent to which their customs were imitated by other tribes. On the other hand, it probably also is the reason why they never founded any state or polity analogous to the kingdoms of Uganda and Unyoro. The centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship and desirous only of military glory. Retirement from this band of warriors as a chief was honourable, but seems to have been recognized as a removal to an inferior sphere of activity. The chiefs arranged the details of the raids which the warriors wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight.

The nearest approach to a central and superior authority among the Masai is the medicine man or Laibon (more correctly Ol-oibeni; see p. 324, &c.). They all belong to the Kidongi family of the Aiser clan, and are said to be descended from a personage called Ol-le-Mweiya, who came down from heaven and was found by the Aiser sitting on the top of Mount Ngong. This was nine generations ago, the genealogy having been preserved. The influence of the

[1] The chief is elected from the warriors, but leaves their ranks at once and becomes an elder.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Ore ōji 'N-gaminīni ten ōyeñg il-moñgi, neisho 'l-kulikae 'n-giri.

whilst the Gaminini are chosen if they frequently slaughter bullocks and give the meat to their comrades. 554

E-murata oo-'n-doiye.

Ten eiyōuni neiyami 'n-doiye oo-'l-Maasae, nemurati.

Ore eng-oloñg namurati, nōyeñgi ol-kerr araki ol-kiteñg, ōji Ol-oitupukunieki, anaa too-'l-ayok.

Nemurati ninje ti-atwa aji. Naa, ten eishir, nemeata en-netiu.

Mepika ninje 'l-ōpir anaa 'l-ayok, ol-merisian ake epika.

Ore ten eishiu, neiyami.

The girls' circumcision.

When Masai girls wish to marry, they are circumcised. 88 [582]

On the day that the operation is performed, a sheep or bullock is slaughtered, and as with the boys it is called The (animal) which has caused her to be taken out (from amongst the girls).

Women are operated upon indoors, and it is not considered a disgrace if they cry out. [304]

Instead of the ostrich feathers which the boys wear, a wreath made from the leaves of the Hyphaene (or doum) palm, or of grass, is donned. [237] [292]

When they recover, they are married. [582]

E-unoto.

Ten eiyōu 'l-muran nēuni, nepwo aañgas áiñgoru Ol-aunōni, na ol-tuñgani ōata menye oo ñgotonye eiñgoru, neata 'n-gīshu, neitu ae-oloñg ēar ol-tuñgani, nemedanya 'ng-onyek e-menye oo ñgotonye, nemeata 'ng-onyek pusi[2].

Ore pe etum, nemiliki;

The feast called E-unoto or the selection of a chief[1].

622 574

If the warriors wish to select a chief, who is called Ol-aunoni, they choose a man whose parents are still living, who owns cattle and has never killed anybody, whose parents are not blind, and who himself has not a discoloured eye.

When they succeed in getting such

[1] A chief called Ol-aunōni is appointed for each sub-district. His duties are to keep the warriors of his sub-district together, and he is responsible to the chief medicine-man for their appearance in case of war. If a warrior disobeys the orders of his chief, he is flogged or maltreated by his companions.

[2] Pus (pl. pusi) means the colour of a corpse or blue.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

672 574 eisudorieki metebana nebau e-unoto.

Ore ten enyoru ol-oiboni, neripókíni ol-kila anaa ol-loo-'l-móruak oo 'surutya.

Ore etaa en-nōuni, neitauni en-giti-aíg ti-aulo e-manyata naji O-eingira.

Nepiki inna-kiti-aíg 'n-giabu naalepo ake.

Ore inna-cloíg nauni, neibuíigi ol-aunōni, amu ten ejókíni: 'Ira ol-aunōni,' eitu eibuíigi, nekwet aisudori, araki ēar ol-tuíigani, pe meaku ol-aunōni, amu eiba ten eaku ol-móruo, amu meitōki ale en-jore.

[887]

Ore p' eibuíigi, nepiki 'surutya, neishopōkíni ol-kila anaa ol-móruo; neidipayu en-giaa e-inna-cloíg.

Ore tadōkenya neiíigoruni ol-kiteíig arua, neibok il-murran aaman.

Ore pa epwo 'n-giabu aboo, neiíigoruni ol-tuíigani ōgol eibuíig ol-kiteíig e-móuo aun, neibuíig ol-likae o-ararua.

[231] Neremi illo-kiteíig en-bidíig, nēyeíigi te-inne.

Neinok il-móruak en-gima kitok to-'l-eaingo le-'manyata, nepik e-móuo o-'l-eeōwan.

a one, they do not inform him; it is kept hidden from him until the time for the celebration of the feast arrives.

If the chief medicine-man approves of the selection, a cloth is made for the new chief like those worn by the old men, and surutya ear-rings are obtained.

Just before the feast a small kraal, called O-eingira, is built a short distance from the warriors' kraal.

Only milch cows are placed in this kraal.

On the day of the feast the chief is seized, for if he were told that he is to be chosen, he would run away and hide, or kill some one. The idea of becoming an old man is distasteful to him, since he will be unable to again go to the wars.

When he has been seized, the surutya ear-rings are put on him, and he is clothed like an old man. After this the work for the day is over.

On the morrow a black bullock with a white neck and belly is sought out from the herds, and surrounded by the warriors.

When the cattle go to the grazing ground, a strong man is chosen, who holds the bullock by the horn at arm's length, whilst another one seizes it by the navel.

The bullock is stabbed in the nape of the neck[1], and skinned on the spot.

The old men then light a big fire in the centre of the warriors' kraal, and throw a buffalo horn into it.

[113]

[1] All the Nilotic tribes butcher their cattle by stabbing them in the nape of the neck (Schweinfurth, The Heart of Africa, vol. i, p. 60).

1; Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Ore ɣ' eaku en-aŋŋ eŋ-gima, ɛŋiktini 'l-murran, aana eitaake pikin ti-eale: 'Eidipa.'

Nakwet il-murran pikin amurutikino idya-mbon.

Ore ol-oitera aleiki, nepik eng-aina atwa en-gima, neitan e-mbon, neitório eng-aina, naitadoi il-kulikae idya-mbon, ɛŋjo: 'Aidipa.'

Ónaa, naidipeya e-anoto.

When the fire is dying down, the warriors standing outside are called, and told that, 'it is finished.' 622 574

They all run towards the spot, racing to get the horn.

The one who arrives first puts his hand in the fire, and, taking out the horn, stretches out his arm. He shows it to the others, and cries out: 'I have finished it.'

With this the E-anoto feast terminates.

Nebarni ol-aunini te-inna-ɛŋiŋ o ol-aigwenani ɛŋtai epa ake eton eita emurati.

The Aunini, or chief, is shaved on the same day together with the Aigwenani, or Counsellor, who was elected before the feast of circumcision. 622 302

Nebarni ai ninje 'l-kulikae-murran too-'n-gulye-oiŋŋi.

Afterwards the warriors may be shaved whenever they wish.

Ore ɣ' eidipi aitoun, ɛŋyeŋgiake 'l-murran, netoni 'l-epaitin oeŋgwan ana inyat, nepwo ɛŋ-jore naji En-oo-'n-dorosi araki En-e-'anoto.

When the warriors have elected their chief, they slaughter cattle, and wait for four or five months, at the expiration of which they proceed on a raid. This is called The (fulfilment) of the vow or The (selection) of the chief. 721

Neiskop 'l-karash oeji ɛŋ 'N-dorosi, nepik il-arash.

They wear cotton cloths[1], called The vow[2], on which are sewn the seeds of the shirikiti tree[3]. 292 894

Nepik ɛŋ 'n-gik e-'eyaiti 'murto naeji 'mangik, ne'ya 'l-kulikae 'l-kidoŋgi le-'l-kumbun araki 'l-lenyak le-menya.

They also wear necklaces made of twigs of the e-eyaiti tree[4], and called Mangik, and some carry their fathers' snuff-boxes or fans with them. 301 324 293

[1] Before cotton cloths were introduced, dressed skins were together were worn. 'N-dorosi garments are worn like the Spanish poncho, a slit being made in the middle for the head to pass through.

[2] A raid undertaken after a long peace is also called en-oo-'n-dorosi. Any warrior who shirks his duties on an occasion of this sort can be put to death, and his murderer will not be punished. 286 621

[3] Zygiriza monoica, R. Br.

[4] Acalypha fruticosa, Forsk.

FC48 179

disturbed their old formations, adventurers of various descriptions have introduced the necessity of undertaking manual labour in portions of each reserve and a succession of punitive expeditions or displays of force, the last of which occurred some ten years ago, has brought home to them a conception of the power of the Government, a realisation which has tended towards a more progressive attitude owing to the diminution which it caused in their minds of the influence held by their medicine-men. No punitive expedition has ever been undertaken against the Masai, an omission which was very largely due to the authority and sagacity of Lenana, the chief medicine-man at the time when the European Government was first encountered, who survived long enough to keep his people in check until such a degree of administration had been effected as to render the despatch of a punitive expedition a measure that would only be resorted to in the last extremity. Further, the Masai now thoroughly realise how vulnerable they are if ever they come into armed conflict with the Government. Their enormous, immobile herds would immediately be lost and a sufficient degree of punishment could quickly be attained. For this reason, it is extremely improbable that they will, of their own initiative, so far forget what they consider to be their best interests as to cause a serious disturbance. The escape from punitive expeditions, however, has undoubtedly been a factor in the perpetuation in their original form of the Masai ideas and traditions.

101 118A 978 232

The social formation of the Masai.

As will be seen in Chapter II., the Masai tribe originally consisted of both pastoral and agricultural sections, of which the latter was almost annihilated by the Lotuxo and survives at present only in one or two scattered localities, mainly in areas reserved for other tribes. A small section of these agriculturalists, the Nguruman, is to be found at the north end of Lake Natron, but that is the only trace of them in the present Masai Reserve, and these people now show a tendency to assume the habits and customs of the pastoralists. The problem presented in the administration of the Masai is therefore almost exclusively concerned with the pastoral section. According to the social system of this section, the male sex is divided into boys, warriors and elders. The first stage continues until circumcision, which may be performed approximately between the ages of thirteen and seventeen. These boys are called "L-Ayok." After circumcision, they become warriors, or "Moran," those who have been circumcised at about the same time being said to belong to the same age. The "Moran" remain on the fighting strength of the tribe for periods varying from seven to fourteen years, during which period they constitute a standing army. They are divided into Companies, or "Sirits," which live in separate villages, or "Manyattas," some of these containing as many as six or seven hundred fighting men. With few exceptions, the "Moran" of the present day perform no work of any kind. In days gone by, they were expected to carry out raids and preserve the armed prestige of the tribe, but the introduction of the "Pax Britannica" has deprived them of such employment, and they, having found no alternative occupation, are content to remain in idleness and to live in the state of free love with immature girls which tradition prescribed as the duty of the warrior in the days of tribal warfare.

561

Social system of the pastoral section. "L-Ayok." "Moran."

The place of the military organisation.

This military organisation of the Masai made them, in the past, a most effective body for destructive military operations, and explains not only the predominant position which they occupied in East Africa, but also the respect which they inspired and the extent to which their customs were imitated by other tribes. On the other hand, it probably also is the reason why they never founded any state or polity analogous to the Kingdoms of Uganda and Unyoro. The centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship and desirous only of military glory. Retirement from this band of warriors as a chief was honourable, but seems to have been regarded as a removal to an inferior sphere of activity. The chiefs arranged the details of the raids which the warriors wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight.*

561 562 632

* Sir Charles Eliot, November, 1904, Introduction to "The Masai: Language and Folklore," by A. C. Hollis.

(b) Headmen in the Masai Reserve.

648*
622
634
434

Location No.	Division.	Headman.	Date of appointment under the Nat. Auth. Order., 1912.	Annual Salary.	Remarks.
1	Sisia	Tuwai	8/8/13	Rs. 130	2 Sisikhori.
		Kedelle Ole Ngalgilo ..	8/8/14 & 18/4/15	Rs. 130	—
		Ole Kedenya	7/1/15	Nil	Sisia Manyatta
2	Loita	Sendeu	—	Nil	—
		Ole Kaduo, Senior ..	18/4/15	Nil	—
		Ole Kaduo, Junior ..	—	Nil	Manyatta.
		Ole Mati	7/1/15	Nil	Loita Manyatta.
	Sabi	Ol Ol Tepuna	—	Nil	Manyatta.
	L'Olepuk	Ol Ontaure	14/2/14	Nil	—
3	Purko	Ole Gulisho	18/4/15	Rs. 600	Mara area.
		Ole Mosilemali	14/4/15	Rs. 600	Naroki area.
		Ole Kotikosh	8/8/13	Rs. 240	Lemek.
		Ole Kosio	—	Nil	—
		Ole Kenkuke	18/4/15	Nil	Narosura area.
		Ole Yoli	—	Paid	—
		Ole Nalin	—	Nil	—
		Ole Sulieti	—	Nil	—
		Ole Kaguinai	—	Nil	—
		Ole Peri	7/1/15	Nil	Purko Manyatta.
		Ole Mortjoi	7/1/15	Nil	2 Kimwani Manyatta.
		Ole Kenkenke	7/1/15	Nil	2 Matabo Manyatta.
		Ol Oppoje	7/1/15	Nil	2 Polyani Manyatta.
		Ole Tuesse	7/1/15	Nil	L'Alaisy Manyatta.
		Ole Lenkaiga	—	Nil	Manyatta.
		Ole Kajuge	7/1/15	Rs. 240	L'Alaisy Manyatta.
	2 Dumat	Ole Kutalgo	8/8/13 & 18/4/15	Rs. 190	2 Kalil area.
		Ole Mortjoi	7/1/15	Nil	2 Dumat Manyatta.
	[illegible]	[illegible] ..	18/4/15	—	—
		Rashi	—	Rs. 180	—
		Ole Sotoiko	7/1/15	Nil	Kalenyokya Manyatta.
		Ole Supuo	7/1/15	Nil	2 Pungure Manyatta.
		Ole Kotikoki	7/1/15	Nil	2 Kodimani Manyatta.
5	L'Ode Kiboi ..	Ole Naikuna	8/7/14 & 18/4/15	Rs. 180	—
		Ole Gugujyi	24/10/14	Rs. 180	—
		Ole Kotiabo	—	Nil	—
	Ngurumen	Ole Sasinga	—	Nil	Manyatta.
6	Matapato	Ole Obi	8/8/13	—	—
		Ole Olodonio	18/4/15	—	—
		Ole Moli	8/8/14	Rs. 130	—
7	Sighirai	Saggi Ole Lemesa	18/4/15	Rs. 1,000	Loitoa.
	(Engikoraji)	Ngurunya	18/4/15	Rs. 720	—
	2 Dula Lekutuk ..	Ole Mungu	8/8/14 & 18/4/15	Nil	—
		Ole Sankuna	24/10/14	Rs. 180	Manyatta.
8	Kapetei	Ngunga Ole Kasi	18/4/15	—	—
		Ole Mabua	—	Nil	—
		Ole Mayani	8/8/13	Rs. 120	—
		Ole Nanai	24/10/14	Rs. 120	Kapetei Manyatta.
9	Sighirai	Metiako Ole Kenkulie ..	18/4/15	Paid	—
	(Lekutuk)	Ole Mugo	—	Nil	Manyatta.
	Wankumbu	Ole Nankidale	18/11/15	Rs. 120	—
		Ole Sayalel	—	Nil	Manyatta.

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

The Lytunu is a warrior elected by a number of kraals as their captain or leader, with absolute power of life and death. 624
He is their judge in cases of dispute. He directs their battles, though, curiously enough, he does not lead his men, but, like the general of a civilized army, he stands aside and watches the progress of the fight under the direct command of the Lygonani. If, however, he sees symptoms of his men wavering, he forthwith precipitates himself with his body-guard into the battle. Of course he holds his office purely on sufferance, and if he fails to give satisfaction he is summarily deposed. This, indeed, is almost the only attempt at a form of government. Each war-district elects its own Lytunu. The Lygonani, again, is a very different personage. 622
He is the public leader of a kraal, leads and guides the debate in cases of dispute. To be such arrogant and pugnacious savages, the Masai are the most remarkable speakers and debaters imaginable. In some American novels we have the Indian belauded for his eloquence and dignity; but commend me to the Masai for grace and oratorical power, for order and decorum in debate; and, indeed, for most of the good qualities which in these days are conspicuous by their absence in our own House of Talking. Not that their genius in this line is always worthily applied; for in their finical persistency in talking out a question they might even [illegible] our Parliamentary Obstructionists. They will spend days discussing the most trivial matter—nothing, indeed, can be settled without endless talk. But we must proceed with our history.

The Lytunu and Lygonani having been elected, a raid to 726 the coast was determined on. For a month they devoted themselves to an indispensable, though somewhat revolting, preparation. This consisted in their retiring in small parties [261] to the forest, and there gorging themselves with beef. This they did under the belief that they were storing up a supply of muscle and ferocity of the most pronounced type. This strange process being finished, and the day fixed on, the women of the kraal went outside before sunrise, with [782] grass dipped in the cream of a cow's milk. Then they [535] danced and invoked Ngai for a favourable issue to the enterprise, after which they threw the grass in the direction of the enemy. The young men spent several hours at their devotions, howling out in the most ludicrous street-singer fashion, "Aman Ngái-ái! Aman Mbaratien!" (We pray to God! We pray to Mbaratien!"). Previous to this, how-

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

as the Masai race shall exist," and to refrain from leasing or granting any land (except such land as may be required for mining or for any public purpose) "without the sanction of the paramount chief and the representatives of the Masai tribe." 631 648

As a people of Nilo-Hamitic origin, the Masai have an affinity to the Nandi, Kipsigis, Suk and Turkana of the Keyna Colony, but they have maintained more of their original custom and mode of life than the Nandi or the Kipsigis. A variety of circumstances have combined to produce this result, but it is undoubtedly due in large measure to the fact that the extent and quality of the lands occupied by them has allowed them, as a tribe, to escape the disturbance in their traditional life caused by the necessity of wage earning on the European farms and urban centres or of taking to agriculture. It is noteworthy that though parties of the Masai have on various occasions lent assistance to the Kenya Government in military or police operations against other tribes, they have never enlisted in any numbers in the armed forces maintained in the Colony, and they actively resisted the efforts made to secure their recruitment during the War of 1914-1918. 101 648

The social structure of the Masai has from the outset created an obstacle to the adoption of any system of native administration similar to that in force in other parts of the Colony. The military organization of the tribe was in earlier days maintained by a system which divided the male population into boys (L'Ayok), warriors (Moran) and elders. The first stage continued till circumcision, performed any time between thirteen and seventeen years of age. Those who were circumcised within a certain period, normally four years, formed an Age Group, and those circumcised during the succeeding period formed a second Age Group, these Groups being distinguished as the Right Hand and Left Hand Groups respectively. The circumcised youths became the warrior class, who were divided into Companies (sirit) living in separate villages (manyatta) often of a considerable size, and the larger manyattas had their own "Counsellors" (L'Aiganak) chosen from among the Moran. 561 701 [361]

The Moran had special privileges, such as that of cohabitation with unmarried girls, and were relieved of all tribal obligation save fighting and raiding. Even such forms of manual labour as were involved in a pastoral life were avoided by them. They remained on the fighting strength of the tribe or periods which originally varied from seven to twelve years, and then, after the celebration of the E-unoto ceremony, "drank milk" and passed into the stage of Elders. But, as Sir Charles Eliot observed in 1905, "the Elders' ideal of existence seemed to be ease, not unmixed with drunkenness."[1] Those who attained a position of wealth and importance might be elected as Chiefs, but the functions of a Chief were restricted to leadership in raiding or warfare. [836] [622]

There is another feature of importance in the social structure. The Masai are divided into Sections (Alosho) which probably had their origin as clan or kinship groups, but have no close correspondence with geographical divisions. There are 14 recognised Sections, of which the Purko is by far the largest and most wealthy. Each of these Sections has its own Age Grades, so that the period at which youths become Moran, or Moran became Elders at the E-unoto ceremony, do not coincide in the different Sections. Each Section used to have an informal Council of the Elders, but these had little direct control of affairs, particularly where the activities of the Moran were concerned, and the situation 634 [623]

[1] Introduction to The Masai, by A. C. Hollis, 1905. For the significance of the E-Unoto ceremony see page 69 of the Administrative and Political History of the Masai quoted above.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

634 [623] was further complicated by the fact that at stated intervals, normally about 15 years, power passed from the hands of the representatives of one Age Group in each Section into those of the succeeding Age Group, there being thus an alternation of authority in each Section between the Right Hand and Left Hand Groups.

642 To quote Sir Charles Eliot again, the consequence of the traditional structure of Masai society was that "the centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship. The chiefs arranged the details of any raids which [622] the young men wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight." The nearest approach 691 to a central and superior authority was to be found in the Chief Medicine-Man 642 (Laibon), though his authority was based mainly on the discharge of his magical functions.[1] The medicine-men were divided into three grades, of which the first grade was represented by the person of the Laibon, the Chief Medicine-Man of the tribe, and his guidance was held to be of the first importance in any major operation which the tribe might undertake.

THE INTRODUCTION OF THE NATIVE AUTHORITY SYSTEM

175 It is unnecessary to dwell here on the circumstances which for a prolonged 648 period made the Masai a standing menace to the peace of their neighbours. The tribe seems to have reached the height of its power between 1800 and 1850, when it overran Kenya and part of Tanganyika.[2] There were subsequently severe internal dissensions among the Masai, which resulted in two of their five "divisions" being practically destroyed and there was also great mortality as a result of the outbreak of rinderpest and smallpox in the 'eighties of last century. But even though their strength was much reduced, their predatory habits continued to be a matter of grave concern in the early days of the Colony, and seemed in particular to threaten the progress of European settlement. Among the Masai themselves strong feelings were aroused by the measures, taken largely in the interest of European settlers, designed to counteract the propensity of the tribesmen to roam widely in search of fresh grazing grounds, as the result of which they were restricted to a Northern Reserve (Laikipia) and a Southern Reserve, separated from the Northern Reserve by a broad belt of country occupied by European farms. That was the position at the time of the Masai Agreement of 1904, but it subsequently became the policy of the Kenya Government to move the tribesmen in the Northern Reserve into the Southern Reserve, which was to be largely augmented in area for this purpose.[3]

175 In view of the terms of the Agreement of 1904, the assent of the Masai was 648 required for this transfer, and the operation was one of obvious difficulty. In 791 the circumstances it was not unnatural that the Government should have availed itself of the influence exercised by the Chief Medicine-Man, the Laibon Lenana. He had inherited from his father, Mbatian, who died in 1890, a position which commanded general respect, and he himself took a leading position on behalf of the tribe in the discussions which led up to the Agreement of 1904, which he signed as "Chief Laibon." He was subsequently recognized

[1] The word laibon appears to be a Europeanized form of the Masai word Ol'oiboni (A. C. Hollis, The Nandi, 1909, page 49.

[2] Land Commission Report Vol. II para. 203.

[3] The Laikipia Reserve, contained 4,500 square miles. An addition of 6,500 square miles was to be made to the Southern Reserve.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

by the Government as the Paramount Chief of the Masai, a title which was in 1911 continued to his son Segi. It was as Paramount Chief that Segi, through his Regent Legalishu, signed the Agreement of 1911, which recorded the acceptance by the Masai of the move from Laikipia to the Southern Reserve. 175 648 791

But Lenana himself never seems to have claimed a position of sovereignty, nor was it ever accorded to him by the tribe. Segi proved to be lacking in the qualities of his father, and such influence as he possessed was confined to the small Section of which he was a member, while the more important Sections, such as the Purko, either refused to recognize him or treated him with contempt. In 1918, therefore, the Government withdrew his recognition as Paramount Chief. Apart, however, from any question of the personal capacity of Segi, it is obvious that the social structure of the Masai had no place for the conception of chiefship in the form existing in the traditional organization of those Bantu tribes which have a "centralized" system of Government. In the latter, the fundamental principle is the recognition of a tribal head, with authority devolved on territorial subchiefs, and supported on the allegiance of headmen representing either kinsmen groups or village units. In such an organization the authority possessed by the headmen is as essential an element as that of the Chief and his subchiefs—a fact which is sometimes overlooked by those whose contact with a tribe is primarily through these more conspicuous figures. All these features of the normal Bantu tribal organization were wanting in the structure of Masai society.

Following the abolition of the post of Paramount Chief in 1918, the Government endeavoured to find agencies for local administration in the promotion of three institutions, a Central Masai Council, a series of 14 Native Councils each representing a different tribal Section, and Headmen, created as far as possible on the model of the Location Headmen found elsewhere in the Colony. The Central Masai Council at Ngong was composed of the presidents of the Native Councils and was to meet twice a year. The 14 Native Councils were designed to take the place of the informal Councils of Elders to which reference has previously been made. They were recognized as tribunals exercising powers under the Native Tribunal Rules of 1913, and were moreover given the position occupied by Collective Headmen under the Native Authority Ordinance then in force (No. 22 of 1912). The members of these Councils consisted of the recognized Counsellors (L'aigwanak) of the different Age Grades in the divisions, with a few of the more influential Elders and Moran added. Moran L'aigwanak were not ordinarily admitted to these Councils of Elders, but as the Elders did not themselves possess any great measure of control over the Moran, it was thought that the appointment of their leading warriors might help to improve the situation. These appointments could, however, only be temporary, owing to the custom already mentioned, under which an Age Grade of Moran held its position only for a specified period in each Section, giving place to a new Age Grade at the end of that time. The presidents of these Councils were chosen from the L'aigwanak by the Masai themselves. 175 648 623

The greatest difficulty was, as foreseen at the time, encountered in regard to the appointment of Headmen. These were not necessarily Elders, but were chosen as possessing wealth or influence, and were given the position accorded to headmen by the Native Authority Ordinance 22 of 1912. But there were two obstacles to their effective discharge of these powers. The units which they were selected to control were not Locations with a settled population, as in most other parts of Kenya, but groups of semi-nomadic tribesmen, and their 175 648 622

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

175 648 622 authority always tended to break down in face of the lawless and independent spirit of the Moran. In 1918 the Headmen numbered 46, of whom 28 were unpaid, and 18 received pay ranging from £6 to £36 a year, the former Paramount having a special pay of £90. Fourteen of the 18 paid Headmen were presidents of the Native Councils, and following the custom adopted in many other parts of Kenya, they were given the courtesy title of Chief.

SUBSEQUENT CHANGES IN THE SYSTEM

175 648 178 In the period that has passed since this system was introduced, there have been changes which have to some measure affected the structure of Masai society. The restraint exercised on cattle raiding has robbed the military organization of its former importance, while the growing value of cattle and sheep has enhanced the position of the wealthier stockholders, who now constitute, together with some men of hereditary prestige, an aristocratic element with an acknowledged leadership in Masai society. In other respects the Masai hold tenaciously to their customary institutions and mode of life, and the [701] [461] Moran in particular retain the tradition of indiscipline (in all but a military sense) and the aversion to labour which characterized them in the past.

175 648 623 The Government has in the interval effected changes also in the system of native administration above referred to, with the view of adjusting it more nearly to the pattern followed in other parts of Kenya. The Central Masai Council and the 14 Native Councils gave place in 1930 to two Local Native Councils, at Narok and Kajiado, which have now been formally constituted under the provisions of the Native Authority Ordinance of 1937. The system of tribunals has also been revised, as will be further explained below.[1] The 622 Headmen have been divided into two grades, Headmen and subheadmen, of whom the former have the courtesy title of Chief. They now derive their powers from the Native Authority Ordinance of 1937.

[465] The 16 Headmen have a pay ranging from 17s. to 70s. a month, and the 28 subheadmen a pay ranging from 10s. to 32s. 50 cents a month. Practically all the Headmen or subheadmen are stockholders, and represent the ruling Age-Grade in each of the different Sections; very few of them are educated or literate and only a few can speak Swahili. The Headmen and sub- [651] headmen constitute the executive agency of the District administration and of the Local Native Councils, and they are in addition charged with the collection of the native Poll Tax. That is a task which they are said to discharge with some efficiency, though as will be shown subsequently in dealing with the administration of the Tribunals, there are numerous cases of the evasion of tax. 625 The Chiefs can call on the services of a small number of Tribal Police, recruited and controlled by the District Commissioner. Up to 1943 the Tribal Police were the only force of this nature in the Province, but since that year a unit of the Kenya Police Force has been stationed in the Narok district, largely in view of the prevalence of stock thefts.

THE LOCAL NATIVE COUNCILS

646 Of the two Local Native Councils, that at Narok has 10 nominated and 23 elected members, and that at Kajiado 10 nominated and 14 elected. There is, however, little difference in practice between the nominated and elected members, since all are in fact selected by the District Commissioner after

[1] Page 173.

12:Dundas G-5 (ca. 1900) 1908 FL6 Dorobo FL6
Kikuyu FL10
Masai FL12

seen amongst them, and it is not difficult with a little practice to tell the particular division to which a Kikuyu belongs. Thus the people of Iriaini* have pronounced Masai features, and many of their chiefs are pure or half Masai by birth. This is due to the fact that when the Kikuyu invaded that district about forty years ago they found it occupied by the remnants of the Aikipiak and Dala-le-kutuk Masai, who owing to famines, raids, and other causes were too much weakened to resist them. The two tribes therefore settled down peaceably side by side, and by intermarrying formed one people.

Again, many of the Kikuyu clans claim descent from certain particular tribes; thus, the Anjiro and Chakamoyo clans say they are descended from the Shuka, the Akkachiko and Achera from the Kamba, the Aesaka from the Chaga of Kilimanjaro. Anyone enquiring into the descent of those present at a meeting of Kikuyu elders will find an extraordinary number of different tribes represented. One is a Maeru, another a Chaga, a third a Masai, a fourth a Shuka, a fifth a Dorobo, and so on.

The actual Kikuyu themselves are said to have come from two tribes called the Shagishu and Ngembe, both of which still exist as tribes somewhere beyond the Maeru country, north of Mount Kenia.

I cannot speak from experience of the Shagishu, but I have met a native of Ngembe whose appearance reminded me strongly of a Kikuyu. This man, who said he had never seen a white man before, told me that his country lay beyond Maeru and that he had come here to visit relatives. These same Ngembe are believed to have been originally Dorobo, and Kururi, one of the paramount chiefs of the Kikuyu, who is himself a Dorobo, claims descent from them. The Ngembe of the present day are probably analogous to the Kikuyu, i.e., they are a mixture of Dorobo and some other tribe or tribes.

Many absolutely foreign tribes have had colonies in Kikuyu for shorter or longer periods. A tribe of coast people called Digo are stated to have lived for many years on the Tana River, in what is now known as the Fort Hall District.† Somali, Galla, Borana, or some other similar people effected a very strong footing in Kikuyu some fifty to seventy years ago. According to tradition they belonged to the Barabio Lokulala, Sigirai, and Endaramuroni clans,‡ and they had settlements at Nyeri, Naivasha, Kijabe, Punda Milia, and generally all over the Kikuyu country.

In those days the Aikipiak Masai occupied the Laikipia Plateau, the Purko Masai were at Naivasha, the Kaputiei in the Kidong Valley, and the Tarosero at Iriaini. The Dorobo, who were still the dominant tribe, occupied with the Kikuyu the present Kikuyu country.

With all these tribes the Somali or Galla lived in a state of chronic warfare.

The Larussa, a Kikuyu clan, and the Atwa, a Dorobo clan, unable to hold out any longer, migrated. The former have, it is said, preserved to this day their tribal identity and customs, and are still to be found somewhere in the vicinity of Kilimanjaro§; the latter near Mombasa.‖

The remaining tribes appealed for assistance against their oppressors to a great medicine man called Supi (or, to give him his correct name, Supeet), the grandfather of Lenana, the present Masai chief.

---

* The name Iriaini is said to be derived from 'N-Darosero ainei, my Tarosero women. Tarosero is the name of the most important clan in this particular section of the Masai.

† Mr. Hollis informs me that the Segeju, who have intermarried with the Digo, a sub-tribe of the Wa-Nyika, have a tradition to the effect that they once lived on the Tana River.

‡ Barabio is the Kikuyu, Sigirialish the Masai for Somali and Galla.

§ Possibly the Arusha, who live on Mount Meru in German East Africa.

‖ By Mombasa the up-country native often means the coast generally. According to Mr. Hollis the Wa-Sanya call themselves, and are known to the Galla as, Watwa; sing., Wasya.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

cattle" and "red bulls". HOLLIS,[24] recorded two subdivisions of the Uasin Gishu, "the black striped cattle", and "the red striped cattle", which were, very probably, no other thing than the moieties. 614 634

The Masai clans, ol gilata, pl. il gilata or en gishomi, pl. in gishomi, are patrilineal and exogamous. Generally, they do not seem to be totemic. However, HOBLEY,[25] and the author of MS. No. 48 have recorded the names of a few clan totem. FOX,[26] refers also to the association of snakes with some clans. 614

The true exogamic unit of the Masai seems to be any individed unit, either clan or branch of the clan. A Masai may be adopted into another clan then his original one. The same provision applies even to an alien (Kikuyu, Dorobo). The adoptee, however, never attains the same social status as a full member of the clan. He is free to leave at any time, provided he returns whatever he was presented by his patrons, such as cattle or any other valuable. 614 597 [554]

The relationship between clans and their territorial distribution is not very clear. Analysis would suggest that in the past, clans were territorially separated. At present, there is still a tendency for members of the same clan to live close by to one another and occupy neighbouring encampments. Some sections are almost made up by members of a single clan. Thus, the Molelian clan is predominant in Kapiti section; the Atayok clan is predominant in Dalalakotok section. Such facts, however, seem to be the exception. Usually clans are represented at a time in many different sections "There is no rule", writes HOBLEY,[27] "governing the distribution of the various gilat (clans); often members of as many as three gilat will be found in one moru engang (elders' village) or a moran manyat (warriors' village)". 614 361

Water and cattle are generally clan possession. When new water sources are discovered, they are claimed on behalf of the clan. All clan members who live in the neighbourhood are entitled to make use of them. A foreigner may also be allowed to water his cattle there. If disputes arise, they are settled by the council of clan-members on the spot. As a matter of fact, these water sources are the centre of ordinary social life, as FOSBROOKE[28] writes: "The 614 623 312 423

[24] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 458.
[25] HOBLEY, l. c., p. 129.
[26] FOX, l. c., p. 458.
[27] HOBLEY, Eastern Uganda. An ethnological Survey, London 1902, p. 122.
[28] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 42.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

614 623 312 423 clansmen frequently meet on the water, and other matters — marriage, debts, etc. — come up for settlement before the tribunal". Clan ownership does not exclude individual ownership, which is integrated by the former as a sort of higher supervision. The point is that no clan property must be passed over to other clans without the owning clan's approval. HOBLEY,[29] states that cattle used to be marked by a clan brand showing clan-possession, and sometimes by a brand of the individual owner.

614 672 682 The corporate bond arising from clan relationship is confirmed by cases of murder compensation. Even if a murderer is a wealthy man, and might pay all the compensation out of his own stock, "the other branches of the clan would still contribute and they would pay their share". However, "if a Masai kills a member of his own branch of the gilat he pays compensation himself, and the other branches do not contribute".[30] LEAKEY, on the other hand, was told by his informants that no compensation is expected when a man kills a member of his own branch. They say: "what would be the use of taking a fine from one's own sub-clan?"[31] HOBLEY reports further that "each branch of the gilat to whom the murdered man belongs, receives a share of the compensation: 2-3rds to the murdered's father", and the rest is distributed among the other elders of the clan.[32] This is also confirmed by the notes of MAGUIRE on the penal code of the Masai.[33]

614 One should note that the corporate bond formed by clan relationship is of a particularist nature. It ties members to their own clan in opposition to other clans within the same tribe.

* * *

648 642 175 The many efforts of the Administration to identify a native political institution for local government make a very interesting piece of etnographical history. First in Kenya, and also, after 1918, in Tanganyika, one laibon was recognised as the Paramount Chief of the Masai. In Kenya such an office was abolished in 1918, while a graded system of councils was introduced: a Central Masai Council, 14 Native Councils and local Headmen. They acted as tribunals, [29] HOBLEY, Ethnology of A-Kamba, p. 129.

[30] HOBLEY, l. c., p. 122; FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 42 s.

[31] LEAKEY, Some Notes on the Masai of Kenya Colony, in J. R. A. I., 60, 1930, p. 209.

[32] HOBLEY, l. c.

[33] MAGUIRE, The Masai Penal Code, in J. A. S., 28, 1928, pp. 12 ss.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 Engibata as the first ceremony for the institution of an age-unit, we may put Unoto at an interval of about three or four years; and then Endungore some two or three years, or more, after that.[112]

VII – THE INTERNAL STRUCTURE OF THE AGE-UNIT

The generic reference made by our authorities either to "the elders" or "the candidates", and so on, may cause the false impression that those engaged in the initiation ceremonies always act as a whole and corporate group. In point of fact, general meetings are rare occasions, and they are also restricted to territorial sections or groups of sections.

561 624 Only a few representatives of the age-units take the most important decisions in connection with the institution of the units.

We have mentioned the ingopior or ingobir, sg. engobiro. These are the best of the age-units initiates. It is they who first approach the elders and assist their own leaders, who usually are selected from among their number. These are, generally, the most senior. According to the information of FOSBROOKE,[113] they form "an [623] inner council for appointing or degrading the laigwanan, and for the conduct of important public business". However, "there is no definite office of engobiro"; they emerge according to their talents, skill and personality. Thus "they are not necessarily confined to the first batch of initiates", but any one else, even of the last batch, whose qualities excel may be considered an engobiro.

The elders here referred to are, as said, the piron elders. Their office of sponsors is thus summarized by FOSBROOKE,[114]: "the il piron-elders, i. e., the guardians of the youths, have to coach the senior boys in citizenship, taking them to the laibon, making them sit at their meetings, etc.".

Of the age-unit leaders (aigwenani) FOSBROOKE,[115] distinguishes three kinds, 1. ol aigwenani loongishu pokin, lit., the aigwenani of [112] One of the few facts we possess concerning the Samburu is that "the circumcision rite takes place at intervals of seven years". See WEBSTER, l. c., p. 8. For the other tribes in Masai District there are no indications in the various reports of the NAD confirming the above period. Cf. the references in NAD, 1926 and 1927 with 1932 and 1937 which, however, are very vague to be of any real value.

[113] FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 34 s.

[114] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 54.

[115] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 34.

181 464 561 Employment of the "Muran."

More particularly does this argument apply to the "Muran" who are of the ages at which the members of agricultural tribes are expected to work. No suitable employment has as yet been found for them as a body, though a small number have been known to reside as herds on the farms of sympathetic European stock-owners who are willing to pay a high wage for a modicum of service and who will not insist on their performance of any uncongenial labour. A very few also have proved efficient in the Police Force and K.A.R., while numbers of them, employed in the capacity of native levies have frequently proved of assistance in punitive expeditions against other tribes,* but for the majority, all attempts to find a suitable form of employment have failed, and they continue to lead their idle life in the Reserve, where their attitude is one of conceited conservatism combined with opulent apathy. The discipline formerly necessary to their existance as a fighting race is rapidly falling into disuse, and the good qualities they once possessed are fast deteriorating. Many of them have confessed to a feeling of boredom with their idle life but few have had the moral courage to change it for one of labour. This manner of existance is having a disastrous effect both physically and mentally on the Masai as a tribe, and it is stated that the average height of the "Muran" has decreased by three or four inches during the last fifteen years.

181 232 233 197 Masai conservatism respecting cattle.

It has been said that the Masai Reserve is already, with certain reservations, stocked to its fullest capacity. Mr. Hemsted has estimated the natural increase in cattle at 15 per cent. or approximately 100,000 per head per annum. It follows therefore, that a similar number must be disposed of or perish annually; but this is an argument which does not appeal to the Masai. They have not only shown a marked reluctance to sell their stock, but they have made no serious attempt to accept the assistance of science in improving the grazing conditions of their country, and, being satisfied as a result of the few experiments they have made that the class of stock they possess—a small, degenerate, in-bred animal—is best suited to withstand the ardous conditions prevailing in the Reserve, they are unwilling to permit a cross-breeding with pure-bred or grade stock which might materially increase the value of their herds in the world's markets, and which would, by the introduction of fresh blood, obviate the ill-effects of in-breeding which has been rendered necessary by the cessation of raids. The wealth of the Masai, therefore, is turned to no good purpose; their style of living does not change; they are still content to live in low buildings constructed of poles, grass and mud, in conditions of filth that defy description; and, although an improvement has been noticeable in recent years, they have shown no great desire to utilize their wealth in the purchase of imported articles and in the improvement of their diet.

623 561 Councils of Elders.

Another aspect of the character of the Masai "Muran" which deserves consideration is the disregard which they evince for the authority of their own native administration as represented by the Councils of Elders. These Councils exist according to native custom, but have never been in the past, nor are they now, efficient to enforce the decisions they may give in respect of the young warriors. It may be said that serious crime in the Masai Reserve is rare, and that there are not more than three or four cases on record, since European administration was established, when the attitude of the "Muran" gave cause for anxiety and in no one of these cases did a disturbance of such magnitude occur as to render necessary a recourse to armed force to quell it. Politically, the Masai have remained loyal to the British Government since they first encountered it, and except for isolated instances where certain sections attempted to help the allied cause and to increase their herds by the despatch of raiding expeditions against German territory, their conduct throughout the trying period when the war in East Africa was on their borders was exemplary. Nevertheless, a catalogue of the misdeeds of the Masai will show a not inconsiderable number of instances [674] Crime in the Masai Reserve.

648 674

* The Masai have rendered assistance in the capacity of native levies on the following occasions:—

(1) Nandi Expedition, 1899. 40 Muran.
(2) Nandi Expedition, 1900. 400 Muran.
(3) Maraka Patrol, 1902. 300 Muran.
(4) Tete Operations, 1902-03. 300 Muran.
(5) Irisai Patrol. 490 Muran.
(6) Kabwaren Patrol, 1904. 100 Masai and Nandi.
(7) Sotik Expedition, 1905. 400 Muran.
(8) Kisii Patrol, 1905.
(9) Nandi Expedition, 1905-06. 600 Muran.
(10) Present Turkana operations.

Reports on the work of these levies have on the whole been highly satisfactory, except in the present Turkana operations where it is doubtful if the pastoral Masai have been used, and in the Kabwaren patrol, where it was found that the Masai spearmen were of little use against the Nandi in forest country.

where unarmed natives of the neighbouring tribes, whose duty or pleasure took them into the Masai Reserve, have been wantonly murdered, and the catalogue also includes numerous instances of thefts of stock from neighbouring farms and territories. An investigation of the record of each of these cases will show that in a small number only of incidents has the perpetrator of the crime been brought to book. The probability that the commission of a stock-theft or a murder can be performed by a Masai of the "Muran" class without the knowledge of his associates is so slight that it has been found necessary to accept the principle that the responsibility for the surrender of criminals traced to any particular area rests on all the members of the section inhabiting that area. This system is in vogue throughout all the native districts of the Protectorate and is generally employed with a fair measure of success, but a similar success does not attend its application to the Masai Reserve, and this reserve is, in fact, the area to which the great majority of impositions of fines under the Collective Punishments Ordinance, 1909, have been applied, the refusal of the Masai to assist in tracing the criminal rendering it necessary to utilize the provisions of the Ordinance to effect the punishment of the whole section involved. The blooding of a spear by the murder of an unprotected wanderer or the theft of stock guarded perhaps by children is a survival of the traditions which necessitated the "Muran" to prove their manhood during the period in the standing army or the "L-Ayok" to prove their worth before circumcision. Such acts may not be regarded at the present day as valiant, but it seems that the criminal's associates have not yet come to look on them as reprehensible, and the Masai, on account of their wealth, do not possess the same dread of a collective fine as is felt by certain of the poorer tribes. Under any circumstances, the "Muran" offer no assistance in the tracking down of the criminal and the elders, though professing detective zeal, are powerless to intervene. The attitude of the section involved in such cases is one of surprise and listlessness—they never know anything—and the collective fine which may ensue has not hitherto had the result of discouraging the adoption of such an attitude. 648* 674 648* 674 672 561 681

Divisions.

It will generally be found that fines of this nature have been levied on Companies or "Sirits" of different clans, and, sometimes, on all the members of a clan or division. There is no case on record in which a collective punishment has been imposed on the Masai tribe as a whole. It is therefore necessary to refer shortly to the divisions into which the Masai, who are all of one tribe, are divided by their traditions and customs, and to note also the divisions into which they are divided in practice for the purposes of the administration of the reserve. A description of the traditional divisions of the Masai people is given in Mr. Hollis' Book on the Masai, pp. 260 and 261, but the names which are now in use to denote the divisions of the tribe within the reserve do not exclusively follow either the genealogical or the geographical divisions which are there set out. The Officer-in-Charge of the Masai reserve is endeavouring to confine the members of each division to certain areas set apart for them as locations, and this step will have the effect of reconciling the name given to a division with the locality in which it is found, thus tending to perpetuate a convenient form of nomenclature. 619 621 634

Whatever may have been the original system on which these divisions were formed, it appears that there is a really marked clan feeling between them, and several incidents are recorded which disclose the presence of mutual distrust and strained relationship between the divisions, while interference by one division with another is keenly resented. These divisions form the basis of the tribal organisation of the Masai as it exists to-day and each division has its own Council of Elders. In the recently constituted "Masai Council," one elder, or more, has been chosen to represent each division and the Council so formed has been accepted as representative of the whole tribe. It will thus be seen that the division system presents an admirable method of dealing with the tribe, closely allied to the location system employed in other Native Reserves in the Protectorate, and has enabled unrest or crime to be so localized as to limit the liability for offences committed to certain definite sections of the Masai. Nevertheless, there is not sufficient difference in the behaviour or customs of the members of each 634 [628] [623] ●

Masai Council.

*648

On the 14th of February, 1918, the Acting Governor discussed the proposal with the members of Executive Council, who agreed with him as to the desirability of the formation of such an institution and of sub-councils, which would deal with specific matters in specified areas.

In reporting this decision to the Secretary of State, Mr. Bowring remarked that he regarded the word "representatives," as used in the Agreement, to mean the representatives for the time being, and he considered that, if the members of the council were selected with the approval of the respective sections of the tribe represented by them, they might be regarded as the representatives of the Masai for the purposes of the Agreement.

*648
623

On the 14th of February, Mr. Hemsted submitted for approval a list of Native Councils which it was proposed to recognise for the purposes of the Native Tribunal Rules, and which would exercise the powers of Collective Headmen under the Native Authority Ordinance. The Councils had been chosen in accordance with Masai custom, and consisted of the recognized "Aigwenak," or counsellors of the different circumcised ages of the various tribal divisions, with a few of the more influential elders and Muran added. The presidents had been selected from the "Aigwenak" by the Masai themselves, and were those who had been accustomed to preside at the council meetings.

*648
646

The members of the Masai Council.

These presidents of councils would also form the council which had been proposed by the Acting Governor, and were considered to be sufficiently representative of the Masai tribe, all the principal tribal divisions being represented, and arrangements had been made for the council so constituted to meet at Narok, not less than twice a year, for discussing matters affecting the tribe as a whole, as well as those connected with the Agreement of 1911.

The lists so submitted contained the names of "Aigwenak" of the "Sirits," and it was intended that they should exercise jurisdiction as headmen over their own Muran only. Muran "Aigwenak" were not ordinarily admitted to councils of elders by native custom, but, as the elders did not themselves possess any great measure of control over the Muran, it was thought that the appointment of such leading warriors might tend to improve the situation. These appointments were intended to be purely of a temporary character, as the age of Muran then in power was shortly losing office, its members giving place to the new age, and themselves becoming elders, but, in view of this, it was eventually decided to cancel the suggested appointments, at any rate until the new age had assumed its responsibilities, and chosen its own representatives. A list of the Councils gazetted, and of the headmen appointed to preside over them, is to be found in Appendix 4.

646

Inaugural meeting of the Masai Council

The inaugural meeting of the Council was held at Narok on the 1st to the 4th of April, 1918. There were present Seggi Ole Lenana, Paramount Chief, Masikondi, Legalishu and Ole Emboke, respectively presidents of the Purko Council for the Narok, Mara, and Narosura areas; Ole Kataiga, Sirongs Ole Parsitau, Ole Kashu (sen.) and Nadalla, presidents of the Damat, Kakonyukye, Loita and Siria Councils respectively; Kamagoiywa, representing Metiake, president of the Sighirari (Laitokitok) Council; Ole Siranga, representing Ole Monga, president of the Il Dala Lekutuk Council; Ngaroya, president of the Sighirari (Engidongi) Council; Ole Naipenyu, Njeroge Ole Karei and Ololoderio, respectively presidents of the Councils of the L'Odo Kilani, Kaputiei and Matapatu Divisions. The Officer-in-Charge explained to the elders that they had been called as representatives of all the Masai, and that they would form a permanent council for the purpose of discussing the affairs of the tribe as a whole, and the matters arising out of the Agreement; and in order to assist the Government in carrying out its policy. The Masai were expected to rule themselves under the direction of their officers and to help maintain law and order in their own country. The tribal councils, which had been formed in each division according to native custom, were intended to settle local matters dealing with land or property and to punish people for minor offences.

[623]

The idea of the Council appealed to the Masai tribe as a whole, and the members of the Council agreed to attend to all matters affecting the tribe, and also to settle cases which the local sub-councils had been unable to decide.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

as the Masai race shall exist," and to refrain from leasing or granting any land (except such land as may be required for mining or for any public purpose) "without the sanction of the paramount chief and the representatives of the Masai tribe." 631 648

As a people of Nilo-Hamitic origin, the Masai have an affinity to the Nandi, Kipsigis, Suk and Turkana of the Keyna Colony, but they have maintained more of their original custom and mode of life than the Nandi or the Kipsigis. A variety of circumstances have combined to produce this result, but it is undoubtedly due in large measure to the fact that the extent and quality of the lands occupied by them has allowed them, as a tribe, to escape the disturbance in their traditional life caused by the necessity of wage earning on the European farms and urban centres or of taking to agriculture. It is noteworthy that though parties of the Masai have on various occasions lent assistance to the Kenya Government in military or police operations against other tribes, they have never enlisted in any numbers in the armed forces maintained in the Colony, and they actively resisted the efforts made to secure their recruitment during the War of 1914-1918. 101 648

The social structure of the Masai has from the outset created an obstacle to the adoption of any system of native administration similar to that in force in other parts of the Colony. The military organization of the tribe was in earlier days maintained by a system which divided the male population into boys (L'Ayok), warriors (Moran) and elders. The first stage continued till circumcision, performed any time between thirteen and seventeen years of age. Those who were circumcised within a certain period, normally four years, formed an Age Group, and those circumcised during the succeeding period formed a second Age Group, these Groups being distinguished as the Right Hand and Left Hand Groups respectively. The circumcised youths became the warrior class, who were divided into Companies (sirit) living in separate villages (manyatta) often of a considerable size, and the larger manyattas had their own "Counsellors" (L'Aiganak) chosen from among the Moran. 561 701 [361]

The Moran had special privileges, such as that of cohabitation with unmarried girls, and were relieved of all tribal obligation save fighting and raiding. Even such forms of manual labour as were involved in a pastoral life were avoided by them. They remained on the fighting strength of the tribe or periods which originally varied from seven to twelve years, and then, after the celebration of the E-unoto ceremony, "drank milk" and passed into the stage of Elders. But, as Sir Charles Eliot observed in 1905, "the Elders' ideal of existence seemed to be ease, not unmixed with drunkenness."[1] Those who attained a position of wealth and importance might be elected as Chiefs, but the functions of a Chief were restricted to leadership in raiding or warfare. [836] [622]

There is another feature of importance in the social structure. The Masai are divided into Sections (Alosho) which probably had their origin as clan or kinship groups, but have no close correspondence with geographical divisions. There are 14 recognized Sections, of which the Purko is by far the largest and most wealthy. Each of these Sections has its own Age Grades, so that the period at which youths become Moran, or Moran became Elders at the E-unoto ceremony, do not coincide in the different Sections. Each Section used to have an informal Council of the Elders, but these had little direct control of affairs, particularly where the activities of the Moran were concerned, and the situation 634 [623]

[1] Introduction to The Masai, by A. C. Hollis, 1905. For the significance of the E-Unoto ceremony see page 69 of the Administrative and Political History of the Masai quoted above.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

634 [623] was further complicated by the fact that at stated intervals, normally about 15 years, power passed from the hands of the representatives of one Age Group in each Section into those of the succeeding Age Group, there being thus an alternation of authority in each Section between the Right Hand and Left Hand Groups.

642 To quote Sir Charles Eliot again, the consequence of the traditional structure of Masai society was that "the centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship. The chiefs arranged the details of any raids which [622] the young men wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight." The nearest approach 691 to a central and superior authority was to be found in the Chief Medicine-Man 642 (Laibon), though his authority was based mainly on the discharge of his magical functions.[1] The medicine-men were divided into three grades, of which the first grade was represented by the person of the Laibon, the Chief Medicine-Man of the tribe, and his guidance was held to be of the first importance in any major operation which the tribe might undertake.

THE INTRODUCTION OF THE NATIVE AUTHORITY SYSTEM

175 It is unnecessary to dwell here on the circumstances which for a prolonged 648 period made the Masai a standing menace to the peace of their neighbours. The tribe seems to have reached the height of its power between 1800 and 1850, when it overran Kenya and part of Tanganyika.[2] There were subsequently severe internal dissensions among the Masai, which resulted in two of their five "divisions" being practically destroyed and there was also great mortality as a result of the outbreak of rinderpest and smallpox in the 'eighties of last century. But even though their strength was much reduced, their predatory habits continued to be a matter of grave concern in the early days of the Colony, and seemed in particular to threaten the progress of European settlement. Among the Masai themselves strong feelings were aroused by the measures, taken largely in the interest of European settlers, designed to counteract the propensity of the tribesmen to roam widely in search of fresh grazing grounds, as the result of which they were restricted to a Northern Reserve (Laikipia) and a Southern Reserve, separated from the Northern Reserve by a broad belt of country occupied by European farms. That was the position at the time of the Masai Agreement of 1904, but it subsequently became the policy of the Kenya Government to move the tribesmen in the Northern Reserve into the Southern Reserve, which was to be largely augmented in area for this purpose.[3]

175 In view of the terms of the Agreement of 1904, the assent of the Masai was 648 required for this transfer, and the operation was one of obvious difficulty. In 791 the circumstances it was not unnatural that the Government should have availed itself of the influence exercised by the Chief Medicine-Man, the Laibon Lenana. He had inherited from his father, Mbatian, who died in 1890, a position which commanded general respect, and he himself took a leading position on behalf of the tribe in the discussions which led up to the Agreement of 1904, which he signed as "Chief Laibon." He was subsequently recognized

[1] The word laibon appears to be a Europeanized form of the Masai word Ol'oiboni (A. C. Hollis, The Nandi, 1909, page 49.

[2] Land Commission Report Vol. II para. 103.

[3] The Laikipia Reserve, contained 4,500 square miles. An addition of 6,500 square miles was to be made to the Southern Reserve.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

by the Government as the Paramount Chief of the Masai, a title which was in 1911 continued to his son Segi. It was as Paramount Chief that Segi, through his Regent Legalishu, signed the Agreement of 1911, which recorded the acceptance by the Masai of the move from Laikipia to the Southern Reserve. 175 648 791

But Lenana himself never seems to have claimed a position of sovereignty, nor was it ever accorded to him by the tribe. Segi proved to be lacking in the qualities of his father, and such influence as he possessed was confined to the small Section of which he was a member, while the more important Sections, such as the Purko, either refused to recognize him or treated him with contempt. In 1918, therefore, the Government withdrew his recognition as Paramount Chief. Apart, however, from any question of the personal capacity of Segi, it is obvious that the social structure of the Masai had no place for the conception of chiefship in the form existing in the traditional organization of those Bantu tribes which have a "centralized" system of Government. In the latter, the fundamental principle is the recognition of a tribal head, with authority devolved on territorial subchiefs, and supported on the allegiance of headmen representing either kinsmen groups or village units. In such an organization the authority possessed by the headmen is as essential an element as that of the Chief and his subchiefs—a fact which is sometimes overlooked by those whose contact with a tribe is primarily through these more conspicuous figures. All these features of the normal Bantu tribal organization were wanting in the structure of Masai society.

Following the abolition of the post of Paramount Chief in 1918, the Government endeavoured to find agencies for local administration in the promotion of three institutions, a Central Masai Council, a series of 14 Native Councils each representing a different tribal Section, and Headmen, created as far as possible on the model of the Location Headmen found elsewhere in the Colony. The Central Masai Council at Ngong was composed of the presidents of the Native Councils and was to meet twice a year. The 14 Native Councils were designed to take the place of the informal Councils of Elders to which reference has previously been made. They were recognized as tribunals exercising powers under the Native Tribunal Rules of 1913, and were moreover given the position occupied by Collective Headmen under the Native Authority Ordinance then in force (No. 22 of 1912). The members of these Councils consisted of the recognized Counsellors (L'aigwanak) of the different Age Grades in the divisions, with a few of the more influential Elders and Moran added. Moran L'aigwanak were not ordinarily admitted to these Councils of Elders, but as the Elders did not themselves possess any great measure of control over the Moran, it was thought that the appointment of their leading warriors might help to improve the situation. These appointments could, however, only be temporary, owing to the custom already mentioned, under which an Age Grade of Moran held its position only for a specified period in each Section, giving place to a new Age Grade at the end of that time. The presidents of these Councils were chosen from the L'aigwanak by the Masai themselves. 175 648 623

The greatest difficulty was, as foreseen at the time, encountered in regard to the appointment of Headmen. These were not necessarily Elders, but were chosen as possessing wealth or influence, and were given the position accorded to headmen by the Native Authority Ordinance 22 of 1912. But there were two obstacles to their effective discharge of these powers. The units which they were selected to control were not Locations with a settled population, as in most other parts of Kenya, but groups of semi-nomadic tribesmen, and their 175 648 622 authority always tended to break down in face of the lawless and independent spirit of the Moran. In 1918 the Headmen numbered 46, of whom 28 were unpaid, and 18 received pay ranging from £6 to £36 a year, the former Paramount having a special pay of £90. Fourteen of the 18 paid Headmen were presidents of the Native Councils, and following the custom adopted in many other parts of Kenya, they were given the courtesy title of Chief.

175 648 622

SUBSEQUENT CHANGES IN THE SYSTEM

175 648 178

In the period that has passed since this system was introduced, there have been changes which have to some measure affected the structure of Masai society. The restraint exercised on cattle raiding has robbed the military organization of its former importance, while the growing value of cattle and sheep has enhanced the position of the wealthier stockholders, who now constitute, together with some men of hereditary prestige, an aristocratic element with an acknowledged leadership in Masai society. In other respects the Masai hold tenaciously to their customary institutions and mode of life, and the Moran in particular retain the tradition of indiscipline (in all but a military sense) and the aversion to labour which characterized them in the past.

[901] [461]

175 648 623

The Government has in the interval effected changes also in the system of native administration above referred to, with the view of adjusting it more nearly to the pattern followed in other parts of Kenya. The Central Masai Council and the 14 Native Councils gave place in 1939 to two Local Native Councils, at Narok and Kajiado, which have now been formally constituted under the provisions of the Native Authority Ordinance of 1937. The system of tribunals has also been revised, as will be further explained below.[1] The Headmen have been divided into two grades, Headmen and subheadmen, of whom the former have the courtesy title of Chief. They now derive their powers from the Native Authority Ordinance of 1937.

622

[465]

The 16 Headmen have a pay ranging from 17s. to 70s. a month, and the 28 subheadmen a pay ranging from 10s. to 32s. 50 cents a month. Practically all the Headmen or subheadmen are stockholders, and represent the ruling Age-Grade in each of the different Sections; very few of them are educated or literate and only a few can speak Swahili. The Headmen and subheadmen constitute the executive agency of the District administration and of the Local Native Councils, and they are in addition charged with the collection of the native Poll Tax. That is a task which they are said to discharge with some efficiency, though as will be shown subsequently in dealing with the administration of the Tribunals, there are numerous cases of the evasion of tax. The Chiefs can call on the services of a small number of Tribal Police, recruited and controlled by the District Commissioner. Up to 1943 the Tribal Police were the only force of this nature in the Province, but since that year a unit of the Kenya Police Force has been stationed in the Narok district, largely in view of the prevalence of stock thefts.

[651]

625

THE LOCAL NATIVE COUNCILS

646

Of the two Local Native Councils, that at Narok has 10 nominated and 23 elected members, and that at Kajiado 10 nominated and 14 elected. There is, however, little difference in practice between the nominated and elected members, since all are in fact selected by the District Commissioner after

[1] Page 173.

7: Hailey G-4 (No date) 1950 FL12 Masai FL12

561 grades, which has resulted in marking off the whole of the younger men, 701 roughly up to the age of twenty-seven or thirty, as a warrior class (moran) who are not only free from most obligations to work, but are independent in many other respects of tribal discipline. Though therefore authority has rested 623 nominally with the Elders (laigwanak) who have passed the stage of moran,
642 and with the Councils of Elders who formed a regular feature of the Masai 701 tribal usage, these Councils have not in the past nor are they to-day able to 561 enforce decisions which may affect the younger men. It is true that the Elders have recently made decisions, accepted by the moran themselves, which will limit the period of moran-hood and may provide the moran with work on betterment schemes, but it still remains to be seen how far these will be effective in providing a solution for a problem of which the economic is no less serious than the social aspect.

195 Attempts were at one time made in Tanganyika, as also in Kenya, to 791 utilize the Laibon, the spiritual head of the Tanganyika Masai, as Native
623 Authority. But the Masai themselves objected to his occupying this position, and as the result of a Sociological Survey made by H. A. Fosbrooke in 1938, the system was altered. The gazetted Native Authority then became the Masai Council, which in practice consisted of Headmen and Elders, and apparently also of any tribesmen outside the moran age grade who cared to attend. But this Council was in effect only a consultative body, without any practical authority, and since the Headmen were not gazetted as Native Authorities, they had no legal power to issue Orders under Section 8 of the Native Authority Ordinance.

646 A further reorganization has now been carried out. Each area now has its own Local Council, with locally elected representatives of age grades and class, and these Councils have been gazetted as Subordinate Native Authorities. Representatives from each Local Council, differing in numbers in accordance with the size and population of the area involved, compose the Masai Council, which is the Superior Native Authority for the whole Masai District, excluding Sonjo. The Council is now limited to these representatives: there is, however, provision for the addition of moran or nominated members if and when advisable. The Local Councils have begun to exercise their Order making powers under Section 8 of the Native Authority Ordinance. There are 41 paid Headmen, chosen by members of their own age grade.

652 There is a Masai Native Treasury, which however is managed entirely by 000 the District Commissioner. The small Sonjo tribe has a Council of Sonjo Headmen, which is gazetted as a Native Authority, and has a separate Treasury.

THE WORKING OF THE NATIVE AUTHORITY SYSTEM

The variety of conditions is so great that it is difficult to generalize on the operation of the system of native administration in the Province as a whole. There are, however, certain points of special significance. The recent reorganization in the Chagga Native Authority area has placed in a superior position those Chiefs who already had a high status in view of the number of taxpayers in their jurisdiction, but its future success will depend on the extent to which these Chiefs can secure the co-operation of the more progressive elements who have now been brought within the framework of the system, as members of the new Divisional Councils. This is especially necessary, in view of the character of Chagga society, for though the Chagga are probably the

POLITICAL STRUCTURE

Local Divisions and Authorities

The basic unit of a tribe, el-oiko, is the olol or warrior company in its manyata, but it represents a district from which a given number of fighting men is drawn, and within this district are also the heads, ewk-ap, of the ekiton. The formation of an ewk-ap varies. It may contain a group of men who continue as ekiton the association which they began as warriors in the manyata; or it may be a casual grouping which can break up and re-group; and it may contain anything from one to 10 men. Within the ewk-ap a rudimentary council seems to exist with one of the ekiton at its head; it may be no more than the heads of families sitting together and talking. Such as it is, it corresponds to some extent to the Nandi kokwet, though its powers and spheres are smaller. But it differs also in an important respect. All the inhabitants of a Nandi parish, including the warriors, come under the jurisdiction of the kokwet, whereas in the Masai system the local warrior company has its own authority, the el-oigwanani, who is responsible for the maintenance of both military discipline and "civil law" within his company, and his warriors appear to be independent of the ekiton' council. When the age-set has passed out of the warrior stage, the el-oigwanani retains its authority. A number of sub-districts forms the larger unit, el-oiko, which English writers call the section or division, the latter being the word used by Sandford. Each of these il-oiko has a council of ekiton which corresponds in some respects to the Nandi parental council; and, as will be seen from p. 11 above, the il-oiko are associated either in loose confederation with a group-name, like Il-Purko, Il-Damat, and Il-Kwi-a-ronkin, which together form the Il-Kisonko, or in distinct "tribes" where one is concerned, Samburu. The organization of the Samburu seems to have developed on slightly different lines from the rest of the Masai. The ewk-ap is the homestead of one ekiton and his wives and children; a number of such homesteads form a local group with a council of ekiton, and the total number of local groups is divided among eight sections called il-manyata (sing. el-manyata), each with a council made up of the leaders of the component group-councils. These il-manyata are divided into two large sections with "cattle-names": the Ilo-ewk-kidoi, "the black cattle," contains the il-manyata of Le-Loipata-kidoi, Le-Loipard, Il-matia, and Kyapaci; and the Ilo-ewl-kidoi, "the white cattle," contains the sections called Il-ao-ewk-kidoi, Le-Loikumat, Le-Loiwuli, and Le-gili.

The most important figure in Masai organization is the el-oigwanani, whose duties in the past were to make the practical arrangements for war, to control the distribution of the loot, to settle disputes when appealed to, to lead his men in war, and to maintain liaison between his company and the Italian on the one hand, and between his company and other companies on the other. But he could resign if displeased with his men, who in turn could dismiss him if not satisfied with his actions. Now that there is no more organized warfare, the duties of the el-oigwanani are mainly confined to the suppression of raiding, in which his effectiveness depends on his character, influence, and disposition; and to settling disputes, in which he is assisted by the ekiton of the district. Thus a council system with an elected leader has developed out of the older structure in which the e-manyata and ewk-ap were semi-independent leaders. As among the Nandi, it is the personality of the el-oigwanani and the force of public opinion that compel obedience to him. But the whole Masai system is less clear-cut than even that of the Nandi, in spite of the apparent definiteness of the el-oigwanani, though in certain respects he is analogous to the Alm Boko or age-set ruler of the Galla, who is the tribal ruler for a period of eight years.

The Laibon

The laibon, a word anglicized from el-oibon, pl. il-oibonok, and derived from e-oibon, "to make 'medicine,'" is a ritual expert who practises divination and rain-making, cures illness, provides charms, and foretells the future. Footnote divides recovery from their pain. Mbatyan earned outstanding merit through the discovery of a protective vaccination against lung disease of cattle. According to the corresponding accounts of Zendeu and four old Masai, Mbatyan, several years before his death, had already prophesied the appearance of rinderpest that did not take place until after it and the subsequent subduing of the Masai by Europeans. In the outward appearance of this man nothing divulged his power. On a thin, average-sized figure sat an ugly head whose face was disfigured more particularly by the lack of one eye -- allegedly a birth defect. This latter circumstance led to the origin of the legend that the chief must always be one-eyed and that the father should destroy in childhood one eye of the son later following him. The face was even more repulsive because of a scanty, "mighty gray" chin beard. That is, in contrast to the other men, neither the ol olboni nor the ol gorook and ol kiboko mentioned farther below may pluck out their beards, because they would lose their supernatural power through the removal of the beard hair.

 Information from the Rev. Charles Rubongoi of the S.C.M.S.

/21 cont./

The chief's village consists of a large number of kraals lying close together, several of which serve as the dwelling of the ol olboni with his numerous wives. Mbatyan had about 200 wives; the still young Zendeu has only 30 of them. No strange man may enter these dwelling kraals of the chief and his wives or appear in their immediate vicinity. Close by are found the rest of the kraals, one of which is intended for conferences and receptions and in which a few older men close to the chief as helpers and advisers (ol dolgonak ooserif ol olboni) live with their families, whereas the others are occupied by warriors who form the defense of the village and, on the marches of the chief, his bodyguard. In his last years of life, when Mbatyan was mentally disturbed, he often spent months on the open steppes in a small hut made of branches, around which the warriors accompanying him camped in a large circle. The ceremony in the chief's camp is very simple. One of the men wandering about idly in the village leads the newcomer into the conference kraal, where he waits for the chief. As soon as the latter appears, the stranger warriorhood". He also states that Uwate "is probably the best known and most misconstrued ceremony in the Masai age-grade system".

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

Uwate is not performed at a single place for whole Maasiland, but in every territorial section or group of sections. It consists of three main stage: (a) a testing of the candidates by the elders; (b) the election of the ceremonial leader of the unit; (c) a sacrifice of a bull.

a) The first stage takes place in a special hut called singira.* Not all the candidates, i. e., junior initiates, are allowed into the singira, but only those who have kept the sexual regulations which bind junior initiates. In order that no one may enter the singira under false pretences the entrance is bewitched by the elders. According to LEAKEY, another test is performed inside the hut aiming at detecting those who have entered surreptitiously.

In the annual report of the NAD, we read that every candidate is expected to give "an account" of his past life. "The importance of the E-Uwate" states the same report, "lies in the fact that it imposes an obligation upon a warrior who has disgraced himself in any way to clear himself of the stigma before he can marry and settle down as a respected Elder of the tribe". "The O-Singira" says FOX, "gives the warriors permission to have sexual relations with initiated women".

b) The nomination of the ceremonial leader (ol oweni, pl. il oweni, or ol ewno) takes place inside the singira hut. The elders

* LEAKEY's statement, p. 194, that at the Uwate "all the members of a given group (i. e., age-unit) from the whole of the Masai country, north, south, east and west are required to be present" is emphatically denied by FOX, p. 481, and FORSBROOK, p. 39. According to FOX the following sections perform it: (a) Purko; (b) Loita and Siria; (c) Damat; (d) Kaputiei, Lodokilani and Matapato; (e) Laikokitok; (f) Kisongo. And FORSBROOK says that the Uwate is celebrated "by sections or groups of sections" and is attended by as many warriors as possible, "but by no means all". SANDFORD, on HEWCHEN's authority, recorded that the Uwate was held by the Purko, Kekonyuke, Dulalekutuk and Damat on the Kisongo. The Sigirari, Matapato, Kaputiei and other divisions where it suited them best.

 There are contradictory descriptions of the singira. MERKER states that it is a 'very big hut'; BAUMANN says "not so big"; HOLLIS "small". Leakey and Fox state respectively "an enormous", and a "very large" hut. Probably it all depends on the actual number of the initiates involved.

* LEAKEY, l. c., p. 196.

 NAD, p. 81.

 FOX, l. c., p. 482.

Z: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 624 and the candidates have previously agreed on the person to be appointed, and the matter is also discussed with the prophet (laibon). As in previous cases, these transactions are kept secret because the office is not popular, and the selected man and his family would avoid the election. Only a popular man and a " pure Masai " distinguished for his physical strength, may be appointed ausoni. Generally the sipuenan is not elected, but in some cases he may be. "

561 624 888 According to MERKER, p. 72, on the day of his official appointment, the selected man is seized and forced to sit on a stool in the centre of the singira. He is then clothed wit elders' garments and decorations. FOSBROOKE, " states that soon after his appointment he will be given a wife and cattle by his age-mates.

The unpopularity of the office seems to derive from the fact that the elected man must settle down and behave as an old man as to the peculiar nature of the office. This is described by FOSBROOKE, " and his description sums up the descriptions and statements of all other authorities. " " The duties of the position (of the ausoni) are obscure, but as far as is known the lawuon appears to be a sort of scapegoat for the age (unit). If he flourishes and begets many children, and if his cattle prosper and increase, it is a bad omen for the rest of the age (unit). But his adversity will indicate the age (unit)'s prosperity. He must do everything in advance of his age-mates, marry, settle down, make the final payment that binds the marriage. It is as though the moran standing on the brink of elderhood, send forth the lawuon as an explorer into the unknown country, so that any bad luck which may be awaiting them shall be focussed on one individual and not on the whole age (unit). But the lawuon is held in great respect by his age-mates, and any demands that he makes must be fulfilled. It is stated that he is the only official whose order must be obeyed. In discussing this with an elder, I pointed out that this should give the office

561 624

" Op. cit., p. 4.

" FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 39.

" FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 39 s.

" While on p. 39 FOSBROOKE states: Uasie " is performed by sections or groups of sections. The Kisongo traditionally perform the ceremony at Magulat near Musa, i. e., on the eastern slopes of Mondul Mountain, actually in the Arusha district. As many as possible of the age attend, but by no means all ". On p. 38 he writes that " all sections and areas meet together for the uasie ceremony ". Evidently this statement must be qualified by what he says above.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

great political importance, in reply to which the elder indicated that such did not necessarily follow as 'we can always tell the launon what order to give". 561 624

c) The sacrifice of a bull is then performed with great ceremonial. HOLLIS,[99] describes the contest in which the candidates compete in getting hold of a horn which was previously thrown into a fire. [687]

With reference to this sacrifice a special officer is appointed. He is called aboruengene; he has a ceremonial status and must prepare the hide-rings from the skin of the bull. He is also described by the author of MS. 48 as "the official charmmaker of the moran". His function, however, seems to be limited to Unoto.

Great emphasis is laid by WHITEHOUSE,[100] on what he calls "the fire-drilling ceremony", which as Fosbrooke also says, "must in fact be the unoto". The ceremony is described by Whitehouse in connection with the first erection of the segregated village of the initiates or mangatia.[101] [621]

The fire is ceremonially lighted by the elders, and it must be carried into the new awellings of the village. The next morning after this ceremony, the candidates who have become senior initiates are blessed, and prayers to the black God are offered for them.[102]

At the unoto, the aunon first, and then the other initiates, shave their hair. Pig-tails, however, are again fitted after the ceremony. 884 721

Some (four or five) months after the ceremony, when the senior 561

[99] HOLLIS, l. c., pp. 300 ss.

[100] WHITEHOUSE, l. c., p. 182.

[101] This circumstance supports MERKER's statement that one of the privileges demanded by the junior initiates is the building of their own segregated village, l. c., pp. 35 ss.

[102] It is of some interest to reproduce here from WHITEHOUSE, the prayer recited by the elders on this occasion. It shows clearly how the senior initiates are about to enter the most important stage of their life as members of Masai society. This is the prayer: "Be trustworthy, Oh, return safely, O God. — Become ye ours and of God. — May the illness pass you by. — Wish those who hate us that they may find dry rives on their journeys. — Lenana and Sufeit and Mbatian wish the safe return. — Grow up. Become possessed of wise heads. Become as great as the Kilimanjaro. — Be the fathers of my children, and bring them up well. Have many wives. — May God love you. May the red bull of the night guard thee. May our age be the bravest". The expression of the first verse "return safely" probably refers to the raid which follows unoto. Lenana, Sufeit, Mbatian were prophets. [782]

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 Engibata as the first ceremony for the institution of an age-unit, we may put Unoto at an interval of about three or four years; and then Endungore some two or three years, or more, after that.[113]

VII – THE INTERNAL STRUCTURE OF THE AGE-UNIT

The generic reference made by our authorities either to "the elders" or "the candidates", and so on, may cause the false impression that those engaged in the initiation ceremonies always act as a whole and corporate group. In point of fact, general meetings are rare occasions, and they are also restricted to territorial sections or groups of sections.

561 624 Only a few representatives of the age-units take the most important decisions in connection with the institution of the units.

We have mentioned the ingopior or ingobir, sg. engobiro. These are the best of the age-units initiates. It is they who first approach the elders and assist their own leaders, who usually are selected from among their number. These are, generally, the most senior. According to the information of FOSBROOKE,[113] they form "an [623] inner council for appointing or degrading the laiguanan, and for the conduct of important public business". However, "there is no definite office of engobiro"; they emerge according to their talents, skill and personality. Thus "they are not necessarily confined to the first batch of initiates", but any one else, even of the last batch, whose qualities excel may be considered an engobiro.

The elders here referred to are, as said, the piron elders. Their office of sponsors is thus summarized by FOSBROOKE,[114]: "the il piron-elders, i. e., the guardians of the youths, have to coach the senior boys in citizenship, taking them to the laibon, making them sit at their meetings, etc.".

Of the age-unit leaders (aiguenani) FOSBROOKE,[115] distinguishes three kinds, 1. ol aiguenani loongishu pokin, lit., the aiguenani of [113] One of the few facts we possess concerning the Samburu is that "the circumcision rite takes place at intervals of seven years". See WEBSTER, l. c., p. 8. For the other tribes in Masai District there are no indications in the various reports of the NAD confirming the above period. Cf. the references in NAD, 1926 and 1927 with 1932 and 1937 which, however, are very vague to be of any real value.

[113] FOSBROOKE, l. c., pp. 34 s.

[114] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 54.

[115] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 34.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

all the cattle: the chief leader of the ageunit; 2. ol aigwenani lol kuma orok; a duly appointed aigwenani to whom a black club is presented; 3. e murt ol aigwenani, lit. the 'neck of the aigwenani', who is the righthand man of the aigwenani proper (No. 2), in whose absence no important decisions are taken. 561 624

The election of the aigwenan loongishu pokin is described by FOSBROOKE,[116] in connection with the Unoto. We have noted, however, that his statement in this passage is contradictory.[117] Unfortunately, there is no other authority on the matter, but one gets the impression that the aigwenan loongishu pokin is never elected as such: he emerges from among his fellow aigwenok as the best man for the office.

The aigwenan lol kuma orok is the ordinary leader elected at the Engibata by the elders and the ingobir. He is elected from a list of prospective candidates. Second to him is his deputy and assistant, namely, " the neck of the aigwenani " (emurt ol aigwenani).

The aigwenani is the leader of the age-unit in his section.

FOSBROOKE mentions the case of some subalterns being elected when the number of the age-unit members in one area is too big and the ingopir feel that another leader is needed.

The function of the aigwenan is political, military and to some extent judicial, his authority extends to his age-mates of whom he may be said to be " primus inter pares ".[118]

Every aigwenani, even the aigwenani loongishu pokin, is primarily responsible for his territorial section or group of sections or area for which he has been appointed. He has la foster good relations among members of his age-unit, between his unit and other units either in his or in other sections. He is responsible for seeing the elders and the prophet in order to obtain their approval for Unoto and any other ceremony or matter connected with his age unit. [628]

In military activity the aigwenani was more important in former times than at present. When large actions were organised and different sections threw their lot together, the various aigwenok united according to their seniority. This might have been the occasion

[116] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 36.

[117] In no description of Unoto is there mention of an aigwenani being elected. The only officers connected with unoto are the eunoni or otuno, and the oberuengew.

[118] Cf. MERKER, l. c., p. 86.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 when the aigwenani loongishu pokin was recognised as a general
624 leader.[119]

Judicial activity is not a real part of the aigwenani's office. It
[692] all depends on his personality and on how much he is favoured by his age-mates, who may ask him to arbitrate and settle their disputes.[120]

The election and the status of the aunoni-otuno as the ceremonial leader of the age-unit has already been described. A peculiar duty of the aunoni's office is the responsibility " for the smart turn-out of the moran (initiates) ".[121] MERKER,[122] and HOLLIS,[123] state that the aunoni was responsible to the prophet (laibon) for the organisation of raids. The anonymous author of MS. 48, p. 4, describes [977] him as the mascot of the unit when this was at war: " as long as he is alive they (the unit-members) cannot be beaten by the enemy... For this reason they take him on their raids ".

The relationship between the aigwenani and the aunoni is not clear. It seems certain that the latter has a more ceremonial and ritual character than the former.

The term of office for all these officers is limited to the existence of the age-unit as such; but they will always be distinguished and sought for their opinion.

561 The analysis of the unit's leaders does not offer a complete pic-621 ture of the internal structure of the age-unit. This structure rests
701 on two other institutions, namely the manyatta, which is the proper

[119] The aigwenani was not epected to take part in the actual fighting; he had to be in the rear to govern the action or, as FOSBROOKE, p. 38, puts it, " probably because the laigwanan wore the charm which had been obtained from the laibon, and its loss could not be risked ". At present, adds FOSBROOKE, p. 39, " the relations between senior laigwanak and their juniors are very lax. It is probable that this is due to the prohibition of raiding and consequent reduction of the occasions on which large-scale common efforts are required. In the old days when large groups of moran (initiates) came together for raids the senior laigwanak (sic.) must of necessity have asserted his position, and the others must have obeyed him, to ensure the success of the venture ".

[120] " It appears ", writes FOSBROOKE, p. 38, " to be the privilege of the aggrieved party to select his judges... If a local laigwanan han a reputation for fairness and justice, he will be called even from a distance, but proceedings are not invalidated if no laigwanan is present ".

[302] [121] FOSBROOKE, p. 40. So, no initiate was supposed to cut off his pig-tail coiffure without the permission of the aunoni.

[122] MERKER, l. c., p. 122.

[123] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 299 n. 1.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

701 621 may be from 50 to 100; and the anonymous MS. 46, p. 8, records that in a manyatta there may be from 20 to 30 huts. The extension of the term is not clear. It may be applied alternatively to the whole group forming a manyatta, and to a subdivision of this. Thus, we find in MS. 48 that each sirit is said to have its own 'portion' of the manyatta. Similarly, Fox says that each sirit is commanded by a [624] captain (il aigwenan loo sirit), and that the manyatta is ruled by a special leader (il aigwenan 'l ol poror = the leader of the age-unis), who is at the same time the captain of his own sirit. [121]

The fact that the members of the sirit " as a rule quarrel pretty regularly with other sirit of their mannyata " is emphasised by MS. 48, p. 3. There is no indication that the internal organisation of the manyata is based on the seniority of its members. We may, however, assume quite safely that that is the main principle which regulates the relationship of the manyatta's of the two age-units existing at the same period. No special information is available on this point, but it is obvious that members of the two age-units have their own manyatta's and we also know that they unite in time of war, the juniors being trained by the seniors.

Seemingly the sirit division has a military function and serves to readily organise warriors for raids. MERKER, [122] however, applies the term to a special partnership which two age-mates contract [572] on their way to the battle-field. They pledge themselves to assist each other while fighting. They refer to each other as 'my companion' (os sirit ai), and if one of them falls, the other has to rescue his arms. [123] Ten or twelve such companions form a company.

527 561 The term sirit is further applied to the grouping of initiates who come together for a meat festival (es sirit ol bul). This group consists according to MERKER, [124] of five or six age-mates who go to a segregated place where they revel on ox-meat.

The meat festivals (ol bul, pl. e buli) are held once or twice a month;

[121] Very probably this leader of the manyatta is no other than the aigwenan loi kuma orok, as indicated. The two different expressions may be taken as describing two different functions exercised by the same person. Aigwenan loi kuma orok means lit. " the speaker with the black club ", and 'l aigwenani 'il ol poror, " the speaker of the age-unit ".

[122] MERKER, l. c., p. 73.

[123] MERKER, l. c., p. 93: " Die Aufgabe der Gefahrten ist es, dem andern im Kampfe beizustehen und, wenn er fällt, seine Waffen in Sicherheit zu bringen ". The spirit as a military company is also mentioned by MS 48.

[124] MERKER, l. c., p. 84.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

721
901 system. Unfortunately, no such information is available. MERKER,[141] describes the actual action in detail but from a purely tactical or strategical point of view.

701
554

Special distinctions may be attained by the initiates either in military actions or in social life. Thus, if a warrior is outstanding in war for his courage and he "kills many savages" (HOLLIS (a) he is called "the bull", ol oingok; if he is liberal and through the assistance of his father "frequently slaughters bullocks" for his comrades, he is called "the benefactor", N-gamini. These distinctions as described by MERKER,[142] would suggest the existence of special offices with structural significance. He states that "the bulls" play a leading role (eine führende Rolle), and are the leaders in the fight ("Sie sind die Anführer im Kampf"); "the benefactors" retain a special position (eine besondere stellung). It seems, however, that there are no such institutionalised office as "the Bulls" and "the Benefactors"; they represent two different distinctions which may be attained by any of the initiates. This seems to be the opinion also of HOLLIS,[143] when he states that "the warriors are fond of the titles 'L-oingok (the bulls) and 'N-gamini (the generous people), for they may then wear bells or a bracelet called il-torongen".

561

The internal structure of the age-unit, we may now conclude, is based on various principles, which give shape to different groupings.

The essential principle is the contemporaneity of initiation either during the same season in which the minimal age divisions are instituted, or during the same initiation period in which all the minimal divisions merge into a single age-unit.

[621]

A second principle is the residential principle, on which the manyatta and the sirit are organised. The sirit ol bul, or the grouping for the meat festival in special segregated huts also seems to be due to this principle.

[901]
[572]

The military principle seems to give a special military aspect to the sirit proper, as found in the manyatta, and, apparently, the same principle extends to the temporary capillary formation of special partnership between two fighting warriors.

[624]

Corresponding to these various groupings there are leaders, as mentioned above, who organise their age mates in the performance of the various ceremonies and functions of the age-unit. It is very

[141] MERKER, l. c., pp. 93 ss.
[142] MERKER, l. c., p. 86.
[143] HOLLIS, l. c., p. 296.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

important to note their temporary and personal function. In this connection one should also noth that, however complex the organisation of the age-unit may appear, its character and nature is entirely democratic. The importance of the ingobir as a council to the aigwenan has never been stressed sufficiently. Although their office is not very well defined, it is a fact that they may exercise a real control over the leaders of the age-unit whom they have power to degrade. [144] 56| 624

The following diagram illustrates the internal structure of the age-unit.

VIII – THE FUNCTION OF THE AGE-UNIT

The most apparent function of the age-unit is military. This is also the aspect stressed by all our authorities, so much so that it is commonly stated that the function of the age system is military. [145] The evidence we have just analysed suggests a somewhat different description. 56| 70|

We have already noted that the initiates do not become war-

[144] The relationship of the prophet, laibon, to the structure of the age-unit and age-class is illustrated below in connection with the latter. [791]

[145] Cf. for all others FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 32: "The basic function of the age-grade system is doubtless military".

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 of these associations (the age-units) have long been married, the ol oiboni (the prophet) binds them more closely by giving a common name to both age-classes[164] each of which, as we have seen, had its own name. This takes place at ol neher feast. All the members of the associations come together at the ol oiboni's place and build a great kraal near his village. Everybody brings honey for making beer or an ox for meat. This last is then killed by suffocation at the en gebata feast. The feast consists in consuming all these things, and its climax is the proclamation by the ol oiboni that from now on all the assembled people shall belong to a single ol adji (age-class), and have a common class name ".

561 624 FOSBROOKE,[165] states that " a single official, ol-loo-surutya, is chosen as the head of the whole generation (age-class), thus symbolising the union of the two ages (age-units) which have up to now been independent, each with its own launon or ceremonial leader ".

561 It is after this feast that " those who are not yet married do so at the earliest opportunity. Those who are married, if their fathers [591] are still alive, move off from the paternal boma (village); for they are now in complete control of their cattle, and if they stayed with their fathers there would be constant bickering on animal husbandry matters. It is also this feast that " pigtails are cut off and are not allowed to grow again, the new elders may drink milk alone, eat meat that married women have seen, carry about short bladed spears (embere sero) in place of the long polished warriors' spears, in fact all the customs of warriorhood are abandoned ".[166] In other words through the ngeherr ceremony initiates reach a complete [554] social and economic independence and become full men or elders; they may beget children, own their own stock and build their own village or 'gate'.

There is no doubt that the value of the Ngeherr proper for the institution of the age-class is equal to that of Embolosat. This is stated by Fosbrooke.[167] He writes: " Just as the Kakonyuke ceremony of Embolosat starts off the age (class-period) for the whole tribe (read = the whole Masailand), it appears that the Kissongo Ngeherr closes it throughout Masailand ". This value of Ngeherr

[164] Read – age-units (my terminology).
[165] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30.
[166] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30.
[167] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 30.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

is also confirmed by the fact that, as Fox [168] states, " the generation 561 names (i. e. class names) emanate from the Kissongo in Tanganyika Territory and are common to all the Masai. They are given soon after the warriors (initiates) of the two combined ages (age-units) have become elders. Therefore the age-names (i. e. age-unit names) tend to fall into disuse and be replaced by the generation names (i. e. class names) ". (Words in brackets mine).

It should be noted here that the acknowledgement of the Kakonyuke Emboloset and of the Kisongo Ngeherr by all the Masai is the more remarkable if one considers the tendency of each territorial section to hold ceremonies of its own for the institution of the age-units.

X – THE GENERAL PATTERN OF THE INITIATION CEREMONIES

At this point, when all initiation ceremonies have been studied, 561 it may be of interest to note that the ritual patterns of all these [184] ceremonies, whether their value is territorially sectional or extends throughout Masailand, are essentially similar. Initiation ceremonies are made up of four main elements: a) testing and instruction of candidates; b) election of a leader; c) sacrifice of a bull; d) ceremonial fire.

a) The testing and instruction of the candidates is a broad expression which covers various rites performed at different times. It refers to all the ordeals (except circumcision) and confessions which candidates are expected to pass through, and to the instructions, blessings and prayers which the elders impart to, or offer for, their piron candidates.

b) Contrary to expectation the office of leader holds no attrac- 561 tion for the candidates. Very probably the reason is that such lea- 624 ders, or officiers, as the aigwenani and aunoni are expected to act in a fashion which is not the fashion of their own age-mates at that moment. Indeed they are forced to act as elders when their companions are being recognised as junior or senior initiates. There is no detailed account of the election of the class-leader (el-lòo-surutya). If that opposition to office is viewed in the background of the leader's limited and temporary authority in the age system, it may be taken as a further indication that these leaders have nothing in common with political chiefs as found in centralized societies.

[168] Fox, l. c., p. 449.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

ter", he writes, "is by no means clear, but there exist vestiges of a ceremony now practised in conjunction with fertility rites, etc., whereby the senior elders retire and hand over the government to the junior elders". Unfortunately, no details of such "vestiges" are indicated, nor is a similar ceremony mentioned by any other authority. 561

In 1939 FOSBROOKE compiled a census of the class- and unit-members among some of the Kisongo. Above we reproduced the membership figures of the age units; it is now of interest to give the figures of the same census for the age-classes. 561 162

	PLACES	Kibaya	Samatwa	Engasumet	Longido	Total
Classes	NYANGUSI	1	–	–	–	1	Old men
	LAIMER	2	1	–	1	4	Old men
	DALALA	14	12	8	23	57	Old men
	DWATI	58	52	23	26	159	Senior Elders
	DARETO	49	69	38	62	218	Junior Elders
	TOTALS	124	134	69	112	439

The above totals should be compared with the total of the age-units members, which are as follows:

TOTALS	123	159	66	234	582	Initiates

A special officer is elected at the ngeherr. He is called ol-loo-suruiya.[174] His functions are not very clear. He is described by FOSBROOKE,[175] as having "no duty", though he is held in great 561 624

[174] The name refers evidently to the elder's decorations. The suruiya are the ear-rings proper of the elders.

[175] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 40.

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

561 624

respect by all his age-mates. It appears that there is only one such officer for the whole class as there is a single performance of the ngeherr proper.

XI – THE PROPHET AND THE INSTITUTION OF THE AGE-CLASS

561 791

"There can be little doubt", writes FOSBROOKE,[176] "that at this time (i. e., in pre-European times) a laibon's chief functions were: i. dispensing charms for raids; ii. supervising and blessing the age grade ceremonies; iii. propounding the ritual and giving charms for local ceremonies, concerned [illegible]h fertility and disease (both human and bovine) and with [illegible]l".

He also remarks,[177] that "[illegible] the supervision of the age grade ceremonies has been r[illegible] as an important function of the laibon, this activity is subject to curious restrictions, the principle of which I have been unable to ascertain".

It seems to me, on the basis of the foregoing analysis, that the function of the prophet in connection with the institution of the age-units and the age-class is marginal and secondary to the authority of the piron-elders, and that it possesses a wholly ritual value. The authority of the prophet does not find a proper place in the structure of Masai age-system. This system is the principle which restricts his activity.

Whenever one of the inititation ceremonies is held, a delegation of the piron, both elders and candidates, approaches one of the prophets for his blessing. According to FOSBROOKE's information it does not matter whether the sought prophet is a prophet of the territorial section where the ceremony is performed or of another section or even an "unofficial" laibon.[178] The same con-

[176] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 15.

[177] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 17.

[178] FOSBROOKE, l. c., p. 17. The passage continues as follows: "For instance the Ngeherr or passing out ceremony of the Dareto age-set (class) of the Kissongo section was nominally held under Parrit, and the Unoto or promotion ceremony of the Kisale age (age-unit) under Mbeiya, who were respectively the ruling laibon at the material times. But in fact an old Kikuyu adopter of the Engidong clan, one Lolkokwa ole Kashungu (now deceased) was called to assist in both these ceremonies. By agreement the Mondul laibon received the fees in respect of these ceremonies from the Banerera and Kibaya areas, whilst those contributed by the Mondul and Longido Masai went to Lolkokwa at Bisil, Kenya Colony. In another case, Sangoyan, laibon of the Kisale age for the Matapatu and Lodokilani sections, which are nominally under Kimurusi".

6: Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

262 opened a vein and drank the blood fresh from the animal.
884 This proceeding of our voracious young friends was a wise though repulsive one, as the blood thus drunk provided the [263] salts so necessary in the human economy; for the Masai do not partake of any salt in its common form. This sanguinary draught concluded, they proceeded to gorge themselves on the flesh, eating from morning till night—and keeping their cook steadily at work. The half-dozen men were quite able to dispose of the entire animal in a few days, and then they returned to the kraal to resume the milk diet.

884 If they lived an ascetic life in the matter of food, they 836 could not be said to do so in other ways. Life in the warriors' kraal, as may easily be conceived, was promiscuous in a remarkable degree. They may, indeed, be described as a colony of free lovers. Curiously enough the "sweetheart" system was largely in vogue, though no one confined his or her attentions to one only. Each girl, in fact, had several sweethearts, and, what is still stranger, this seemed to give rise to no jealousies. The most perfect equality prevailed between the Ditto and El-moran, and in their savage circumstances it was really pleasant to see how common it was for a young girl to wander about the camp with her arm round the waist of a stalwart warrior.

884 Till a war-raid was planned, Moran, our interesting 517 protégé, found he had nothing to do but make acquaintances 701 and amuse himself with the girls. His cattle were looked after by some poor menials, and though the kraal was stationed near a dangerous neighbour, yet no fighting took place. It was, however, a rule in the warrior kraals that no fence for protection was allowed, hence the utmost vigilance had to be exercised. Moran thus in the course of his duty had frequently to set as watch. At other times he practised various military evolutions, and he kept up his muscle by the peculiar mode of dancing described in the Taveta chapter. Unlike negro tribes, they led what might be called a serious life. They had no rollicking fun, no moonlight dancing, no
[533] lively songs, no thundering drums. No musical instrument
[534] whatsoever enlivened the Masai life, and their songs were entirely confined to such occasions as the return home from a successful raid, or the invocation of the deity. As soon as darkness fell upon the land the guard was appointed, the cattle milked, and everything hushed up in silence.

624 Shortly after joining the kraal, Moran was called upon to record his vote in the election of a Laiuwu and a Laiyonani.

6:Thomson K-3 (1883-1884)1887
FL12 Masai FL12

The Lytunu is a warrior elected by a number of kraals as their captain or leader, with absolute power of life and death. He is their judge in cases of dispute. He directs their battles, though, curiously enough, he does not lead his men, but, like the general of a civilized army, he stands aside and watches the progress of the fight under the direct command of the Lyponani. If, however, he sees symptoms of his men wavering, he forthwith precipitates himself with his body-guard into the battle. Of course he holds his office purely on sufferance, and if he fails to give satisfaction he is summarily deposed. This, indeed, is almost the only attempt at a form of government. Each war-district elects its own Lytunu. The Lyponani, again, is a very different personage. He is the public leader of a kraal, leads and guides the debate in cases of dispute. To be such arrogant and pugnacious savages, the Masai are the most remarkable speakers and debaters imaginable. In some American novels we have the Indian belauded for his eloquence and dignity; but commend me to the Masai for grace and oratorical power, for order and decorum in debate; and, indeed, for most of the good qualities which in these days are conspicuous by their absence in our own House of Talking. Not that their genius in this line is always worthily applied; for in their finical persistency in talking out a question they might even beat our Parliamentary Obstructionists. They will spend days discussing the most trivial matter—nothing, indeed, can be settled without endless talk. But we must proceed with our history.

The Lytunu and Lyponani having been elected, a raid to the coast was determined on. For a month they devoted themselves to an indispensable, though somewhat revolting, preparation. This consisted in their retiring in small parties to the forest, and there gorging themselves with beef. This they did under the belief that they were storing up a supply of muscle and ferocity of the most pronounced type. This strange process being finished, and the day fixed on, the women of the kraal went outside before sunrise, with grass dipped in the cream of a cow's milk. Then they danced and invoked Ngai for a favourable issue to the enterprise, after which they threw the grass in the direction of the enemy. The young men spent several hours at their devotions, howling out in the most ludicrous street-singer fashion, "Aman Ngai-ai! Aman Mbaratien!" (We pray to God! We pray to Mbaratien!") Previous to this, how-

561 Soon after the endungere ceremony, the elders take three or four of their charges to visit the " medicine man." They take with them three or four new gourds as presents for the " medicine man," who is called ol-oibani. They must also take with them the bark and root of a tree called imokengera. I have not been able to identify the tree; [824] it is said to be scarce and is not found in the Loitokitok area. The root and bark are ground to powder and used to make a medicine named emasko sirua, an ingredient used in the preparation of a wide variety of charms. The elders inform the " medicine-man " that they have broken the fire-stick and present the boys to him and say " Ol piron lang elle, kire nalo "—" This is our fire-stick, we are one."

561 On their return home the boys' leaders seek one of their number to appoint as their spokesman called Ol ai gurenani. They make no ● 624 special efforts but during the many debates, to which they devote much time, they note those who show special ability; but ability to [537] speak well is not in itself sufficient; there are other considerations of far greater importance.

There are certain families whose sons must not be chosen for they would certainly die if elected; again, the counsel of other families has an evil reputation and must be avoided. Nor would it do to select a spokesman from the Endipenpi or medicine-man section or from the clans reputed to be unlucky.

The ideal l'aigurenani is one born of Masai parents in Masai country of a family from which l'aigurenak of former age-groups have been chosen. He should be wealthy if possible and a member of a lucky clan, must be energetic, not given to favouritism, and known to be fond of his tribe. That he should be an outstandingly good speaker matters not, provided that he satisfies the other conditions. It is said that his efficiency in debate will improve after he is appointed.

The names of possible candidates are submitted to the il-piron elders for consideration; the elders do not actually select a boy but prevent any unwise choice being made. The responsibility of making a choice rests with the boys themselves. It is particularly a matter for the leading boys of whom there are probably several by this time. [554] They are called ingopior, and are those who have shown ability and strength of character during the many debates already held.

Usually a l'aigurenari is chosen from among these ingopior. They discuss the matter secretly amongst themselves sending off one of their number on some pretext in order to be able to discuss him freely. When a decision is made the boys call some of the il-piron elders and send for the boy chosen. When he comes the ingopior say to him: " Iye kintae al'aguenani "—We make you our aigurenani. If he shows reluctance, as he may—for many shun election to the office— 561 he is seized by the boys and held until he agrees. Other boys set off 604 to relate the news to his family. When the family has been informed the new oipuremani is presented with his badge of office called el kewa orok—the black club. This club is made of olive wood. It must be quite straight and unlikely to break easily. It need not necessarily be black in colour. The club is blessed by the il-piron elders who spit honey wine over it; it is then blessed by the ingopior boys in similar [713] fashion and handed to the l'oipuremani. He too is spat upon in blessing and prayers are offered that he may have strength, wisdom, and long life. Later the boys present their l'oipuremani with a heifer and [431] a goat.

If at any time the boys go against his wishes, the l'oipuremani may resign by throwing his club to the ground before a meeting of the boys. Should they be dissatisfied with him they may make him [627] resign by taking away his club. They may even take away the heifer if his offence is severe.

When the boys have elected their l'oipuremani the il-piron elders 561 take him, together with a few boys to visit the medicine man. The 604 medicine man always accepts the spokesman presented to him, and 789 prepares for him a special medicine called el oinpuimpukie—the red 791 bull. This the spokesman is made to drink; it is said to preserve him from witchcraft of the medicine men. In addition, the spokesman is given various charms for the benefit of the tribe. Possibly one is to prevent rinderpest in cattle, another to cause the cows to calve freely, another to prevent malaria. Usually the charms are sewn in leather bags and are always accompanied by very intricate instructions as to their use. All these charms must be paid for by those who expect to benefit. An instance was related to me of a ceremony held at Loitokitok in 1926 for which a famous medicine man Sandoyo supplied the charm. Its purpose was to prevent the old men of the tribe from dying until they reached a great age. Sandoyo received 40 heifers and bullocks in payment. The medicine man does not state his price but it is usual to pay generously for his services as he is a dangerous person to offend.

Obtaining charms from a medicine man is not a matter to be 789 undertaken lightly. Those who accompany the spokesman are always 791 people of proved intelligence and good memory. Charms are always given with much complicated directions as to their use. If any one of the instructions are overlooked the charm may be rendered useless or may even work evil against its users. The Masai sometimes find that their purchases do not have the effect they desire and report the matter to the medicine man; the latter never fails to point out where an error in the method of its use occurred—and probably effects

9:Foubrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

561 change. To assume eldorhood a Masai must have a wife or wives, and cattle. But the majority of both of these are at present under the control of the elders. How this has come about is recorded in the later section on Clan and Family matters.

The root difficulty is that neither party, the morans nor the elders desire any change; the former are perfectly happy to be in a more or less irresponsible state, the latter naturally unwilling to give up their matrimonial and economic privileges. But there is little doubt that this difficulty can in course of time be overcome, both by constant propaganda and also by economic methods. Thus, if the principle is accepted of using taxation to achieve desirable social ends, a cattle tax might be adapted to ensure a more even distribution of stock among adult males. If such a tax were so graduated that, say, 400 head in a single herd would be taxed at four times the rate applicable when divided into two herds, direct encouragement could be given to an elder to allow his sons to depart with their cattle and to the sons to take over that control, to marry and settle down.

070 Many other methods of tackling the problem may be devised, but whatever the means there is no doubt that the adaptation of the age grade system is the most urgent administrative problem and the key to political development, increased family stability, improved treatment of women and economic progress.

SECTION IV: TRIBAL OFFICIALS.

A. The Laigwanan and his Assistant: — choice of Laigwanak — visits to the Laibon — installation — unpopularity of office — the head Laigwanan — relations between officials.

104 The following are brief definitions of the Masai terms involved :—

561 el oigwenani, pl. il oigwenak. Hollis translates this word as 'counsellor or spokesman.' It is a generic term, and specific appointments bear their
● 620 own designation, i.e.

el oigwenani loongishu pukin, literally, the laigwanan of all the cattle. The chief lai gwanan of the age.

el oigwenani lol kuma orok; a duly appointed laigwanan, to whom a black club has been presented.

e mort el oigwenani; literally, the "neck of the laigwanan," the laigwanan's right hand man, in whose absence no important decisions are taken.

ingoiboi, pl. ingoibir; the leading men of a given age and area. They form an inner council for appointing or degrading the laigwanan, and for the conduct of important public business.

561 The officers of an age are not appointed simultaneously, nor do they 620 immediately attain their full status. Some years prior to circumcision, the il piron elders, i.e. the guardians of the youths, start coaching the senior boys in citizenship, taking them to the laibon, making them sit at their meetings, etc. These senior boys are the ingoiboi, and it is their duty, under the guidance of the elders, to choose the laigwanan. At first a

9:Foebrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL.12 Masai FL.12
Kisonko

leigwanan will be chosen for a large area, e.g. Kisonko, including Enguamet and Ilaro. But later, as the number of recruits to the age increases, the ingolor of Enguamet and Ilaro will choose leigwanak of their own. These latter will, however, remain in a status of slight inferiority to the leigwanan first appointed. In their own areas they will be virtually independent, but at any communal gathering the senior appointment takes precedence.

This process of sub-division is important, as it not only gives a key to the really influential people, but also accounts for the fact that the areas of leigwanak vary from age to age. For instance, when the Dorobi age was in process of formation, numbers were so few that in the whole of Tanganyika there were only three areas, Moiko, Kiteto and Engarukia. In the Dorobi age, both the divisions and sub-divisions were more numerous, whilst the number of Kisale candidates justified even more appointments.

The visits to the inlaws of the embaya leigwanak and ingolor appear to form a large part of their training. Even prior to the selection of a leigwanan, the leading youths are taken by the il piron elders, and the lengthy discussions which precede such visits must give the youths good practice in debate. Of these visits Whitehouse writes, "when the boys have elected their Enguamanu the il piron elders take him, together with a few boys, to visit the medicine man. The medicine man always accepts the spokesman presented to him and prepares for him a special medicine called el ongoimpulin — the red ball. This the spokesman is made to drink; it is said to preserve him from witchcraft of the medicine man. In addition, the spokesman is given various charms for the benefit of the tribe." It would thus seem, and my informants confirm, that the inlaws has no power of veto over these appointments.

The official installation of the leigwanan may take place immediately after he is chosen, or it may be delayed. This is some cases it occurs before, and in others after, circumcision. An assembly is summoned for the ceremony; the ingolor of the moran and the il piron elders are the chief participants, but others drawn both from these and from the remaining age are naturally present. A black club is prepared beforehand, which forms the centre of the ceremony. In some accounts a cow with a female calf at heel is brought in, and its milk smeared on the right arm and on the club of the leigwanan, the divine blessing being invoked, and prayers offered that the new leigwanan may rule his people with strength and justice. Other accounts explain the milk with beer, and state that the milk need not be that of the mother of the calf, which incidentally the leigwanan keeps, but that it must be such-and-such a coloured cow. Again, others say that the club must be bound with green grass. The details are immaterial, but the ritualistic nature of the ceremony indicates that the office is regarded as one of permanency and importance.

The discussions preceding the choosing of a leigwanan never take place in the presence of possible candidates. For frequently they will refuse to undertake the work, and will run away if they know beforehand that they may be chosen. The chosen one may even throw down the

9:Foubrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

56 club — a gesture of resignation, — when it is presented to him, but is less likely to do so if taken by surprise.

The second favourite in the discussions usually becomes the ewart of the chosen laigwanan, but there is no definite appointment or installation ceremony.

It appears that there is no laigwanan of the whole age until all sections and areas meet together for the ainoto ceremony. Here one man is singled out to be head laigwanan of the age in respect of all sections attending the ceremony. Thus at the time of writing Lesimbe is nominally the head of all the Kisale of Molito, Kitoto, Laitokitok, Engarukn, Salei and Sonnyet sections. But except when all meet together, he carries little weight in any but his own section. He does not appear to keep in touch with his (nominal) subordinates in other sections, nor even with the leading laigwanak of the Molito of other areas, — Mondul, Ngorongoro and Nakuroro — which are thus, in respect of the Kisale age, practically separate sections. Lesimbe claims, however, that a deputation from the Laitayok of Laitokitok came to consult him about their standing down, but he took no decision, and referred them to the laiwan, the ceremonial head of the age, at Mondul.

The relations between the senior laigwanan of an area and his juniors are only important when all are concerned in a common matter. In most affairs, once a sub-area has a laigwanan of its own, it acts as an independent unit. It will send its own deputation to the laiboni, and perform its own local ceremonies. But when an occasion arises when the whole area acts in concert, e.g. payment of ngabere cattle or assembly to greet a visiting laiboni, the senior man takes precedence. But the relations between the laigwanan, his emurt, and the ingabir in any particular sub-area are much more close. The laigwanan should take no important decision except in the presence of his emurt, whose duty it is to prevent him from taking any rash step. The ingabir also play a large part in local politics, for it is their duty to depose an unsatisfactory laigwanan, or to choose a successor to one who has resigned. But there is no definite office of ingabire. As Whitehouse says " . . . they are those who have shown ability and strength [57] of character during the many debates . . . ." For this reason they are not necessarily confined to the first batch of initiates in any age. For amongst those circumcised later, youths of ability and strength of character are bound to emerge who will be taken into the confidence of their seniors and so come to rank as ingabir.

This process of strong characters emerging after the age has been formed continues during elderhood. In areas recently opened to settlement, as for instance Longido, elders will emerge as leaders who are in effect laigwanak or ingabir, though lacking the title. It appears that once a laigwanan has reached elderhood he cannot thereafter be deposed. But a forceful character who is desirous of undertaking the work may in effect deprive the laigwanan of his position, and the Masai are, in fact, glad to accept anyone who is willing to undertake by no means always popular duties.

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

B. The duties of Laigwanak — in theory — and in practice — influence in raids and war — position in regard to individual disputes.

One method of discovering the duties of the laigwanak is to ask them what they regard as their task. This method does not necessarily show what they actually do in practice, but it gives a very good idea of their own conception of the office. Placed by different informants in different orders, the following list represents the majority of the answers given :— 561 624

(a) To collect cattle for, and organise deputations to the laibon.
(b) To represent their age in disputes with other ages, and to prevent such disputes from developing into fights.
(c) To lead their people in war, or now-a-days, to prevent them going on raids, (probably a sop to the questioner).
(d) To settle individual cases — payment of debt, compensation, blood-money, etc.

One old gentleman, whose duties as laigwanan take him from his boma perhaps once or twice a year, imagined himself so over-worked that he described a laigwanan's duties as being like those of a housekey! [141]

The above are specific duties, but what may be called the guiding principles were best summed up by the Kisale laigwanan of Lowgonot — "a laigwanan does not like to see a poor man robbed by a rich, or an old man oppressed by a young one."

But how far are these principles lived up to in practice? How are the above duties fulfilled? The organisation of deputations to the laibon, if informants are to be believed, fell in the old days mainly on the laigwanan of moran, as when he went to get charms for war, or to take the laibon his share of raided stock. But now-a-days this duty falls on all ages except the very senior, i.e. from Dalala upwards. If one age, say Dareto, thinks it good to send a deputation to the laibon in conjunction with the other ages, the Dareto laigwanan will call the Kisale and Dwati laigwanak and ingobir to a meeting. Here it will be decided how many cattle each will contribute, and when the deputation will depart. Thereupon the leaders of each age call a separate meeting, and decide who shall go to the laibon, and who shall contribute cattle. It is the meeting and not the laigwanan which decides these points, but the laigwanan, having obtained his position by virtue of his strength of character, probably has more say in the matter than the others. Considering that these cattle are often in the nature of fines, and that a journey to the Laibon at Mondul is frequently unpopular, it is a tribute to the Masai organisation that such meetings pass off peacefully. No instance is on record of a single dispute coming to official notice arising from such cause. The laigwanan does not necessarily escort the deputation, but quite frequently he does. On the return of the deputation a meeting is again held to hear a report of the laibon's message, and, if a local ceremony has been decreed, to make arrangements for holding it. In any given area it is improbable that a single year passes without the dispatch of a deputation, or the holding of a local ceremony. So, considering the time it takes a Masai meeting to reach a decision, these duties must occupy a considerable — but not inordinate — proportion of a laigwanan's time.

9:Foxbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

561
624

By the very nature of the Masai organization, inter-age disputes are bound to crop up periodically (see Age-grades). In the 'Promotion' dispute between the Kisale and the Meriaho of the Mondul area in 1938, the respective laigwanak played a considerable part, not only at their own meetings, but in reporting decisions to the District Office.

In the old days it was the duty of the laigwanan to assemble his people for war, and to settle the disputes which inevitably arose when the spoils were divided. But by custom he should not enter into the actual fight, but remain in the rear with a small body-guard. This is probably because the laigwanan wore the charm which had been obtained from the laibon, and its loss could not be risked. It is difficult to say what part the laigwanak play in what they regard as their present-day duty, namely the suppression of raiding. Very probably in respect of large-scale raiding they have considerable influence. If any area were openly considering a major raid, and the laigwanan agreed to it, many would join in against their better judgment; but if the laigwanan discouraged it, the project might well be dropped.

624
627

Generally speaking it is unusual for a laigwanan to interfere in an individual dispute without invitation. It appears to be the privilege of the aggrieved party to select his judges. He brews beer, perhaps slaughters an ox and calls in neighbouring elders, together with the defendant. If a local laigwanan has a reputation for fairness and justice, he will be called even from a distance, but proceedings are not invalidated if no laigwanan is present. If the defendant fails to turn up, the assembled elders will none the less discuss the case, and if the claimant's suit is well founded, they will tell him so. He in his turn will go and tell the defendant that the elders have given judgment in his (the claimant's) favour. This may be sufficient to induce the defendant to pay up, but as often as not he will refuse. The claimant may then muster his morans, and take his claim by force, in which case the defendant will call a meeting and claim the return of property wrongfully removed from his boma. And so the circle starts again. Or the matter may be allowed to drop, to be re-opened after a year or two, possibly on the appearance of some new witness.

624

To sum up the laigwanan's position in relation to the dispensation of justice, it cannot be said that he holds a formal position in the judicial system. He is sought as a judge by virtue of his qualities and not of his position. Nor is this aspect of his duties irksome, since a case means a social gathering, and attendant hospitality. The position is different of course in the case of laigwanak who are at the same time paid 'Native Authority' officials. When the assistance of such people is required, it has become customary to take the case to them in their own boma.

The above description is intended to convey some idea of how far the laigwanak do in practice fulfil the duties imposed on them. The duty of helping the poor and oppressed seems to be honoured in the breach. The deputations to the laibon appear to occupy the major portion of the time which a laigwanan devotes to public duty, but even here the time he spends is little more than that spent by the average elder of the area.

9:Foshrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

The organisation of these deputations is actually a magico-religious rather than a political duty — that is, from our point of view — to the Masai it is just one aspect of the general theme of ensuring peace and prosperity to the area. 624

It will also be noted that there are very few duties which might be called executive. The laigwanan does not enforce judgments, or visit lemas collecting cattle for the laibon — the matters are discussed in open korons and the weight of public opinion compels the individual to act as required. When this fails there is nothing to take its place. This explains why the laigwanak often make unsatisfactory paid headmen. Frequently the action required of a headman has not got this necessary weight of public opinion behind it, and consequently there is no indigenous method of enforcing an order. 626 624

The relations between senior laigwanak and their juniors are very lax. It is probable that this is due to the prohibition of raiding and consequent reduction of the occasions on which large-scale communal efforts are required. In the old days when large groups of moran got together for raids the senior laigwanak must of necessity have asserted his position, and the others must have obeyed him, to ensure the success of the venture. With decreased opportunities of asserting his position, it is natural that the power of the laigwanan should itself decrease. 624 178

Another tendency to be noted is the manner in which laigwanak move from their areas, more especially during elderhood. A senior laigwanan of the Kiteto lives at Naberera, one from Engare Nanyuki at Ngorongoro, another from Engaruka at Piaya, each at least a hundred miles away from the people they are supposed to lead. This is only another aspect of the break-up of the sections previously recorded, but it does illustrate the loss of old loyalties.

C. Other officials — the launon — magico-religious position — his duties — the el bere engwe — the lonyokya.

At the unoto, or promotion ceremony, there is chosen an official known as the Launon, — el nanoni pl. il nanok, — or Olotuno. He is acknowledged by all the sections which attend the unoto, as their ceremonial or religious head. The position is not popular, so the candidate has to be installed by compulsion. After appointment the launon takes on the mode of living of an elder, being given a wife and cattle by his age-set. 561 624

The duties of the position are obscure, but as far as is known the launon appears to be a sort of scape-goat for the age. If he flourishes and begets many children, and if his cattle prosper and increase, it is a bad omen for the rest of the age. But his adversity will indicate the age's prosperity. [787]

He must do everything in advance of his age-mates, marry, settle down, make the final payment that binds the marriage. It is as though the moran, standing on the brink of elderhood, send forth the launon as an explorer into the unknown country, so that any bad luck which may lie awaiting them shall be focussed on one individual and not on the whole age.

9:Foebrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

561
624

But the launon is held in great respect by his age-mates, and any demands that he makes on them must be fulfilled. It is stated that he is the only official whose order must be obeyed. In discussing this with an elder, I pointed out that this should give the office great political importance, in reply to which the elder indicated that such did not necessarily follow, as " we can always tell the launon what order to give !"

Hollis states that the launon is responsible to the laibon for the appearance of the moran in case of war; this may well have been so in the old days, for it is generally admitted to-day that he is responsible for the smart turn-out of the moran. Thus unless in cases of sickness or mourning, a moran is not supposed to cut off his pig-tail without the launon's permission. It is alleged, however, that the office is losing its status and authority, for whereas the Darvto age launon is supposed to have gone on frequent 'tours of inspection' and to have inflicted many fines, nowadays many Kissale shave their heads without consulting their launon.

During elderhood, by virtue of his previous position, the launon is still held in respect, though no specific duties seem to attach to him. He may perhaps play some part at the unoto and ngeherr ceremonies of the age next-but-one- below, by virtue of the ol piron relationship.

Another official chosen at the unoto is called ol buro engese, who splits the skin of the ceremonially slaughtered ox. He is given four or five cattle as a fee, and in after life is held in respect, but appears to have no duties.

At the ngeherr ceremony, an official, the Lowurutya, is chosen in respect of the whole generation, whose position corresponds to that of the launon at the unoto. As there is only one ngeherr ceremony for all sections of the Masai, so there is only one lowurutya. No duties, but considerable respect, appear to attach to the office in after life.

CLAN ORGANIZATION CHART.

561
614
616

GROUPS	CLANS	SUB-CLANS
Endalashi	Englishomo	Olgilata

I. Engaja Masai.

LAISER or LOOROKITENG (right hand)	LAISER	Engidong Parkimat Parsingo Engaja-Nanuki or Lomolgulu Partimarai Parsa Buko
	LUGHUMAI	Kerilgulu

9:Fosbrooke G-5 (1936-1948) 1948 FL12 Masai FL12
Kisonko

624
301

A PROMINENT LANGWANAN AND TWO OF HIS WIVES, Ollonkon ole Mesiaya of Ngorongoro area.

361

LANGWANAN OLTIMBAU'S 'BOMA' showing grouping of huts and cattle by 'gates'.

[Facing p. 42]

11: Leakey E-5 (no date) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 the nine days the elders in charge of the ceremony go about looking out for two
346 warriors from the group noted for their humility and honesty, and having selected them they keep their names very quiet, as the position for which they are being chosen is not at all sought after. In fact, as soon as the selection has been made, the relations of the two men chosen are heavily bribed in order that they shall allow them to be appointed.

561 Shaving Ceremony.—On the tenth day of the ceremony the heads of all the warriors of the age-group are shaved, and during the shaving the elders come and
● 624 point out the two warriors whom they have chosen, and publicly proclaim them as the
[309] heads of the group during its time in the senior warrior stage. These two men are called respectively olutunot and olobowengwe, and there are certain very strict regulations and restrictions attached to their position, the breaking of which would result in punishment by death; hence the unwillingness of the warriors to be chosen for these appointments, and the bribing of their relations. Unfortunately, no information about the duties of these two, or of the restrictions which they must observe under penalty of death, could be obtained from my informants. After
561 the shaving ceremony is over and these two have been appointed, the warriors go back to their normal life; but before doing so they first go all together for a few nights to a new village built for the purpose called ngang'ongaritki, and from there
[361] they scatter to their own districts. They may not, however, return to their old manyattas, which they vacated when they came to the Eunotu ceremony, but must build new manyattas.

Becoming Elders.—The length of time spent in the senior warrior class depends entirely upon whether a man belongs to an age-group called jangicuobur or murutogedienge (see the Age-group system). Transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage takes place as a group transfer, but one age-group cannot transfer alone, but always two groups, a jangicuobur and a murutogedienge, must transfer together. No transfer, therefore, can take place until there are two age-groups in the warrior stage who have gone through the Eunotu ceremony. Once there are two such groups in the senior stage the actual time of transfer is dictated by whether or not there is a new age-group waiting in the novice stage ready to move up into the junior warrior stage, for as stated above (see the Age-group system), there may never be more than three age-groups in the warrior stage at one time. Equally no two warrior groups may move out into the Elders' stage until there is a new age-group in the novice stage, as otherwise it would mean leaving a single age-group alone in the warrior stage for too long, and this would be a serious thing when only the warrior groups are the fighting forces of the tribe. The actual transfer from the senior warrior stage to the Elders' stage takes place without any ceremonial, and the [59] men just leave their manyattas and go and live with their wives, with whom as yet they have never lived, although the wives may be mothers with several children (see Marriage).

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561 634 624 Sirit.—The age-group of each section forms one or more sirit or companies. Each sirit has its Aigwenan, who performs some of the duties of a captain. The word literally means counsellor. One of the captains is considered to have authority over all the age-group as well as his own sirit, and he is called 'L-Aigwenan l'ol poror in contrast to the others who are 'L-aigwenak loo sirit.

As an example of the sirit divisions, the Il Kitoip age-group of the Purko has three sirits—Il-Meshuke, 'L-Aitetti and Il-Kanyara.

When the warriors become elders the Aigwenak usually retain their authority.

(a) Generation-names common to all the Masai :—

Il Nyangusi. Very few survivors now.
Il Aimer.
Il Tolala.
Il Twati. The present ruling elders and Ol piron to the present warriors.
Il Tareto (?). This is believed to be the new name given to the groups who have most recently become elders. It had not come into general use in Narok District when I left last May. I therefore give below the various age-group names of the warriors of this generation :—

(b) :—

Section.		Purko.	Loita and Siria.	Kakonyuke.	Il Damat.
Il Tareto.	Right hand	Il Moruturut.	Il Kishangop.	Il Meshuke.	Il Moruturut.
	Left hand ...	Il Kitoip.	None.	I Rayani.	Il Kitoip.
	Right hand	Il Sabauk.	I Rimirim.	?	?

Section.		Kaputei, Loitoplani, Matapato.	Il Dalalagatok.	Laitokitok.	Kisongo.
Il Tareto.	Right hand	Il Aitetti.	?	Il Kibanni	?
	Left hand ...	None.	?	None.	Il Keriaboi.
	Right hand	?	?	?	?

Some of the names are omitted because they have not yet been given, and others, e.g. the Il Dalalagatok, because I have not had anything to do with that section for some years.

An Aigwenan appears to be chosen in the first instance by the elders, but if he proves unsatisfactory the warriors sometimes exert themselves successfully to get him changed.

561 Ol Piron.—The elders of the generation next but one senior to another generation are said to be the Ol Piron of that generation. Thus the 'L Aimer are Ol Piron of the Il Twati and the Il Twati are Ol Piron of the present warriors, e.g. Il Sabauk.

12: Fox G-5 (1925-1930) 1930 FL12 Masai FL12
Kenya

561
884

The Loita and Siria E-Unoto ceremony took place in July, 1929, and lasted three days. They invited me to it, but, owing to pressure of political work, I was unable to arrive till the morning of the third day at about 10 a.m. (Pl. XIII, Figs. 1-3, and Pl. XIV, Figs. 1 and 2).

The Masai definition of the E-Unoto is as follows :—

"The E-Unoto is a religious ceremony of blessing of the age-group, after which the warriors have leave to marry.

"The O-Singira gives the warriors permission to have sexual relations with initiated women."

The warriors were dancing at the time (Pl. XIII, Figs. 1 and 2). After about an hour they went off to a spot about a mile away in the forest, where I was [789] informed that they sacrificed a bullock as a charm.[1] They returned about 3.30 p.m., [782] about twenty of them being dressed in a manner similar to that of the three functionaries (Pl. XIII, Fig. 3). They danced round the O-Singira hut, and those warriors who were entitled to enter it led their families up to smear some cow-dung on it. The warriors then squatted down in a close group in the centre of the manyatta, while some elders walked round them drinking honey wine and spraying it out of their mouths over the group as a blessing. Others of the elders sat by the O-Singira hut and refreshed themselves with honey wine. It was at this point of the proceedings that the age-group of warriors was named Irimirim (from verb arim, pierce). This terminated the festival.

561
884
624

The chief functionary is the Ol-Otuno, but I cannot say what part he takes, having arrived so near the end of the ceremony. He is held in great reverence for ever afterwards, and it is unlucky for the age-group if a mishap befalls him. He must not take part in political affairs. He is always spoken of as Ol-Otuno, and his son, when he grows up, is known as the son of Ol-Otuno. (Pl. XIII, Fig. 3.)

There is a minor official called Ol-Oiber enpine. Enp-ine is a thong of leather. If my spelling of the first part of the title is correct it would perhaps mean "He who splits the thong." But there are several words from which it might derive, and I have no knowledge of his duties to assist me in checking my spelling of the name.

561
346
[361]
[329]

O-Singira (Thingira).—Being ignorant of Kikuyu I had been puzzled by this word prior to reading Mr. Leakey's article. At the Loita E-Unoto it was built just within the eastern edge of the village. The village consisted of a circle of huts about 300 yards in diameter. I looked in to the O-Singira, but it was too dark to see anything. It was made of cow-dung plaster like an ordinary hut, but was much bigger. Ranged against the wall outside were the heads of numerous oxen which the warriors had slaughtered.

561
884

I was informed that 100 of the warriors had not had sexual relations with initiated women and could therefore enter the O-Singira. After the E-Unoto the

[1] Masai, Enkilingoti, the general word for a charm.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

and Il-Merisho are recorded by Fosbrooke from the Kisonko: the first is given by Hollis as occurring in 1806 among the Masai, and in 1774 among the Taveta; the second, in 1874 among the Masai, and in 1879 among the Taveta. Moreover, all the names in Hollis's list from Il-Merisho in 1874 to Il-Kinyoyo in 1791 are found in the Taveta system (Lumerisho, 1879, going back to Lukinyoo in 1684 by 15-year intervals).[10] This repetition of names suggests the possibility of an original cyclic system. 561

The actual working of the Masai system is still not absolutely clear, but Fosbrooke has done much towards solving the problem. The main facts seem to be as follows. A boy is not born into a set, as among the Nandi, for his set does not come into existence as a named group till after circumcision. About two years before a circumcision takes place, the elders of the set immediately senior to the existing warrior group (ol-oji) start the process of inaugurating a new set, at a ceremony called em-polosata; this, as we have seen, is described by Hollis as a ceremony performed by individual fathers (p. 116 above), while Fosbrooke regards it as a national ceremony performed by the Il-kork-oeyokie in Kenya as a common ceremony for all Masailand. The elders who take part in the inauguration become the sponsors, il-piron (lit. "fire-sticks"), of the new set, and the guardians and instructors of the initiates, thus corresponding to the Nandi motoreik. The em-polosata is followed by a ceremony called en-dapore, "the cutting," which closes the current period of circumcision; at this ceremony the formal relationship of instructor and initiate is established. After this, there follows a series of activities called en-kipanta, beginning with a dance which gives its name to these activities.[11] Between now and the opening of the circumcision the boys go round collecting candidates for initiation. In each circumcision area the il-piron and a few boys also go to the tribal laibon, and apply for his sanction to open the circumcision. When they return, the boys elect a representative called ol-oigwanani (pl. il-oigwanak), "the counsellor," who must have special qualifications of birth, physique, and social status, and is chosen from among those of their number who have distinguished themselves in the debates which are held frequently, and are in consequence called isik-ojir.[12] The duties of the ol-oigwanani are to act as intermediary between the warrior company to which he will presently belong and the laibon, to maintain liaison with other companies, to arbitrate in disputes, and to organize raids. He is confirmed in his office by being given a black club which has been blessed by the il-piron elders. [424]

Each age-group or "generation," ol-oji (pl. il-ojiji), is divided into two sub-sets, il-parrori (sing. ol-parror), the first or senior known as e-murrata e-tairor, "the right-hand circumcision," the second or junior as e-murrata e-kedinya, "the left-hand circumcision." Those of the Right Hand are circumcised first over a period of four years, and when the circumcision is finished the young warriors divide into i-siri or companies formed on a territorial basis, each of which has its own barrack, e-manyata. Soon after this, the preliminaries for the formation of the next ol-parror, the Left Hand, are undertaken, i.e., the em-polosata, en-dapore, and en-kipanta as for the previous ol-parror. About seven years from the beginning of their circumcision period the Right Hand become senior warriors by means of a ceremony called e-uwuto, "the setting up," for as junior warriors, during the three years or so between the end of their circumcision and the e-uwuto, they have begun to fight the senior warriors (of the previous ol-parror) for the full privileges of warriorhood. Thus they get by means of the e-uwuto, and at the same time they elect a communal leader called ol-oiwo (Kisonko, ol-oiwoni). As senior warriors they may marry. About eight years from the beginning of the Right Hand circumcision the Left Hand

[10] The Taveta are a Bantu tribe living to the east of Kilimanjaro; they have strong Masai connections.

[11] En-kipanta also means a dance held by warriors before a raid.

[12] Isik-ojir means "outcrop brothers," and indicates seniority, as in the term il-oigwanak applied to the senior division of each age-set. The isik-ojir are the lieutenants of the ol-oigwanani.

POLITICAL STRUCTURE

Land Divisions and Authorities

The basic unit of a tribe, ol-oiko, is the siril or warrior company in its manyata, for it represents a district from which a given number of fighting men is drawn; and within this district are also the kraals, enk-ang, of the elders. The formation of an enk-ang varies. It may contain a group of men who continue as elders the association which they began as warriors in the manyata; or it may be a casual grouping which can break up and re-group; and it may contain anything from one to 10 gates. Within the enk-ang a rudimentary council seems to exist with one of the elders at its head; it may be no more than the heads of families sitting together and talking. Such as it is, it corresponds to some extent to the Nandi kokwet, though its powers and sphere are smaller. But it differs also in an important respect. All the inhabitants of a Nandi parish, including the warriors, come under the jurisdiction of the kokwet, whereas in the Masai system the local warrior company has its own authority, the ol-oigwanani, who is responsible for the maintenance of both military discipline and "civil law" within his company, and his warriors appear to be independent of the elders' council. When the age-set has passed out of the warrior stage, the ol-oigwanani remains its authority. A number of siril-districts forms the larger unit, ol-oiko, which English writers call the section or division, the latter being the word used by Sandford. Each of these il-oikos has a council of elders which corresponds in some respects to the Nandi parokwet council; and, as will be seen from p. 11 above, the il-oikos are associated either in loose confederacies with a group-name, like Il-Purko, Il-Damat, and Il-Kerk-o-nyokie, which together form the Il-Kisongo, or in distinct "tribes" like Il-Aikipiak, Sambur. The organization of the Sambur seems to have developed on slightly different lines from the rest of the Masai.[*] The enk-ang is the homestead of one elder and his wives and children; a number of such homesteads forms a local group with a council of elders, and the total number of local groups is divided among eight sections called il-mavoita (sing. ol-mavoi), each with a council made up of the leaders of the component group-councils. These il-mavoita are divided into two large sections with "cattle-names": the Il-on-enk-kishu, "the black cattle," contains the il-mavoita of Lo-l-punio-kishu, Lo-l-gurai, Ol-mashu, and Nyaparai; and the Il-on-ibor-kishu, "the white cattle," contains the sections called Il-on-enk-kishu, Lo-l-kumai, Lo-l-mumi, and Lo-gili.

The most important figure in Masai organization is the ol-oigwanani, whose duties in the past were to make the practical arrangements for war, to control the distribution of the loot, to settle disputes when appealed to, to lead his men in war, and to maintain liaison between his company and the laibons on the one hand, and between his company and other companies on the other. But he could resign if displeased with his men, who in turn could dismiss him if not satisfied with his actions. Now that there is no more organized warfare, the duties of the ol-oigwanani are mainly confined to the suppression of raiding, in which his effectiveness depends on his character, influence, and disposition; and to settling disputes, in which he is assisted by the elders of the district. Thus a council system with an elected leader has developed out of the older structure in which the e-manyata and enk-ang were semi-independent bodies. As among the Nandi, it is the personality of the ol-oigwanani and the force of public opinion that compel obedience to him. But the whole Masai system is less clear-cut than even that of the Nandi, in spite of the apparent definiteness of the ol-oigwanani, though in certain respects he is analogous to the Alos Boko or age-set ruler of the Galla, who is the tribal ruler for a period of eight years.

The Laibon

The laibon, a word anglicized from ol-oibon, pl. il-oibonok, and derived from o-oibe, "to make 'medicine,'" is a ritual expert who practises divination and rain-making, [illegible] and blessed with [illegible] supernatural [illegible]

[*] Information from the Rev. Charles Richmond of the B.C.M.S.

13:Huntingford E-4 (no date) 1953 FL12 Masai FL12

the laibons into three categories: (1) the private practitioner, who works in a small way as a diviner and doctor among a limited circle of clients; (2) the private practitioner who has gained a wider reputation and is consulted by several districts, and includes rain-making among his activities; and (3) the senior laibons, of whom there is one to each tribal group; these all belong to the In-Kidoni sub-clan of the Il-Aiser clan, and the different tribal laibons were all fellow-clansmen, if not actually related. Thus, in addition to the laibons of the Kaputiei at Ngong (now living among the Loitai), the Kisonko, Il-Aikipiak, Il-Wuasin-kishu and Sambur also had their own; though it is possible that the Ngong laibon had a higher standing throughout Masailand than the others. In pre-European days the functions of a head laibon were[21] (1) to sanction war and to provide protective medicine for those taking part in it; (2) to authorise the ceremonies connected with the age-sets and circumcision; (3) to ensure the fertility and well-being of his people; (4) to make rain. In the exercise of these duties he is both an intermediary between man and the other world, and a mystical focus for tribal activities. Many laibons also practise witchcraft (as defined above, p. 39). But the laibon is not a chief, and his authority depends on his mystical powers.

War Organization

When the warriors of a siriti wanted to raid, they approached their ol-oigurani, who planned the attack and arranged for the co-operation of other companies if a big raid (ol-orora) was intended. The il-oigurani concerned then went to the laibon to get his sanction and protective war medicine. Before agreeing, however, the laibon consulted the omens to see if the circumstances were propitious; and having done so, he gave his consent, sometimes in song after getting drunk. The warriors then went to their il-pai and feasted on meat to prepare them for the raid; patrols were also sent out, and when all was ready the party set out by the shortest route to their destination. Raids were made on most of the tribes round them, and extended to the coast, the Nika being a frequent objective; Thomson was told that a Masai patrol was once seen in Mombasa itself. On their return, the raided cattle were divided. First, a number were set aside for the laibon; then some were given to those who had distinguished themselves; the rest were divided among the warriors who gave one or two to their lovers in the manyata, but handed the rest of their shares to their families. If there were not enough cattle to divide fairly, the warriors separated into two groups, il-oo-rok-kiteg and il-oo-do-mogi, "the black ox" and "the red ox," and fought for the spoil. Small raids, ol-wampa, carried out locally by one siriti were not referred to the laibon, who received no share of the spoil.

Wars between Masai tribal groups were frequent, and formed one of the factors in the disintegration of the Kenya Masai at the end of the 19th century. In such wars, large numbers of men were collected in camps, such as Thomson saw in 1883 near Elmenteita, where two large collections of warriors (he put the number at about 3,000 on each side) were camped a short distance from each other, one camp being that of the Kaputiei the other of the Il-Aikipiak. A detachment of picked men from each side would come out and fight a pitched battle, cheered on by their women-folk, the winning side taking the cattle of the vanquished. The basis of military discipline was pride, strengthened by fear and respect of the laibon, and fear of public disapproval. The Masai also had some idea of drill and of acting in unison. Gorgeously with most striking panoply of ostrich-feather head-dress, cape, gleaming spear, shield, sword, club, painted face and leg ornaments, the Masai warrior felt himself more than a match for anyone.

Prisoners were not often taken, though sometimes a man would capture a woman whom he would make his wife, or a child whom he would adopt. Men were killed, women seldom. Peace was made by a formal ceremony at which warring mothers authority always tended to break down in face of the lawless and independent spirit of the Moran. In 1918 the Headmen numbered 46, of whom 28 were unpaid, and 18 received pay ranging from £6 to £36 a year, the former Paramount having a special pay of £90. Fourteen of the 18 paid Headmen were presidents of the Native Councils, and following the custom adopted in many other parts of Kenya, they were given the courtesy title of Chief.

[21] Fadiman, pp. 13–17.

175 648 622

SUBSEQUENT CHANGES IN THE SYSTEM

175 648 178

In the period that has passed since this system was introduced, there have been changes which have to some measure affected the structure of Masai society. The restraint exercised on cattle raiding has robbed the military organization of its former importance, while the growing value of cattle and sheep has enhanced the position of the wealthier stockholders, who now constitute, together with some men of hereditary prestige, an aristocratic element with an acknowledged leadership in Masai society. In other respects the Masai hold tenaciously to their customary institutions and mode of life, and the Moran in particular retain the tradition of indiscipline (in all but a military sense) and the aversion to labour which characterised them in the past.

[901] [961]

175 648 623

The Government has in the interval effected changes also in the system of native administration above referred to, with the view of adjusting it more nearly to the pattern followed in other parts of Kenya. The Central Masai Council and the 14 Native Councils gave place in 1930 to two Local Native Councils, at Narok and Kajiado, which have now been formally constituted under the provisions of the Native Authority Ordinance of 1937. The system of tribunals has also been revised, as will be further explained below.[1] The Headmen have been divided into two grades, Headmen and subheadmen, of whom the former have the courtesy title of Chief. They now derive their powers from the Native Authority Ordinance of 1937.

622

[965]

The 16 Headmen have a pay ranging from 17s. to 70s. a month, and the 28 subheadmen a pay ranging from 10s. to 32s. 50 cents a month. Practically all the Headmen or subheadmen are stockholders, and represent the ruling Age-Grade in each of the different Sections; very few of them are educated or literate and only a few can speak Swahili. The Headmen and subheadmen constitute the executive agency of the District administration and of the Local Native Councils, and they are in addition charged with the collection of the native Poll Tax. That is a task which they are said to discharge with some efficiency, though as will be shown subsequently in dealing with the administration of the Tribunals, there are numerous cases of the evasion of tax. The Chiefs can call on the services of a small number of Tribal Police, recruited and controlled by the District Commissioner. Up to 1943 the Tribal Police were the only force of this nature in the Province, but since that year a unit of the Kenya Police Force has been stationed in the Narok district, largely in view of the prevalence of stock thefts.

[651]

625

THE LOCAL NATIVE COUNCILS

646

Of the two Local Native Councils, that at Narok has 10 nominated and 23 elected members, and that at Kajiado 10 nominated and 14 elected. There is, however, little difference in practice between the nominated and elected members, since all are in fact selected by the District Commissioner after

[1] Page 173.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

#539 No. 69. Nattio[1] e-ŋgape enee en-ŋiŋi
Who-is-treading the-post She the-outcast ee-'l-ee-ŋiwai.

of-the-who-have-the-teeth-extracted.

She is treading against the post like one who is not allowed in the warriors' kraals.

[Unless a girl is well dressed, according to Masai ideas, and anoints her body from time to time with oil, she is not admitted into the warriors' kraals, and becomes a social outcast. She has nothing left her to do but lie on her back and put her feet up against a post. Unlike the old man who has many sons, however (vide proverb No. 64), this is considered an undignified position for a maiden.]

[599] [526]

No. 70. O-eine ilki'ya en-ŋwale,
The-poverty (or trouble) which-takes-you where-it-is-long, deep el-eikule.

short the-breast-of-a-dead-ox (or happiness).

It is better to be poor and live long than rich and die young.

No. 71. Papa ele eiyiu en-ŋiŋig ele
Father that who-wishes the-cow which-has-just-borne nanaiam enee ennkoti 'a-ŋejiek e-'l-ele and-he-does-not-get-it because weak the-legs of-the-calf le-'a-dito enye.

of-the-daughter his.

The old man cannot get milk from the cow that has recently borne, because his daughter has not looked after the calf whose legs are consequently weak.

[A saying applied by women to one of their number who is notoriously lazy.]

No. 72. Paakeyakiet enee en-gerai enii eng-ol Pride like the-child who-is-there the-hut

e-ŋkai[2] enye.
of-the-grandmother his.

He is as proud as a child living at his grandmother's.

[601] [Grandmothers are apt to spoil their grandchildren, and a naughty boy is not so likely to be whipped at his grandmother's as at home.]

[1] Old or poetical form for na-nanatio.
[2] E-ŋkai is here used for eng-ŋkai.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

Kitala.

593 Ten tar Il-Kasma 'Ignetyok enye, ell nenyewo kitala, nelli naalgiri, nenenyewo.

Ten tar el-nderus e-Ignetytoi, naiyiri ale kitala, naa ten nenee kitab-ekki ainenaiye, nelo eng-ejj o-'i-parer la-'i-nderus lenye.

Ore pe erike lide ldye-Ignetytoi naaitine kitala, nenenikki el-epeny nat, nene nere lide-tulgani la-'i-parer lenye naalak.

Naa, ten ainerne e-Ignetytoi en-dikki kitab, y' eiyitite ejo tari, nelo eng-ekg e-nenyo, naiabori en-gitaag naitite e-Ignetytoi nenye el-nderus lenye.

The refuge[1].

If the Kasai men beat their wives, some go and seek refuge elsewhere, whilst others suffer and stay at home.

Should a husband beat his wife, but not badly, she will seek refuge in the house of a member of her husband's age.

When the man with whom she has taken refuge returns her to her owner, the latter does not beat her again, for he fears that he will be expelled by the members of his age.

If a woman commits a serious crime, and knows that she will be beaten in consequence, she goes to her father's kraal, and is given an ox, which she takes to her husband and begs forgiveness.

En-gin.

964 55 Ten ee el-tulgani la-'i-Masama, naiinenari ten e en-gerei, ereki el-nerenai, ereki e-Ignetytoi; nenaki eng-erna la-'i-tulgenak lenye.

Ore ten ell en-dikki naiyetyaki inna-erna, naiabori en-erna nenenyikiita en-e-'ide ilim.

Ore ten ee el-tulgani ell ejj Il-Ossama, nenaiyat la-'ipeg e-nenye en-nenai nene

Death.

On the death of a child, or a warrior, or a woman amongst the Masai, the body is thrown away[2], and the person's name is buried, i.e. it is never again mentioned by the family.

Should there be anything which is called by that name, it is given another name which is not like that of the deceased.

For instance, if an unimportant person called Il-ossama (he who is soft, or weak, or gentle) were to die.

[1] Divorce appears to be unknown amongst the Masai.

[2] The body is always taken to the west of the kraal, towards the setting sun. It is laid on the left side with the head towards the north, so that the face looks towards the east. The legs are drawn up to the chest, the left hand supports the head, and the right arm is folded across the breast.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

304 752 Naa, ten enia epa 'l-tuŋgunak pikia in-jilaio en-'l-aia le-keper nana ana'-'ata eiyteni ainiŋ in-bwai. Ore taaia etamuki en-bwaia.

Tweiai il-Masai-i-tuŋgani lamubwa, naiwuikye aaje: 'Eŋgiria 'airkan en-dau.'

Had people formerly extracted the upper teeth, they would not have required the hole in the lower jaw. But now they have become accustomed to the latter.

When the Masai see a man who has not had the two middle incisors extracted, they laugh at him, and say: 'He eats his food like a donkey.'

En-larnore.

302 Ehare il-mirruak ol' ŋgortyuk ee 'a-gere en-'l-Masaa 'l-ŋgheny ee 'l-peyit lee-'ag-enyek le-keper, neyut il-peyit lee-'ag-enyek il-eluri ten airage pe erim eag-ebge.

Neyut arakí ashere ali 'l-enuye ee 'a-gitikit ee 'a-gulaki; neyej kulikae 'l-peyit lee-'l-ereduta, neyai kulikae.

Teni neyanae il-mirrua, nemshere il-ŋgheny metabaaa ainai, naitabaia 'l-taighae.

Ore taa ala e-ŋgortytai en-gerai, nemshere niaye e en-gerai eeye metabaaa nabala

Shaving.

Masai elders, women[7], and children shave their heads and eyebrows, and pull out their eyelashes if they enter their eyes.

They also pull out or shave the hairs of the beard, armpits, and pubes, and some singe the hairs of their skins.

If warriors are not in mourning[8], they may not shave their heads until they have held the feast called e-ŋwata[9], and they grow pigtails.

When a woman gives birth to a child, neither she nor the child are shaved until the latter has four [113] [191] Sir H. Johnston, in commenting upon this, says (The Uganda Protectorate, p. 805): "It may be this explanation has been invented recently to explain a very ancient custom inherited by the Masai from the Hamitic stock, which was their religion, for amongst Hamitic peoples the removal of the lower incisor teeth is a very common practice." Hinde's explanation, however, appears to be very widely spread.

[191] [7] This very uncommon practice for women to shave their heads is also followed by the Dinkas, Bari, and Latukas (Chaussée, 'Sub-Tribes of the Bahr-el-Ghazal Dinka,' Journal of the Anthropological Institute, Forty, 1910; and Baker, The Albert Nyanza, p. 90, &c.).

[8] Vide p. 308.

[9] Vide p. 299.

1: Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL12 Masai FL12

952 ntu, ntin 'ngoyo pe otom ilitia ium-wuj nutigin.

932 Naiyitia ai 'l-ainak nutogium nuki ilitaige 'l-ilikpik, ne 'l-nutigunki, ne 'l-uni. Ore ten ngulem il-ilikpik, nugur te-'e-gium el-gun, pe otom nutaigur ten ilitaake e-ngoyo, ooun tje iani nutigur, nuijiyo 'nupu.

a ligature round the limb and amputate it.

The surgeons are also able to castrate bulls, rams, and he-goats by either removing or crushing the testicles. When bulls are castrated, a cord is fastened tightly round their necks and blood is extracted from the jugular veins to prevent inflammation of the injured parts*.

195 578 Il-dokota loo-'l-Maasai.

Ol-ainkiaiyo ee-nagyuk!
Mikiajuyo ee-nagyuk!
Mikiajiria eng-ki!
Mikiooni el-ewuro!
Iajiriria!
Iaiyoni!

Mikiajuo eng-ki ee-dap e-'e-jini!

Tuenkiga ninia!

Tuiuni!
Tuenkiga ekgeria!
Mikiaaere 'l-kuliayi!
Ten nink il-Maasai 'e-gure, ennumiak nuiutig, naje:

E-nuk!
Ee-gumuiuk!

Maasai curses.

May you be clothed with an incurable disease!
May God trouble you!
May a beast of prey devour you!
Slip on the road and fall!
May you become the colour of a corpse!
May God give you a pain of leather! (i.e. may your cattle die, in which case you will be forced to do manual labour.)
Die with those who have been conquered!
Die when the sun sets!
Die in the plain!
May your own people kill you!
When the Masai curse children, they do not call them very bad names. They say, for instance:
Stone!
Pin!

*E.26 Ee-gitoriyiata oo-'l-Maasai.

Ten tje el-lae oo-'l-Maasai oo-ditki, pe tji el-lajore, ooe

Masai form of oath.

If a Masai once says something, and it is believed to be a lie, it is

* A description of the operation was given to the Pan-American (Scientific) Congress, 1908.

1:Hollis G-5 (ca. 1894-1904) 1905
FL.12 Masai FL.12.

ten ɛje: "Ol-kile le-'ag-ɛnɛishi ɛ,' ɛnɛipe.

Ore ten ɛje ɛ-ɛgɛrɛytɛi: "Ol-kile le-pepe,' ɛnɛipe.

true if he adds: 'By my sister's garment.'

Likewise if a Masai woman adds: 'By my father's garment,' it is true.

Ol-ɛnɛmai loo-'l-Masaae.

Kolaae kulikae-Masaae ɛ-ɛnɛmai.

Ten ɛji ɛnɛmu ɛgɛnia ɛl-lae-kɛrɛne, ɛtɛk ɛ-ɛnɛpe ɛnɛiko ɛl-ɛigɛ-ɛnɛmai, ɛtɛje-kɛkite: "Ten ɛnɛmu ɛlle-lae, ɛnɛmɛ ɛng-ɛli.'

Ore ten ɛnɛmu ɛlle-lae, ɛtɛ; kake ten ɛlɛ ɛlɛu, ɛnɛiki.

Trial by ordeal among the Masai.

Some Masai have a trial by ordeal.

If a person is accused of having done something wrong, he drinks some blood, which is given him by the spokesman, and says: "If I have done this deed, may God kill me."

If he has committed the offence, he dies; but if not, he lives behind him.

'Ɛngɛllɛlɛlɛ.

O-ɛngɛllɛ le-'ag-ɛnɛmɛ ɛ-'ag-ɛli.

Kɛlɛ-'ɛgɛrɛytɛ-ɛ-'l-Masaae ɛ' ɛlɛu ɛng-ɛ-ɛgɛrɛytɛi.

Kɛlɛ-ɛnɛ; ɛ-'ɛkɛ ɛlɛu ɛnɛlɛu kɛlɛ, ɛtɛyɛlɛ ɛl-kɛrɛ ɛji Ol-ɛigɛkɛlɛ ɛng-ɛji, ɛnɛki Ol-kɛpɛlɛ.

Ten 'ɛgɛrɛytɛ ɛnɛyɛlɛ ɛnɛng, ɛnɛne ɛnɛrɛ.

Ɛngɛlɛkɛ 'l-ɛnɛ ɛn-ɛtɛyɛlɛgɛ, ɛnɛ ɛje ɛn-ɛɛ'ɛnɛ.

Ore ɛ' ɛnɛlɛ, ɛnɛyɛlɛlɛ ɛnɛng, ɛtɛje:

Songs.

A prayer to God [1].

Masai women do as follows when one of their number gives birth to a child.

They collect together and take milk to the mother; they then slaughter a sheep, which is called, The partner of the hut, or simply The partner.

The women slaughter the animal by themselves, and eat all the meat.

No man may approach the spot where the animal is slaughtered, for it is considered unlawful.

When the women have finished their meal, they stand up and sing the following song:

[1] Masai women often pray twice daily. Men and children usually only pray in time of drought, or when a cattle plague is raging.

J: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Maori FL12

[54] [114] institution of Maori culture. We are much inclined to think on different lines. The office of the prophet is essentially a ritual office. His true power derives from his ritual value. It seems evident from the preceding analysis that Maori political and social structure is primarily based on the age-system. We think that it is solely for this system that the hahou did not entirely succeed in invading the political field and usurping the authority of the elders.

That the function of the prophet is essentially foreign to the age system is a fact which the present analysis may also have helped to make evident. The conclusion arrived at by FORTUNE on "the incompatibility" of the hahou institution "with the original culture" of the Maori is one that could only be properly reached after an historical and critical study of Maori ritual and religious institutions and not merely from a survey of their political and social institutions.

[114]

XII – THE RELATIONSHIP OF CLASS-MEMBERS []

[54] [119] A strong bond of solidarity is felt by all members of a class. Such feeling is primarily due, as is natural, to the mere fact of belonging to the same social body. Other factors, such as a more or less equal age and the contemporaneous performance of essential initiation ceremonies give substantial cause for a feeling and bond of that kind. That such a bond is strong and effective is clearly shown by Maori hospitality customs. They show also what force of cohesion springs from the age-system structure. Any class-member has a right to stay and live at the house of any of his age-mates. While he is a stranger to the place, he is not a stranger to his age-mate for they are members of the same class. The latter cannot refuse him, otherwise he would be cursed by his own class. This [56] cursing power of the age-class is very significant to our present purpose. It shows the authority and power possessed by the class for keeping its structural cohesion and for defending itself from any disruptive attack. []

[] Shawcross, l. c., p. 47; Ferrier, l. c., p. 600; Fox, l. c., p. 188.

[] Maori hospitality customs are best described by Ferrier, l. c., pp. 597 s. Translating, as he does, direct Maori accounts, he writes: " When a Maori goes to other lands to pay a visit, he does not on his arrival enter a hut unless he knows the owner, for if he belongs, for instance, to the Ainuru age, he must not enter the hut of one of the Kahoura age, as he does not belong to this age. He will ask where the huts of the members of the Ainuru age are, and where he

2: Bernardi E, M-4 (no date) 1955 FL12 Masai FL12

It is possible to consider that solidarity as a kind of class identity. 561
